"When a legal practitioner is suspended or struck off by the judges of a colony, he has always been at liberty to petition Her Majesty in Council to restore him."

Rejecting the argument that the Attorney-General had no locus standi to petition for special leave to appeal as he was not a person aggrieved, the Board referred to S. 31 of the Order in Council, 1949 which gave very wide powers to His Majesty in Council to entertain the petition of any person aggrieved by any judgment of the court and to admit his appeal upon such conditions as His Majesty in Council would think fit to impose. On the facts of the case the Board held that the Attorney-General had a sufficient interest in the matter because the order made by the West African Court of Appeal prejudicially affected his interests.

The reasoning of the Board was as follows:

"The Attorney-General in a colony represents the Crown as the guardian of the public interest. It is his duty to bring before the Judge any misconduct of a barrister or solicitor which is of sufficient gravity to warrant disciplinary action. True it is that if the judge acquits the petitioner of misconduct, no appeal is open to the Attorney-General. He has done his duty and is not aggrieved. But if the Judge finds the practitioner guilty of professional misconduct and a Court of Appeal reverses the decision on a ground which goes to the jurisdiction of the judge, or is otherwise a point in which the public interest is concerned, the Attorney-General is a "person aggrieved" by the decision and can properly petition Her Majesty for special leave to appeal."

It is clear that Lord Denning considered the denial of jurisdiction of the deputy judge to be a matter of public interest and therefore held the Attorney-General, as the Crown's representative, to be a person sufficiently interested as to be a person aggrieved. That surely is not the position here, nor is an Advocate-General the representative of the Government. Neither the Constitution nor the Advocates Act 1961 holds him as the representative of the Government or as a person representing the public interest. Whatever may be the position of the Attorney-General in a colony as a representative of the Crown, he is not the guardian of the public interest in India in any matter except as provided for in the statutes. He like any other person may draw the attention of the Bar Council to any misconduct of an advocate which according to him merits disciplinary action. The Act of 1961 provides for notice to be given to him of all such proceedings and gives him a right to appear at the hearing but once the hearing is over and a finding recorded he has done his duty and cannot be said to be aggrieved within the meaning of the expression used in S. 37. It is only because the Attorney-General for the Gambia had an interest in seeing that the Court of Appeal did not reverse the decision of the deputy Judge on a ground which went to the jurisdiction of the Judge or was otherwise a point in which the public interest was concerned that the Board held that he was a person aggrieved.

60. Our attention was drawn to a decision of the Judicial Committee in 37 Bom LR 722 = (AIR 1935 FC 168) where the Privy Council entertained an appeal by the Advocate-General of Bombay against an advocate who had been found by the High Court of Bombay to have been guilty of misconduct but against whom no disciplinary action had been taken by the Judges. Although there was a good deal of discussion at the Bar about the maintainability of the appeal which was sought for by special leave, the Board remarked that the circumstances were not such as to justify it in advising His Majesty to grant such special leave principally on the ground that the question was one of the exercise of statutory discretion by the Judges as to whether the circumstances of the case as established before the High Court called for any disciplinary action and the Board felt that the action of the High Court in exercising their discretion in the way they had done was not such as His Majesty would be advised further to consider.

61. This decision does not help the Advocate-General of Maharashtra because it did not decide the point as to the maintainability of the appeal. It is well known that the Judicial Committee was never chary in granting special leave to appeal when it felt that the justice of the case demanded a further hearing.

62. Mr. Daphtary appearing for the appellant very fairly drew our attention to an observation of this Court in 1955-1 SCR 1055 at p. 1064 = (AIR 1955 SC 223 at p. 227) which was a case of an appeal by special leave from an order of the High Court at Madras under S. 12 of the Indian Bar Councils Act debarring the advocate for a period of five years on charges of misconduct which were held by the High Court as proved. In the ultimate paragraph of the judgment this Court recorded its strong disapproval of the frame of the appeal in that the Judges of the High Court had been made respondents to it. They however went on to observe that:

"in an appeal arising out of a proceeding under the Bar Councils Act the appropriate parties should be the advocate concerned, the complainant, if any, the Bar Council or the Secretary thereof and the Advocate-General of the State concerned to whom notices have to be issued under Section 12 (3) of the Indian Bar Councils Act."

With great respect, we find ourselves unable to concur in the above so far as the Advocate-General is concerned. It does not appear that any argument was advanced about the proper parties to the appeal before this Court and the point as to whether the Advocate-General was a person aggrieved was neither raised nor argued. The only party to appear before this Court was "the Judges of the High Court".

63. It appears that the Advocate-General of Maharashtra felt in this case that the disciplinary committee of the Maharashtra Bar Council had gone wrong and that there was a question of principle involved as regards the effect of a conviction of an Indian advocate of an offence recognised by all civilised countries as an offence involving moral turpitude and that the question also related to the requirements of natural justice in a criminal court. Every day courts of law are called upon to decide questions of law inter partes which may be of general importance to the public. The Advocate-General cannot prefer an appeal merely because the question is one of considerable importance to the public inasmuch as he is not a party to it and he has no locus standi to do so even in a case where the statute only gives him an opportunity of appearing at a hearing and making his submissions.

64. A decision by the disciplinary committee cannot necessarily be said to raise a point of public interest merely because the Advocate-General feels that it is erroneous or that he himself would have arrived at a different conclusion. That at best is his personal opinion as regards the conduct of an advocate who has to deal with the public and the non-acceptance thereof does not make him a person aggrieved. An Advocate-General in India is not the guardian angel of the Bar, nor is he the champion of public interest in any matter save as specified in a statute.

65. In conclusion we hold that the appeal by the Advocate-General of Maharashtra to the Bar Council of India was incompetent and this appeal should be allowed and the finding of the Bar Council of India set aside.

66. VAIDIALINGAM, J.: With respect, I am not able to agree with the views expressed by My Lord, and Mr. Justice Mitter that the appeal filed by the Advocate-General of Maharashtra before the Bar Council of India was incompetent.

67. The preliminary point that has been argued before us in this appeal relates to the maintainability of the appeal by the Advocate-General of Maharashtra before the Bar Council of India under S. 37 (1) of the Advocates Act 1961 — Act 25 of 1961 (hereinafter referred to as the Act) against the order of the Disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council of Maharashtra (hereinafter referred to as the Committee) dated October 19, 1968 holding the appellant not guilty of any professional misconduct. It is not necessary to refer to the allegations of professional misconduct made against the appellant as this appeal has yet to be heard on merits.

68. Against the order of the Committee, acquitting the appellant, the Advocate-General of Maharashtra Sri H. M. Seervai filed under S. 37 (1) D. C. Appeal No. 18 of 1968 before the Bar Council of India. The said appeal was heard by the Disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council of India (hereinafter referred to as the Appellate Committee) as required by Section 37 (2) of the Act. A preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the appellant that the Advocate-General was not competent to prefer the appeal as he was not the complainant nor were the proceedings for taking disciplinary action initiated at his instance and he is not "any person aggrieved" under Section 37 (1). The State Bar Council, which initiated the proceedings was apparently satisfied with the decision of its Committee and did not take any further action. In short, according to the appellant, the Advocate-General was not "any person aggrieved", under S. 37 (1) of the Act. The appeal was also contested by the appellant on merits. The Appellate Committee by its order dated October 26, 1969 overruled the preliminary objection and held that the Advocate-General was competent to maintain the appeal under S. 37 (1). By the same order the Appellate Committee disagreed with the findings of the Committee and found the appellant guilty of professional misconduct and ordered his suspension from practice for a period of one year. The appellant was also directed to pay the costs of the proceedings. It is this order of the Appellate Committee that is the subject of the appeal before us.

69. As stated earlier, we have heard arguments only on the question of the maintainability of the appeal at the instance of the Advocate-General of Maharashtra before the Bar Council of India. As the question raised was a fairly important one, notice had been issued to the Attorney-General of India, the Bar Council of India, the Advocates-General and the Bar Councils of the States. Advocates-

General of most of the States were represented by counsel. The Attorney-General of India the Bar Council of India as well as the Bar Council of Maharashtra were also represented by counsel before us.

70. The question posed for our consideration is whether the Advocate-General of a State comes within the expression "any person aggrieved" in S. 37 (1) of the Act.

71. Mr. Daphtary, learned counsel for the appellant, drew our attention to the various provisions of the Act and pointed out that matters concerning the legal profession have now been entrusted to the State Bar Councils and the Bar Council of India and the powers to take disciplinary action have also been vested in them. Whatever may have been the position once occupied by the Advocate-General vis-a-vis, the legal profession, that has now been changed by the Act. His appearance in disciplinary matters is only to assist the Committee and he has no further interest in those proceedings. Whether an Advocate is acquitted or convicted is no concern of the Advocate-General, because he is not interested in the actual decision of the Committee. Hence the Advocate-General cannot be considered to be "any person aggrieved" by any order of the Committee so as to be eligible to file an appeal under S. 37 of the Act. In this connection Mr. Daphtary referred us to several English decisions where the expression 'person aggrieved' has been considered and interpreted with references to the statutes in which those expressions occur. Relying on the principles laid down in those decisions, to which reference will be made later, Mr. Daphtary pointed out that the expression 'person aggrieved' should not be interpreted as covering every person who is disappointed or dissatisfied with a decision rendered by a Committee. On the other hand, the counsel urged, that in order to be considered as a 'person aggrieved' that person must be one who has suffered a legal grievance, a man against whom a decision has been pronounced and which has wrongfully deprived him of something or wrongfully refused him something, or wrongfully affected his title to something. An appeal must be by the party who has endeavoured to maintain the contrary of that which has taken place. The counsel further pointed out that the Advocate-General is a public officer and cannot be considered to be a party to the proceedings before the Committee. The Advocate-General may be even annoyed with the decision of the Committee acquitting an Advocate, but that will not make him a 'person aggrieved'.

72. Considerable reliance was placed by Mr. Daphtary on the observations of Lord Denning in 1961 AC 617 to the effect that the Attorney-General in a colony represents the Crown as the guardian of the public interest and that it is his duty to bring before the Judge any misconduct of a barrister or solicitor which is of sufficient gravity to warrant disciplinary action and that if the Judge acquits the practitioner of misconduct, no appeal is open to the Attorney-General, who has done his duty and is not aggrieved. But if, on the other hand, a Court of Appeal reverses the decision holding a practitioner guilty of professional misconduct, on a ground which goes to the jurisdiction of the Judge or is otherwise a point in which the public interest is concerned, the Attorney-General is a 'person aggrieved' by the decision and can properly petition Her Majesty for special leave to appeal. Drawing support from these observations Mr. Daphtary urged that in this case, the Committee had acquitted the appellant and the Advocate-General having appeared through counsel before the Committee has done his duty, and as such he cannot be considered to be aggrieved. No question of jurisdiction of the Committee or any point in which the public interest is concerned arose for decision in the appeal filed by the Advocate-General, so as to make the appeal competent even within the limited rule laid down by Lord Denning.

73. Mr. V. S. Desai, learned counsel appearing for the Advocate-General of Maharashtra and Mr. M. C. Setalvad, learned counsel appearing for the Bar Council of India have supported the decision of the Appellate Committee holding in favour of the competency of the appeal filed by the Advocate-General as "any person aggrieved" under S. 37 of the Act. The counsel appearing for the Attorney-General, the Bar Council of Maharashtra and the Advocate-General represented before us have supported this view.

74. Mr. V. S. Desai pointed out that the Act is a self-contained Code, and that the various decisions where the expression 'person aggrieved' has been interpreted must be appreciated in the particular context in which those expressions occur in the statutes which were before the Courts. The reasoning in those decisions may furnish a guide but cannot be applied ipso facto when interpreting S. 37 of the Act. The expression "any person aggrieved" in S. 37 of the Act will have to be understood and interpreted in the context in which it appears, having due regard to the scheme of the Act. The counsel also referred us to certain decisions bearing on this matter, to which we shall refer in due course.

75. Mr. M. C. Setalvad, learned counsel, appearing for the Bar Council of India urged in particular that the Advocate-General is a responsible person and is the highest Law Officer of the State. The legal profession is very closely associated with the administration of justice by the Courts. The Bar, in that context has to come into contact with the public to assist them in legal matters. This responsible position occupied by the legal profession has to be properly safeguarded and that could be done only by insisting that its members are persons of high character and integrity and who observe rules of professional etiquette. The Act has made it obligatory to give notice in the disciplinary proceedings to the Advocate-General and give him an opportunity of being heard. The purpose for which the highest Law Officer of the State, the Advocate-General, is brought in not only in the Act, but also in the Indian Bar Councils Act of 1926 (Act 38 of 1926) (hereinafter referred to as the Bar Councils Act) is to subserve the public interest, namely, of seeing that the integrity and honesty of the legal profession are maintained and that proper decisions are given in disciplinary proceedings. There may be cases of inadequate punishment or even harsh punishment being awarded by the Committee. The Advocate-General in proper cases can bring up such matters before the Bar Council of India. Mr. Setalvad further pointed out that there is no restriction placed in S. 37 denying the right of the Advocate-General to file an appeal against the orders of the Committee. Having due regard to the scheme of the Act and particularly of Ss. 35 and 37, the Advocate-General comes within "any person aggrieved" and hence he was competent to file the appeal.

76. I have given careful consideration to the various aspects placed before us by all the learned counsel and I am of the view that the decision of the Appellate Committee holding that the appeal filed by the Advocate-General of Maharashtra was competent is correct. I am further of the view that the expression "any person aggrieved" in S. 37 will have to be interpreted in the context in which it appears, having due regard to the provisions of the Act and its scheme. Considered in this manner, it has to be held that the Advocate-General comes within "any person aggrieved" in S. 37. The decisions relied on by Mr. Daphtary have, no doubt, interpreted the expression 'person aggrieved' occurring in the particular statutes which came up for consideration in those decisions, but in my opinion it will not be safe to adopt in toto the interpretation so placed, no doubt on the identical expression occurring in different statutes when construing the said expression in the Act before us. As pointed out by Lord Parker C. J. in 1959-1 QBD 384 cases which have interpreted similar expressions, can be looked into

"to see if there are general principles which can be extracted which will guide the court in approaching the question as to what the words 'person aggrieved' mean in any particular statute."

I will make a brief reference to the decisions cited for the appellant later. But before doing so, it is desirable to refer to some of the provisions of the Act itself, so that the scheme of the Act will become evident, and that will throw considerable light on the interpretation of S. 37.

77. Before I refer to the Act, I think it desirable to advert to some of the provisions of the Bar Councils Act. Even at the outset I may point out that the scheme of the Bar Councils Act was different. In the Bar Councils Act, the disciplinary jurisdiction over Advocates was vested in the High Court (vide S. 10 (1)). Under S. 10 (2) the High Court, if the complaint is not summarily rejected by it, had to refer the case for inquiry either to the Bar Council or after consultation with the Bar Council, to the Court of a District Judge. When a case is referred for inquiry to the Bar Council under S. 11, the case was to be inquired into by the Committee of the Bar Council, referred to as the Tribunal, and that Tribunal consisted of the particular number of persons mentioned in S. 11 (2) appointed for the purpose, by the Chief Justice. The High Court had power to make rules under S. 12 (1) prescribing the procedure to be followed in the conduct of inquiries. The finding of the inquiry by the Tribunal had to be forwarded to the High Court. On receipt of the finding, the High Court had to fix a date for hearing of the case. Under Section 12 (3) it was obligatory to give notice, amongst other persons, to the Advocate-General of the day fixed for hearing; and it was also further obligatory to give the Advocate-General an opportunity of being heard before orders were passed. Under Section 12 (4) the High Court could pass final orders or refer the case back for further inquiry. Under Sub-section (5) the High Court had also power, when passing final orders to give directions regarding payment of costs. I am only referring to the material provisions of the Bar Councils Act to show that the High Court was then the disciplinary authority and the function of the Committee of the Bar Council was only to submit a finding after conducting an inquiry as directed by the High Court. It is however to be noted that the Advocate-General then was not associated in the inquiry proceedings before the Tribunal of the Bar Council; but he was entitled to be given notice of the date fixed for hearing and also to be heard in the proceedings before the High Court after receipt of the finding submitted by the Committee of the Bar Council. Those provisions clearly establish the important position occupied by the Advocate-General and recognised by the Bar Councils Act.

78. The scheme is slightly different when we come to the Act. The State Bar Councils and the Bar Council of India have been made autonomous units and various functions regarding the legal profession have been entrusted to them. Taking disciplinary action against the delinquent members of the Bar and conducting inquiries are all part of their functions. Barring a provision of a right to appeal to the Supreme Court under S. 38 of the Act, the Courts are completely out of the picture so far as the legal profession is concerned. The Act was one to amend and consolidate the law relating to legal practitioners and to provide for the constitution of the Bar Councils of the States and the Bar Council of India. Section 3 makes provisions for the State Bar Councils. Under sub-section (2) the Advocate-General of the State is an ex officio member. Similarly the Additional Solicitor General of India is an ex officio member of the State Bar Council of Delhi. Section 6 (1) enumerates the functions of the State Bar Councils. One of the functions under cl. (c) relates to entertaining and determining cases of misconduct against advocates on the roll of the State Bar Council. Section 7 similarly enumerates the functions of the Bar Council of India. Under cl. (c), the Bar Council of India has got the power to lay down the procedure to be followed by its Disciplinary Committee and the Disciplinary Committees of each State Bar Councils. Section 9 deals with the Bar Council constituting one or more Disciplinary Committees in the manner indicated therein. Section 23 gives a right of pre-audience to the Attorney-General of India, the Solicitor General of India, the Additional-Solicitor General of India and the Advocates-General of the States, as mentioned in sub-sections (1) to (4) respectively.

79. Chapter V deals with the "conduct of Advocates" and contains the group of sections 35 to 44. Section 35 deals with the punishment of Advocates for misconduct and is as follows:

"Section 35: Punishment of advocates for misconduct:

(1) Where on receipt of a complaint or otherwise a State Bar Council has reason to believe that any advocate on its roll has been guilty of professional or other misconduct, it shall refer the case for disposal to its disciplinary committee.

(2) The disciplinary committee of a State Bar Council, if it does not summarily reject the complaint, shall fix a date for the hearing of the case and shall cause a notice thereof to be given to the advocate concerned and to the Advocate-General of the State.

(3) The disciplinary committee of a State Bar Council after giving the advocate concerned and the Advocate-General an opportunity of being heard, may make any of the following orders, namely:

(a) dismiss the complaint or, where the proceedings were initiated at the instance of the State Bar Council, direct that the proceedings be filed;

(b) reprimand the advocate;

(c) suspend the advocate from practice for such period as it may deem fit;

(d) remove the name of the advocate from the State roll of advocates.

(4) Where an advocate is suspended from practice under clause (c) of sub-section (3), he shall, during the period of suspension, be debarred from practising in any court or before any authority or person in India.

(5) Where any notice is issued to the Advocate-General under sub-section (2), the Advocate-General may appear before the disciplinary committee of the State Bar Council either in person or through any advocate appearing on his behalf."

80. Similarly S. 36 (1) deals with the disciplinary powers of the Bar Council of India. Sub-section (2) confers powers on the Appellate Committee of its own motion to withdraw for inquiry for itself any disciplinary action against an advocate pending before the Committee and dispose of the same. Sub-section (3) provides for the Appellate Committee when disposing of a case under Section 36 observing so far as may be the procedure laid down in Section 35. It further provides that references to the Advocate-General in Section 35 are to be construed as references to the Attorney-General of India.

81. Sections 37 and 38 which provide for an appeal to the Bar Council of India and to the Supreme Court respectively, run as follows:

• "Section 37: Appeal to the Bar Council of India.

(1) Any person aggrieved by an order of the disciplinary committee of a State Bar Council (under section 35) may, within sixty days of the date of the communication of the order to him, prefer an appeal to the Bar Council of India.

(2) Every such appeal shall be heard by the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of India which may pass such order thereon as it deems fit."

"Section 38. Appeal to the Supreme Court:

Any person aggrieved by an order made by the disciplinary committee of the Bar Council of India under S. 36 or section 37 may, within sixty days of the date on which the order is communicated to him, prefer an appeal to the Supreme Court and the Supreme Court may pass such order thereon as it deems fit."

82. Section 42 (1) deals with the powers of the disciplinary committee of a Bar Council with regard to the various matters provided for in cls. (a) to (f). Section 43 provides for making of orders as to costs by the disciplinary committee of a Bar Council. Section 44 gives powers of review to the disciplinary committee of a Bar Council. Section 48A in Chapter VI deals with the revisional powers of the Bar Council of India.

83. It will be seen from Ss. 3 (2) (a), 23 (4) and 35 that the Advocate-General of the State is given by the Act a very important and responsible position. Some discussion took place before us whether the Advocate-General can be considered to be the person who is charged with the duty of safeguarding the professional integrity of the members of the Bar, when powers and duties in that regard have been conferred under the Act on the State Bar Councils. I do not think it necessary to go into that aspect as I think an inquiry in that regard is not relevant for the present purpose of construing S. 37. Nor can the analogy of the Attorney-General in a colony representing the Crown, being the guardian of public interest, as stated by Lord Denning in 1961 AC 617 (supra) be brought in for interpreting S. 37 of the Act, as we are only concerned to find out the right given to the Advocate-General by the Act. So far as that is concerned I am satisfied that the Act has given due recognition to his status by virtue of his being the highest Law Officer in the State, as the Advocate-General and who may be trusted to place a disinterested and dispassionate view before the Committee to enable it to come to a proper decision having due regard to the Advocate concerned, as well as the entire legal profession to which he belongs. Apart from his being under Section 3 (2) (a) an ex officio member of the State Bar Council, Section 23 (4) gives him a right of pre-audience over all other advocates.

84. Coming to Section 35 read with Section 37, which has been extracted earlier, the main features that emerge therefrom are as follows

(1) The State Bar Council can suo motu or on receipt of a complaint, when it has reason to believe that an advocate has been guilty of professional or other misconduct refer the case to its committee.

(2) If the Committee does not summarily reject the complaint, it is bound to fix a date for hearing of the case, and it is also further bound to give notice of the date of hearing, apart from the advocate concerned, to the Advocate-General of the State.

(3) The Committee is bound in the inquiry to give an opportunity of being heard both to the advocate concerned and the Advocate-General. After such an inquiry the Committee can pass one or other of the orders enumerated in clauses (a) to (d) of Section 35.

(4) The Advocate-General may appear before the Committee in person or through an advocate appearing on his behalf.

(5) The orders of the Committee have to be communicated to the Advocate-General and the advocate concerned.

(6) Against the orders passed under Section 35, any person aggrieved is entitled to file an appeal under Section 37, to the Bar Council of India.

85. While under the Bar Councils Act, the Advocate-General was associated with the disciplinary proceedings only when the matter was being decided by the High Court, after receipt of the findings submitted by the Tribunal of the Bar Council it is significant to note that under the Act, the Advocate-General is associated with the disciplinary proceedings right from the stage of inquiry by the Committee. Under sub-section (2) of S. 35 the Committee is bound to give notice of the date of hearing not only to the Advocate concerned but also to the Advocate-General of the State. It will be noted that disciplinary proceedings may have been occasioned because of a complaint made by a third party or may have been initiated suo motu by the State Bar Council. In whatever manner the proceedings may have been initiated, the Advocate-General is entitled to be given notice of the date of hearing. It cannot be a formal and empty notice to the Advocate-General because sub-section (3) clearly indicates that the Advocate-General should be given an opportunity of being heard. It is significant to note that sub-section (3) of S. 35 which deals with the giving of an opportunity of being heard both to the advocate concerned and the Advocate-General does not make any distinction in the opportunity so afforded to both of them. The same opportunity that the Advocate concerned has under sub-s. (3) is also afforded to the Advocate-General. It is not necessary to go to the extent of holding that there is a "lis" before the Committee and that the Advocate-General is a "party" in the sense that expression is ordinarily understood in law. The advocate concerned will be interested in disputing the allegations made or charges levelled against him and he will be entitled to lead evidence in support of his plea. If there is a complainant, he will of course lead evidence to support his case. The Advocate-General, on the other hand, is also entitled to place before the Committee all aspects of the matter including facts that may be in favour of the advocate whose conduct is under inquiry. This is because of the important position occupied by him. It may be that the Advocate-General may not be able to appear personally and participate in all the disciplinary proceedings and that is why provision has been made in S. 35 (5) enabling the Advocate-General to appear either in person or through any advocate appearing on his behalf. Just as the advocate concerned will have an opportunity of examining his witnesses and cross-examining the witnesses produced against him, the Advocate-General or the counsel appearing on his behalf will also have a right of cross-examining the witnesses produced in the case so as to elicit information about the charge of professional misconduct levelled against the advocate concerned. The Advocate-General need not be vindictive and take sides as a party to a litigation and see that the advocate is found guilty. On the other hand, by virtue of the special and dispassionate role occupied by him, he will be able during the inquiry to place such materials or evidence which will enable the Committee to come to a proper and correct finding, in the interest of both the legal practitioner and the legal profession to which he belongs.

86. It is in this context of the close association of the Advocate-General with the disciplinary proceedings that the expression 'person aggrieved' in S. 37 has to be interpreted. There can be no controversy that an appeal will lie against the various orders that the Committee may pass as enumerated in cls. (a) to (d) of S. 35 (3). The question is at whose instance the appeal will lie. If the complaint is dismissed, the complainant will be a 'person aggrieved' who can file an appeal under S. 37. In fact it has been held by this Court in Civil Appeal No. 877 of 1968, D/- 8-10-1968 (SC) that when proceedings are initiated on a complaint by a party and the Committee after finding the advocate guilty of the charges passed an order reprimanding with a warning, an appeal filed by such a complainant before the Appellate Committee only on the question of sentence imposed, was competent as the complainant was a 'person aggrieved'. Similarly, an order adverse to the advocate concerned, can be the subject of appeal at his instance.

87. There is no controversy that the order passed by the Committee was communicated to the Advocate-General. As already pointed out a series of steps is contemplated under S. 35; reference to the Committee, of a case of professional misconduct, notice of the date of hearing to be given to the Advocate-General; Advocate-General being given an opportunity of being heard at the hearing; the Advocate-General being entitled to appear before the Committee either in person or through an Advocate; his being entitled to be communicated with a copy of the order passed by the Committee. It is in that context and for these purposes that I have considered the meaning of the expression "any person aggrieved" in S. 37 (1). The fact that the Advocate-General does not allege an infringement of any legal rights of his own is of no consequence. The particular proceeding in which the Advocate-General is given a right to participate relates to an inquiry into the allegations of misconduct against an advocate. Upon a fair construction of Section 37 read with Section 35 of the Act, the Advocate-General, in my opinion is "any person aggrieved" and as such was entitled to file the appeal under Section 37 (1) against the order passed by the Committee. The same reasoning will apply to the Attorney-General of India under Section 38.

88. It may be that in a particular case the Advocate-General may feel that the finding arrived at in favour of the advocate by the Committee is not justified by the evidence and that decision will have to be reconsidered by the Appellate Committee; or it may even be that in a particular case the sentence imposed by the Committee may not be commensurate with the guilt of the advocate; or it may also be that the sentence imposed on an advocate by the Committee is very harsh or the finding of guilt is not correct. Under such and similar circumstances in the interests of the Advocate and the legal profession, the Advocate-General will be competent to bring up the matter before the Appellate Committee so that justice may be done.

89. In this context the observations of Lord Hewart C. J. in (1929) 2 KB 440 are apposite. The question before the Court in that decision was whether an objector to a proposal made by a local authority to acquire land in order to provide parking place for vehicles and whose objections were overruled was a 'person aggrieved' under Section 68 (3) of the Public Health Act 1925 and as such entitled to appeal. It was found that the objector alleged no ground of objections personally to himself. Nevertheless it was held that such an objector was a 'person aggrieved' and entitled to appeal. Lord Hewart C. J. at page 443 states:

"The question therefore is: Is it true to say that in these circumstances and within the meaning of this part of this statute this respondent was a 'person... aggrieved"? Now undoubtedly those words, "a person aggrieved", have very often been considered, and, if one looked at the mere terms apart from their context and apart from the particular circumstances, it would have been quite easy to marshal decisions of contradictory import. But as has been said again and again there is often little utility in seeking to interpret particular expressions in one statute by reference to decisions given upon similar expressions in different statutes which have been enacted ~~also~~ intuitu. The problem with which we are concerned is not, what is the meaning of the expression "aggrieved" in any one of a dozen other statutes, but what is its meaning in this part of this statute? It is a little important to see what this part of this statute is dealing with."

90. The above extract has been quoted with approval by Lord Parker C. J. in (1959) 1 QB 384 (supra).

91. I have already indicated earlier that the problem before us whether the Advocate-General is a 'person aggrieved' under Section 37 of the Act will have to be tackled with reference to the scheme and provisions of the Act and that is exactly what I have done and arrived at the conclusion that he is a person aggrieved.

92. Mr. Daphtary argued that when the Committee consisting of members of the legal profession, has decided in favour of the Advocate, the Advocate-General can have no grievance. This, in my view, is really begging the question. Why did the Legislature then bring in the Advocate-General at all and why has it associated him in disciplinary proceedings from the very beginning of the inquiry? That and other circumstances already pointed out by me, bring him under S. 37 as "any person aggrieved."

93. Mr. Daphtary then urged that if the Advocate-General was expected to safeguard the interest of the Advocate and the legal profession by seeing that proper decisions are given by the Committee, that purpose is not served when powers have been given to the Committee under Section 35 (2) to summarily reject a complaint and the Advocate-General will have no remedy against such rejection. The short answer to this contention is that a right of appeal must be specifically conferred by statute. Section 37 (1) gives a right of appeal against an order passed under S. 35. The orders which could be passed after hearing the case are enumerated in clauses (a) to (d) of Section 35 (3). It is not necessary for me to express any opinion whether an order summarily rejecting a complaint can also be the subject of an appeal under Section 37 (1) as that section is in very wide terms. In any event, Mr. Daphtary's contention will only amount to this viz., that the Advocate-General is not associated at the stage of summary rejection of a complaint. That circumstance does not militate against the view already expressed by me. Probably the Legislature may have felt that if there is any wrongful summary rejection of a complaint it could be set right by the Bar Council of India under Section 48A. But once the Committee decides to hear the case and passes an order under S. 35, the Advocate-General gets a right of appeal under Section 37 (1).

94. Mr. V. S. Desai referred us to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Advocate-General of Bombay v. Pitamberdas Gokuldas Mehta, 62 Ind App 235 = (AIR 1935 PC 168) wherein, according to him, an appeal by the Advocate-General of Bombay against the decision of the High Court of Bombay Pleaders Act was entertained by the Judicial Committee. He has also referred us to the discussion between the Court and counsel in the said decision reported in 37 Bom LR 722 = (AIR 1935 PC 168) which, according to him, will show that though an objection about the locus standi of the Advocate-General to file an appeal under such circumstances was raised, but was not accepted by the Judicial Committee. I have gone through both the reports and there is no indication that the question of maintainability of an appeal by the Advocate-General was decided one way or the other by the Judicial Committee.

95. Mr. Daphtary has referred us to the decisions in (1880) 14 Ch. D 458 in (1887) 19 QBD 174, (1890) 25 QBD 357, (1951) 2 KB 508 and (1959) 1 QB 384 (supra), wherein the expression 'person aggrieved' occurring in different statutes came up for interpretation. The principles that emerge from those decisions appear to be that a 'person aggrieved' must be a person who has suffered a legal grievance or who has claimed a title to something and his claim has been negatived or who has maintained to the contrary in the proceedings or litigation. It has been further held in some of those decisions that the said expression does not take in any person who may be affected by the order or who may feel disappointed or even annoyed at the decision. In the view that I take that the expression 'person aggrieved' in Section 37 of the Act has to be interpreted in the light of the provisions and scheme of the Act as well as the context in which those expressions appear, I do not think it necessary to consider in great detail those decisions which have been rendered on different statutes.

96. The decision in Civil Appeal No. 1716 of 1967, D/- 1-8-1970 (SC), referred to by Mr. Daphtary, in my opinion, does not assist the appellant. In that decision it was held that when certain notifications issued under the Land Acquisition Act were set aside by the High Court, the Municipal Corporation, on whose behalf the acquisition was being made by the Government, cannot be considered to be a 'person aggrieved' entitled to challenge the order of the High Court. An additional reason has also been given against the competency of the appeal that even an order for costs has not been passed against the Municipal Corporation. That decision was rendered on the scheme of the Land Acquisition Act, and so does not help the appellant.

97. It was urged on behalf of the appellant that if the Advocate-General was really intended to be given a right of appeal under S. 37 (1), the Legislature should have used the expression 'any person including the Advocate-General aggrieved by an order' I am of the view that it was unnecessary to make any such provision because the expression as it stands clearly takes within its fold the Advocate-General also.

98. This leaves me with the decision in 1961 AC 617 (supra) which has been very strongly relied on by Mr. Daphtary. One Mr. X a member of the English Bar was admitted to practice as a barrister and solicitor of the Supreme Court of Gambia. The Deputy Judge made an order striking his name off the roll of that Court. This decision was reversed by the West African Court of Appeal on the ground that the Deputy Judge had no jurisdiction in the matter. The Attorney-General of Gambia sought leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council; but the West African Court of Appeal declined to grant him leave on the ground that notice had not been given in due time to Mr. X. The Attorney-General then made a petition to Her Majesty for special leave to appeal from the judgment of the West African Court of Appeal, setting aside the order of the Deputy Judge as well as refusing to grant leave to appeal. The Attorney-General's petition was granted; but liberty was reserved to Mr. X to raise the preliminary point that no appeal lay at the instance of the Attorney-General. During the course of arguments the Judicial Committee rejected the preliminary objection.

99. It is to be noticed that against the decision of the Deputy Judge striking his name off the roll, Mr. X filed an appeal to the West African Court of Appeal under Section 14 which was as follows:

"An appeal shall lie to the Court of appeal from any order of the Judge suspending a barrister or solicitor of the Supreme Court from practice or striking his name off the roll and for the purposes of any such appeal any such order shall be deemed to be an order of the Supreme Court."

100. I am particularly referring to this decision because certain observations of Lord Denning on which reliance has been placed by Mr. Daphtary will have to be understood with reference to this provision of law. Exercising jurisdiction under this section, the West African Court of Appeal set aside the order of the Deputy Judge. In the first instance the Attorney-General sought leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council from the West African Court of Appeal under Section 5 of the West African (Appeal to the Privy Council) Order in Council, 1949, which is as follows:

"Applications to the court for leave to appeal shall be made by motion or petition within 21 days from the date of the judgment to be appealed from, and the applicant shall give the opposite party notice of his intended application."

101. The West African Court of Appeal declined to grant leave to appeal to the Attorney-General on the ground that notice had not been given within the time mentioned in the above order to Mr. X. The Attorney-General made an application to the Judicial Committee for special leave to appeal from the two orders mentioned above of the West African Court of Appeal. That petition was filed under Section 31 of the West African (Appeal to Privy Council) Order in Council, 1949, which runs as follows:

"Nothing in this order contained shall be deemed to interfere with the right of His Majesty upon the humble petition of any person aggrieved by any judgment of the Court to admit his appeal therefrom upon such conditions as His Majesty in Council shall think fit to impose."

102. The question that arose before their Lordships was whether the Attorney-General was a 'person aggrieved' under the above order.

103. In discussing this question Lord Denning at page 634 observes:

".....The words 'person aggrieved' are of wide import and should not be subjected to a restrictive interpretation. They do not include, of course, a mere busy body who is interfering in things which do not concern him: but they do include a person who has a genuine grievance because an order has been made which prejudicially affects his interests. Has the Attorney-General a sufficient interest for this purpose? Their Lordships think that he has. The Attorney-General in a colony represents the Crown as the guardian of the public interest. It is his duty to bring before the judge any misconduct of a barrister or solicitor which is of sufficient gravity to warrant disciplinary action. True it is that if the judge acquits the practitioner of misconduct, no appeal is open to the Attorney-General. He has done his duty and is not aggrieved. But if the judge finds the practitioner guilty of professional misconduct, and a Court of Appeal reverses the decision on a ground which goes to the jurisdiction of the judge, or is otherwise a point in which the public interest is concerned, the Attorney-General is a 'person aggrieved' by the decision and can properly petition Her Majesty for special leave to appeal. It was for these reasons that their Lordships rejected the preliminary objection and held that the Attorney-General was a 'person aggrieved' by the decision of the West African Court of Appeal."

104. The observations made in the above extract, in my opinion, have to be related to the particular provision of the order in Council which the Judicial Committee was considering. In the case before the Judicial Committee, the Attorney-General had initiated the disciplinary proceedings against the Barrister. Under S. 14, there was only a very limited right of appeal and that too in favour of the barrister or solicitor in respect of the orders mentioned therein. The Attorney-General, though he may have been the complainant under S. 14 had no right of appeal if the barrister was acquitted. That is why Lord Denning states that it is true that if the Judge acquits the practitioner of misconduct no appeal is open to the Attorney-General. This view, with respect, is correct because Section 14 does not give a right of appeal to the Attorney-General. Lord Denning, no doubt, has further stated that the Judicial Committee has rejected the preliminary objection in view of the fact that it was of the opinion that in the case before it a question of jurisdiction or a point of public interest is involved and 'therefore' the Attorney-General is a 'person aggrieved'.

105. I have already indicated that there are no restrictions or limitations imposed in Section 37 of the Act giving a right of appeal only to the advocate who may have been found guilty. On the other hand, the words "any person aggrieved" in Section 37 are very wide, and as observed by Lord Denning in the opening part of the above extract these words should not be subjected to a restrictive interpretation. In the view that I take that the Advocate-General has an unqualified right of appeal under Section 37 (1) I do not think it necessary either to refer to Article 165 of the Constitution nor do I think it necessary to consider the further question whether the appeal filed by the Advocate-General before the Bar Council of India relates to any question of jurisdiction or a point of public interest.

106. To conclude, the appeal filed by the Advocate-General of Maharashtra before the Appellate Committee was competent and this point has to be held against the appellant. The result will be that the appeal before us will have to be heard on merits.

RAY, J.:— 107. I agree with Vaidialingam, J. I desire to express my separate opinion in view of the importance of the question raised in this appeal.

108. This is an appeal from the order dated 26 October, 1969 of the Disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council of India suspending the appellant from practice for a period of one year.

109. An appeal to the Disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council of India was preferred by Shri H. M. Seervai, Advocate General of Maharashtra against the order dated 17 October, 1968 of the Bar Council of Maharashtra holding that the appellant was not guilty of professional misconduct or otherwise.

110. Before the Disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council of India a preliminary objection was taken by Adi Pheroaz Shah Gandhi as to the maintainability of the appeal preferred by the Advocate General of Maharashtra.

111. The appellant pressed the same preliminary objection in this Court, namely, that the Advocate General of the State of Maharashtra could not prefer an appeal against an order of the Disciplinary Committee of the State Bar Council.

112. The relevant provision for appeal to the Bar Council of India is to be found in Section 37 of the Advocates Act, 1961 (hereinafter referred to as the Act). There are two sub-sections of Section 37. The first sub-section enacts that any person aggrieved by an order of the Disciplinary Committee of the State Bar Council made under Section 35 may, within sixty days of the date of the communication of the order to him, prefer an appeal to the Bar Council of India. Sub-section (2) of Section 37 states that every such appeal shall be heard by the Disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council of India.

113. The present appeal is under Section 38 of the Act which confers right of appeal to the Supreme Court by any person aggrieved by an order made by the Disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council of India.

114. The entire controversy in this appeal centres on the meaning of the words 'any person aggrieved by an order of the Disciplinary Committee of the State Bar Council' occurring in sub-section (1) of Section 37 of the Act. The same words also occur in section 38 of the Act.

115. Mr. Daphtary on behalf of the appellant contended first that the Advocate General did not represent public interest and could not therefore be said to be a person aggrieved by an order of the Disciplinary Committee. Secondly, that the provisions in section 35 of the Act that the Advocate General was entitled to a notice from the Disciplinary Committee of the date of hearing and the provision that the Advocate General was entitled to be heard by the Disciplinary Committee could not have the effect of making the Advocate General a party and, thirdly, the Advocate General was an impartial person and his duty would end by making submissions, if any, before the Disciplinary Committee and he would not be a person aggrieved either by an order of dismissal of a complaint against the Advocate or by any order passed against the Advocate.

115A. Notices were given to the Attorney General and the Advocate General of different States in view of the importance of the question involved in this appeal. Mr. V. S. Desai on behalf of the Advocate General of Maharashtra, Mr. Setalvad on behalf of the Bar Council of India, Dr. Seyied Muhammad on behalf of the Attorney General, Mr. Datar counsel for the Maharashtra State Bar Council and other counsel appearing for Advocates General of other States all contended that the Advocate General would have the right under the Act to prefer an appeal as a person aggrieved by an order of the Disciplinary Committee of a State Bar Council.

116. Various decisions were cited at the Bar to illustrate the meaning of the words 'person aggrieved'. One group of decisions is based on the locus classicus in (1880) 14 Ch. D. 458.

The other line of decisions is to be found in (1887) 19 Q.B.D. 174 and (1929) 2 K.B. 440. James, L. J. in the case of Ex parte Sidebotham, (1880) 14 Ch D. 458 said that "a 'person aggrieved' must be a man who has suffered a legal grievance, a man against whom a decision has been pronounced which has wrongfully deprived him of something, or wrongfully refused him something, or wrongfully affected his title to something". Lord Esher, M. R. on the other hand in (1887) 19 Q.B.D. 174 said that the meaning given by James, L. J. to the words 'person aggrieved' would not be an exhaustive definition and the words would include a person who has asked for a decision for which he had a right to ask, and has been wrongfully refused. In the Sevenoaks case, 1929-2 K.B. 440 Lord Hewart, C. J. said "that when a person might make an objection and was entitled to a decision upon it he would, if the decision was adverse to him, be able to appeal".

117. These decisions indicate that the words 'person aggrieved' would have different shades of meaning in accordance with the tenor of the relevant statute. The observations of James, L. J. in the case of Ex parte Sidebotham (1880) 14 Ch D 458, turn on the meaning of the words 'person aggrieved' occurring in the English Bankruptcy Act, 1914 which, inter alia, provided that the orders of the Court in bankruptcy matters except in cases specially excluded were subject to appeal at the instance of any person aggrieved even if he had not appeared in the Court below. It is in the context of the English Bankruptcy Act that creditors, trustees, administrators of a debtor or bankrupt would have a legal grievance against whom a decision has been pronounced which has wrongfully deprived him of something, or wrongfully refused him something, or wrongfully affected his title to something.

118. Lord Hewart, C. J. in Sevenoaks case, 1929-2 K.B. 440 said "the problem is not what is the meaning of the expression 'person aggrieved' in one or dozen statutes but what is its meaning in this part of the statute".

In that case the relevant provision of the Public Health Act conferred a power on a local authority to provide within that district suitable parking place for vehicles. The statute further in that case contemplated a notice of the proposal to acquire land for using it as a parking place and objections, if any, to such proposal. When objections were made, the local authority would have to consider them. In the Sevenoaks case, 1929-2 K.B. 440 the Urban Council considered the objection of a ratepayer and thereafter proceeded with the scheme of the parking place. Lord Hewart, C. J. in giving meaning to the words 'person aggrieved' in that case said that first a person was an author of an objection, and, secondly, he was aggrieved by the refusal of his objection. It was held that a special individual right was infringed. In the Sevenoaks case, 1929-2 K.B. 440 there was neither a pecuniary nor a proprietary grievance. The action of the local authority in providing a parking place invited objections. It is the refusal of that objection which constituted a grievance and it was a grievance sustainable in law.

119. Mr. Daphtary relied on the observations of James, L. J. in Re, Sidebotham, (1880) 14 Ch. D. 458 that 'a disappointed person would not be a person aggrieved' and also on the observations of Lord Coleridge in (1890) 25 Q.B.D. 357 that one would not be an aggrieved person because someone was held not to have done wrong. In other words, it was said that the Advocate General would make submissions or advance contentions and the non-acceptance by the Disciplinary Committee of such submissions would not constitute either a legal grievance or rejection of a remedy asked for.

120. Mr. Daphtary also leaned heavily on the decision of the Judicial Committee in 1961 A.C. 617 in support of two propositions. First, that the Judicial Committee found in the Gambian case, 1961 AC 617, that in the colonies the Attorney General represented the Crown and was therefore the guardian of the public interest. Mr. Daphtary submitted that the Advocate General did not represent public interest in our country and therefore could not be said to be a guardian of public interest. Secondly, the Judicial Committee in the Gambian case, 1961 AC 617, said that in relation to disciplinary proceedings if a legal practitioner was acquitted of misconduct no appeal was open to the Attorney General because he had done his duty and was not aggrieved. Extracting that proposition from the Gambian case, 1961 AC 617 Mr. Daphtary submitted that similarly the Advocate General could not have any grievance where an Advocate was acquitted.

121. The purpose and the provisions of the Advocates Act, 1961 will determine whether the Advocate General is a person aggrieved within the meaning of the relevant sections in the Act. It may not be out of place to refer to the Bar Councils Act, 1926 which dealt with disciplinary conduct of practitioners. Prior to the Advocates Act the High Court under the Bar Councils Act, 1926 had power to suspend any advocate from practice whom it found guilty of professional or other misconduct. Under the said 1926 Act upon receipt of a complaint made to it by any court or by Bar Council or by any other person that any Advocate had been guilty of misconduct, the High Court if it did not summarily reject the complaint referred the case for enquiry either to the Bar Council or after consultation with the Bar Council to the Court of a District Judge and the High Court might of its own motion refer any case in which it had reason to believe that any such Advocate had been so guilty. If any case was referred under the Bar Councils Act, 1926 for enquiry, the case was to be enquired into by the Committee of the Bar Council which was called the Tribunal. The Tribunal consisted of not less than three and not more than five members of the Bar Council appointed for that purpose by the Chief Justice or Chief Judge of the High Court, and one of the members so appointed was the President of the Tribunal. The finding of a Tribunal was forwarded to the High Court through the Bar Council and the finding of a District Court was to be forwarded direct to the High Court with a copy to the Bar Council. On receipt of the finding the High Court was to fix a date for the hearing of the case and notice of the date so fixed was to be given to the Advocate concerned and to the Bar Council and to the Advocate General. The High Court was also required under the statute to afford the Advocate concerned and the Bar Council and the Advocate General an opportunity of being heard before orders were passed in that case.

122. Mr. Desai relied on the provisions of the Bar Councils Act, 1926 to show that under the said Act notice was to be given to the Advocate General and that the Advocate General was entitled to be heard and he relied on a decision of the Judicial Committee in 62 Ind App 235 and 37 Bom LR 722 = (AIR 1935 PC 168) and the decision of this Court in (1955) 1 SCR 1055 = (AIR 1955 SC 223) in support of two propositions, namely, that the Advocate General could prefer an appeal and in an appeal preferred by the Advocate concerned, the Advocate General would be a respondent to such an appeal. In Bharucha's case, (AIR 1935 PC 168) certain Advocates were members of Associations declared unlawful by Government and they were convicted of offences punishable under section 17 (1) of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1908. The High Court did not take any steps against the Advocates on the ground that it did not consider that membership of an unlawful Association would render the Advocates unfit for the exercise of the profession. The Advocate General of Bombay made applications for special leave before the Judicial Committee to appeal against the decision of the High Court. The Judicial Committee did not grant any special leave and agreed with the view of the High Court. No question was raised in the applications before the Judicial Committee as to the maintainability of the applications for special leave. It should be noticed that under the Bar Councils Act there was no provision for any appeal. Mr. Desai rightly relied on the decision of the Judicial Committee not for an actual decision that the Advocate General had a right of appeal but for the purpose of showing that the Advocate General had not only locus standi to make an application for leave but also could be said to have been aggrieved by an order in relation to professional misconduct of an Advocate. The Judicial Committee would not have entered into the merits of the case if the Advocate General had no right to apply for leave to appeal.

123. The decision of this Court in Bhataraju's case, (1955) 1 SCR 1055 = (AIR 1955 SC 223) was to the effect that in an appeal preferred to the Supreme Court by an Advocate against whom an order of suspension was passed by the High Court under section 12 of the Bar Councils Act, the proper respondents would be the complainant, if any, the Bar Council and the Advocate General of the State concerned and not the High Court. The appeal to this Court in Bhataraju's case, (1955) 1 SCR 1055 = (AIR 1955 SC 223) was by special leave. This Court held that the Advocate General, the Bar Council and the complainant would be parties to the appeal on the ground that notices under the Bar Councils Act had been issued to those persons. The decisions of this Court and the Judicial Committee both indicate that the Advocate General under the Bar Councils Act had locus standi in making an application for leave to appeal and being a respondent to an appeal preferred by the Advocate.

124. The position held by the High Court under the Bar Councils Act, 1926 is now occupied by the Bar Council under the Advocates Act. There are State Bar Councils and there is also a Bar Council of India. Every Bar Council is a body corporate. The functions of the State Bar Council are inter alia to admit persons as advocates on its roll; to prepare and maintain such roll; to entertain and determine cases of misconduct against advocates on its roll; to safeguard the rights, privileges and interest of advocates on its roll. The functions of the Bar Council of India are to lay down standards of professional conduct and etiquette for advocates, to lay down the procedure to be followed by the Disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council of India and the Disciplinary Committees of the State Bar Councils, to safeguard the rights, privileges and interests of advocates. A Bar Council is empowered under the Act to constitute one or more Disciplinary Committees.

125. Sections 35 to 44 deal with conduct of Advocates and powers of the Disciplinary Committees of the State Bar Councils as also of the Bar Council of India. Under section 35 of the Act where on receipt of a complaint or otherwise a State Bar Council has reason to believe that any advocate on its roll has been guilty of professional or other misconduct, it shall refer the case for disposal to its Disciplinary Committee. The Disciplinary Committee of a State Bar Council, if it does not summarily reject the complaint, shall fix a date for the hearing of the case and shall cause a notice thereof to be given to the advocate concerned and to the Advocate General of the State. The Disciplinary Committee of a State Bar Council after giving the advocate concerned and the Advocate General an opportunity of being heard, may dismiss the complaint or reprimand the advocate, suspend the advocate from practice for such period as it may deem fit, or remove the name of the advocate from the State roll of advocates. Where any notice is issued to the Advocate General, the Advocate General may appear before the Disciplinary Committee of the State Bar Council either in person or through any advocate appearing on his behalf. These provisions establish first that the Advocate General is entitled to a notice of the date of hearing, secondly, that no order can be made by the Disciplinary Committee without giving an opportunity to the Advocate General of being heard, and, thirdly, that the Advocate General may appear in person or through any advocate. It cannot be said that the Advocate General is appearing as a friend of the Court. The right of the Advocate General to appear is based on statute. The word 'may' is used to indicate the choice of the Advocate General to appear in person or through any advocate. He may choose not to appear at all. But when the Advocate General does appear, he does so by virtue of the statutory rights and powers conferred on him. It is, therefore, necessary to know as to why notice under the Act is given to the Advocate General and why he is to be heard before an order is made by the Disciplinary Committee.

126. The Judicial Committee in the Gambian case, 1961 AC 617 found that the name of N'Jie was struck off the roll of barristers and solicitors of the Supreme Court of Gambia by an order of Abbott, J., Deputy Judge of the Supreme Court in the Colony of Gambia. The Deputy Judge had jurisdiction to represent the Chief Justice in the exercise of his judicial powers. The power to strike the name of the legal practitioner off the roll was held by the Judicial Committee not to be a judicial power but an administrative one of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Gambia. Therefore, the order of Abbott, J. was without jurisdiction. The West African Court of Appeal under those circumstances set aside the order of Abbott, J. The Attorney General of Gambia thereupon preferred an appeal to the Judicial Committee. An appeal to the Privy Council lay under section 31 of the West African (Appeal to Privy Council) Order in Council, 1949. Broadly stated, the provision was to the effect that any person aggrieved by any judgment of the Court could prefer an appeal to His Majesty. The Judicial Committee construed the words 'person aggrieved' occurring in section 31 of the West African Order in Council, 1949 not to be subjected to a restrictive interpretation but to include a person who has a genuine grievance because an order has been made which prejudicially affected his interest. The Attorney General of Gambia was found to have sufficient interest for the purpose and the interest was held to be a public one which the Attorney General represented. The Judicial Committee also said that if the Judge found the practitioner guilty of misconduct and the West African Court of Appeal of Gambia reversed the decision which went to the jurisdiction of the Judge, or was otherwise a point in which public interest was concerned, the Attorney General would be a person aggrieved by the decision. The Judicial Committee construed the words 'person aggrieved' to include the Attorney General of Gambia as representing the public interest.

127. The most significant feature in sections 35 and 36 of the Act is that the Disciplinary Committee does not either give any notice to or hear the complainant. On the contrary notice is given under section 36 to the Attorney General and under S. 35 to the Advocate General. The Disciplinary Committee without giving the Attorney General in one case and the Advocate General in another case an opportunity of being heard cannot pass any order against the Advocate concerned. The Attorney General under Article 76 of the Constitution and the Advocate General under Article 165 of the Constitution have to discharge the functions conferred on them by or under the Constitution or any other law for the time being in force. The Advocates Act concerns the Advocate and it is in the fitness of things that the Attorney General and the Advocate General of a State are heard as persons representing the profession which assists the litigant public and the courts in the administration of justice. The Attorney General and the Advocates General of States are persons of high standing and with long experience in the profession and it is indisputable that they will ever adopt any partisan attitude in proceedings before the Disciplinary Committee. The Advocates Act gives special pre-eminence to the Attorney General and the Advocate General in disciplinary proceedings because it is not an attempt of the Disciplinary Committee to redress the grievance of an individual complainant but to find out whether there is any breach of professional standard and conduct. The high tradition, dignity and purity of the Bar is to be maintained. The Attorney General and the Advocate General are heard because they are heads of their respective Bar and the proceedings affect discipline and dignity of the Bar and touch the professional conduct of an Advocate.

128. They are not parties to a 'lis'. They have no personal or pecuniary or proprietary interest in the matter. It is manifest that their locus standi and interest is based on professional code of conduct and for the purpose of upholding the purity of the Bar and preservation of correct standards and norms in the profession. The Attorney General and the Advocates General will uphold the professional discipline, dignity and decorum and that is why no order is made by the Disciplinary Committee without giving them an opportunity of being heard.

129. The issue before the Disciplinary Committee is whether there has been professional misconduct and the question has to be looked at purely from the point of view of profession. The profession touches the public on the one hand and the Courts on the other. On no other basis could the presence of the Advocate General be explained.

130. In a recent decision of this Court in Civil Appeal No. 877 of 1968, D/- 8-10-1968 (SC), the Commissioner of Workmen's Compensation preferred an appeal for enhancement of penalties against the Advocate concerned. This Court held that the Commissioner was entitled to maintain the appeal as a person aggrieved. Mr. Daphtary at one stage contended that a complainant would not be a person aggrieved within the meaning of the relevant section of the Advocates Act to prefer an appeal. The decision of this Court repels that submission.

131. It may not be out of place to notice that the Act uses the words 'person aggrieved' and not the words 'party aggrieved'. First in disciplinary proceedings there is no party. It is a matter touching the professional conduct of the Advocate. The enquiry is by the Disciplinary Committee. The Advocate is heard. The Attorney General in one case and the Advocates General in other cases are heard. They are heard not because they are parties but because they represent the interest of the profession. They represent the standards to be maintained in the profession. Suppose, the Disciplinary Committee held proceedings without giving notice to the Advocate General or made an order without giving the Advocate General an opportunity of being heard. In either case the Advocate General would be a person aggrieved. Would the participation by the Advocate General in the proceedings before the Disciplinary Committee alter the position? Neither on logic nor on principle could it be said that the Attorney General and the Advocates General who have the right to be heard could not be persons aggrieved by the decision. If they have the right to be heard they may have grievance as to the result of the hearing.

132. The Attorney General and the Advocates General receive notice and are entitled to be heard by virtue of the provisions in the statute. They are performing statutory duties. They are not contemplated in the statute as ordinary counsel. It was not the intention of the statute that they would be merely neutral observers before the Disciplinary Committee and they would have no duty to perform. They would have to express their views one way or the other. It is true that they would be completely free from personal favour or disfavour in these matters touching the professional conduct. Their presence before the Disciplinary Committee is explicable only on the ground of adhering to the correct professional code. It would therefore be open to the Attorney General and the Advocate General to take the view that in a matter of sufficient gravity a completely inadequate punishment would not be in public interest of the profession. Similarly, if the punishment is severe in a case which did not merit such action, the Attorney General and the Advocate-General would be persons aggrieved to have it corrected.

133. To accede to the contention of Mr. Daphtary that the words 'person aggrieved' refer only to Advocates would be misreading the provisions. The words 'person aggrieved' will be referable to the Advocate concerned, the complainant and the Attorney General or the Advocate General as the case may be. The Attorney General and the Advocate General will be persons aggrieved because they are interested in maintaining the professional rectitude. The Attorney General and the Advocate General have the right of pre-audience. Such right determines that they are leaders of the profession in their respective fields. They will ask for maintaining the proper standards of professional ethics. It is from that point of view that the Attorney General and the Advocate General will be aggrieved persons when they will find that the interest of the Bar, the public interest have not been properly safeguarded by decisions of the Disciplinary Committee of the Bar Council.

134. For these reasons I am of opinion that the Advocate General of the State of Maharashtra is competent to appeal as a person aggrieved under section 37 of the Advocates Act, 1961.

ORDER

135. In accordance with the opinion of the majority, the appeal is allowed and the order of the Bar Council of India is set aside. There shall be no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

(V 58 C 97)

(From: Calcutta)*

J. C. SHAH AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.Naresh Chandra Sanyal, Appellant
v. The Calcutta Stock Exchange Association Ltd., Respondent.Civil Appeal No. 1626 of 1966, D/- 25-9-1970.(A) Calcutta Stock Exchange Articles of Association, Art. 24 — Forfeiture of fully paid share of member — Separate resolutions expelling him and declaring him defaulter not required.

The argument that a member of the Exchange forfeits his share only if a resolution expelling him and a resolution declaring him a defaulter are passed is without substance. The conjunctive "and" between the first two clauses of Art. 24 is used to indicate an alternative, and does not make the two conditions cumulative: (1936) ILR 63 Cal. 531, Approved. (Para 7)

(B) Companies Act (1956), Sch. 1, Table A Reg. 31 — Calcutta Stock Exchange Articles of Association, Arts. 22, 24, 26, 27 & 29 — Fully paid shares, forfeiture of, in certain events, including failure to carry out engagement—Obligation on the part of the Company to re-allot or dispose it of — Articles are intra vires and valid.

Subject to the provisions of the Companies Act, the Company and the members are bound by the provisions contained in the Articles of Association. The Articles regulate the internal management of the Company and define the powers of its officers. They also establish a contract between the Company and the members and between the members inter se. The contract governs the ordinary rights and obligations incidental to membership in the Company. In the absence of any provisions contained in the Companies Act which prohibit a Company from forfeiting a share for failure on the part of the member to carry out an undertaking or an engagement the Articles of a Company, which provide that in certain events membership rights of the shareholder including his right to the share will be forfeited, are binding. The Articles of Association tion of the Calcutta Stock Exchange expressly provide that in the event of the member failing to carry out the engagement and in the conditions specified therein his share shall stand forfeited. Articles 22, 24, 26, 27 & 29 of the Calcutta Stock Exchange relating to forfeiture of shares in certain events are, therefore, valid. ILR (1950) 1 Cal 235, Approved; AIR 1964 SC 250, Ref. (Para 15)

Article 27 of the Exchange is in terms mandatory. The share after forfeiture in the hands of the Company is subject to an obligation to dispose it of. On that account there is no reduction of capital by mere forfeiture.

(Para 12)

It is not correct to argue that forfeiture of shares is permissible only in cases expressly contemplated by Table A-Model Article, i.e., for non-payment of calls in respect of a share which is not fully paid up. (Para 14)

(C) Companies Act (1956), Sch. 1, Table A Reg. 31 — Forfeiture of fully paid share — Calcutta Stock Exchange Articles of Association, Arts. 33, 29 — Forfeiture of share of member for failure to carry out engagement — Balance remaining on hand after satisfying liabilities and engagements of defaulting shareholder to Exchange and its members in the hands of Exchange, must be returned to defaulting shareholder — Article 29 of Exchange is to be read subject to Art. 33 — Article giving power to company to appropriate balance in hand would be contrary to intentment of S. 74, Contract Act — Forfeiture of share is in the nature of imposition of penalty.

Granting that Art. 33 deals with those cases in which lien alone is enforced and not in cases where forfeiture is levied, and the obligation of the defaulting shareholder is determined by Art. 29, on the principle underlying S. 74 of the Contract Act the Exchange had no right to hold, out of the sale proceeds of the share, any amount in excess of the amount due to it or its member. Mr. R. B. Datar, Advocate, amicus curiae, for Appellant; Mr. B. Sen, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. N. R. Khaitan and B. P. Maheshwari, Advocates, with him), for Respondent.

SHAH, J.: Naresh Chandra Sanyal was the holder of a fully paid-up share of the Calcutta Stock Exchange Association Ltd. hereinafter called 'the Exchange'. As a member of the Exchange he was authorised to carry on business as a broker in shares, stocks and securities in the hall of the Exchange. In December 1941 Sanyal purchased one hundred shares of the Indian Iron & Steel Company Ltd. from Johurmull Daga & Company, but did not arrange to take delivery of the shares on the due date. Johurmull Daga and Company sold the shares pursuant to the authority given to them by the Sub-Committee of the Exchange. The transaction resulted in a loss of Rupees 438/10/-. The Sub-Committee directed Sanyal to pay the amount due by him, but he failed to carry out that direction.

2. On January 7, 1942 the complaint of Johurmull Daga & Company was referred to the Full Committee of the Exchange. Sanyal failed to pay the amount directed to be paid by him and he was by resolution dated February 19, 1942 declared a defaulter. On September 1, 1942, at a meeting at which Sanyal was present, the Full Committee resolved that the share standing in his name be forfeited to the Exchange with effect from September 1, 1942 and that Sanyal be expelled from the membership of the Exchange.

3. Sanyal then instituted an action in the High Court of Calcutta on its original side, claiming a declaration that the articles of the Exchange providing for "forfeiture of a fully paid up share were ultra vires and illegal" and that "particularly Arts. 21, 22 and 24 were invalid"; that the share held by him had not been "properly forfeited" by the Exchange and that forfeiture of the share was "irregular, void and inoperative and was not binding upon him." He also claimed an order that he be restored to the membership of the Exchange and that the share register be rectified accordingly. In the alternative Sanyal claimed a decree for Rs. 55,000/- being the value of the share, or in any event to the surplus of the sale proceeds after "liquidating the debts due by him to the Exchange." The suit was resisted by the Exchange. The Trial Court dismissed the suit. In appeal under the Letters Patent the decree was confirmed. With special leave Sanyal has appealed to this Court in forma pauperis.

4. The relevant Articles of Association of the Exchange are these:

Art. 21. "The Committee shall have power to expel or suspend any member or if being firm any member or authorised assistant of the firm in any of the events following:

x x x x x

(6) If the member or if being a firm any member or authorised assistant of the firm refuses to abide by the decision of the Committee in any matter which under these articles or under the Bye-Laws for the time being in force is made the subject of a reference to the Committee.

Provided always that in every case arising under the provisions of sub-sections (5), (6), (7) and (8) of this Article no resolution for the expulsion of a member or if being a firm any member or authorised assistant of the firm shall be valid unless passed by a majority consisting of not less than two-thirds of the members of the Committee at a meeting specially convened for the purpose and at which meeting not less than two-thirds of the members of the Committee at a meeting specially convened for the purpose and at which meeting not less than seven members of the Committee shall be present."

Art. 22. "Any member who has been declared a defaulter by reason of his failure to fulfil any engagement between himself and any other member or members and who "fails to fulfil such engagements within six months from the date upon which he has been so declared a defaulter shall at the expiration of such period of six calendar months automatically cease to be a member."

Art. 24. "Upon any member ceasing to be a member under the provisions of article 22 hereof and upon any resolution being passed by the Committee expelling any member under the provisions of Article 21 hereof or upon any member being adjudicated insolvent the share held by such member shall ipso facto be forfeited."

Art. 27. "Any share so forfeited shall be deemed to be the property of the Association, and the Committee shall sell, re-allot, and otherwise dispose of the same in such manner to the best advantage for the satisfaction of all debts which may then be due and owing either to the Association or any of its members arising out of transactions or dealings in stocks and shares."

Art. 28. "Any member whose share has been so forfeited shall notwithstanding be liable to pay and shall forthwith pay to the Association all moneys owing by the member to the Association at the time of the forfeiture together with interest thereon, from the time of forfeiture until payment at 12 per cent per annum and the committee may enforce the payment thereof, without any deduction or allowance for the value of the share at the time of forfeiture."

Art. 29. "The forfeiture of a share shall involve the extinction of all interest in and also of all claims and demands against the Association in respect of the share, and all other rights incidental to the share, except only such of those rights as by these Articles expressly saved."

Art. 31. "The Association shall have a first and paramount lien upon the share registered in the name of each member and upon the proceeds of sale thereof for his debts, liabilities and engagements. x x x"

Art. 32. "For the purpose of enforcing such lien the Association may sell the share subject thereto in such manner as they think fit. x x x"

Art. 33. "The net proceeds of any such sale shall be applied in or towards satisfaction of the debts, liabilities, or engagements, residue (if any) paid to such member, his executors, administrators, committee curator or other representatives."

4A. The relevant bye-laws of the Exchange are:

"Settlement of Disputes. — All disputes, complaints and claims between by and against members shall, on the application of either party, be decided by the Committee or by a Standing or Special Sub-Committee appointed by the Committee for the purposes. In the event of the matter being decided by the Committee the decision shall be final and binding upon all members concerned but any member aggrieved with the decision of the Standing or Special Sub-Committee may, within seven days of such decision being given, appeal to the Committee whose decision shall be final. In the event of any member or members refusing, neglecting or failing to observe, carry out or comply with any decision of the Committee, or if no appeal is preferred, with the decision of the Standing or Special Sub-Committee, such member or members so in default shall be dealt with by the Committee under the rules, regulations and/or bye-laws of the Association for the time being in force."

Bye-law 13 — "Defaulters. — Any member who shall fail to pay any subscription or other moneys due by him to the Association on due date, or who shall fail to fulfil any engagement between himself and another member or members may be declared a "defaulter" by the Committee and on such declaration his name shall be posted as a "defaulter" on the notice board of the Association and so long as his name remains so posted he shall not be at liberty to exercise any of the privileges of membership."

5. Under the scheme of the Articles of Association of the Exchange, the Committee is authorised to expel or suspend a member on the ground, inter alia, that he refuses to abide by the decision of the Committee in any matter which is under the Articles or under the Bye-laws referred to the Committee. A person declared a "defaulter" because he fails to fulfil any engagement between himself and any other member or members within six months from the date on which he has been declared a defaulter, ceases to be a member of the Exchange and his share also stands forfeited. The share so forfeited is deemed to be the property of the Exchange. But the Committee must sell, re-allot or otherwise dispose of the share for satisfaction of the debts which may then be due and owing by the defaulter to the Exchange or to any of its members arising out of transactions or dealings in stocks and shares. Forfeiture of a share involves extinction of all interest in and also of all claims and demands against the Exchange in respect of the share and all other rights incidental to the share, but not the liability of the erstwhile member to discharge his liabilities to the Exchange. The Exchange has a first lien upon the share of a member and upon the proceeds of sale thereof for his debts and liabilities and in enforcement of the lien, the Exchange may sell the share. The net proceeds of the share subject to the lien if sold will be applied in or towards satisfaction of the debts, liabilities or engagements of the shareholder and the residue, if any, paid to such member his executors, administrators, committee, curator or other representatives.

6. In this appeal counsel for Sanyal contended, that under the Indian Companies Act, 1913, a fully paid up share cannot be forfeited for failure to carry out any engagement by the shareholder other than an engagement to pay a call made by the Company to pay unpaid capital; that the procedure followed by the Sub-Committee of the Exchange was irregular in that Sanyal had no notice of the meeting of the Committee to declare him a defaulter; that a Committee had no authority under the Articles of Association to direct sale of the share; and that in any event Sanyal was entitled to the balance remaining on hand with the Exchange after satisfying his debts, liabilities and engagements under the Articles of Association.

7. For failure to abide by the decision of the Committee in respect of his liability to pay the amount of loss due to Johurmull Daga & Company Sanyal was declared a defaulter, and when he continued to remain a defaulter for six months he was by resolution of the Full Committee expelled from the membership of the Exchange. The Full Committee also resolved to forfeit his share. The Exchange thereafter disposed of the share for Rs. 55,000/-. The argument raised by counsel for Sanyal that a member of the Exchange forfeits his share only if a resolution expelling him and a resolution declaring him a defaulter are passed is without substance. The conjunctive "and" between the first two clauses of Art. 24 is used to indicate an alternative, and does not make the two conditions cumulative. We agree with the observations of Panckridge, J., in Surajmall Mohta v. Ballabhdas Mohta (1936) ILR 63 Cal 531, that

"Art. 24 is carelessly drawn, because, on its literal application, before his share could be forfeited, a member would both have to be expelled by the Committee under Art. 21 and automatically cease to be a member under Article 22. Clearly this cannot be the intention of the article and it is obvious that by a slip, "and" has been substituted for "or","

8. In any event the Full Committee passed on February 19, 1942 a resolution declaring the appellant a defaulter. The appellant did not carry out his engagements for a period of six months thereafter. By resolution dated September 1, 1942 at a meeting of the Full Committee the appellant was expelled from the membership of the Exchange and it was resolved that his share shall stand forfeited.

9. There is no provision in the Indian Companies Act, 1913, which restricts the exercise of the right of the Exchange to forfeit shares, for non-payment of a call only. The Indian Companies Act, 1913, made no provision relating to forfeiture of shares. By S. 17 (2) of the Act, a company could adopt the regulations contained in Table A in the First Schedule but the Company was not bound to do so. Regulations 24 to 30 of Table A dealt with the power and the procedure relating to forfeiture of shares. Regulation 24, it is true, provided for exercise of the power to forfeit a share when there was default in paying calls, but no inference follows therefrom that the share of a member could be forfeited only for non-payment of a call made in respect of the shares which were not fully paid up.

10. In The Calcutta Stock Exchange Association Ltd. v. S. N. Nundy & Co., ILR (1950) 1 Cal 235, Harries C. J. after examining the provisions of the Companies Act 1913 in great detail reviewed the decisions of the Courts in England and of the High Court of Calcutta and observed that the Indian Companies Act as well as the English Companies Act contemplate, recognize and sanction forfeiture generally and not for non-payment of calls only; that a company may by its Articles lawfully provide for grounds of forfeiture other than non-payment of call, subject to the qualification that the Articles relating to forfeiture do not offend against the general law of the land and in particular the Companies Act, and public policy; and that the forfeiture contemplated does not entail or effect a reduction in capital or involve or amount to purchase by the Company of its own shares nor does it amount to trafficking in its own shares. The Court in that case was concerned to determine the true effect of the Articles of the Exchange which fall to be interpreted in this case.

11. This Court in Sri Gopal Jalan and Co. v. Calcutta Stock Exchange Association Ltd. (1964) 3 SCR 698 = (AIR 1964 SC 250) also considered whether forfeiture of shares resulted in reduction of capital contrary to the provisions of the Companies Act where power of forfeiture was given by the Articles for failure to carry out an undertaking or satisfy an obligation of the member. The Court in that case was interpreting the Articles which fall to be interpreted in this appeal. The Court held that the Exchange was not liable to file any return of the forfeited shares under Section 75 (1) of the Indian Companies Act, 1956 when the shares were reissued. The Court observed that when a share is forfeited and reissued, there is no allotment, in the sense of appropriation of shares out of the authorised and unappropriated capital, and approved the observations of Harries, C. J. in S. N. Nundy's case ILR (1950) 1 Cal 235 that "On such forfeiture all that happened was that the right of the particular shareholder disappeared but the share considered as a unit of issued capital continued to exist and was kept in suspense until another shareholder was found for it". In the view of this Court, the shares so forfeited may not be "allotted" in the sense in which that word is understood in the Companies Act. The Court also pointed out that reissue of forfeited shares is not allotment of the shares but only a sale, for, if it were not so the forfeiture even for non-payment of call would be invalid as involving an illegal reduction of capital.

12. Article 27 of the Exchange [it may be recalled is in terms mandatory. The share forfeited to the Exchange must be reallocated or otherwise disposed of; it cannot be retained by the Exchange. The share after forfeiture in the hands of the Company is subject to an obligation to dispose it of. On that account there is no reduction of capital by mere forfeiture.

13. Mr. Datar appearing for the appellant however contended that in Sri Gopal Jalan & Company's case, (1964) 3 SCR 698 = (AIR 1964 SC 250) the parties argued the case on the footing that Articles of Association of the Exchange were not invalid, whereas in the present case the validity of the Articles is challenged. But the Court in citing with approval the observations of Harries C. J. in S. N. Nundy's case, ILR (1950) 1 Cal 235 did in effect pronounce upon the validity of the Articles.

14. A forfeited share is, therefore, merely a share available to the Company for sale and remains vested in the Company for that purpose only. By forfeiting a share pursuant to the authority of the Articles of Association, no reduction of capital is achieved. We are unable to agree with counsel for Sanyal that forfeiture of shares is permissible only in cases expressly contemplated by Table A—Model Articles i.e., for non-payment of calls in respect of a share which is not fully paid up.

15. Subject to the provisions of the Companies Act the Company and the members are bound by the provisions contained in the Articles of Association. The Articles regulate the internal management of the Company and define the powers of its officers. They also establish a contract between the Company and the members and between the members inter se. The contract governs the ordinary rights and obligations incidental to membership in the Company. In the absence of any provisions contained in the Indian Companies Act which prohibit a Company from forfeiting a share for failure on the part of the member to carry out an undertaking or an engagement the Articles of a Company which provide that in certain events membership rights of the shareholder including his right to the share will be forfeited are binding. The articles of Association of the Exchange expressly provide that in the event of the member failing to carry out the engagement and in the conditions specified therein his share shall stand forfeited. Articles 22, 24, 26, 27 and 29 of the Exchange relating to forfeiture of shares in certain events are therefore valid.

16. There is in our judgment nothing in the procedure followed by the Sub-Committee and the Full Committee which rendered the forfeiture of Sanyal's share illegal. It is not in dispute that Sanyal incurred liability in favour of one of the members of the Exchange to pay Rs. 438-10-0 in the transaction relating to the sale of Indian Iron & Steel Company's shares and he failed to discharge that liability. He continued to remain in default for six months even after the resolution of the full Committee, and on that account he ceased to be a member and his share was forfeited. The High Court has found that the copies of the letters dated 9th, 10th, 16th, 17th and 20th December, 1941, and of 8th January, 11th & 19th February, 1942, were sent to Sanyal and the usual notices relating to the complaints placed before the Sub-Committee or the Full Committee were served upon Sanyal, that such notices were posted on the notice board of the Exchange that the appellant had opportunities at all stages of the proceedings to come before the Exchange and refute the charges made against him and that at no stage of the proceeding until September 1, 1942, did Sanyal appear before the Sub-Committee or the Full Committee. The High Court was of the view that the order had not been made against Sanyal contrary to the rules of natural justice. It is true that Johurmull Daga complained about the default committed by Sanyal on December 9, 1941 and the meeting of the Sub-Committee was held on December 10, 1941. Granting that the letter of the Sub-Committee enclosing a copy of the complaint dated December 9, 1941, sent by post to Sanyal may not have reached him because he had left Calcutta, he had still ample notice of the proceeding of the Sub-Committee because intimation was given to him by the notice posted on the board of the Exchange. Sanyal raised no contention at any stage before the Sub-Committee or before the Full Committee that he had not received the notices of the meetings dated December 10, 1941, December 17, 1941, January 7, 1942 of the Sub-Committee and of the meeting dated February 19, 1942 of the Full Committee. Regularity of the proceedings of the Committees at the various meetings is not challenged before us. We are unable to agree with the contention raised by counsel for Sanyal that the rules of natural justice were not complied with when the Sub-Committee and the Full Committee passed the impugned resolutions against Sanyal.

17. There is no substance in the plea that the Committee had no jurisdiction to order sale of the share forfeited. Article 27 declares that the forfeited share is the property of the Exchange and that the Committee of the Exchange shall sell, re-allot or otherwise dispose of the share, for satisfaction of all debts due by the member to the Association or its members out of transactions in shares and stocks. Under its articles the Exchange has authority to sell the share and to appropriate the sale proceeds towards satisfaction of the debts, liabilities or engagements.

18. But are we unable to agree with the view taken by the High Court that the balance of the amount remaining due after satisfying the liabilities of Sanyal remained the property of the Exchange and that Sanyal had no right thereto. Under the stipulations contained in Arts. 21, 22, 24, the share of the defaulters of expelled member stands forfeited for failure to fulfil his obligation. The share of Sanyal by express resolution was forfeited. After applying the amount realised on sale of the share towards satisfaction of the debts, liabilities and engagements of Sanyal to the Exchange and its members, the balance remaining in the hands of the Exchange had to be held for and on behalf of the appellant. That is expressly provided in Art. 33. The expression used in Art. 29. "The forfeiture x x shall involve the extinction of all interest" is subject to those rights as by the Articles are saved, and Art. 33 saves to the defaulting shareholder whose share is forfeited the right to the balance remaining with the Exchange. Even assuming that Articles 24 & 31 reserve to the Exchange two distinct powers the power to forfeit and the power to exercise a lien, and that Art. 33 only applies to sale in enforcement of a lien, and not to a sale under Art. 27, we are of the view that the balance on hand after satisfying the liability of the defaulter must still be returned to the defaulting shareholder. The power to forfeit does not imply authority to appropriate the balance remaining in hand after satisfying the liabilities and obligations of the defaulter to the Exchange and its members. Any such implication would be contrary to the intent of S. 74 of the Contract Act.

19. The power of the Exchange to forfeit the shares arises out of the Articles and its source is in contract. Forfeiture of share is in the nature of imposition of a penalty. Section 74 of the Indian Contract Act provides:

"When a contract has been broken, if a sum is named in the contract as the amount to be paid in case of such breach, or if the contract contains any other stipulation by way of penalty, the party complaining of the breach is entitled, whether or not actual damage or loss is proved to have been caused thereby, to receive from the party who has broken the contract reasonable compensation not exceeding the amount so named or, as the case may be, the penalty stipulated for.

20. In Fateh Chand v. Balkishan Das, (1964) 1 SCR 515 = (AIR 1963 SC 1405) this Court in dealing with a case in which a claim for damages for breach of contract to sell a lien of immovable property arose, pronounced that the expression "the contract contains any other stipulation by way of penalty" comprehensively applies to every covenant involving a penalty whether it is for payment on breach of contract of money, or delivery of property in future, or for forfeiture of right to money or other property already delivered. Duty not to enforce the penalty clause but only to award reasonable compensation is statutorily imposed upon courts by S. 74 of the Indian Contract Act. In all cases, therefore, where there is a stipulation in the nature of penalty for forfeiture of an amount deposited pursuant to the terms of a contract which expressly provides for forfeiture the Court has jurisdiction to award such sum only as it considers reasonable, but not exceeding the amount specified in the contract as liable to forfeiture. The same principles, in our judgment, would apply in the case in which there is a stipulation in the contract by way of a penalty, and the damages awarded to the party complaining of the breach will not in any case exceed the loss suffered by the complainant party. It was observed at p. 526 (of SCR) = (at pp. 1410-1411 of AIR) in Fateh Chand's case, (1964) 1 SCR 515 = (AIR 1963 SC 1405):

"The section (S. 74) is clearly an attempt to eliminate the somewhat elaborate refinements made under the English common law in distinguishing between stipulations providing for payment of liquidated damages and stipulations in the nature of penalty. Under the common law a genuine pre-estimate of damages by mutual agreement is regarded as a stipulation naming liquidated damages and binding between the parties: a stipulation in a contract in terrorem is a penalty and the Court refuses to enforce it, awarding to the aggrieved party only reasonable compensation. The Indian Legislature has sought to across the web of rules and presumptions under the English common law, by enacting a uniform principle applicable to all stipulations naming amounts to be paid in case of breach, and stipulations by way of penalty."

The Court also observed at p. 530 (of SCR) = (at p. 1412 of AIR):

"Section 74 declares the law as to liability upon breach of contract where compensation is by agreement of the parties pre-determined, or where there is a stipulation by way of penalty. But the application of the enactment is not restricted to cases where the aggrieved party claims relief as a plaintiff. The section does not confer a special benefit upon any party; it merely declares the law that notwithstanding any term in the contract predetermining damages or providing for forfeiture of any property by way of penalty, the Court will award to the party aggrieved only reasonable compensation not exceeding the amount named or penalty stipulated."

principle underlying S. 74 of the Contract Act the Exchange had no right to hold out of the sale proceeds of the share any amount in excess of the amount due to it or its member.

21. The Exchange may not purchase its own shares. If it does so, it amounts to reduction of capital. The legal theory of forfeiture is that a share forfeited is only taken over by the Company with the objection of disposing it of to satisfy its claim to enforce which the share was forfeited and all other obligations arising against him out of his membership. The Company is given this right to recover the loss suffered by it by reason of the breach of contract committed by the shareholder. If the Company is permitted to retain the balance of the amount after satisfying the debts, liabilities and engagements of the shareholder, the transaction would not be different from one purchasing the share of the defaulting shareholder for a value equal to the amount of his obligations. That would be plainly illegal. We are therefore unable to agree with the High Court that the Exchange was entitled to retain the balance after satisfying the debts, liabilities and engagements of the appellant to the other members or to the Exchange.

22. The decree passed by the High Court is set aside and the case remanded to the High Court for determining the extent of the liabilities of the appellant to the Exchange not only in respect of the transactions with Johurmull Daga but in respect of all other outstanding liabilities of the appellant to other members of the Exchange and to the Exchange which are enforceable under the Articles. The appellant is entitled to receive from the Exchange the balance remaining due after deducting the aggregate amount or value of the obligations. He will be entitled to interest on the balance at the rate of 6% per annum from the date of the institution of the suit. Parties will bear their own costs throughout.

23. This appeal was filed in forma pauperis. The appellant will pay the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal if he had not been permitted to appeal in forma pauperis. Case remanded.

(V 58 C 98)

(From: Allahabad)

S. M. SIKRI, V. BHARGAVA AND
I. D. DUA, JJ.

Bhagwan Swarup, Appellant v. The State of U. P., Respondent.

D/- 18-8-1970.

Penal Code (1860), S. 302—Charge against accused under S. 302 — Accused's death sentence confirmed by High Court after believing evidence— Failure of accused to show grounds for interference in appeal arising out of special leave — Supreme Court refused to interfere. (Para 6)

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SIKRI, J.: In this case we gave special leave because in the petition filed by the appellant through jail it was alleged that his advocate was not heard in the case because he was busy in another case in another court and arrived too late to argue the murder reference and the appeal before the High Court. We had issued Notice to the Government to show cause why special leave should not be given but the Government did not inform us about the true state of affairs. Now, the learned Advocate for the State of U. P. has read to us a letter from the Government Advocate who argued the appeal and murder reference before the High Court, stating that the facts as stated in the petition are not true. But in order to avoid delay resulting from an enquiry into this matter we decided to hear the case on merits. We had appointed a counsel amicus curiae and he was ready to assist us.

2. He has taken us through the evidence and he has urged certain submissions which we will presently notice. It has not been shown to us by the learned advocate that there is any case for disturbing the concurrent findings of the learned Sessions Judge and the High Court.

3. The prosecution story which has been accepted by the learned Sessions Judge and the High Court is as follows:

4. On 25th of December, 1967, at about mid-day, the appellant Bhagwan Swarup, and Babu Lal, who has been convicted by the High Court under Ss. 326/34/394 of the Indian Penal Code, were going on a bicycle on the service road on the bank of the canal minor in village Dabha. Dhan Singh deceased was going ahead on a new bicycle. When Dhan Singh reached the grove of Jagdish Prasad Sharma, Bhagwan Swarup and Babu Lal dragged Dhan Singh into the grove with the object of robbing him of his new bicycle. When Dhan Singh raised an alarm, Bhagwan Swarup whipped out a knife and stabbed Dhan Singh in the neck. On hearing the alarm raised by Dhan Singh, Ravindra Kumar (P.W. 1), Roshan Lal (P.W. 2) and Gajendra Pal Singh, who were passing on the service road, rushed to the grove and saw the incident. On seeing these witnesses, the two accused picked up the old bicycle as well as the new bicycle of Dhan Singh and ran away—Bhagwan Swarup riding the old bicycle and Babu Lal the new bicycle. They were chased by the aforesaid three witnesses shouting, Kamlu (P.W. 3) who was coming with a bundle of pulas on his head from the opposite side obstructed Bhagwan Swarup and Babu Lal by throwing his bundle in their way. Immediately Roshan Lal and others reached there and after beating them arrested both Bhagwan Swarup and Babu Lal. They were taken along with the bicycle into the grove where Dhan Singh was lying with injuries, bleeding profusely. The report was recorded at the police station at 2 p.m. the same day and the investigation was undertaken by K. C. Tyagi (P.W. 7), who immediately went to the scene of occurrence and seized the knife which was lying near the body of Dhan Singh deceased.

5. The prosecution story is supported by Ravindra Kumar (P.W. 1), Roshan Lal (P. W. 2) and Kamlu (P. W. 3). Dr. D. N. Tewari, Medical Officer, who conducted the post mortem examination on 26-12-1967 at 4.35 p.m. found one incised wound on the left side of the neck and one punctured wound below the aforesaid wound and one more punctured wound on the right side of the neck of the deceased. The last two wounds, according to him, may have been caused by one blow. It has been found that neither Ravindra Kumar nor Roshan Lal knew the two appellants before and they had no reason to falsely implicate the appellants. The High Court disbelieved the case of Bhagwan Swarup that there had been a marpit between Roshan Lal and Durjan Kadhera, a cousin of Bhagwan Swarup, and it is because of this fact Roshan Lal had falsely implicated Bhagwan Swarup. It is stated in the judgment of the High Court that the High Court sent for the records, if any, to ascertain if a report was made in connection with the marpit and also for the medical evidence about the injuries suffered by Roshan Lal and Durjan Kadhera and they were informed that the records had been weeded out, and even if a report had been made, it was no longer available. It was however found from the report of the Civil Surgeon that Roshan Lal was treated from 9th October, 1959 to 8th November, 1959 as an indoor-patient and although there was no evidence of the treatment of Durjan Kadhera the record showed that he was X-rayed on the 23rd October, 1959. The High Court further found that no such plea was taken by Bhagwan Swarup before the Committing Magistrate and it was made out for the first time before the Sessions Judge. The High Court carefully analysed the evidence of Ravindra Kumar and Roshan Lal and they saw no reason to disbelieve either of them. Kamlu (P.W. 3) was also believed by the High Court even though he was examined by the Investigating Officer 19 days after the occurrence. The reason given was that Kamlu went away to consult a doctor as he was suffering from asthma and could be examined only during the next visit of the Investigating Officer of Dhaha village, and his name was mentioned in the First Information Report.

6. Learned Counsel for the appellant, Mr. K. L. Mehta, has urged before us a number of points. His first point is that Bhagwan Swarup had his own cycle and even after the incident he rode on his own cycle and it must have been the other accused who wanted to steal the cycle. Be that as it may, it was not Babu Lal but Bhagwan Swarup who inflicted the injuries. The second point is that Bhagwan Swarup and the deceased Dhan Singh resided in the same village while the other accused Babu Lal resided at Khurrampur village, which is about 20 miles away and it is not probable that Bhagwan Swarup would kill a resident of his own village in the company of a person coming from a village 20 miles away. We see no force in this point. There is no doubt that Bhagwan Swarup and Babu Lal were going together on a cycle and they were captured together. The third point, the learned Counsel for the appellant, raised was that all the eye-witnesses are relations among themselves. This has no relevance unless it is established that there was previous enmity between Bhagwan Swarup and the eye-witnesses. The fourth point raised was that the eye-witnesses were inimical to the appellant but we have already noticed that the High Court did not find any substance in this point. We may add that the incident on which the enmity is alleged to have been founded took place as long ago as 1959 and there are no particulars of the actual incident which are available. The appellant was then 8 years old and it is unlikely that he would be the subject-matter of vengeance. The last point raised by the learned Counsel for the appellant was about the sentence. He said that the appellant was 18 years old at the time of the incident, but the learned Sessions Judge and the High Court have considered that point and awarded the extreme penalty. The learned Sessions Judge said that from his appearance Bhagwan Swarup does not appear more than 19 years of age but age alone could not be taken as sufficient judicial ground for awarding lesser punishment, though it may be taken into consideration in a mercy petition. He added that it is unfortunate that these teenagers have indulged in such heinous and violent crime, so as to commit the murder of an innocent person who had not given them any offence. The High Court said that the sentence of death awarded to Bhagwan Swarup under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code was proper. No ground has been shown for us to interfere in an appeal arising out of the special leave granted by us. In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed.

of 1969 and 3 of 1970, D/- 3-2-1970.

Constitution of India, Art. 136 — Petition for special leave to appeal against interlocutory order of Letters Patent Bench — Letters Patent Bench only giving effect to order of single judge restricting grant of permit to grantee of Regional Transport Authority pending disposal of Letters Patent Appeal — Supreme Court cannot be invited to interfere into the matter under Art. 136 at the stage when appeal itself is pending and High Court has not passed any special orders of its own. (Para 3)

The following Order of the Court was delivered by

HIDAYATULLAH, C. J.: These are petitions for special leave against the orders of the Division Bench of the High Court of Madras by which the High Court has ordered that the permits granted by the Regional Transport Authority will operate and not those which the State Transport Appellate Tribunal in appeal granted.

2. The facts may be stated, taking as a sample, Special Leave Petition No. 2430 of 1969. The original grantee of the permit by the Regional Transport Authority may be described as 'A'. The date of the grant was November 20, 1966. On appeal by the respondent who may be described as 'B', the State Transport Appellate Tribunal cancelled the grant made to A by the Regional Transport Authority.
This was on July 18, 1967. A writ petition was thereupon filed by A and it was allowed by the learned single Judge on November 4, 1969 and the

*(Civil Misc. Petns. Nos. 15375 of 1969 etc., in Writ Appeals Nos. 519 of 1969, etc., D/- 8-12-1969 — Mad.)

order of the State Transport Appellate Tribunal was quashed. When the matter went before the Letters Patent Bench, it was observed that in view of the fact that only the grantee of the Regional Transport Authority had a valid permit, it was not possible to grant any permit to B who was recognised by the State Transport Appellate Tribunal. They followed an earlier ruling of the court and restricted the grant pending disposal of the Letters Patent appeal to the grantee of the Regional Transport Authority who alone was permitted to operate on the route. It appears that only one operator could be allowed on this route, because of a Section 47 (3) determination.

3. In these petitions for special leave which are ex facie against the orders made in interlocutory proceedings, the attempt is to get the permits restored to B. It is claimed that this involves a question of jurisdiction and that question is whether the High Court could recognise A the grantee of the Regional Transport Authority when his permit had been cancelled by the State Transport Appellate Tribunal. We think that these are matters into which this Court cannot be invited to go under Art. 136 of the Constitution, because the appeal itself is pending before the High Court and what the High Court has done is to give effect to the order of the learned single Judge. In other words, the Letters Patent Bench has not attempted to pass any special order of its own staying the operation of the decision of the learned single Judge. We think it would be wrong for us to interfere at this stage. It may be that the question may come up in some other form before us when the appeals from the Letters Patent decision are brought before this Court. If and when this happens, we may find it convenient to express our opinion on the question of jurisdiction of the High Court to go into such matters in appeal or in original writ petitions. Beyond this, we do not wish to express any opinion, one way or the other, at this stage. We accordingly order the dismissal of these special leave petitions, reserving to the petitioners the right to raise such questions as may legitimately be raised when they choose to file appeals against the decision of the Letters Patent Bench. Stay granted by this Court is vacated.

Order accordingly.

The Union of India, Appellant v.
M/s. Sohanlal Sampatlal, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 2223 of 1966, D/-
27-10-1970.

(A) Post Office Act (1898), Ss. 6, 33,
74 — Post Office Rules (1933) Rr. 81, 83 — Post parcel containing gold coin, or bullion or currency notes — Market value — Declaration of — Innocent or insignificant misstatement by insured — He does not become disentitled to receive compensation.

The provisions of the Act and Rules made thereunder ensure that the insured should not make a declaration in excess of the market value so as to avoid fraudulent dealings. Nor can the insured get more compensation than the market value. But this does not and cannot mean that any innocent and insignificant misstatement by the insured of the actual value which has to be the market value on a particular date and at the place of posting can lead to the startling result that he becomes wholly disentitled to receive any compensation. It is well known that the market in articles like gold and bullion exists only in large towns and the value fluctuates from day to day and from hour to hour. It may be sometimes impossible for any person sending gold or bullion by post after getting it insured to ascertain the exact value on a particular date. He cannot in the very nature of things be absolutely precise and accurate about the market value prevailing at the material time. This does not, however, mean that he is completely absolved from the responsibility of ascertaining it but if he gives some value which is approximately the same as the market value the insurer cannot take up the position that owing to an insignificant difference the insured cannot recover the compensation.

Insured purchasing gold for Rs. 2465/- and sending it by insured post for Rs. 2500/- held, could not be deprived of compensation for loss on ground that he had made wrong declaration of market value. (Para 6)

(B) Post Office Act (1898), S. 6 — Plea that policy is not subsisting or there is breach of conditions of policy — Burden lies on insurer — Provisions of Act and Rules do not displace this general principle — (Evidence Act (1872), Sections 101 to 104). (Para 6)

Dr. L. M. Singhvi, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. Ram Panjwani and S. P. Nayar, Advocates, with him), for Appellant; G. L. Sanghi, Advocate and Janendra Lal, Advocates of M/s. Gagrati and Co., for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

GROVER, J.: This is an appeal by special leave from a judgment of the Bombay High Court made in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction.

2. On June 15, 1955 the respondent firm purchased gold coins for an aggregate price of Rs. 2465-14-0 as commission agents for transmission and delivery to their constituents at Bixaner. On the following day the parcel containing the gold coins was handed in at Ramwadi Post Office, Bombay for transmission to the addressee. The parcel was insured for Rs. 2500/-. It was lost in the course of transit. The respondents filed a suit for recovery of about Rs. 2475/- as compensation under the insurance effected by the Union of India, the present appellant, represented by its postal department. The appellant denied its liability for the claim on the ground that under section 6 of the Indian Post Office Act, 1898, hereinafter called the "Act", read with Rule 81 (g) of the rules framed thereunder, its liability could arise only if the plaintiff had declared the actual value of the contents on the date of the insurance. As a wrong declaration had been made there was no valid and enforceable contract. The case of the plaintiffs' evidence, however, was that in addition to the price paid for the gold coins a sum of Rupees 9-1-6 had been spent as postal charges and the cost of insurance, packing, commission and brokerage. Profit was added to this at 1% and the total value came to Rs. 2499-11-6 and it was for that reason that the parcel was got insured for Rs. 2500/-. A learned single judge of the Small Causes dismissed the suit. The matter was taken before the Full Court of Small Causes by the respondent firm. While conceding that the difference in the actual value and the value declared was small the Full Court held that the rules had not been complied with properly and upheld the dismissal of the suit. After examining all the relevant provisions of the Act and the rules the High Court was of the view that it was for the insurer to prove that it had been discharged from the liability because of fraud, misrepresentation, mistake or incorrect statements made by the insured and the burden had to be strictly discharged by the insurer. As it had not been proved by the Union of India that the value declared by the plaintiffs on June 16, 1955 was not the actual market value of the gold delivered by the plaintiffs for transmission by means of a postal parcel the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for Rs. 2474-15-6 with interest at 6% per annum from the date of the suit.

3. Section 6 of the Act provides that the Government shall not incur any liability by reason of the loss, misdelivery etc. of any article in the course of transmission by post except in so far as such liability may in express terms be undertaken by the Government. Section 30 provides for insurance of postal articles. Section 33 is in the following terms:

"Subject to such conditions and restrictions as the Central Government may, by rule, prescribe the Central Government shall be liable to pay compensation, not exceeding the amount for which a postal article has been insured, to the sender thereof for the loss of the postal article or its contents, or for any damage caused to it in course of transmission by post:

Provided that the compensation so payable shall in no case exceed the value of the article lost or the amount of the damage caused."

The relevant rules may also be referred to. According to rule 44 (1) gold coin or bullion of value exceeding Rs. 2500/- shall not be transmitted by post. The value for the purpose of this sub-rule, the second proviso to rule 72 clause (g), the second proviso to rule 81 and rule 83-A shall be the market value on the date and at the place of posting. Part IV of the rules deals with insurance of postal articles. The second proviso to rule 72 (1) lays down that articles containing government currency notes or gold coin or bullion shall be insured for the actual value of the contents. Rule 74 gives the additional fee chargeable for the insurance. Under rule 81 the compensation payable to the sender of an insured article shall not exceed the amount for which the article has been insured for the loss of the postal article or any of its contents. According to the first proviso the compensation shall in no case exceed the value of the article or any of its contents lost. Clause (g) of the second proviso is to the effect that no compensation shall be payable where the insured article contains gold coins or both and has not been insured for the actual value of the contents. Rule 83A makes it obligatory for the sender to declare on the article the value of the contents where gold coin, bullion etc., is despatched. Thus under the rules whenever gold coin or bullion is sent by parcel post it must be insured for the actual value of the contents. If the articles are lost the amount of compensation cannot exceed the amount for which the articles have been insured and no compensation shall be payable where the articles have not been insured for the actual value. By reference to rule 41 the value has to be the market value on the date and at the place of posting.

4. The argument which has been raised on behalf of the Union of India is that the respondent firm had purchased the gold coin for Rupees 2465-14-0 on June 15, 1955. Its actual market value, therefore, on respondent's own admission was not Rupees 2500/-. It has, further, been pointed out that in para 2 of the plaint it has been stated that on or about June 16, 1955 the plaintiffs despatched 26 tolas gold valued at Rs. 2474-15-6 under insured parcel which was lost in transit and even the decree was claimed for that amount and not for Rs. 2500/-. As there was a discrepancy between the value declared and the actual or market value the respondent firm was not entitled to any compensation. The plea in defence substantially was that the respondent ought to have declared the actual value of the contents on the date of insurance, namely, June 16, 1955 which it failed to do and therefore there was no contract of insurance between the parties.

5. Now the statutory provisions of the Act and the rules have to be construed and read in a reasonable manner. If the interpretation sought to be placed on behalf of the appellant is accepted it would mean that where a person declares a value which varies even by one paisa from the market value on the date and at the place of posting the insured would be deprived of the compensation for the loss of the article. That could never have been in the contemplation of the legislature and the rule making authority. The rules seem to ensure that the insured should not make a declaration in excess of the market value so as to avoid fraudulent dealings. Nor can the insured get more compensation than the market value. But this does not and cannot mean that any innocent and insignificant misstatement by the insured of the actual value which has to be the market value on a particular date and at the place of posting can lead to the startling result that he becomes wholly disentitled to receive any compensation. It is well known that the market in articles like gold and bullion exists only in large towns and the value fluctuates from day to day and from hour to hour. It may be sometimes impossible for any person sending gold or bullion by post after getting it insured to ascertain the exact value on a particular date. Take for instance the case of a person who is illiterate and has to despatch gold from a place in the vicinity of which there is no market from where the market value can be ascertained. He cannot in the very nature of things be absolutely precise and accurate about the market value prevailing at the material time. This does not, however, mean that he is completely absolved from the responsibility of ascertaining it but if he gives some value which is approximately the same as the market value the insurer cannot take up the position that owing to an insignificant difference the insured cannot recover the compensation.

6. The High Court referred to Article 429 in Halsbury's Laws of England III Edition, Vol. 22, at page 227 and to certain other text books on the law of insurance according to which the burden is on the insurer of showing that the policy is no longer subsisting or that there had been a breach of such a condition which relieves the insurer from liability. It has not been shown that these general principles will not be applicable when an insurance has been effected under the provisions of the Act and the rules. The finding of the High Court was that there was no evidence of any kind regarding the market rate of gold prevailing on June 16, 1955 on the record. It was for the insurer to lead evidence on that point and show that according to the market rate prevailing on that date the value could not be Rs. 2500/-. The mere fact that the respondent was under the impression or had stated in the plaint that the value of the gold was less than Rs. 2500/- was not sufficient to absolve the insurer from the responsibility of proving that the value which was declared i.e. Rs. 2500/- was not the market value on the date and at the place of posting.

7. There is no merit in this appeal which fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

ly taking possession from tenant — Possession having been obtained without complying with provisions of Sections 20 and 36 (2) is invalid — Tenant under S. 36 (1) is entitled to be restored to possession.

Where a landlord obtained possession of the lands from tenant representing that he desired to cultivate the lands personally, but without complying with the provisions of Ss. 20 and 36 (2) then even assuming that the tenant delivered possession voluntarily the landlord's possession was not lawful. The tenant was entitled, therefore, under S. 36 (1) to be restored to possession. Spl. Civil Appns. Nos. 746 and 747 of 1964 D/- 15-11-1965 (Bom.-Nagpur Bench), Affirmed.

It cannot be said that since S. 36 (2) does not commence with the expression with which S. 19 does, it may, on that account, reasonably be inferred that the Legislature intended that only those tenants shall be deemed to be entitled to possession within meaning of S. 36 (1) who were dispossessed by fraud, coercion or misrepresentation and not the tenant who had voluntarily parted with the possession of the lands. Section 19 provides that notwithstanding any agreement, usage, decree or order of a Court of Law tenancy of any landlord held by a tenant shall not be terminated except in the cases specified therein. Thereby it was intended to make the provisions of S. 19 paramount. In S. 20 which deals with surrender, it is expressly enacted that surrender shall be in writing and shall be verified in the prescribed manner. Surrender of tenancy, granting that the tenant in the case had delivered the land voluntarily, which does not comply with the requirements of S. 20 is ineffective. Again, S. 36 (2) imposes a disability upon the landlord from obtaining possession of any land occupied by a tenant except under an order of the Tahsildar. The terms of S. 36 (2) are explicit, they are not subject to any implication that the possession obtained with the consent of the tenant but without an order of the Tahsildar is valid.

SHAH, J.: Badridas son of Ramgopal was the owner of fields Survey Nos. 2 and 9/2 of village Dhamberi, taluq Akot, District Akola. On February 26, 1958, Badridas granted a lease for cultivation of the land to two brothers Kishan and Manik. At the end of the agricultural year 1958-59 Badridas took possession of the lands from Kishan and Manik representing that he desired to cultivate the lands personally. Badridas cultivated the lands during the agricultural years 1959-60 and 1960-61, and thereafter on January 18, 1961 he granted a lease of the lands for four years to Bhagwant son of Pundalik. Kishan and Manik then applied on June 30, 1961 under S. 36 (1) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958, for an order restoring them to possession alleging that their eviction from the lands was illegal. The Additional Tahsildar dismissed the application, but in appeal the order was reversed. In the view of the appellate authority Kishan and Manik were in 1958-59 tenants of the lands and they were evicted otherwise than in accordance with the law, and that they were entitled to be restored to possession under S. 36 (1) of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958. In a petition by Bhagwant the Revenue Tribunal reversed the order of the appellate authority. The Tribunal held that since Kishan and Manik had given up possession of the lands voluntarily and had allowed Badridas to cultivate the lands for the following two years, they had no right to be reinstated into possession of the lands, especially after the lands were let out by Badridas to Bhagwant. Kishan and Manik then moved in the High Court of Bombay at Nagpur, two Special Civil Applications Nos. 746 and 747 of 1964 in respect of the two fields Survey Nos. 2 and 9/2 separately. The High Court set aside the order of the Revenue Tribunal and directed that an order for possession be made in favour of Kishan and Manik in respect of the two lands. With special leave, these appeals have been preferred by Bhagwant.

2. The Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands (Vidarbha Region) Act, 1958, was brought into force on December 30, 1958. Section 20 provides:

"A tenant may terminate the tenancy at any time by surrendering his interest of a tenant in favour of the landlord.

Provided that such surrender shall be in writing and shall be verified before the Tahsildar in the prescribed manner."

Section 36 of the Act provides:

(1) A tenant x x x entitled to possession of any land x x x under any of the provisions of this Act or as a result of eviction in contravention of sub-section (2) may apply in writing for such possession to the Tahsildar. x x x x

(2) No landlord shall obtain possession of any land, x x x held by a tenant except under an order of the Tahsildar. For obtaining such order he shall make an application in the prescribed form and within a period of two years from the date on which the right to obtain possession of the land, x x is deemed to have accrued to him:

3. For the agricultural year 1958-59 Kishan and Manik were tenants in respect of the lands in question. Badridas took possession of the lands at the end of that year. Granting that Kishan and Manik delivered the lands voluntarily, there could not under S. 20 of the Act be a valid surrender, unless the surrender was in writing and verified before the Tahsildar and in the prescribed manner. Possession obtained by Badridas was not lawful, for Badridas obtained possession of the land from the tenants without complying with the requirements of S. 20 and of sub-s. (2) of S. 36. Sub-section (2) of S. 36 prohibits the landlord from obtaining possession of any land held by a tenant except under an order of the Tahsildar. Delivery of possession voluntarily by Kishan and Manik did not render the possession of Badridas valid. Under S. 36 (1) a tenant who has been evicted in contravention of sub-s. (2) may apply in writing to the Tahsildar for such possession.

4. Counsel for the appellant contended that S. 36 (2) does not commence with the expression "Notwithstanding any agreement, usage, decree or order of a court of law" as S. 19 of the Act does, and on that account it may reasonably be inferred that the Legislature intended that only those tenants shall be deemed entitled to possession within the meaning of S. 36 (1) who were dispossessed by fraud, coercion or misrepresentation, and not tenant who had voluntarily parted with possession of the lands. We are unable to agree with that contention. Section 19 provides that notwithstanding any agreement, usage, decree or order of a court of law tenancy of any land held by a tenant shall not be terminated except in the cases specified therein. Thereby it was intended to make the provisions of S. 19 paramount. In S. 20 of the Act which deals with surrender it is expressly enacted that surrender shall be in writing and shall be verified in the prescribed manner. Surrender of tenancy which does not comply with the requirements of S. 20 is ineffective. Again, sub-section (2) of S. 36 imposes a disability upon the landlord from obtaining possession of any land occupied by a tenant except under an order of the Tahsildar. The terms of sub-s. (2) of S. 36 are explicit, they are not subject to any implication that possession obtained with the consent of the tenant, but without an order of the Tahsildar is valid.

5. In a recent judgment Madhao v. The Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal, Spl. Civil Appln. No. 203 of 1967, D/- 12-9-1969 (Bom) the High Court of Bombay held that S. 36 (2) is plenary and controls S. 20 of the Act. In the present case there is no surrender of tenancy in writing and no verification of surrender by the Tahsildar. We need express no opinion on the question whether mere verification by the Tahsildar without an order of the Tahsildar authorising the landlord to obtain possession disentitles the tenant to claim possession under S. 36 (1).

6. The appeals fail and are dismissed. Having regard to all the circumstances, however, we think, there should be no order as to costs in this Court.

7. Counsel for the appellant Bhagwant submitted that there are crops standing on the lands, and prayed that the appellant may be allowed to reap them. One month's time from the date of this judgment is given to the appellant to deliver possession of the lands.

Appeals dismissed.

KN/KN/F/118/70/GKC/G

Appellant; M. C. Chagla, Senior Advocate, (S. S. Shukla, Advocate, with him), for Respondent.

HEGDE, J.: This appeal by certificate arises from an execution proceeding. The judgment debtor is the appellant and the respondent is the decree-holder. The decree under execution is a compromise decree passed by the High Court of Calcutta on its original side in Suit No. 309 of 1960.

2. The judgment debtor had objected to the execution of the decree primarily on the ground that the decree includes properties which were not included in the suit and the decree having not been registered, it is not executable. Both the trial court and the High Court in appeal have rejected the contention of the appellant.

3. Now coming to the decree under execution clause (1) therein provides:

"There will be a decree in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 2,50,000/- on account of advance and other sums including Commission payable upto date in full and final satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim as aforesaid."

4. Sub-clauses (a) to (g) of cl. (2) of the decree create certain selling agencies with which we are not concerned in this case. Sub-cl. (k) of cl. (2) of the decree is relevant for our present purpose and that sub-clause reads:

"For the payment of the aforesaid decretal amount and other sums payable to the plaintiff the defendant hypothecates as a first hypothecation the following machineries of the said Chalbulpore Colliery. Besides the above, the defendants have deposited with the plaintiff title deeds of their Khudika Property at Salanpore District Burdwan with intent to create equitable mortgage thereon for securing repayment of the amount which is now due and which might hereafter be due, the defendants having declared the said Khudika Property to be free from all encumbrances excepting the claim for royalty in the suit which is pending against the defendant in the High Court of Calcutta.

LIST OF MACHINERIES AT CHALBALPUR COLLIERY :

Item No.	Particulars
1. 5(five)	verticle boilers Nos. 9207, 4613, 9259, 6017 and 6019.
2. 1(one)	Haulage Engine 12 x 24.
3. 1(one)	Winding Engine 12 x 24.
4. 1(one)	Endless Haulage 10 x 8.
5. 1(one)	Electric Haulage 32 H. P.
6. 1(one)	Electric Haulage 15 H. P.
7. 1(one)	Headgear complete with pulley cage, cape 35 ft.
8. 1(one)	Electric Pump 62 H. P. English.
9. 1(one)	Transformer 200 K. V. A.
10. 1(one)	H. J. Main Switchgear.
11. 6(six)	L. J. Switchgears.
12.	Tramlines 50,000 ft.
13.	4 Steam Pump. 6 x 12.
14.	Pipes of different sizes 12, 500 ft.
15.	Coal Tubes 200 (two hundred)."

5. The judgment debtor having failed to pay the amount mentioned in the decree, the decree-holder levied execution claiming Rs. 2,50,000/- mentioned in paragraph (1) of the decree with costs. The relief asked for in the execution petition reads:

"The Judgment-debtor not having acted in terms of the decree and not having allowed the Decree-Holder to sell any coal of Colliery nor having paid any sum, the Decree-Holder prays for realisation of the decretal amount and costs of this execution case by sale of the charged properties mentioned in the schedule below. The Decree-Holder reserves the right to proceed on the Equitable Mortgage upon Khudika Colliery."

6. As mentioned earlier the objection is as to the validity of the decree on the ground that as it includes immovable properties which were not the subject matter of the suit and as such the decree-holder was required to register the decree; the same having not been registered it is not executable.

7. The trial court did not decide the question whether the properties charged under the decree are immovable properties or not. It opined that that question has to be decided at the time the properties are brought to sale. But in appeal the High Court came to the conclusion that from the tenor of the compromise decree, it is clear that those properties are movable properties and therefore there was no need to register the decree. This is essentially a finding of fact. Unless it is shown that the items of machinery mentioned in the decree over which a charge had been created had been permanently embedded to earth, it is not possible to come to the conclusion that those items of machinery are immovable properties. If they are not immovable properties as held by the High Court, then there was no need to register the decree. It was for the judgment-debtor to show that the decree was invalid for the reasons mentioned by him. He has failed to establish that fact.

8. The appellant tried to assail the validity of the decree by taking up certain new pleas in this Court but those pleas do not raise pure questions of law. Those pleas had not been taken either before the executing court or before the High Court. Hence we did not allow him to advance those pleas.

9. In the result this appeal fails and the same is dismissed with costs.
Appeal dismissed.

Mr. Yogeshwar Prasad, Advocate, for Appellants; Mr. O. P. Rana, Advocate, for Respondent No. 2.

DUA, J.: The short point requiring determination in this appeal on certificate of fitness granted by the Allahabad High Court under Art. 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution is whether toll-tax on laden motor vehicles levied under S. 128 (1) (vii) of the U. P. Municipalities Act II of 1916 (hereinafter described as the Act) on their entry within the limits of Nainital Municipality can be realised from the passengers carried by them.

2. The relevant facts which lie within a narrow compass may now be briefly stated. Brij Mohan Chandra, Vice-President of the Notified Area Committee, Bhowali, District Nainital (respondent no. 1 in this Court) travelled in U. P. Government Roadways Bus from Bhowali to Nainital on 17th, 26th and 29th May, 1967. At Kaila Khan Municipal toll barrier one and a half mile from Nainital on the Bhowali-Nainital Road, toll-tax was demanded from him but he declined to pay. The Executive Officer, Municipal Board, Nainital, thereupon filed a complaint against him under S. 190 (1) (c) of the Code of Criminal Procedure on the allegation that he had by entering the municipal limits of Nainital without paying the toll dues committed breach of R. (1) of the Rules made under S. 153 (a) of the Act for the assessment and collection of tolls within the municipality of Nainital. Brij Mohan Chandra's contention in reply was that the levy of toll-tax by the Municipal Board on passengers was ultra vires the taxing power of the Board. During the pendency of the proceedings in the court of Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Nainital, Brij Mohan Chandra applied to the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad under S. 561A, Cr. P. C. for quashing those proceedings. The High Court (S. D. Singh J.) on April 16, 1968 quashed the proceedings by the impugned order holding that cl. (vii) of S. 128 (1) of the Act did not authorise levy of toll-tax on passengers and that the relevant notification also levied tax only on vehicles and not on passengers. The rules imposing an obligation on the passengers to pay the toll was, therefore struck down as ultra vires.

3. In this Court Shri Yogeshwar Prasad, learned counsel for the appellants (the Municipal Board, Nainital and the Executive Officer of the Board) at the outset attempted obliquely to seek support for the validity of the levy on passengers from cl. (xiv) of S. 128 (1) as pleaded in the memorandum of appeal lodged in this Court under O. 21, R. 12 of the Supreme Court Rules. But this attempt was soon abandoned and Shri Yogeshwar Prasad felt constrained to concede that in view of the clear and precise position taken on behalf of the Board in the High Court that it had never been intended to impose toll-tax on passengers, it was not open to him in this Court to rely on cl. (xiv). Shri O. P. Rana, the learned counsel for the respondent State of U. P. supporting the appeal, also did not rely on clause (xiv). We, therefore, do not propose to express any opinion on the question whether or not a toll-tax on passengers would be permissible under cl. (xiv).

4. The only point seriously pressed on behalf of the appellants as also by Shri O. P. Rana on behalf of the State of U. P. was that the toll imposed on the vehicle entering the municipality could legally be realised from the passengers carried by it because of their nexus with the entry of the vehicle. Before examining this contention we may in passing turn to cl. (vii) of S. 128 (1) of the Act which reads:

"128 (1) Subject to any general rules or special orders of the State Government, in this behalf, the taxes which a board may impose in the whole or part of a municipality are—

x x x

(vii) a toll on vehicles and other conveyances, animals, and laden coolies entering the municipality;

x x x"

This clause in clear and unambiguous terms speaks of a toll on vehicles and other conveyances, animals and laden coolies entering the municipality. It does not take within its fold the passengers carried by vehicles to be taxed, with the result that imposition of tax on passengers by the Municipal Board would be incompetent under this clause. And this in fact was not disputed at the Bar.

5. The argument of nexus was also raised in the High Court; but it was repelled by that Court which observed as follows:

"It was urged that when a tax on conveyance is levied, some provision has to be made for the assessment and collection of that tax and some provision made about the persons from whom that tax may be recovered and that if there is any reasonable or rational nexus between the levy of the tax and the persons from whom that tax may be recovered, the Municipal Board would be within its rights to realise the tax from the persons so named. It is difficult, however, to apply the nexus theory in a manner so as to enable the Municipal Board to recover the toll-tax from the passengers travelling in a bus otherwise there will be no distinction left between a vehicle-tax and a passenger tax. When a toll-tax is levied on a vehicle, it is levied at the point of its entry within the municipal limits. It is obviously, therefore, the person, who is in charge of the vehicle or who makes an attempt to take the vehicle inside the municipal limits, who takes upon himself the responsibility for the payment of the toll-tax. There is no question of there being any nexus between the levy of the tax on the vehicle and the persons sitting inside the same. In the case of vehicles plying on hire the driver or conductor of the vehicle can, of course, charge the amount of tax which has to be paid, from the passengers in addition to the fare which is normally charged from them."

The same argument was repeated before us. The submission seems to be based largely on the policy of the law to ensure the collection of taxes by preventing fraudulent evasion. In order to appreciate its cogency we may appropriately advert to the Rules made by the State Government in 1922 under Section 296 read with section 153 (a) of the Act, with respect to the assessment and collection of tolls in the Nainital Municipality. So far as relevant for the purposes of this appeal, according to Rule (1), no person can bring within the limits of the Nainital Municipality any vehicle in respect of which the toll-tax imposed under Section 128 (1) (vii) of the Act is leviable until the toll due in respect thereof has been paid to such muharrir and at such barrier as the Board may from time to time appoint. Under Rule 2 (a), in the case of laden motor vehicles the load recorded in the chalan or invoice accompanying the vehicle has to be accepted by the muharrir for purposes of assessing the toll. If no chalan or invoice accompanies the vehicle the load is to be assumed for the purposes of assessment to exceed three maunds unless it is ascertained to be less by weighment undertaken at the request of the person-in-charge of the vehicle. The toll on a laden motor vehicle has to be paid by the person-in-charge of the vehicle and toll on a passenger is to be paid by the passenger. Rule 2 (b) provides that when any person-in-charge of a laden vehicle enters the Municipal limits such person shall pay the toll to the muharrir at the barrier and the muharrir shall tender a face value ticket with coupon attached for the amount to the person paying the toll. This face value ticket can be examined by the official appointed for the purpose and the person bringing the vehicle within the Municipal limits is bound under Rule 3 to permit such examination. Under Rule 2 (c), every driver of a motor lorry or other vehicle plying for hire and every driver of a private motor car or vehicle carrying passengers or goods has to stop his lorry or vehicle at the toll barrier for a reasonable time to enable the toll staff to recover proper toll tax from passengers and on the goods loaded therein. The provision contained in Rule 2 (a) that the toll on a passenger shall be paid by the passenger, on which reliance has principally been placed, is of no assistance to the appellants because it postulates imposition of toll on passengers and, therefore, unless a toll has been imposed on passengers none can be demanded from them under this clause. Similarly the notification (No. 1450/XI-476-E), dated 19th August, 1921, according to which toll-tax under Section 128 (1) (vii) of the Act sanctioned by the U. P. State Government under Section 135 (2) of the Act is levied on motor vehicles other than cars at the rate of Re. 1/- per passenger carried by them and at the rate of Rs. 2/- per vehicle is unhelpful to the appellants. As already observed by us no toll-tax has been imposed on passengers and indeed it was conceded on behalf of the appellants both here and in the High Court that the Board had never intended to impose a tax on passengers. It is also noteworthy that the toll imposed on the laden vehicles is expressly made payable by the person-in-charge of such vehicles and according to the scheme of the rules which provide the procedure for collecting such tolls, the person bringing the vehicle within the municipal limits (who is supposed to be the person-in-charge) is enjoined to permit examination of the face value ticket when demanded after the vehicle's entry into those limits. No liability has been fixed on the passengers for payment of the tax imposed on the vehicles carrying them and entering the Nainital Municipality. The liability for the payment of such tax having been fixed only on the person-in-charge of the vehicle and not on the passengers it is difficult to appreciate how the authorities entrusted with the duty of realising the same can demand it from the passengers. Our attention was not invited to any provision of law under which the passengers can be held liable to pay the toll-tax imposed on the vehicles. Neither any precedent nor any principle was cited at the Bar in support of the submission that merely because the passengers were carried by the vehicles the toll-tax imposed on the entry of the vehicles into the Municipal limits could be demanded from them. On the facts and circumstances of this case and on the arguments addressed we are, therefore, unable to hold that the passengers carried by the vehicles entering the municipality of Nainital can be legally called upon to pay the tax imposed on the vehicles.

6. As a last resort a faint attempt was made by the appellant's counsel to rely on Section 164 of the Act in bar of the jurisdiction of the High Court in entertaining the petition under Section 561-A, Criminal P. C. and in holding the impugned assessment and liability of the passengers to be unauthorised and illegal. This argument ignores the vital point that if the impugned levy is outside the Act then this section cannot operate and the jurisdiction of the High Court to quash the proceedings relating to the levy which is ultra vires the taxing power of the Board under the Act cannot be taken away to the prejudice of the aggrieved citizen. This submission is accordingly repelled.

7. In the final result this appeal fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Section 11 — Res judicata — Court basing its final decision on more than one points — Decision on each point operates as res judicata in subsequent suit between same parties.

It is open to a Court not to decide all the issues which may arise on the pleadings before it if it finds that the plaint on the face of it is barred by any law. If, however, final decision in any matter at issue between the parties is based by a Court on its decisions on more than one point — each of which by itself would be sufficient for the ultimate decision — the decision on each of these points operates as res judicata between the parties. (Paras 10, 13)

Where in an earlier suit based on will the Court decided after elaborately going into the question that the defendant acquired absolute right in the property left under the will and also that the suit was prematurely filed, the decision on becoming final operates as regards both issues as res judicata between the parties in any subsequent suit filed on basis of that will. The finding that the suit was prematurely filed does not make it a decision on a preliminary issue so as to render the finding on the other issue mere obiter or surplusage. AIR 1950 PC 80, Explained; AIR 1963 SC 385, Rel. on; (1966) 8 Law Rep 625 (Mys), Affirmed. (Paras 12, 13)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), Sections 11, 80 — Res judicata — Suit against Government — Decision based on applicability of Section 80 as well as on merits — When operates as res judicata in respect of all issues raised.

Where the plaintiff's cause of action is against a Government and the plaint does not show that notice under Section 80 claiming relief was served in terms of the said section, it would be the duty of the Court to reject the plaint recording an order to that effect with reasons for the order. In such a case the Court should not embark upon a trial of all the issues involved and such rejection would not preclude the plaintiff from presenting a fresh plaint in respect of the same cause of action. But, where the plaint on the face of it does not show that any relief envisaged by Section 80 is being claimed, it is the duty of the Court to go into all the issues which may arise on the pleadings including the question as to whether notice under Section 80 was necessary. If the Court decides the various issues raised on the pleadings, the adjudication of the rights of the parties, apart from the question as to the applicability of Section 80 of the Code and absence of notice thereunder operates as res judicata in a subsequent suit where the identical questions arise for determination between the same parties. AIR 1950 PC 80, Explained. (Para 10)

MITTER, J. — One Rudrappa Murigeppa Gugwad died leaving a will dated February 2, 1919. It is claimed by the appellant that he also left a codicil dated August 10, 1919. After reciting in Clause 1 of the will that he had brought up Lochanappa Gugwad, son of Irappa Sidlingappa Gugwad, and that though he had wished to take the said Lochanappa in adoption but had not been able to do so up till then and even if the adoption ceremony did not take place in the future, Lochanappa alone would be the owner of his properties he proceeded to state in Clause 2 of his will that:

"Even though I have hereby transferred the ownership of my immovable and movable properties to Lochanappa Irappa Gugwad, Lochanappa should act under the supervision of the trustees, namely, Lingappa Senganshanappa Tyapi and Gurulingappa Gangappa Gugwad. If both the trustees find that my property will fall out of use on account of Lochanappa's taking to bad ways, both the trustees should take possession of the property and safeguard it by appointing my extremely faithful clerks Veerabhadrapa Mallappa Sulizavi and Basappa Nurangappa Tuppad. If Lochanappa gets a male issue, the property should be in the possession of both the trustees till that son attains majority".

In Clause 3 he laid down that:

"In case Lochanappa Irappa dies without leaving male issue, I fully authorise the said trustees to transfer the ownership of the movable and immovable property of my family to the son of Gurupadappa Gangappa Gugwad, resident of Bijapur, and to deliver the entire property into his possession".

The original will was deposited with the Collector. After having executed the will the testator appeared to have proceeded to Benaras and from there addressed a letter to Lochanappa Irappa Gugwad on 10th August 1919. By that he directed some money to be advanced to Gurubasappa Basappa Gugwad to start him on a business and commended the welfare of the said Gurubasappa to the care of Lochanappa adding:

"The main thing is that you should pay full attention to him, I have mentioned in the will that in case male children are not born to you, you should take in adoption in your own name any of the sons of Gurupadappa Gangappa Gugwad of Bijapur and that if you die without taking in adoption, they alone will be the owner of the movable and immovable properties. But two sons are born to him. As early as possible, that is to say, when one boy becomes five years old or after my death you should execute this work of adoption and you should mention that the property should go to him after your death".

The last statement appears to be incorrect inasmuch as the testator had not by his will directed Lochanappa to make such an adoption.

2. Probate of the will was duly taken and Lochanappa entered into possession of all the properties left by the testator. According to the judgment of the High Court appealed from, the letter was not a formal document as a codicil should be, nor was it referred to in the probate proceedings. In the year 1935, Gangappa Gurupadappa Gugwad, the appellant herein, filed a suit in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Bijapur against Lochanappa and the said two trustees for a declaration that Lochanappa had only a life interest in respect of the properties described in the schedule to the plaint as per the will and codicil executed by the testator, that certain improvident transactions put through by Lochanappa in contravention of the directions given in the will were not binding on the plaintiff or the properties left by the deceased and that the said Lochanappa having acted contrary to the directions given in the will and codicil and having mismanaged the said properties an injunction should be issued against the trustees directing them to give Lochanappa only maintenance in terms of the will.

3. The Subordinate Judge who heard the suit framed several issues of which the important ones were as follows:—

(1) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to sue?

(2) Whether Lochanappa, defendant No. 1 got only a limited interest in the estate of the testator, Rudrappa Gugwad, under the will?

(3) Whether acts of mismanagement by Lochanappa contrary to the directions of the will had been proved?

(4) Whether an injunction could be validly given to the trustees to take over the management from Lochanappa and give him only maintenance?

Before the Subordinate Judge evidence both oral and documentary were let in. He construed the will to arrive at the finding that Lochanappa had been made the malik or owner of the properties covered by the will and that it was the will of the testator which recited that the estate given to Lochanappa was to be heritable. With regard to the further directions given in the will, he came to the conclusion that "Lochanappa having been made an owner under the will further expression of such intention cannot be properly allowed to control or qualify that ownership". As regards the direction in the letter styled a codicil advising Lochanappa to take one of the sons of Gurupadappa Gangappa Gugwad in adoption, he held that:

"In fact, there is no such direction in the original will. Even assuming that it is so, only means that Gurupadappa's sons are to be the owners in case Lochanappa dies without male issue and without adopting one of the sons of Gurupadappa; Lochanappa is still alive and it is yet to be seen whether he adopts plaintiff or not or whether a son will be born to him or not. Plaintiff has at the most a contingent right and no vested interest, and therefore it is a question whether he is entitled to a simple declaration."

The suit out of which this appeal arises was filed by Gangappa Gugwad after the death of Lochanappa in 1957 against the widow of Lochanappa, one Chanabasappa Gurubasappa Gugwad who was undisputedly taken in adoption by Lochanappa as his son in the year 1951 and Gurlingappa Gungappa Gugwad, the surviving trustee under the will of Rudrappa pleading inter alia that "Rudrappa did not confer an absolute estate on Lochanappa in respect of his property, that the bequest made in his favour conferred upon him only a restricted life estate and that even assuming Lochanappa was an absolute owner he was entitled to it only during his lifetime and after his demise it was to revert to the plaintiff by virtue of the will and codicil". The plaintiff appellant went on to add that it was incumbent on Lochanappa to adopt him alone and none else and any adoption in contravention of the direction in the will of Rudrappa Muri-gappa Gugwad was invalid and even assuming that the said direction was not mandatory, defendant No. 2 could not acquire the status of a son begotten by Lochanappa so as to claim any interest in the property of the deceased testator. The suit was contested by the widow and the adopted son, defendant No. 2 who pleaded the bar of res judicata on the strength of the judgment in the suit of 1935. The Subordinate Judge held against the defendant on that issue. He also found that the appellant was the rightful heir to the properties of the deceased testator under the will and codicil of Rudrappa after the death of Lochanappa.

4. The High Court examined the will and the letter described as codicil over again and came to the conclusion that the letter described as codicil was only an informal communication from one relation to another, that the testator had only a vague recollection of the contents of the will at the time of writing the letter from Benaras and that the order in the probate proceedings did not refer to the letter. On the basis of the will the High Court held that Lochanappa was an absolute owner of the property. The High Court further held that the decree in the suit of 1935 operated as res judicata in the subsequent suit. Referring to the first two issues framed in the suit of 1935 the High Court held that there was a clear finding in the judgment in that suit that the appellant had obtained no interest under the will of Rudrappa and therefore he was not entitled to sue.

5. Before us learned counsel for the appellant contended that in spite of the observations made by the learned Subordinate Judge in the judgment in the suit of 1935 about Lochanappa's rights under the will and the document styled as codicil, the decision on the first issue went to show that the appellant's suit was premature and as such it was not necessary for the Subordinate Judge to go into the other question and his findings on issues other than the first should be treated as obiter.

6. In support of the above contention counsel for the appellant relied on the decision of the Privy Council in Shankarlal v. Hiralal, AIR 1950 PC 80. The head note in that case to which our attention was drawn reading "Court holding that suit is not maintainable by reason of failure to comply with Section 80 — Findings given on merits are obiter and do not support plea of res judicata either in favour of or against party" seems to be misleading inasmuch as the judgment of the Board does not bear out the above proposition of law. At best the head note only records a finding by an appellate Bench of the Calcutta High Court which the Board by its own judgment did not expressly reject or uphold.

7. The appeal to the Privy Council arose out of a suit filed by one Mangtupal Bagaria for royalties due under a lease of collieries by one Popat Velji Rajdeo of which the said Mangtupal was appointed manager by the Court. The defendants were the lessees under the lease or their representatives and were respondents in the appeal to the Board. There the defence of the lessees was that the lease had been surrendered in July 1933. The plaintiff's challenged the surrender and also pleaded that the point was covered by res judicata. Ameer Ali, J. before whom the suit came on for hearing on the original side of the Calcutta High Court framed several issues in two groups. The first issue in Group A related to a plea of res judicata. The second issue in that group raised a question whether there was any defence apart from surrender. Group B raised questions as to the fact and validity of the alleged surrender. The plea of res judicata was based on a judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad wherein the lessees had sued Mangtupal and some others for a declaration that the lease had been validly surrendered in 1933. The Subordinate Judge held that the suit did not lie inasmuch as notice had not been served on Mangtupal under Section 80, Civil Procedure Code. He however purported to decide other issues in the suit including one as to the sufficiency of the surrender. An appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge was taken to the High Court at Patna but was withdrawn against Mangtupal and the brother of the lessor and a consent decree was obtained against the two widows upholding the surrender. Ameer Ali, J. went into the question of res judicata as a preliminary issue and expressed the view "that the decision of the Dhanbad Court had decided the same issue which had to be decided in his own Court and between the same persons and parties".

In appeal from his judgment the learned Judges held that

"Inasmuch as the Subordinate Judge in the Dhanbad suit had held that the suit did not lie by reason of the failure to comply with Section 80, Civil P. C., he was bound to dismiss the suit under Order 7, Rule 11 of the Code and the findings of the Court on the merits were obiter and could not support a plea of res judicata".

They held further that Ameer Ali, J. had decided nothing but the issue of res judicata. Accordingly they allowed the appeal and remanded the case to the Court of first instance for trial of issues other than issue 1.

8. The judgment of the Judicial Committee shows that before the Board it was conceded on behalf of the appellant that the appellate Court was right in the view which it took as to the effect of the Dhanbad decree. The Board proceeded to observe:

"Their Lordships have no doubt that the decision in the Dhanbad suit could not support a plea of res judicata on the merits, either in favour of or against Mangtula."

The Board rejected the contention of the appellant that Ameer Ali, J. had decided not only the issue of res judicata but also that the alleged surrender of the lease was invalid. According to the Board the judgment of Ameer Ali, J. was to some extent obscure and there were passages in it which suggested that he thought the surrender invalid but "it was clear that he did not purport to decide anything beyond the issue of res judicata" and he expressly stated that he was not deciding the issues in the second group. Accordingly the Board saw no reason to differ from the view of the appellate Judges that the issues as to surrender were not decided by the trial Judge and did not feel inclined to interfere with the direction given by the appellate Court regarding the remand of the trial of the issues in the Court of first instance.

9. On the strength of the dictum of the appellate Bench of the Calcutta High Court forming a part of the headnote to the above decision it was contended before us that once the Subordinate Judge of Bijapur recorded a finding on the first issue against the appellant in the suit of 1935 his construction of the will and the effect thereof were obiter and they would not be binding on the appellant in the second suit. This was sought to be fortified by the observations in the concluding portion of the judgment in the suit of 1935 which we have quoted above that the plaintiff had at the most a contingent right and no vested interest. It was argued that the learned Subordinate Judge's view that the suit was premature was sufficient to dispose of the case before him without his going into the other questions and the issues raised.

10. No doubt it would be open to a Court not to decide all the issues which may arise on the pleadings before it if it finds that the plaint on the face of it is barred by any law. If for instance the plaintiff's cause of action is against a Government and the plaintiff does not show that notice under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure claiming relief was served in terms of the said Section it would be the duty of the Court to reject the plaint recording an order to that effect with reasons for the order. In such a case the Court should not embark upon a trial of all the issues involved and such rejection would not preclude the plaintiff from presenting a fresh plaint in respect of the same cause of action. But, where the plaint on the face of it does not show that any relief envisaged by Section 80 of the Code is being claimed, it would be the duty of the Court to go into all the issues which may arise on the pleadings including the question as to whether notice under Section 80 was necessary. If the Court decides the various issues raised on the pleadings, it is difficult to see why the adjudication of the rights of the parties, apart from the question as to the applicability of Section 80 of the Code and absence of notice thereunder should not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit where the identical questions arise for determination between the same parties.

11. In our view the High Court was right in deciding the issue as to res judicata against the appellant. The High Court rightly pointed out that the Subordinate Judge had in clear terms decided that the appellant had obtained no interest under the will of Rudrappa and therefore he was not entitled to sue. The Subordinate Judge had further held that the estate obtained by Lochanappa under the will was an absolute estate.

12. With respect, we concur with the view expressed by the High Court. There was no question of the trial of any preliminary issue in the suit of 1935 the decision of which would obviate the necessity of examining the other pleas raised and coming to a finding thereon. The nature of the right acquired by Lochanappa under the will of the testator was directly in question and the Subordinate Judge went elaborately into it to take the view that Lochanappa had become absolutely entitled to the properties left by the testator. The observation referred to in the concluding portion of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge is, not to be taken as the decision on a preliminary issue so as to render the finding on the other issues mere obiter or surplusage.

13. In our view the High Court rightly relied on the observations of this Court in Vithal Yeshwant Jathar v. Shikandarkhan Makhtumkhan Sardesai, 1963-2 SCR 285 at p. 290 = (AIR 1963 SC 385 at p. 388) that if the final decision in any matter at issue between the parties is based by a Court on its decisions on more than one point—each of which by itself would be sufficient for the ultimate decision—the decision on each of these points operates as res judicata between the parties. The question as to the nature of the estate taken by Lochanappa under the will and the document called codicil to the will of the testator, Rudrappa having been in issue in the suit of 1935 and it having been decided that Lochanappa had obtained an absolute estate to the property, the decision would bind the appellant in any subsequent litigation to which the claim is based on the will and codicil. We accordingly dismiss the appeal on the ground that the decision in the suit of 1935 was a bar to the institution of the second suit of 1957. The respondent will be entitled to costs throughout.

(Paras 2 and 3)

Mr. R. N. Sachthy, Advocate, for Appellant; Mr. P. Ram Reddy, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. A. V. V. Nair, Advocate with him), for Respondents.

BHARGAVA, J. — This appeal by special leave is directed against two respondents, C. V. Parekh and A. C. Parekh, who have been acquitted by the High Court of Madras of the charge under Section 120-B of the Indian Penal Code read with Sections 7 and 8 of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 and Clause (5) of the Iron and Steel Control Order after applying Section 10 of the Essential Commodities Act. The first respondent, C. V. Parekh, was the Manager of Microtee Castings (Private) Ltd., while the second respondent, his son, A. C. Parekh, was the Managing Director of that Company. They were also partners of a Firm known as Messrs. C. V. Parekh and Company. Both the Company and the Firm had offices in the same premises. Respondent No. 2 was in charge of the general management of the business and affairs of the Company, so that he was empowered to make all purchases and sales, and to enter into all contracts and do all other acts on behalf of the Company. Respondent No. 1 was also an active participant in the management of the Company, so that the two respondents were in de facto charge of the management of the affairs of the company. The Firm had two plots of land at the Royapuram Goods Yard for clearing of the goods, and one Dhansuklal alias Kamdar was the godown clerk of the Company at the Yard. He is the brother of respondent No. 1. One Vallabhadas Thacker was the representative of another firm G. Ramji and Co. who had plots allotted to them in Royapuram Goods Yard adjacent to the plots of the Firm. The case for the prosecution was that 48,350 tons of pig iron were supplied to the Company by Bhilai Steel Plants against an allotment order passed by the Iron and Steel Controller. The price of pig iron was fixed at Rs. 250 per ton by the Iron and Steel Controller under the Iron and Steel Control Order, 1956. The goods were received at the Yard on 6th July, 1963 and were unloaded in the plots assigned to the Firm. Kamdar took delivery of the goods on behalf of the Company after paying the freight and other incidental charges due to the Railway. They were cleared from the plots on 17th July, 1963 by Kamdar on behalf of the Company. These goods were sold to various persons at rates varying between Rs. 300/- and Rs. 350/- per ton. These rates were higher than the controlled price fixed by the Iron and Steel Controller which was Rs. 250/- per ton. The sale, according to the prosecution, was the result of a conspiracy between the two respondents, Kamdar and Vallabhadas Thacker; and, in pursuance of this conspiracy, the offence committed was breach of Clause (5) of the Iron and Steel Control Order, 1956. All these four persons were, consequently, prosecuted and were convicted under Section 120-B of the Indian Penal Code read with Sections 7 and 8 of the Essential Commodities Act and with Clause (5) of the Iron and Steel Control Order. In convicting the two respondents, the Magistrate also relied on Section 10 of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955. On appeal, the High Court acquitted the two respondents, so that the State of Madras has come up to this Court in appeal against that order of acquittal.

2. We have been taken through the judgments of the High Court and the Magistrate by learned counsel for the appellant and we find that the findings of fact recorded do not justify any interference with the order of acquittal passed by the High Court. The trial Magistrate held that the pig iron was bought by the Company, that its delivery was taken from the Railway by Kamdar on behalf of the Company; that the two respondents were in de facto management of the affairs of the Company and knew of the arrival of the goods, and that the goods were disposed of at a price higher than the controlled price by Vallabhadas Thacker with the aid of Kamdar. There was no finding that, in the sale itself, either of these two respondents took any active part. He, however, recorded the conviction because he found that the goods had been lying in the plots of the Firm, M/s. C. V. Parekh and Co., for more than a week, that the two respondents were partners of the Firm, that the sale had been negotiated by Vallabhadas Thacker even prior to the time when the delivery of the goods was taken by Kamdar. On these facts, the Magistrate held that the negotiations for sale could not have taken place without the knowledge of the two respondents. That was the main basis of the conviction of the two respondents recorded by the Magistrate. The High Court set aside this order of conviction on the ground that there was no material on the basis of which a finding could be recorded that the respondents knew about the disposal of pig iron by Kamdar and Vallabhadas Thacker. The circumstance that the two respondents were in management of the affairs of the Company and the Firm and were aware of the arrival of the goods could create suspicion against the respondents; but that suspicion could not take the place of proof. In order to justify conviction of the respondents, evidence was needed to show that they knew of the sale or were parties to it. No such evidence was available. On this ground, the High Court set aside the conviction of the two respondents. The order of the High Court is obviously correct. No evidence on the record has been pointed out from which it could be inferred that the two respondents had any knowledge of the sale which was manoeuvred by Kamdar and Vallabhadas Thacker, nor is there evidence to show that they took any part in the negotiations for sale, or in the sale itself. Consequently, it is clear that their conviction was not justified.

3. Learned counsel for the appellant, however, sought conviction of the two respondents on the basis of Section 10 of the Essential Commodities Act under which, if the person contravening an order made under Section 3 (which covers an order under the Iron and Steel Control Order, 1956) is a company, every person who, at the time the contravention was committed, was in charge of, and was responsible to, the company for the conduct of the business of the Company as well as the company, shall be deemed to be guilty of the contravention and shall be liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly. It was urged that the two respondents were in charge of, and were responsible to, the company for the conduct of the business of the company and, consequently, they must be held responsible for the sale and for thus contravening the provisions of clause 5 of the Iron and Steel (Control) Order. This argument cannot be accepted, because it ignores the first condition for the applicability of S. 10 to the effect that the person contravening the order must be a company itself. In the present case, there is no finding either by the Magistrate or by the High Court that the sale in contravention of clause 5 of the Iron & Steel (Control) Order was made by the Company. In fact, the Company was not charged with the offence at all. The liability of the persons in charge of the Company only arises when the contravention is by the Company itself. Since, in this case, there is no evidence and no finding that the Company contravened Cl. 5 of the Iron & Steel (Control) Order, the two respondents could not be held responsible. The actual contravention was by Kamdar and Villabhadras Thacker and any contravention by them would not fasten responsibility on the respondents. The acquittal of the respondents is, therefore, fully justified. The appeal fails and is dismissed.

(A) Debt Laws — Hyderabad Jagirdars Debt Settlement Act (12 of 1952), Section 25 (1) — Transfer of pending suits, appeals and execution proceedings to Board — Requisites.

The expression "pending" in S. 25 (1) must relate to proceedings which were pending on the date notified under S. 11 for settlement of debts due by the Jagirdar and could not take in any proceedings which came to be instituted after such date. The other condition for the applicability of S. 25 is that the suit or other proceedings must be in respect of a debt with regard to which a Jagirdar or the Creditor could make an application to the Board on or before the date which the Government had notified for settlement of debt due by the Jagirdar. Thus the material date would be the one notified by the Government under Section 11 and only those debts which were due on or before that date from a debtor or in respect of which any proceedings were pending in a Court or before the Board could be the subject-matter of settlement by the Board. Mr. M. C. Chagla, Senior Advocate, (Mr. K. R. Chaudhuri, Advocate, with him), for Appellants (In Civil Appeals Nos. 1138 and 1139 of 1966) and Respondents (In Civil Appeal 1140 of 1966), Mr. B. V. Subrahmanyam, Senior Advocate, (Mr. A. V. Rangam, Advocate with him), for Respondent (In Civil Appeal No. 1138 of 1966), Respondent No. 1 (In Civil Appeal No. 1139 of 1966) and Appellant (In Civil Appeal No. 1140 of 1966).

GROVER, J.: These appeals arise out of two different litigations although some of the parties are the same. Civil Appeal No. 1138 of 1966 is directed against the judgment of the Andhra Pradesh High Court dated February 8, 1963 in a revision petition. The other two cross appeals i.e. 1139 of 1966 and 1140 of 1966 arise out of the judgment dated February 1, 1963 passed by the same High Court in a suit which had been filed by the State Bank of Hyderabad on the basis of a promissory note dated November 27, 1953 for recovery of Rs. 70,000/-. We shall dispose of Civil Appeal No. 1138 of 1966 first. The Hyderabad State Bank had filed a suit in July 1956 against the joint family business known as Mukund Das Raja Bhagwandas & Sons and the four sons of Raja Bhagwan Das who had died, the sons having been impleaded as defendants 2 to 5. There was a sixth defendant also Srikishen Sookhdev Malani. According to the claim of the Bank defendants 2 to 5 were members of a joint undivided family defendant No. 2 being the Head Karta and Manager. On February 2, 1951 defendant No. 2 in his above capacity requested the Bank to grant what is called a "clean cash credit" limit of Rs. 1,00,000/- against the guarantee of defendant No. 6. Defendant No. 2 was allowed to withdraw a sum of Rs. 99,500/- by three cheques from Feb. 8, 1951 to February 12, 1951. After the confirmation of the cash credit limit by the Committee of the Board of Directors of the Bank on February 22, 1951, defendant No. 2 executed a pronote in favour of defendant No. 6 for the sanctioned limit of Rs. 1,00,000/-. This pronote was endorsed in favour of the Bank and thereafter the sum of Rs. 99,500/- which had been withdrawn pending the sanction of the Committee was debited to the cash credit account opened in the name of defendant No. 1 and credited to the personal account of defendant No. 2. It was averred that defendant No. 2—Karta, Head and Manager—was drawing monies from time to time in the cash credit account of defendant No. 1. The drawing limit was reduced subsequently to Rupees 50,000. On September 3, 1952 defendant No. 2 as Kartha and Manager of joint family business of defendant No. 1 executed a fresh pronote for the reduced limit of Rs. 50,000/- in favour of defendant No. 6 which was endorsed by him in favour of the Bank. Defendant No. 6 also executed a fresh letter of guarantee. On December 28, 1953 there was a balance of Rs. 36,201-9-8 in the cash credit account of defendant No. 1 and as collateral security for the same defendant No. 2 executed a fresh pronote in favour of defendant No. 1 the guarantor for Rupees 35,000/- which was endorsed in favour of the Bank. Defendant No. 6 further executed a fresh letter of guarantee in favour of the Bank. Defendant No. 2 had confirmed the amount due under the cash credit account in his letter dated July 7, 1954. On account of this cash credit account a sum of Rupees 40,869-1-10 was due from defendants 1 to 5 as principal debtors and defendant No. 6 as guarantor together with interest. Defendant No. 2 filed a written statement taking up various pleas contesting the claim of the Bank but no objection was raised on the basis of the provisions of the Hyderabad Jagirdars Debt Settlement Act, 1952 which was published in the Official Gazette on March 13, 1952, hereinafter called the "Act". Defendants 3 to 5 and defendant No. 6 also filed their written statements contesting the claim but no plea was raised on the basis of the provisions of the Act. As many as 10 issues were framed by the learned Fourth Additional Judge, City Civil Court, Hyderabad.

2. The suit was decreed by the trial court personally against the 2nd and the 6th defendant and against joint family assets of defendants 2 to 5. In view of the fact that the 6th defendant did not raise any serious contest to the claim it was directed that the plaintiff could proceed in the first instance against the joint family assets of defendants 2 to 5 and person of the second defendant and if the entire sum was not realized then it could levy execution against the sixth defendant. Future interest was awarded at the rate of $5\frac{1}{2}\%$ per annum. No appeal was filed against the aforesaid decree. In December 1959 the Bank filed an execution petition in the court of the Fourth Additional Judge. On March 10, 1960 the learned Judge passed an order transferring the execution petition to the Jagirdar Debt Settlement Board under S. 25 (1) of the Act. The Bank challenged the order of transfer before the High Court on the revisional side. The learned single Judge, who heard the revision petition, referred three questions of law for consideration by a larger bench. The questions referred were as follows:

"1. Whether on a true construction of S. 25 (1) of the Act, it has application to suits, appeals and applications for execution and proceedings other than revisional in respect of debts not existing on or before the notified date under Sec. 11 of the Act, pending in any civil or revenue court involving the questions as set out in that section?

2. Whether in execution proceedings relating to decrees obtained in suits filed after the notified date, the Court could go behind the decrees passed and trace the history of the transactions which resulted in the liability under the decree?

3. If the answer to question (1) is in the affirmative, whether section 25 (1) of the Act has to be struck down as violating Articles 14 and 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution?"

The first question was answered by the Full Bench in the negative. The second question has also similarly answered and it was held that the executing court was not competent to reopen the case by tracing the history of the transaction which resulted in the liability under the decree. Question No. 3 was not answered. In accordance with the opinion of the Full Bench and on a further consideration of the facts the learned single Judge disposed of the revision petition holding that S. 25 (1) of the Act was not applicable and the order of transfer was liable to be set aside. The executing court was directed to proceed and deal with the execution application in accordance with law.

3. It is necessary to notice the historical background and the relevant provisions of the Act in order to decide the questions which fall for determination. By the Hyderabad (Abolition of Jagirs) Regulation passed on August 15, 1949 the jagirs were abolished. The jagirdars were declared entitled to a share in the jagir net income which was inalienable except with the previous sanction of the Government. On January 25, 1950, another Regulation called the Hyderabad Jagir (Commutation) Regulation, 1359F was enacted. It provided, inter alia, for the method of calculating the commutation in respect of jagirs. As pointed out by the High Court the enactment of the Regulation affected the jagirdars in a large measure. Their former resources were not available to them to pay their debts. The creditors were also faced with a difficult situation which affected their prospects of recovering the loans fully. It was in this background that the Act was passed. Its provisions were mainly borrowed from the Bombay Agricultural Debtors' Relief Act, 1947. Debt was defined by S. 2 (e) to mean any liability in cash or kind whether secure or unsecured due from a jagirdar whether payable under a decree or order of a civil court or otherwise. Section 3 provided exceptions in cases of five categories of debts which were not liable to be scaled down. One of those was the debt due to a scheduled bank.

4. Chapter II containing Ss. 4 to 10 dealt with the constitution and powers of the Board for the settlement of debts. Section 11 provided that any jagirdar or his creditor could make an application to the Board on or before such date as the Government might notify for settlement of debts due by a jagirdar. Under Section 12 notwithstanding the fact that no application had been filed under S. 11 every creditor on being required to do so by any of his debtors had to file a correct statement before the Board of his claims against such a debtor and similarly every debtor on being so required by any of his creditors had to file a correct statement. According to Section 15 if any debtor and any or all of his creditors arrive at a settlement in respect of any debt due by the debtor to the creditor the debtor or any of the creditors could make an application and the Board could proceed to record that settlement in accordance with the procedure prescribed by the section. Under S. 22 all debts in respect of which no application for adjustment or settlement was made in accordance with the provisions of the Act were to stand extinguished. Under Section 24 on the date fixed for a hearing from application made under S. 11 the Board was to decide as preliminary issues whether a person for the settlement of whose debt an application had been made was a debtor and whether the total amount of debts due from such person on the date of the application exceeded the sum of Rs. 5,000/-. If the Board found that such a person was not a debtor or that the amount was less than Rs. 5,000/- the application was to be dismissed. Section 25 provided for transfer of pending suits, appeals, applications and proceedings to the Board. This section may be reproduced in extenso:

"S. 25. (1) All suits, appeals applications for execution and proceedings other than revisional in respect of any debt pending in any civil or revenue court shall, if they involve the questions whether the person from whom such debt is due is a debtor and whether the total amount of debts from him on the date of the application is less than Rs. 5,000 be transferred to the Board.

(2) When an application for adjustment of debts made to a Board under S. 11 or a statement submitted to a Board under section 21 includes a debt in respect of which a suit, appeal, application for execution or proceeding other than revisional is pending before a civil or revenue court, the Board shall give notice thereof to such other court. On receipt of such notice, such other court shall transfer the suit, appeal, application or proceeding, as the case may be, to the Board.

(3) When any suit, appeal, application or proceeding is transferred to the Board under sub-s. (1) or sub-s. (2), the Board shall proceed as if an application under section 11 had been made to it.

(4) If the Board, to which any suit, appeal, application or proceeding is transferred under sub-s. (1) or sub-section (2), decides the preliminary issues mentioned in clause (a) of sub-section (1) of sec. 24 in the negative or those mentioned in Clause (b) of the said sub-section (1) in the negative, it shall retransfer the suit, appeal, application or proceeding to the Court from which it had been transferred to itself after the disposal and subject to the result of the appeal, where an appeal is filed, and after the expiry of the period prescribed for an appeal where no appeal is filed.

(5) When any suit, appeal, application or proceeding is retransferred to the Court under sub-section (4) the said Court shall proceed with the same."

Section 28 dealt with the mode of taking accounts and Section 35 provided for the scaling down of the debts payable by debtors in accordance with their paying capacity in the manner indicated therein. An award was to be made according to Section 36 and further scaling down of debts could be done under Section 37. In terms of S. 11 the Government notified June 30, 1953 as the last day for settlement of debts due by jagirdars. The Full Bench of the High Court quite rightly observed that S. 11 was the basic provision enabling the creditor or the debtor to move the Board under the Act for settlement of debts. The Act also recognised other modes which would be tantamount to the making of such an application to the Board so as to confer jurisdiction on it to settle debts in accordance with the procedure prescribed by the Act. Section 25 embodied one of these modes. If a suit or appeal or execution proceeding etc. was pending in relation to such debt in any court it had to be transferred to the Board. The Board would proceed to deal with it as though an application under S. 11 had been made. The suit or other proceedings had to relate to a debt in respect of which an application under S. 11 could have been made to the Board. It was also necessary that the proceedings should be pending in the court on the date notified. This would follow from the provisions of S. 11. There could be no difficulty about proceedings which were taken in a court subsequent to an application made to the Board under S. 11. That proceeding had necessarily to be transferred on the notice given by the Board. The point which was canvassed before the Full Bench of the High Court was that the expression "pending" occurring in S. 25 was of wider amplitude and covered all cases of debts whether incurred before or subsequent to the notified date. The High Court, after an exhaustive discussion of the various provisions of the Act, came to the conclusion that there were clear indications in them that the debts to be determined and scaled down by the Board were only such debts as were existing on the date of the application provided for by S. 11. This is what was finally observed:

"Thus the entire scheme of the Act makes it abundantly clear that matters concerned with the debts prior to the date of application alone (which date of course cannot extend beyond the notified date under section 11) are within the cognizance and competence of the Board. It follows that only cases relating to such debts and no other debts are liable to be transferred to it under Section 25 (1)."

5. In our judgment the High Court came to the correct conclusion that the expression "pending" in Section 25 (1) must relate to proceedings which were pending on the notified date and could not take in any proceedings which came to be instituted after such date. The other condition for the applicability of S. 25 was that the suit or other proceedings must be in respect of a debt with regard to which a jagirdar or the creditor could make an application to the Board on or before the date which the Government had notified for settlement of debts due by the jagirdar. A close examination of S. 22 puts the matter beyond controversy. If no application had been made under S. 11 within the period specified therein or for recording a settlement made under S. 15 every debt due by the debtor was to stand extinguished. In a case of the present kind a debt would have stood extinguished if no application had been made under S. 11 within the specified period. Thus the material date would be the one notified by the Government under S. 11 and only those debts which were due on or before that date from a debtor or in respect of which any proceedings were pending in a court or before the Board could be the subject-matter of settlement by the Board. It may be mentioned that in Babibai Thakuji v. Fazluddin Usmanbhai, ILR (1954) Bom 535 = (AIR 1954 Bom 282) a similar provision of the Bombay Agricultural Debtors' Relief Act on which the provisions of the Act were modelled came up for consideration and it was said with reference to Section 19 (1) of that Act that only those suits were liable to be transferred which were pending on the date when an application for adjustment of debts could have been made under S. 4 (which corresponded to S. 11 of the Act). In other words, if a suit was filed after the time to make an application for adjustment of debts had expired such a suit was not liable to be transferred. Since both the conditions for the applicability of S. 25 of the Act were not satisfied in the present case the decision of the High Court must be upheld and the appeal (C. A. 1138/66) dismissed. In order to avoid further proceedings which will entail needless expense learned counsel for the parties have agreed that the judgment-debtors will pay the decretal amount in four equal annual instalments. The first instalment which will represent 1/4th of the decretal amount shall be deposited in the executing Court on or before the first January 1971. The subsequent instalments each year shall be similarly deposited on or before first January. In case of failure on the part of the judgment-debtors to make the deposit of anyone of the instalments in time the entire amount due shall become recoverable at once. As and when the said deposit is made the decree-holder will be entitled to withdraw the same. An order is directed to be made in terms of this settlement between the parties.

6. Civil Appeals Nos. 1139 & 1140/66 arise out of the decree in C.C.A. Nos. 63 & 66 of 1959 dated February 1, 1963 in O.S. No. 37 of 1958. So far as the appeal against the Bank is concerned there is no merit in it because it has been proved and that finding could not be successfully assailed before us that the debt in question was a post-notification debt. In other words it came into existence after June 30, 1953 which was the date notified by the Government as the last date for settlement of debts due by jagirdars by an application made under S. 11 of the Act. In view of our decision in the connected appeal (C. A. 1138/66) S. 25 (1) of the Act was not applicable to the suit filed for the recovery of such a debt. Civil Appeal No. 1139 of 1966, therefore, has no merit and is hereby dismissed.

7. Civil Appeal No. 1140 of 1966 which has been preferred by the Bank involves a very short point. According to the decree of the High Court the plaintiff, namely, the Bank was to proceed and execute the decree against the second defendant in the first instance and was to proceed against the first defendant only afterwards for such balance amount which could not be realized from the second defendant. It is not disputed that the liability of the first and the second defendant was joint and several and the decree of the High Court proceeded on the basis of some equitable relief which was sought for and granted to the first defendant. We are unable to hold and no such principle or statutory provision has been pointed out to us that any such equitable relief could be granted in a suit of the nature filed by the Bank against the two defendants. We would, accordingly, allow this appeal to the extent of deleting clause (2) of the decree and adding in clause (1) the following words:

"Both the defendants shall be jointly and severally liable for the payment of the decretal amount."

8. In view of the entire circumstances the parties in all the appeals are left to bear their own costs in this Court.

Order accordingly.

*(Spl. Appeal No. 1177 of 1968, D/- 20-5-1969 — All.)

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

GROVER, J.: This is an appeal by special leave from a judgment of the Allahabad High Court dismissing a writ petition by which the appellant challenged the validity of a warrant issued by the Assistant Collector, Central Excise, Allahabad, authorising the Superintendent, Central Excise, Varanasi, to enter certain premises, search the same and seize the documents therefrom.

2. The appellant, which is a public limited company having its registered office at Calcutta, owns and runs a factory known as Sahu Chemicals and Fertilisers at Varanasi where chemicals such as ammonia and soda ash are manufactured. In February 1962 excise duty was fixed on manufacture of ammonia for the purpose of fertilizers at Rs. 25/- per metric ton, the rate being Rs. 125/- per metric ton if it was used for other purposes. The notification by which the aforesaid duty was payable was later withdrawn by means of another notification dated March 1, 1964 and thereafter no excise duty was required to be paid on the manufacture of ammonia. For the period from May 1962 to the beginning of March 1964 the appellant had paid duty at the rate of Rs. 25/- per metric ton on the ground that ammonia had been utilised for the purpose of manufacture of chemical fertiliser. The Central Excise authorities, however, had received information that part of the ammonia had been utilised for purposes other than the manufacture of fertilizers on which higher duty of Rs. 125/- per metric ton was payable. It was considered that there had been evasion of duty. On May 11, 1963, the Assistant Collector issued a warrant for the search and seizure of goods and documents pursuant to which the premises of the factory at Varanasi were searched on May 11, 12 and 13, 1963 and various documents were seized.

3. The writ petition was heard in the first instance by the learned single Judge who dismissed it. In appeal his judgment was upheld by the Division Bench. Three contentions were raised before the Division Bench; the first was that Section 12 of the Central Excises and Salt Act, 1944, hereinafter called the "Act" was void as the powers delegated to the Central Government by the legislature were excessive and beyond permissible limits. The second point was that the Sea Customs Act, 1878 having been repealed it was not open to the Central Government under Section 12 of the Act to apply Section 105 (1) of the Customs Act, 1962 to the Act and the notification dated May 4, 1963 by which this was done was illegal and ultra vires. The third was that the search and seizure made by the respondents under the impugned authorisation dated August 11, 1968 and the authorisation itself were not in accordance with the provisions of Section 105 of the Customs Act, 1962.

4. Section 12 of the Act is in the following terms:

"Section 12. Application of the provisions of Act VIII of 1878 to Central Excise Duties. The Central Government may, by notification in the official Gazette declare that any of the provisions of the Sea Customs Act, 1878, relating to the levy on and exemption from customs duties, drawback of duty, warehousing offences and penalties, confiscation, and procedure relating to offences and appeals, shall, with such modifications and alterations as it may consider necessary or desirable to adapt them to the circumstances, be applicable in regard to like matters in respect of the duties imposed by Section 3".

When the Act was enacted Section 172 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 which could be applied to the Act under Section 12 provided:

Section 172. "Any Magistrate may, on application by a Customs Collector, stating his belief that dutiable or prohibited goods (or any documents relating to such goods) are secreted in any place within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such Magistrate, issue a warrant to search for such goods.

Such warrant shall be executed in the same way and shall have the same effect, as a search warrant issued under the law relating to Criminal Procedure".

It may be mentioned that the words "or documents" were inserted by the Sea Customs Amendment Act, 1955. After the enactment of the Customs Act, 1962 by the notification dated May 4, 1963 as amended by the Notification dated February 6, 1965 amongst other provisions of the Customs Act, 1962, sub-section (1) of Section 105 and Section 110 were made applicable with certain modifications of a minor nature under Section 12 of the Act. The material parts of these sections are reproduced below:—

"Section 105 (1). Power to search premises. (1) If the Assistant Collector of Customs, or in any area adjoining the land frontier or the coast of India an officer of Customs specially empowered by name in this behalf by the Board, has reason to believe that any goods liable to confiscation or any documents or things which in his opinion will be useful for or relevant to any proceeding under this Act are secreted in any place, he may authorise any officer of customs to search or may himself search for such goods, documents or things".

"Section 110 (3). The proper officer may seize any document or things which, in his opinion, will be useful for, or relevant to, any proceeding under this Act".

5. On the first point it has been urged on behalf of the appellant that Section 12 of the Act gave unrestricted and unlimited power to the Central Government to modify or alter the provisions of the Sea Customs Act 1878 and to apply the provisions of that Act with such modifications and alterations as the Central Government might consider appropriate. Modification, it has been pointed out, may be permissible and may not fall within the vice of excessive delegation because the basic structure is not changed but altered, it is suggested, has a much wider connotation and it embraces even the changing of the essential pattern of a thing or object. Such a power inherently involves the making of changes even in regard to matters pertaining to legislative policy.

6. In our opinion the above contention is purely of academic interest in the present case. In the notifications which were issued applying, inter alia, Section 105 (1) and Section 110 of the Customs Act, 1962 no such changes have been made as can possibly fall within the meaning of the word "alterations". It has been pointed out in the previous decisions of this Court that the power to restrict and modify does not import the power to make essential changes. It is confined to alterations of a minor character and no change in principle is involved. See In re, Delhi Laws Act, 1912, 1951 SCR 747 = (AIR 1951 SC 332). It was conceded before the High Court and has not been urged before us that the word "modifications" could not be taken as conferring on the Central Government any legislative power which was in excess of the permissible limits. Objection was taken only with regard to the word "alterations" but that word must be understood in the sense in which it was open to the legislature to employ it legitimately and in a constitutional manner. No question is thus involved of delegation either of any essential legislative functions or any change of legislative policy.

7. The second contention has hardly any merit. Section 8 (1) of the General Clauses Act provides that where any Central Act, repeals and re-enacts with or without modification, any provision of a former enactment, then references in any such enactment or in any instrument to the provision so repealed shall, unless a different intention appears, be construed as references to the provision so re-enacted. By virtue of this provision it cannot be disputed that in Section 12 of the Act the Customs Act, 1962 can be read in place of the Sea Customs Act, 1878. An attempt has been made to argue that Section 12 of the Act empowers incorporation of the provisions of Sea Customs Act, 1878 in the Act itself and whenever a notification is issued under it such provisions of the Sea Customs Act as have been applied become incorporated as an integral part of the Act. Section 8 of the General Clauses Act would not be applicable to a case of such incorporation and it can only apply if Section 12 can be regarded as containing only a reference to the provisions of the Sea Customs Act. In Secy. of State for India in Council v. Hindusthan Co-operative Insurance Society Ltd., 58 Ind App 259 = AIR 1931 PC 149 it was accepted as a settled rule of construction that where a statute is incorporated by reference into a second statute the repeal of the first statute does not affect the second. The law laid down by the Privy Council can have no applicability to the present case. Section 12 of the Act did not bodily lift, as it were, certain provisions of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 and incorporate them as an integral part of the Act. It only empowered the Central Government to apply the provisions of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 with such modifications and alterations as might be considered necessary or desirable by the Central Government for the purpose of implementation and enforcement of Section 3 of the Act. No exception could be taken to the view of the High Court that Section 12 contained a provision delegating limited powers to the Central Government to draw upon the provisions of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 for the purpose of implementing Section 3 of the Act. In Collector of Customs, Madras v. Nathella Sampathu Chetty, 1962-3 SCR 786 = (AIR 1962 SC 316), this Court examined at length the meaning and effect of incorporation by reference of one statute into another and dismissed the Privy Council case referred to before in detail. Section 8 (1) of the General Clauses Act, it was pointed out, dealt with reference or citation of one enactment in another without incorporation. The usual or recognised formulae generally employed to effect incorporation were considered; for instance the words used in Section 20 of 53 and 54 Vict. Ch. 70 — Housing of the Working Classes Act, 1890, the words used were

"shall, for that purpose, be deemed to form part of this Act in the same manner as if they were enacted in the body thereof".

In 54 and 55 Vict. Ch. 19, Section 1 (3), the language employed was:

"The provisions of Section 134 of the said Act (set out in the schedule) shall apply as if they were herein enacted".

It is unnecessary to mention the other provisions because a comparison of the recognised formulae with the text of Section 12 of the Act shows that the provisions of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 were not meant to be incorporated in the Act and were only to be applicable to the extent notified by the Central Government for the purpose of the duty leviable under Section 3.

8. Another aspect which has been presented under the second contention is that the impugned notification is bad and stands vitiated because under the previous notification which applied Section 172 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 it was a Magistrate who had to bring his judicial mind to bear on the expediency or desirability of issuing a warrant for search whereas under the present notification after the enactment of the Customs Act, 1962, it is the Assistant Collector of Customs who performs executive functions and who has been empowered to issue the warrant for search and seizure. The decision of this Court in Collector of Customs and Excise, Cochin v. A. S. Bava, 1968-1 SCR 82 = (AIR 1968 SC 13) has been sought to be pressed into service in support of the argument that extension of Section 105 (1) is illegal. In that case the provisions of Section 129 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 had been applied under Section 12 of the Act. Section 129 dealt with the procedure relating to appeals and required an appellant to deposit pending the appeal the duty or penalty imposed and empowered the appellate authority, in its discretion to dispense with such deposit pending the appeal in any particular case. There was a provision in the Act itself, Section 35, which gave an unfettered right of appeal to a person aggrieved by any decision or order made under the Act. It was in these circumstances that it was held that Section 129 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 could not be made applicable so as to whittle down the substantive right of appeal conferred by Section 35 of the Act. The ratio of that decision can afford no assistance to the appellant in the present case. By the notification issued under Section 12 of the Act after the enactment of Customs Act, 1962, the previous notification under the Sea Customs Act, 1878 stood superseded and no question survives with regard to the validity of the notification issued in 1963 and amended in 1965.

9. On the third point an attempt was made to argue that the Assistant Collector, while issuing the warrant for search and seizure did not apply his mind to the relevant and necessary facts. Our attention has been invited to the warrant itself in which the documents have not been particularised or specified but the words "certain documents" have been used. The learned single Judge dealt with this matter fully and repelled the contention that there was no relevant material before the authority upon which the belief could be founded in terms of Section 105 (1) of the Customs Act, 1962 by the Assistant Collector. We find no merit in this contention.

10. The appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. S. N. Prasad, Advocate, for Appellant; Mr. B. P. Jha, Advocate, for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SIKRI, J. — This appeal by special leave raises the question of the applicability of the rule of issue estoppel. The appellant, Gopal Prasad Sinha, was tried on a charge under Section 409, I. P. C., for having committed criminal breach of trust of Rs. 27,800/- during the period between January 31, 1960 and November 30, 1960, while acting as a cashier of the Public Works Department, East Division, Gaya. The Assistant Sessions Judge framed three points for determination:

"1. If the accused Gopal Prasad Sinha was a Public servant and was working as cashier in the office of the Executive Engineer, P. W. D., Gaya East Division, during the period between 31-1-60 to 30-11-60?"

2. Whether charge amount namely Rs. 27,800/- was entrusted to the accused or he had dominion over it in his capacity as a public servant?

3. Whether the accused committed criminal breach of trust in respect of this charge amount?"

2. The learned Assistant Sessions Judge, after going through the oral and documentary evidence, answered the first point in the affirmative and held that the accused was handling the cash in the office during the aforesaid period as a cashier.

3. On point No. 2 the learned Assistant Sessions Judge, after considering the oral and documentary evidence, held:

"It is proved that the accused was in charge of one key of one of the locks of the door of the iron chest of the office of the Executive Engineer, P. W. D., Gaya East Division. It is also proved that the accused was dealing with the cash of the Division and he was receiving and disbursing money of the Division. I accordingly hold that the charge money was entrusted to the accused and the accused had dominion over the charge amount of Rs. 27,800/- while acting as cashier of P. W. D., Gaya East Division".

4. On point No. 3 he held that "the accused made entries in the cash book showing remittance of the charge amount to sub-divisions Nos. 2 and 3 but the same were not actually remitted by the accused nor they were received in sub-divisions Nos. 2 and 3.

5. The point of issue estoppel was raised before him, the point being that the accused was put up on trial in a previous case under Section 409, I. P. C., for having committed criminal breach of trust with respect to certain amounts during the period December 8, 1960 to August 17, 1961, and in that case the High Court had acquitted the accused holding that he was not in charge of the cash. The learned Assistant Sessions Judge held that the aforesaid finding of the High Court could not operate as a res judicata.

6. The High Court, on appeal in the present case, upheld the findings of fact of the learned Assistant Sessions Judge. The High Court also repelled the argument regarding rule of issue estoppel thus:

"In the earlier case out of which criminal appeal 40 of 1963 arose, the defalcation in question were alleged to have been committed by the present appellant in his capacity as a cashier during the period 8-12-60 to 17-8-61. As such, the point in issue in that case was whether the accused, that is, the present appellant, was the cashier and was in charge of the cash during the aforesaid period. In the present case, however, the defalcations in question are alleged to have been committed during an altogether different period, namely, 31-1-60 to 30-11-60 and the point in issue in the present case is whether the appellant was the cashier of the division and was in charge of the cash during this particular period. The finding of fact as given in the aforesaid appeal that the appellant was not a cashier and was not in charge of the cash must be held as being operative for the period 8-12-60 to 17-8-61 during which the defalcations forming the subject-matter of the aforesaid appeal were alleged to have been committed and, as such, those findings cannot in any way operate under the principle of issue estoppel to preclude the prosecution from adducing evidence in the subsequent case, that is, in the present case, to show that the appellant was the cashier of the division and was in charge of the cash during the period 31-1-60 to 30-11-60".

7. The learned counsel for the appellant contends that substantially it was the same issue that was tried during the earlier trial, and if the accused was not the cashier from December 8, 1960 to August 17, 1961, he could not be held to be a cashier from January 31, 1960 to November 30, 1960. He said that the defence in both the cases was identical and the evidence also almost the same.

8. In our opinion, the High Court came to the correct conclusion. The basic principle underlying the rule of issue estoppel is that the same issue of fact and law must have been determined in the previous litigation. The question then arises: Was it the same issue of fact which was determined in the earlier case? A person may be acting as a cashier at one period and may not be acting as a cashier at another period, especially as in this case it was found that the appellant had never been appointed as a cashier. He was a temporary senior accounts clerk who was alleged to be doing the work of a cashier. If there is any likelihood of facts or conditions changing during the two periods which are under consideration then it is difficult to say that the prosecution would be bound by the finding in a previous trial on a similar issue of fact. It seems to us that the later finding must necessarily be in contradiction of the previous determination. There can be no such contradiction if the periods are different and the facts relating to the carrying on of the duties of a cashier are different.

9. The learned counsel has referred to a number of cases of this Court where the rule of issue estoppel has been approved: e. g. Pritam Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 415; Manipur Administration v. Thockchom Bira Singh, 1964-7 SCR 123 = (AIR 1965 SC 87), State of Andhra Pradesh v. Kokkiligada Meeraiah, AIR 1970 SC 771 and Assistant Collector of Customs v. L. R. Melwani, AIR 1970 SC 962 but these cases do not support the contention of the learned counsel for the appellant.

10. It appears that the appellant surrendered on December 1, 1961, and in Sessions Trial No. 90 of 1962

he was sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment. He started serving his sentence on November 15, 1962. His appeal to the High Court was allowed on October 5, 1964, and thereafter he remained in prison as an under-trial prisoner. In the present case he was sentenced to six years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 25,000/- or in default to undergo further imprisonment for 18 months.

11. In the circumstances given above we consider the sentence of six years in the present case as excessive and reduce it to rigorous imprisonment for three years, and a fine of Rs. 25,000/- or in default further imprisonment for 18 months.

12. In the result the appeal is partly allowed in the matter of sentence, as stated above. Special Leave Petition (Criminal) No. 1048 of 1969 is accordingly dismissed.

Order accordingly.

Ramabhupala Reddy and others,

D/- 28-9-1970.

(A) Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 423 — Appeal against acquittal — Examination of evidence — Scope and extent of powers of appellate Court.

The scope of an appeal against an order of acquittal, is now settled by the decision of the Supreme Court in AIR 1961 SC 715. The legal position is: 1. an appellate Court has full powers to review the evidence upon which the order of acquittal is founded; 2. the principles laid down in Sheo Swarup's case, AIR 1934 PC 227 (2) afforded a correct guide for the appellate Court's approach to a case disposing of such an appeal; 3. the different phraseology used in the judgments of the Supreme Court such as: (a) "substantial and compelling reasons"; (b) "good and sufficiently cogent reasons"; (c) "strong reasons" are not intended to curtail the undoubted power of an appellate Court in an appeal against acquittal to review the entire evidence and to come to its own conclusion, but in doing so it should not only consider every matter on record having a bearing on the questions of fact and the reasons given by the Court below in support of its order of acquittal but should express the reasons in its judgment which led it to hold that the acquittal was not justified. (Para 13)

To these tests may be added that the appellate Court should also bear in mind the fact that the trial Court had the benefit of seeing the witnesses in the witness box and the presumption of innocence is not weakened by the order of acquittal. If two reasonable conclusions can be reached on the basis of the evidence on record, the appellate Court should not disturb the findings of the trial Court.

(B) Constitution of India, Article 136 — Interference with findings of fact — Murder case — Appeal by special leave against conviction passed by High Court in appeal against acquittal — Held, on consideration of findings of fact by High Court, that there was no reason for interference.

Although the powers of the Supreme Court under Article 136 are very wide, the Supreme Court, following the practice adopted by the Judicial Committee, has prescribed limits on its own power and in criminal appeals, except under exceptional circumstances, it does not interfere with the findings of fact reached by the High Court unless it is of the opinion that the High Court had disregarded the forms of legal process or had violated the principles of natural justice or otherwise substantial and grave injustice has resulted. The Supreme Court does not ordinarily reappraise the evidence if the High Court has approached the case before it in accordance with the guidelines laid down by the Supreme Court unless some basic error on the part of the High Court is brought to the notice of the Supreme Court. It is best to bear in mind that except in certain special cases, the High Court is the final court of appeal and the Supreme Court is only a Court of special jurisdiction. (Para 14)

Every one of the points taken into consideration by the trial Court to arrive at the verdict of acquittal was considered by the High Court and it gave reasons for differing from the conclusions reached by the trial Court. There was nothing basically wrong in the approach adopted by the High Court. It considered the evidence on record on the basis of human probabilities and tested the evidence given by the witnesses by various methods known to law. After doing so it came to the conclusion that the evidence of some of the eye witnesses was acceptable. In appeal against conviction to the Supreme Court by Special leave,

Held, that as the final judges of fact, the Supreme Court saw no reason to interfere with the conclusions of the High Court. (Para 24)

(C) Evidence — Appreciation of — Interested witnesses.

It is not the law that the evidence of interested witnesses is not entitled to any weight. Their evidence has got to be scrutinized with care. (Para 23)

M/s. Nur-ud-din Ahmed, G. Somi Reddy and G. S. Rama Rao, Advccates, for Appellants; P. Ram Reddy, Sr. Advocate (Mr. A. V. V. Nair, Advocate, with him), for Respondent.

HEGDE, J.: The appellants and one Boya Ranudu were charged with the murders of Boya Thimmiah and Boya Sanjeevu as well as some other lesser offences at about 8 a.m. on September 8, 1964 near mile stone No. 81/2 on the Dharmavaram-Kalyandurg road. They were tried by the learned District Judge, Anantapur for those offences. The learned District Judge disbelieving the witnesses who spoke to the incident viz. P. Ws. 1 to 3 acquitted all the accused. As against that decision of the learned District Judge, the State went up in appeal to the High Court of Andhra Pradesh. The High Court accepted the appeal so far as the appellants (Accused 1 to 5) are concerned and convicted them under various charges including one under S. 302/149, I.P.C. for which offence all of them were sentenced for imprisonment for life. It is not necessary to refer to the other charges because those charges are interwoven with the offence of murder. No arguments were addressed to us about those charges separately. The question for decision is whether the incident spoken to by the P. Ws. 1 to 3 is true? If we accept the evidence regarding the incident, there is no doubt that the accused are guilty of the offences held to have been proved against them by the High Court. If on the other hand, we are unable to accept that evidence then they are entitled to be acquitted of all the charges. This appeal against the decision of the High Court was brought after obtaining special leave from this Court.

2. It was alleged on behalf of the prosecution and not denied on behalf of the accused that from a very long time there were two factions in Thogarakunta village in Dharmavaram Taluk. One of the factions was known as Kapu faction though in that faction there were a sprinkling of Boyas. The other faction was known as Boya faction. In that faction there were some Kapus. Between these factions there was bitter enmity. There were cases and counter cases between the two factions. On the date of the occurrence the deceased and some of their partymen had to appear in a criminal case pending against them in the Court of First Class Magistrate, Dharmavaram.

3. The prosecution case is that some of the accused in that case had gone to Dharmavaram on the evening of the 7th itself. But the two deceased persons left for Dharmavaram on the early morning of September 8, 1964. On the way at a coffee hotel they met P.Ws. 1 and 2 who were also going to Dharmavaram. The four joined together and proceeded to Dharmavaram after taking some coffee at the hotel of P.W. 5. P.W. 3, a relation of the deceased persons also left for Dharmavaram that morning carrying a bag of cold rice for the accused in the case. It is said that he was going at some distance behind the four persons referred to earlier. Meanwhile accused 5 Boya Chinna Polappa came from behind and went past them briskly. When the aforementioned four persons proceeded a little further all the accused armed with pistols and other weapons emerged out of a dried up deep water channel and surrounded the two deceased persons. At that time accused 1 and 2 had revolvers in their hands, accused 3 had a dagger. Accused 1 fired revolver shots at the deceased Boya Thimmiah twice or thrice. At the same time accused 3 stabbed him below his armpit with a dagger. When Thimmiah fell down, accused 4 picked up a big stone (of the size of pumpkin) from near the road and dropped it on the head of Thimmiah. When the accused were attacking Thimmiah, Sanjeevu began to run from that place but accused 2 and 5 chased him and accused 2 fired at him twice from behind. On receiving these shots Sanjeevu fell down with his back to the sky. Then accused 5 picked up a big stone and violently threw it on the head of Sanjeevu. Meanwhile seeing P.W. 3 coming that way the accused gave him a chase but he ran for his life. They were not able to overtake him. At this stage one of the accused threw a stone which hit him on the right calf muscle but yet he ran away and his pursuers were not able to catch him.

4. After the aforesaid events, it is said that the accused came and threatened P.W. 1 not to disclose the offence to anyone and if he did disclose he would meet the fate that befell the deceased persons. They asked him to take an oath that he would not divulge the matter to anyone. He did so. Thereafter they took away with them P.W. 2. After the accused and P.W. 2 left the place P.W. 1 went to Kanganapalli and there caught a bus for Dharamavaram where he cashed his pay cheque for which purpose he went to Dharamavaram that day. From Dharamavaram he went to Chennakothapalli where he had some work. When he was returning to his village next day, at the place where the murders had taken place he saw a large number of persons including some police officers. The Sub Inspector asked him to remain there. Later on he was examined at the inquest.

5. P.W. 2's version is that from the place of occurrence the accused took him to Thopudurthi. There he was kept in the house of the elder brother of accused 1. During the time he was with the accused he was repeatedly warned not to divulge the matter to anyone and beware of the likely consequences if he dared to disregard their warnings. Thereafter in the evening they took him to Anantapur and left him there. That night he went to his house and stayed with his family.

6. P.W. 3 supported the version given by P.Ws. 1 and 2 as regards the occurrence. His further case is that when he took to his heels from the scene of occurrence accused 6 threw a stone at him and that caused an injury on his right calf but yet he continued running, out of fear for his life and reached his sister's place at Bathalapuram which is about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the scene of occurrence. There he informed his sister about the occurrence but he was not bold enough to get out of the house and consequently he could not inform the authorities. He also stated that he returned to his village on the next morning and at the scene he found large number of people gathered. The police had arrived at the scene by that time. He stayed at the scene till the evening and he was examined at the inquest.

7. According to the prosecution sometime after the occurrence P.W. 8, a postal runner happened to pass through the scene of occurrence and he saw two dead bodies there. He went and informed that matter to the village Munsiff of Kanganapalli who recorded his statement (Ex. P-7) and thereafter sent the same with his report Ex. P-8. Further, the prosecution evidence discloses that somewhere about the noon of the day of occurrence P.W. 9, a relation of the deceased persons came to know from a young boy that dead bodies of two persons are lying at Kanganapalli. As he knew that his relations had gone that way that morning, he became suspicious that they might have been done to death and hence he proceeded towards the scene of occurrence but he was not bold enough to go to the scene. Therefore he first sent P.W. 7 to go and see whether the dead bodies were those of his relations. P.W. 7 accordingly proceeded to the scene and he came and told him that they were the dead bodies of Thimmiah and Sanjeevu. Thereafter he (P.W. 9) himself went to the scene and saw the dead bodies of the deceased persons and came back and reported the matter to the village Munsiff of Thogarakunta. That report is marked Ex. P-9. In his report P. W. 9 cast suspicion on some of the members of the opposite faction including the appellants.

8. The evidence of P.Ws. 1 to 3 relating to the occurrence is fully corroborated by P.W. 14 who conducted post mortem examination on the dead bodies of the deceased persons and also P.W. 15, the Fire-arms expert. The evidence of P.Ws. 1 to 3 also gets corroboration from the testimony of P.W. 7 who claims to have seen P.Ws. 1, 2 and the two deceased persons going towards Kanganapalli on the morning of September 8, 1964.

9. The appellants denied that they had any hand in the murder of the deceased persons. They pleaded that the case had been foisted against them because of enmity. They did not deny the existence of two factions in the village and the further fact that there was serious hostility between the two factions. In fact their case is that the present case has been foisted against them because of that hostility. On their behalf they examined D.W. 1, the Professor of Forensic Medicine, Madras to establish that the injuries found on the back of Sanjeevu could not have been caused by revolver shots. By that evidence they sought to show that the evidence given by the occurrence witnesses is not true.

10. The trial judge rejecting the testimony of P.W. 14 and relying on the evidence of D.W. 1, came to the conclusion that the injuries found on the back of the deceased Sanjeevu could not have been caused in the manner deposed to by P.Ws. 1 to 3. He opined that they could not have been caused by revolver shots. He also came to the conclusion that P.Ws. 1 to 3 were partisan witnesses and that their evidence is unnatural and unreliable. As a result of those conclusions he acquitted the appellants as well as Boya Ranudu. The acquittal of Ranudu was confirmed by the High Court on the ground that there is no satisfactory evidence to show that he participated in the incident. The appellate court concurring with the trial court came to the conclusion that P.W. 2 is not a reliable witness. Both the courts held that he was a partisan witness and that his evidence is bristling with contradictions. His evidence has not been commended for our acceptance. Therefore we need not refer to the same. But it is necessary to state at this stage that the High Court did not come to the conclusion that P.W. 2 was not present at the scene when the occurrence took place. Hence the fact that his evidence was found to be unreliable cannot throw any doubt on the testimony of P.Ws. 1 and 3.

11. P.Ws. 5 and 6 have turned hostile to the prosecution. The trial judge had recorded in the deposition of P. W. 6 that his behaviour in the witness box was anything but satisfactory. He was hesitating while giving answers. In the circumstances of the case we have to exclude from consideration the testimony of P. Ws. 5 and 6.

12. The appellate Court had fully relied on the testimony of P. Ws. 1 and 3. It also accepted the testimony of P. Ws. 14 and 15 and rejected that of D. W. 1.

13. The scope of an appeal against an order of acquittal has been the subject of some controversy in Courts for a long time. But that controversy is now settled by the decision of this Court in Sanwant Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (1961) 3 SCR 120 = (AIR 1961 SC 715). In that decision this Court summarised the legal position thus:

1. an appellate Court has full powers to review the evidence upon which the order of acquittal is founded;

2. the principles laid down in Sheo Swarup's case, 61 Ind App 398 = (AIR 1934 PC 227 (2)) afforded a correct guide for the appellate court's approach to a case disposing of such an appeal;

3. the different phraseology used in the judgments of this court such as:

(a) "substantial and compelling reasons";

(b) "good and sufficiently cogent reasons";

(c) "strong reasons" are not intended to curtail the undoubted power of an appellate court in an appeal against acquittal to review the entire evidence and to come to its own conclusion, but in doing so it should not only consider every matter on record having a bearing on the questions of fact and the reasons given by the court below in support of its order of acquittal but should express the reasons in its judgment which led it to hold that the acquittal was not justified.

14. To these tests we may add, as laid down by this Court in several decisions that the appellate court should also bear in mind the fact that the trial court had the benefit of seeing the witnesses in the witness box and the presumption of innocence is not weakened by the order of acquittal. If two reasonable conclusions can be reached on the basis of the evidence on record, the appellate court should not disturb the findings of the trial court. We shall presently proceed to consider whether the appellate court adhered to those principles in the examination of the evidence in this case. But before doing so we must remind ourselves that this appeal was brought under Art. 136 of the Constitution. Although the powers of this Court under that Article are very wide, this Court, following the practice adopted by the Judicial Committee, has prescribed limits on its own power and in criminal appeals, except under exceptional circumstances it does not interfere with the findings of fact reached by the High Court unless it is of the opinion that the High Court had disregarded the forms of legal process or had violated the principles of natural justice or otherwise substantial and grave injustice has resulted. This Court does not ordinarily reappraise the evidence if the High Court has approached the case before it in accordance with the guidelines laid down by this Court unless some basic error on the part of the High Court is brought to the notice of this Court. It is best to bear in mind that except in certain special cases, the High Court is the final court of appeal and this Court is only a court of special jurisdiction. (The judgment after considering the evidence in Paras 15 to 22, proceeded:)

23. This takes us to the evidence of P.W. 3. He is undoubtedly an interested witness. He is a relation of the deceased persons and he belongs to their faction. His evidence that it was accused 6, who threw the stone at him was not accepted by the trial court as well as by the High Court. But his claim that he had witnessed the occurrence is supported by P.W. 1. His evidence on that aspect receives corroboration from the evidence of P.W. 7 as well as from the medical evidence. According to him he had sustained an injury because of the stone throw. P.W. 14 who examined him was of the opinion that the injury found on his right calf could have been caused by a stone throw. It is not the law that the evidence of interested witnesses is not entitled to any weight. Their evidence has got to be scrutinized with care. The further point made against this witness is that after going to his sister's place he did not inform the authorities about the occurrence nor did he go to Dharamavaram to inform his relatives about the occurrence and therefore his evidence is not believable. His explanation is that he was mortally afraid of the accused and as such he dared not get out of his sister's house. The trial court did not accept this explanation but the High Court accepted it. Different individuals react differently under the same circumstances. Here is a member of a faction who had seen the brutal murders of two of his relations. He himself was chased and he escaped death very narrowly. There is nothing surprising that such a person being afraid of getting out of his sister's house for a whole day. At any rate the High Court thought that there is nothing improbable about it.

24. Every one of the points taken into consideration by the trial court to arrive at the verdict of acquittal has been considered by the High Court and it has given reasons for differing from the conclusions reached by the trial court. There is nothing basically wrong in the approach adopted by the High Court. It considered the evidence on record on the basis of human probabilities and tested the evidence given by the witnesses by various methods known to law. After doing so it came to the conclusion that the evidence of P.Ws. 1 and 3 is acceptable. As mentioned earlier they are the final judges of fact. We see no reason to interfere with their conclusions.

25. For the reasons mentioned above this appeal fails and the same is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

J. C. SHAH, K. S. HEGDE
AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.

Mathura Prosad Rajgharia and others, Appellants v. State of West Bengal, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 2194 of 1966, D/- 27-10-1970.

(A) Calcutta Improvement Act (5 of 1911), Schedule, Rule 9 — "Disposition of the land at the date of the publication of the declaration relating thereto under Section 6" — Meaning of.

Whether within the meaning of Rule 9 disposition of the land at the date of the publication of the declaration relating thereto under Section 6 of the Land Acquisition Act justifies the Court in taking into account the potentialities of the land. (Quaere).

(B) Calcutta Improvement Act (5 of 1911), Sch., Rule 9 — Market value — How to be determined stated — F. A. No. 232 of 1955, D/- 26-5-1964 (Cal), Reversed.

The market value for compulsory acquisition of land under the Act has to be ascertained in the manner provided in Section 23 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, as modified by the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911. The modifications which have a bearing are (1) that the market value of the land is to be deemed the market value according to the disposition of the land at the date of the publication of the declaration relating thereto under Section 6 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 and (2) that an appeal lies against the order of the Tribunal only on questions mentioned in Section 77-A of the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911.

Where a large area of land in an urban locality is sought to be acquired in determining the market value, the "method of belting" is appropriate. It is common knowledge that lands having frontage on the main roads in urban areas are always more attractive than the lands which have no such frontage. In Calcutta the period between the years 1941 and 1947 was abnormal. Appreciation in the price level in localities served by the Schemes of the Calcutta Improvement Trust and localities not served by the Schemes cannot be assumed to be uniform. If in respect of the localities not covered by the improvement schemes there was a rise of 80%, for the lands served by the schemes the rise would be appreciably higher because of the better amenities available as a result of those schemes. F. A. No. 232 of 1955, D/- 26-5-1964 (Cal), Reversed. (Paras 11, 12, 14, 15)

(C) Calcutta Improvement Act (5 of 1911), Sections 72, 77-A — Valuation by Tribunal — Interference by Appellate Court.

The Tribunal is a statutory body consisting of an expert in valuation with whom are associated assessors. In determining the value of the lands, inter-play of various factors has to be taken into account. An Appellate Court may be justified in interfering with the valuation of land made by the Tribunal if it be shown that the Tribunal made an error of principle, or has ignored or misconceived important evidence which substantially affected the valuation or that its conclusion was vitiated because of substantial error or defect of procedure. (Para 17)

(D) Land Acquisition Act (1894), Section 11 — Award of compensation by Collector — Agreement between parties can be treated as good evidence of market value — F. A. No. 232 of 1955, D/- 26-5-1964 (Cal), Reversed.

The Land Acquisition Officer in awarding the amount of compensation under Section 11 is performing a statutory duty, and in assessing compensation is bound to exercise his judgment as to the correct basis of valuation, and his judgment cannot be controlled by an agreement between the parties interested. But even if an order made by the Collector valuing land with the consent of the acquiring authority and the claimant may not strictly be regarded as an award made on a consideration of all the relevant materials, the agreement formally reached between the acquiring authority and the claimant agreeing to a certain amount to be paid as compensation for the land acquired is good evidence of the market value of the land. AIR 1946 PC 75, Rel. on; F. A. No. 232 of 1955, D/- 26-5-1964 (Cal), Reversed. (Para 18)

v. Collector of Aligarh 18

Mr. M. C. Chagla, Senior Advocate (Mr. D. N. Mukherjee, Advocate with him), for Appellants; Mr. S. V. Gupte, Senior Advocate, (Mr. S. C. Majumdar, Advocate, with him), for Respondent.

SHAH, J. — An area of land known as "premises No. 104", Narkeldanga Main Road, in the town of Calcutta admeasuring 39 bighas and 19 cottahs (63980 sq. yards) was notified for acquisition under Section 4 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, by a notification published on August 1, 1946. The notification under Section 6 of the Land Acquisition Act was published on June 12, 1947. The land was situated at the junction of Narkeldanga Main Road and Kankurgachi Road and had a frontage on the Narkeldanga Main Road of 675 feet and on the Kankurgachi Road of 629 feet.

2. Before the Collector the appellants claimed Rs. 27,00,000/- as compensation for the land. The Collector by his award under Section 11 of the Land Acquisition Act awarded Rs. 10,38,700/- as compensation for the land, and Rs. 800/- for trees. The amount of compensation awarded (inclusive of the statutory solatium of 15% under Section 23 (2) of the Land Acquisition Act) was Rs. 11,95,425/-.

3. The appellants applied for a reference under Section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act as amended by the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911. The reference was heard by the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal. The Tribunal enhanced the amount of compensation by Rs. 2,54,240/- and 15% solatium thereon.

4. The appellants and the State of West Bengal appealed to the High Court of Calcutta. The appeal filed by the appellants was dismissed and the appeal of the State was partly allowed. The High Court awarded to the appellants Rs. 11,59,430/- as compensation and statutory solatium of 15% in addition thereto. Against the award made by the High Court, this appeal has been preferred by the appellants, with certificate granted by the High Court.

5. Compensation for the land was determined under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, as modified by the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911. By the Calcutta Improvement Act, certain modifications are made in the Land Acquisition Act, 1894. Section 69 of the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911, provides:

"The Board (Improvement Trust Board) may, with the previous sanction of the State Government acquire land under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, for carrying out any of the purposes of this Act".

Section 70 provides:

"A Tribunal shall be constituted, as provided in Section 72, for the purpose of performing the functions of the Court in reference to the acquisition of land for the Board under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894".

Section 71 provides:

"For the purpose of acquiring land under the said Act for the Board,—

(a) The Tribunal shall (except for the purposes of Section 54 of that Act) be deemed to be the Court, and the President of the Tribunal shall be deemed to be the Judge, under the said Act;

(b) the said Act shall be subject to the further modifications indicated in the Schedule;

(c) x x x x x x

(d) the award of the Tribunal shall be deemed to be the award of the Court under the said Land Acquisition Act, 1894, and shall, subject to the provisions of Section 77-A, be final".

Section 72 provides for the constitution of a Tribunal. The Tribunal consists of the President and two assessors. The section further provides for the qualifications of the President and the two assessors. Section 77-A provides:

"An appeal shall lie to the High Court from an award under this Chapter (Chapter IV), in any of the following cases, namely:—

(a) x x x x x x

(b) Where the decision is that of the Tribunal, and—

(i) the President of the Tribunal grants a certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal, or

(ii) the High Court grants special leave to appeal:

Provided x x x x

(2) An appeal under Clause (b) of sub-section (1) shall only lie on (one or more of) the following grounds, namely:—

(i) the decision being contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law;

(ii) the decision having failed to determine some material issue of law or usage having the force of law;

(iii) a substantial error or defect in the procedure provided by the said Act which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits.

x x x x x x

The Schedule to the Act sets out the modifications in the Land Acquisition Act, 1894. At the relevant time, by Rule 9 of the Schedule, it was provided:

"At the end of Section 23 of the Land Acquisition Act, the following shall be deemed to be added, namely:—

'(3) For the purpose of Clause 1 of sub-section (1) of this section:—

(4) The market value of the land shall be deemed to be the market value according to the disposition of the land at the date of the publication of the declaration relating thereto under Section 6'."

There were six other sub-clauses which are not relevant to this appeal.

6. The land of the appellants was notified for acquisition to ensure improved facilities in respect of the area covered by Improvement Scheme No. VI (Manicktola) of the Calcutta Improvement Trust. For improving the area contiguous to the area sought to be acquired in these proceedings, Scheme No. IV-M was undertaken in 1941 by the Improvement Trust. The boundary of Scheme No. IV-M included a portion of premises No. 104, Narkeldanga Main Road. For the purpose of that scheme some lands covered by the scheme were notified for acquisition. No part of premises No. 104 was included in the notification. The acquisition of premises No. 104 was undertaken under Scheme No. VI-M in 1947.

7. In determining the market value of premises No. 104 the Tribunal followed, what is called 'the belting method'. The Tribunal laid out belts parallel to the two frontages. Along the Narkeldanga Main Road the first belt was of a depth of 100 feet and the second belt of a depth of 150 feet. Similarly parallel to the Kankurgachi Road the first belt was of a depth of 100 feet, and the second belt was of a depth of 150 feet. The remaining area was taken as the third belt of the land having frontage on the Narkeldanga Main Road. The land was accordingly laid out into five belts — three out of the land on the Narkeldanga Main Road, and two out of land on the Kankurgachi Road. According to the accepted practice, the price of the second belt was taken at 75% of the price per cottah of the land in the first belt, and the land of the third belt at 50 % of the price per cottah of the value for the first belt of land.

8. The land on the Narkeldanga Main Road and the two interior belts was valued by the Tribunal on the basis of an award made in respect of premises No. 43J which had its main frontage on the Rajendra Lal Mitter Road and a second frontage on the Narkeldanga Main Road. The area of premises No. 43J was 12 cottahs 2 chattaks, and was valued at Rs. 1,500/- per cottah in respect of the belt abutting the Narkeldanga Main Road. Relying upon that evidence the Tribunal held that the market value of the first belt on the Narkeldanga Main Road was Rs. 1,500/- per cottah in September 1941, and that there was, between the years 1941 and 1947, 80% appreciation in the value of the land. The Tribunal also held that since Scheme No. IV-M had been in operation in the vicinity of "premises No. 104" and that two supplementary schemes Nos. IV-M1 and IV-M2 had come into operation, an additional allowance of 25% over the value of the land which had not the benefit of the Schemes should be taken into account. Thus the value of per cottah of the first belt on the Narkeldanga Main Road was computed at Rs. 3,375/-. The Tribunal allowed an additional 1% "on account of vista", and determined the value of the land in the first belt on the Narkeldanga Main Road at Rs. 3,400/- per cottah.

9. In determining the market value of the front belt on the Kankurgachi Road, the Tribunal relied upon Ext. 42 — which is an award made by the Collector in a land acquisition proceeding in respect of land premises No. 31, Kankurgachi Road, and on that basis valued the land of the front belt at Rs. 2,703/-. Premises No. 31 was within Scheme No. VI-M and was notified for acquisition under Section 4 of the Land Acquisition Act, on August 1, 1946. The date of the declaration under Section 6 was June 12, 1947. The Collector allowed in respect of premises No. 31, compensation at Rs. 2,703/- per cottah. The Tribunal regarded the award for acquisition of premises No. 31 as furnishing good evidence of the market value of the land in the first belt on the Kankurgachi Road. No allowance for the benefit of underground drainage connections and other amenities was made in regard to that land. In respect of the second belt on the Kankurgachi Road the price was taken at 75% per cottah of the value of the land per cottah in the front belt. The total amount determined for the Kankurgachi belts was Rs. 2,87,000/-, and adding thereto the price of the front belt on Narkeldanga Main Road at Rs. 3,400/- and the rear belts at 75% and 50% which worked out at Rupees 11,80,750/-, the total amount determined by the Tribunal was Rs. 14,77,650/-, but since a very large area of land was acquired, the Tribunal was of the view that a deduction of 12½% of the aggregate value should be made. Accordingly the Tribunal determined the compensation at Rs. 12,92,940/- for the land under acquisition.

10. In the appeal filed by the State of West Bengal, three contentions were urged before the High Court: (1) that in respect of Kankurgachi Road belts the Tribunal was in error in determining the market value of the land on the basis of Ext. 42. It was urged that Ext. 42 was not an index of the market value of the lands, since the award was made by consent of the claimant and the Improvement Trust Board and not on any decision given by the Collector; (2) that the Tribunal adopted an "artificial method" of determining the value of the land having a frontage on the Narkeldanga Main Road by first adding 80% to the value prevailing in 1941 and then adding to the value so determined an additional 25% in consequence of the operation of Schemes Nos. IV-M1 and IV-M2, and then adding thereto 1% for "vista"; and (3) that the valuation under the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911, is to be made according to the "disposition" of the land at the date of the publication of the declaration under Section 6 and in so doing the Tribunal was not entitled to take into consideration the potentialities of the land at the date of the declaration under Section 6 of the Land Acquisition Act. The High Court rejected the first contention, and accepted the remaining two contentions.

11. The market value for compulsory acquisition of land under the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911, has to be ascertained in the manner provided in Section 23 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, as modified by the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911. The modifications which have a bearing are — (1) that the market value of the land is to be deemed the market value according to the disposition of the land at the date of the publication of the declaration relating thereto under Section 6 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894; and (2) that an appeal lies against the order of the Tribunal only on questions mentioned in Section 77A of the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911. In the view of the High Court the expression "disposition" of the land at the date of the publication of the declaration relating thereto under Section 6, means the market value without taking into consideration the potentialities of the land. The High Court observed:

"The Act does not allow the Land Acquisition Officer to take into consideration the potentialities of the land, nor does it allow the Land Acquisition Officer to consider the possible betterment fees. It provided for granting compensation not on the basis of what the value actually is but on the basis of what the value must be deemed to be and in considering that we have to take into account the disposition of the land. The word 'disposition' means how the land could be disposed of at that time. It does not mean the existing use of the lands but mean its disposing power 'with the arrangement as it was on that date.' The expression "market value according to the disposition of the land" apparently means the value of the land in a hypothetical market which a willing purchaser may in the prevailing conditions pay for the land to a willing vendor, taking into consideration its situation and advantages. In determining the "disposition" the hypothetical purchaser would normally take into consideration the advantages of the situation and the potentialities of the land, for the market value of land, especially in urban areas, depends upon its situation, special adaptability, advantages and inherent potentiality in the light of the demand for land. We, however, do not think it necessary to dilate upon this question further, because, in our view, the award made by the High Court reducing the amount awarded by the Tribunal cannot be justified on the evidence on the record, and the law applicable thereto. We accede to the request of Mr. Gupte appearing on behalf of the State of West Bengal not to express our opinion on the meaning of the expression "disposition of the land" as used in Rule 9 of the Schedule to the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911, as it stood at the date when the land was declared to be needed by the Calcutta Improvement Trust under S. 6 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894.

12. Where a large area of land in an urban locality is sought to be acquired in determining the market value, "the method of belting" is appropriate. It is common knowledge that lands having frontage on the main roads in urban areas are always more attractive than the lands which have no such frontage. No objection was raised before us against the adoption of "the method of belting". It was also accepted that of the land under acquisition the front belt would be 100 feet deep; the second belt 150 ft. deep and the rest may be included in the third belt. No objection was again raised to the opinion of the Tribunal that the price of the second belt should be taken at 75% per cottah of the value of the land per cottah in the first belt; and the price per cottah of the third belt should be taken at 50% of the value of the land per cottah in the first belt.

13. The Tribunal determined the value of the Narkeldanga Main Road land on the basis of the market value in 1941 of premises No. 43J at Rs. 1,500/- per cottah and estimated the rise in the ruling price since 1941 at 80% of the basic price. In the view of the High Court the rise of 80% in the price of the land between 1941 and 1947 was due to "all the factors acting together" including the operation of the two Schemes IV-M1 and IV-M2, and the Tribunal was in error in considering separately the effect of "different factors" which contributed towards the rise. On that hypothesis the High Court held that in determining the market value of the Narkeldanga Main Road belts the additional 25% awarded for the application of Schemes Nos. IV-M1 and IV-M2 should be disallowed,

"for that addition was based on no legal principle, but on speculation without any basis for such speculation".

14. It is common ground that in Calcutta the period between the years 1941 and 1947 was abnormal. During this period first there was bombing of some parts of the town by the Japanese Air Force. This resulted in a large exodus from the town. After the migrant returned, there were communal riots which were followed by the partition of the Province of Bengal. Notwithstanding these abnormal events, in the price level of the land there was an upward trend which was accentuated by the influx of refugees from East Pakistan. It was found by the Tribunal that as a result of the inter-action of these events there was between 1941 and 1947 a rise of 80% in the value of the land. This, the High Court called, the increase in the price of the land on account of the "time factor". This 80% increase was not restricted to the area which was served by the improvement schemes. In the view of the Tribunal there was a general rise in the price level of the land all over the town, and with that view the High Court agreed. But the High Court still held that in respect of the land benefited by schemes Nos. IV-M1 and IV-M2 the rise in land values should be taken to be 80% above the 1941 level.

15. In our judgment, the High Court was in error in so holding. Appreciation in the price level in localities served by the Schemes and localities not served by the Schemes cannot be assumed to be uniform. If in respect of the localities not covered by the improvement schemes there was a rise of 80%, for the lands served by the supplementary schemes the rise would be appreciably higher because of the better amenities available as a result of those two schemes. The finding of the Tribunal that the rise of 80% in the value of the lands in the town of Calcutta between 1941 and 1947 was a finding on a question of fact, was accepted by the High Court, as it was bound to accept in an appeal under the Act. The High Court was also bound to accept the finding of the Tribunal that the additional 25% was attributable to the two schemes. That conclusion was not without evidence. In determining the value of land at the date of declaration on the basis of value at an earlier date, it would often be difficult to determine the operation of different factors contributing to the increase in the value of the land, and the valuer may generally take into account the overall rise due to the various factors operating upon the land in determining the market value of the land compulsorily acquired. It would certainly have been more consonant with principle if the Tribunal had instead of bifurcating the appreciation into 80% on account of the general conditions and 25% on the aggregate on account of the special conditions adopted a composite increase. But we are unable to agree that the valuation of the improvements resulting from Schemes Nos. IV-M1 and IV-M2 was "completely artificial and speculative". We do not again agree with the High Court that the valuation was not based on "correct principles of valuation". Nor are we able to hold that because the Tribunal did not determine a composite increase resulting from the inter-play of all factors, and determined the appreciation from the "time factor" and the additional amenities separately, the conclusion is open to any serious challenge.

16. The Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911, was enacted to "make provision for the improvement and the expansion of Calcutta by opening up congested areas, laying out or altering streets, providing open spaces of ventilation or recreation, demolishing or constructing buildings, clearing bustees, executing housing schemes and schemes for the rehousing of persons displaced by the execution of improvement schemes".

The object of the Act was to secure improvement of the town by opening up congested areas and making available amenities such as wider roads, underground drainage, parks and other urban facilities. The locality of the Narkeldanga Main Road and Kankurgachi Road was a congested locality. It had not the benefit of underground drainage. The land was uneven and at several places water used to accumulate. In 1941 a scheme for providing better amenities for the entire area was laid out, and a part of the land covered by the scheme was notified for acquisition. Provision for better amenities inevitably reflects in the upward trend in the price of the land in the locality covered by the scheme and the adjacent areas. The High Court recorded no reasons for assuming that the increase in the price of lands served by the improvement schemes and not served by the schemes will be the same. In effect the High Court discarded, without assigning any reasons, the appreciation resulting from the application of the improvement schemes.

17. The Tribunal is a statutory body consisting of an expert in valuation with whom are associated assessors. In determining the value of the lands, inter-play of various factors has to be taken into account. An Appellate Court may be justified in interfering with the valuation of land made by the Tribunal if it be shown that the Tribunal made an error of principle, or has ignored or misconceived important evidence which substantially affected the valuation that its conclusion was vitiated because of substantial error or defect of procedure. We are unable to hold that the judgment of the Tribunal is open to challenge on the ground of error of principle or other infirmity which justified the High Court in interfering with the conclusion of the Tribunal. The valuation of the land by the Tribunal on the basis that the front belt on the Narkeldanga Main Road should be valued at Rupees 3,400/- and adjustments should be made in respect of the rear two belts, and the overall value should be reduced by 12½% on the ground that a large area of land was acquired, must be accepted as correct.

18. The first belt of the land on the Kankurgachi Road was valued on the basis of Ext. 42 which was an award of the Collector for acquiring premises No. 31. The sole criticism made against the adoption of Ext. 42 as the basis of valuation is that though called an award it was in reality an order of the Collector without considering the evidence, and on the consent of the claimant and the Improvement Trust Board. The Collector, acting under the Land Acquisition Act, is, it is true, not a judicial authority: his proceedings are administrative. As observed by the Judicial Committee in Samiullah v. Collector of Aligarh, 73 Ind App 44 = (AIR 1946 PC 75) the Land Acquisition Officer in awarding the amount of compensation under S. 11 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, is performing a statutory duty, and in assessing compensation he is bound to exercise his judgment as to the correct basis of valuation, and his judgment cannot be controlled by an agreement between the parties interested. It appears, however, that in Ext. 42 the Collector was not guided solely by the agreement between the claimant and the Improvement Trust Board: he had determined the value of the structures, the value of the fixtures, the value of the machinery, the value of the land, and had made an award for the value determined by him. The valuation of the land was based on the agreement between the claimant and the Improvement Trust Board. The Collector accepted the agreement, which, he was not bound to but could accept and made an award on the basis of the agreed figure. The award had some evidentiary value. The land was being acquired for the Improvement Trust. The Improvement Trust is a statutory body, exercise of the power of which is controlled by the provisions of the Act. Even granting that the order made by the Collector pursuant to the agreement between the Board and the claimant be not regarded as an award, the order made by consent furnished good and cogent evidence of an agreement to purchase property at its market value at the date of the declaration under S. 6 of the Land Acquisition Act. Even if an order made by the Collector valuing land with the consent of the acquiring authority and the claimant may not strictly be regarded as an award made on a consideration of all the relevant materials, the agreement formally reached between the acquiring authority and the claimant agreeing to a certain amount to be paid as compensation for the land acquired is good evidence of the market value of the land. The Tribunal relied upon Ext. 42 as furnishing good evidence of the market value at the relevant time of the land under acquisition. The Tribunal was of the view that a completed contract between the claimant and the Board was a good and sufficient evidence of the price of land. The Collector accepted the agreement and made an award on the basis thereof. It would require strong and cogent reasons to displace the value of the evidence furnished by the order. The award cannot be said to be "null and void". The Tribunal accepted the award and on the basis of that award determined the value of the adjacent land which was also sought to be acquired under the same notification. The Tribunal did not on that account commit any error of law which would justify the High Court in interfering with the conclusion recorded by the Tribunal.

19. The Tribunal also relied upon Ext. 35 which furnished some evidence of the value of the land. The Tribunal accepted Exts. 42 and 35 as forming the basis for calculating the market value of the land under acquisition. Sitting in appeal under Section 77A of the Calcutta Improvement Act, the High Court could not set aside the conclusion reached by the Tribunal on a matter of valuation.

20. The valuation of the Kankurgachi belt made by the Tribunal and affirmed by the High Court must therefore be accepted.

21. No argument was advanced in regard to the additional 1% for "vista". The valuation of the land abutting on the Narkeldanga Main Road first belt at Rs. 3,400/- and adjusting the value in respect of the two rear belts, therefore, must be accepted as correct.

22. The Tribunal reduced the price determined on the valuation made by it on the basis of Ext. 42 and the value of premises No. 43J by 12½% in the aggregate. On this part of the case no argument has been advanced before us by either side.

23. On the view taken by us, without expressing any opinion on the question whether within the meaning of R. 9 of the Schedule to the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911, disposition of the land at the date of the publication of the declaration relating thereto under S. 6 of the Land Acquisition Act justifies the Court in taking into account the potentialities of the land, we are of the view that the conclusion of the Tribunal was not vitiated by any such error as would attract the jurisdiction of the High Court under S. 77A of the Calcutta Improvement Act, 1911.

24. The appeal filed by the appellants is therefore allowed. The order passed by the High Court is set aside and the order of the Tribunal restored. The appellants will be entitled to their costs in this Court. The order of costs passed by the High Court directing each party to bear its own costs is maintained.

Appeal allowed.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

RAY, J.:—This appeal is by certificate under Article 132 (1) and Article 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution against the judgment dated 2 August, 1965 of the Circuit Bench of the Punjab High Court at Delhi. The certificate was given on the principal ground whether the respondent had migrated to Pakistan or was a citizen of India.

2. The respondent Mohd. Iqbal was convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Delhi on 22 July, 1964 under section 14 of the Foreigners Act and sentenced to undergo six months' rigorous imprisonment. The order was upheld on appeal by the Additional Sessions Judge on 15 April, 1965. The Circuit Bench of the Punjab High Court set aside the conviction and relying on the decision of this Court in Shanno Devi v. Mangal Sain, AIR 1961
SC 58 held that Mohd. Iqbal had not migrated from India.

3. The respondent being treated as a foreigner and a Pakistani national was charged with having entered India on the authority of a Pakistani passport on 31 May, 1956 and having subsequently obtained extension of stay in India upto 30 November, 1956 from the Delhi Administration and thereafter not having returned to Pakistan and continued unauthorised stay in India in contravention of R. 7 (2) of the Foreigners Order, 1948 whereby the respondent was required to obtain a residential permit on or before 5 January, 1960 from the Registration Officer, Delhi and in contravention of that the respondent continued staying in Delhi without obtaining the requisite residential permit on or before 5 January, 1960 and was apprehended on 5 October, 1961 without possessing any residential permit from the Registration Officer, Delhi and thereby the respondent contravened the provisions of section 7 (2) of the Foreigners Act.

4. The prosecution case was that the respondent left India in 1947 and came to India with a Pakistani passport dated 27 March, 1954. The Pakistani passport was valid upto 26 March, 1959. On 27 April, 1954, the respondent obtained visa at Lahore for entry into India and on 2 May, 1954 he applied for extension of the visa upto 2 April, 1955. On 25 March, 1955 he left India for Pakistan. He came to India for the second time on 14 May, 1955 and obtained extension of visa upto 21 May, 1956. He went back to Pakistan. He came to India for the third time on 31 May, 1956 after having obtained a visa on 25 May, 1956. That visa was extended upto 30 November, 1956. The Delhi Administration returned his Pakistani passport to him in order to enable him to return to Pakistan. He did not leave India. On 11 July, 1957 he was arrested for violation of Rules 3 and 6 of the Indian Passport Rules, 1950 for the offence that he had entered India from Pakistan without a passport. On 31 July, 1957 he was acquitted. Thereafter he remained in India.

5. The charge in the present case was framed in the year 1960 and it was on the ground that he was required to obtain the residential permit on or before 5 January, 1960 and that in contravention thereof he continued to stay at Delhi without obtaining the requisite residential permit on or before 5 January, 1960 and was apprehended on 5 October, 1960 without possessing any residential permit. It may be stated here that in 1959 an amendment was made in paragraph 7 (2) of the Foreigners Order of 1948 whereby all foreigners were required to obtain residential permits by 5 January, 1960.

6. Counsel for the appellant contended that the respondent came to India on a Pakistani passport in which he was described as a Pakistani national and he overstayed after the expiry of visa and in spite of being required to obtain residential permit from the Registration Officer, Delhi, he continued to stay in this country and thereby contravened the provisions of Section 7 (2) of the Foreigners Act.

7. The respondent on the other hand contended that there was no mens rea and when he was arrested on 5 October, 1961 there was no offence on the authority of the decision of this Court in AIR 1961 SC 58 (supra), because the respondent had not migrated from India, and, finally, that the evidence was overwhelming that he left India in 1953 and therefore there was renunciation of citizenship.

8. This Court in Kulathil Mammu v. State of Kerala, (1966) 3 SCR 706 = (AIR 1966 SC 1614) held that in Shanno Devi's case, AIR 1961 SC 58 (supra) the word 'migrated' had received the narrow connotation of going from one place to another with the intention of residing permanently in the latter place, but in its wider connotation it meant going from one place to another whether or not with the intention of permanent residence in the latter place. This Court gave the word 'migrated' in Article 7 of the Constitution that wider connotation and referred to migration to Pakistan after 1 March, 1947 in that case.

9. The present case falls within a short compass. The charge is that by failing to obtain a residential permit the respondent contravened the provisions of Rule 7 (2) of the Foreigners Order. His failure to obtain the residential permit as well as his contravention of the Foreigners Act suffices to hold that not only he had mens rea but he was guilty of an offence in contravention of Rule 7 (2) of the Foreigners Order, 1948 and Section 7 (2) of the Foreigners Act.

10. Counsel for the respondent invited this Court to re-assess the facts and to come to the conclusion that he was in India upto 1953 and therefore he merely renounced the citizenship and that when he returned to India, his citizenship revived. We are unable to hold so on the facts.

11. The Magistrate's Court correctly held on the facts that the respondent had migrated to Pakistan.

12. The appeal is therefore, allowed. The judgment of the High Court is set aside. The decision of the Additional Sessions Judge upholding the conviction is restored. The respondent will surrender to his bail, if any.
Appeal allowed.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

GROVER: J. The points involved in the writ petition and the appeals by special leave relate to the constitutionality and validity of the provisions of three Control Orders issued under S. 3 (2) (d) of the Essential Commodities Act, 1955 (Act 10 of 1955), hereinafter called the "Act". The validity of S. 3 (2) (d) of the Act itself has also been assailed.

2. The Control Orders which were promulgated under S. 3 (2) (d) of the Act were the following:

(i) The Rice (Southern Zone) Movement Control Order, 1957.

(ii) The Southern States (Regulation of Exports of Rice) Order, 1964; and

(iii) The Andhra Pradesh Rice and Paddy (Restriction of Movement) Order, 1965.

In the appeals the appellants had moved the High Court of Andhra Pradesh under Art. 226 of the Constitution. There the petitioners were dealers in rice and rice products such as puffed, parched and beaten rice (beaten rice is known as 'powa' while, parched and puffed rice is known as 'Murmura'). Some of the petitioners had applied for permits to export powa, murmura and idlirava from the State of Andhra Pradesh to other States while others had applied for permits to transport one or other of the rice products to some places within Andhra Pradesh. The applications for permits were either rejected or were not disposed of by the authorities concerned. In the writ petitions the High Court examined all the contentions raised exhaustively and repelled the attack on the constitutionality of S. 3 (2) (d) of the Act as also the relevant clauses of the control orders.

3. Section 3 of the Act provides:

(1) If the Central Government is of opinion that it is necessary or expedient so to do for maintaining or increasing supplies of any essential commodity or for securing their equitable distribution and availability at fair prices or for securing any essential commodity for the defence of India or the efficient conduct of military operations it may, by order, provide for regulating or prohibiting the production, supply and distribution thereof and trade and commerce therein.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by subsection (1) an order made thereunder may provide—

(d) for regulating by licences, permits or otherwise the storage, transport, distribution, disposal, acquisition, use or consumption of, any essential commodity;

The 1957 Control Order extends to the States of Andhra Pradesh, Kerala, Madras, Mysore and Pondicherry which has been called the Southern Zone. According to cl. 3 (1) no person can export or attempt to export or abet the export of rice from any place within the Southern Zone except under and in accordance with a permit issued by the State Government concerned or any officer authorised in this behalf by that Government subject to the condition that such export shall be regulated in accordance with the export quotas fixed by the Central Government. Now this Control Order made a division into Southern Zone or regions in the matter of export of rice. By the Control Order of 1964 the Southern Zone or regions were further divided into four specified areas i.e. States of Andhra Pradesh, Kerala, Madras and Mysore. Clause 3 of this Order prohibited the export by any person of rice from any place within a specified area to a place outside that area except under and in accordance with the permit issued by the State Government or an officer authorised by that Government in that behalf. The rice was defined by cl. 2 (b) to include broken rice and paddy as also broken rice and paddy products other than bran or husk. The Control Order of 1965 imposed further restrictions on the movement of rice and paddy. By clause 3 restrictions were placed on the movement of these commodities from any place in any block to any place outside that block even within the State of Andhra Pradesh.

4. Mrs. Shyamla Pappu on behalf of the writ petitioners and the appellants before us made an attempt to raise the following contentions in respect of the Control Orders:

1. All the three Control Orders offended Art. 303 of the Constitution. They suffered from the vice of discrimination between one State and another and of preference to one State over another.

2. These orders were in the nature of executive instructions and did not fall within the meaning of subordinate legislation.

3. Even if the Control Orders could be regarded as subordinate legislation they were not saved by Art. 303 (2) in the absence of the declaration contemplated thereby.

4. The requisite opinion of the Central Government within S. 3 (1) of the Act was not to be found in any of the Orders.

5. The Control Orders imposed unreasonable restrictions on the right of the petitioners to carry on trade as arbitrary powers had been conferred in the matter of issuing or withholding permits and there were no provisions for appeal or revision against refusal to grant a permit.

5. Article 301 in Part XIII of the Constitution declares that subject to the other provisions of this Part trade, commerce and intercourse throughout the territory of India shall be free. Under Article 302 Parliament may by law impose such restrictions on freedom of trade, commerce or intercourse between one State and another or within any part of the territory of India as may be required in the public interest. Article 303 reads:

"(1) Notwithstanding anything in Art. 302, neither Parliament nor the Legislature of a State shall have power to make any law giving or authorising the giving of, any preference to one State over another, or making, or authorise the making of, any discrimination between one State and another, by virtue of any entry relating to trade and commerce in any of the Lists in the Seventh Schedule.

(2) Nothing in clause (1) shall prevent Parliament from making any law giving, or authorising the giving of, any preference or making, or authorising the making of, any discrimination if it is declared by such law that it is necessary to do so for the purpose of dealing with a situation arising from scarcity of goods in any part of the territory of India."

Now the Control Orders were made under section 3 of the Act. The object essentially was to regulate the export and movement of rice and of rice and paddy products from the Southern States. These Control Orders were laid before both Houses of Parliament as required by sub-s. (6) of section 3 of the Act. It has not been shown how this form of legislation would be mere executive instruction and would not constitute law made by Parliament within the meaning of Art. 302. No foundation was laid in the pleadings either before the High Court or in the writ petition before us as to how the restrictions which were imposed by the Control Orders were not in the public interest. It is significant that even on the point of preference to one State over another or discrimination between one State and another State there is complete absence of pleading in the writ petition filed before us. The High Court adverted to the matter but we have not been shown that any proper or firm foundation was laid in the writ petitions before the High Court on the question of preference or discrimination within Art. 303 (1). No argument, therefore, can be entertained on these matters. We are unable to see the necessity of reciting the requisite opinion within S. 3 (1) of the Act in the Control Orders. It is implicit in the recital in the Control Orders that they were being made under S. 3 of the Act that the Central Government had formed the requisite opinion within sub-s. (1) of that section. This disposes of the first four contentions.

6. As regards the 5th point it is noteworthy that the permit is to be issued by the State Government concerned or any officer authorised in this behalf by that Government. It is common ground that the officers authorised by the State Government are the District Collector and the Deputy Commissioner of Civil Supplies. These officers cannot but be regarded as fairly high rank who are expected to discharge their duties in a responsible and reasonable manner. In M/s. Dwarka Prasad Laxmi Narain v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 1954 SCR 803 = (AIR 1954 SC 224) in which the provisions of cl. 4 (3) of the U. P. Coal Control Order 1953 which gave the licensing authority absolute power to grant or refuse to grant any licence were struck down on the ground that a law which confers arbitrary and uncontrolled power upon the executive in the matter of regulating trade or business in normally available commodities must be held to be unreasonable. There the power could be exercised by any person to whom the State Coal Controller might choose to delegate the same. The matter which has been stressed before us relates generally to the absence of any provision relating to appeal or revision in the Control Orders if the District Collector or the Deputy Commissioner of Civil Supplies refuses to grant a permit under clause 3 of the Order. In Dwarka Prasad's case, 1954 SCR 803 = (AIR 1954 SC 224) the delegation could be made to any one which was certainly a relevant factor in judging the reasonableness of the impugned provision. But in the cases before us the permit is to be granted either by the State Government or by responsible officers of the rank of the District Collector or the Deputy Commissioner of Civil Supplies. Indeed, Mrs. Pappu quite properly agreed that if the State Government alone had the power to issue the permits the challenge on the ground of unreasonableness of the restrictions would not be available. We consider that there is no bar to any of the aggrieved parties approaching the State Government by means of a representation for a final decision even if the matter has been dealt with by the District Collector or the Deputy Commissioner of Civil Supplies in the first instance and the permit has been refused or wrongly withheld by those officers. In these circumstances the absence of a provision for appeal or revision can be of no consequence. At any rate it has been pointed out in more than one decision of this court that when the power had to be exercised by one of the highest officers the fact that no appeal has been provided for is a matter of no moment; (See K. L. Gupta v. Bombay Municipal Corporation, 1968-1 SCR 274 at p. 297 = (AIR 1968 SC 303 at p. 316). It may also be remembered that emphasis was laid in Pannalal Binjraj v. Union of India, 1957 SCR 233 at p. 257 = (AIR 1957 SC 397 at p. 418) on the power being vested not in any minor official but in top-ranking authority. It was said that though the power was discretionary but it was not necessarily discriminatory and abuse of power could not be easily assumed. There was moreover a presumption that public officials would discharge their duties honestly and in accordance with rules of law.

7. Lastly an effort was made to agitate the point that S. 3 (2) (d) of the Act suffers from the vice of excessive delegation. This question is no longer at large. In Union of India v. M/s. Bhana Mal Gulzari Mal, 1961-2 SCR 627 = (AIR 1960 SC 475) the attack on S. 3 of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act 1946 which was similar in terms to S. 3 of the Act on the ground of excessive delegation was repelled. It was held that the Central Government had been given sufficient and proper guidance for exercising its powers in effectuating the policy of the statute.

8. In the result the writ petition and the appeals fail and they are dismissed with costs. One set of hearing fee.

Writ petition and appeals dismissed.

Mr. A. K. Sen, Senior Advocate, (Mr. U. P. Singh, Advocate, with him), for Appellants; Mr. N. S. Palkhivala, Senior Advocate, (M/s. S. B. Mehta and B. Datta, Advocates, and M/s. J. B. Dadachanji and Co., Advocates, with him), for Respondent.

HEGDE, J.: This is an appeal by special leave. It arises from the judgment of the High Court of Patna in a Reference under S. 25 (3) of the Bihar Sales Tax Act, 1947. That reference was called for by the High Court at the instance of the assessee company (the respondent herein). The questions referred for the opinion of the High Court by the Board of Revenue were:

"(1). With regard to the sales which took place in the period from 1st of April, 1955, to the 6th September 1955, whether the assessee is entitled, upon the facts found by the Board of Revenue with regard to these categories of sales, to exemption from liability under the Bihar Sales Tax Act because of the provision of Article 286 (1) (a) of the Constitution as it stood at the relevant date read with the explanation to that article.

(2) With regard to the sales which took place in the period from 7th September, 1955 to 31st March, 1956 whether the assessee is entitled, upon the facts found by the Board of Revenue with regard to these categories of sales, to exemption from liability under the Bihar Sales Tax Act on the ground that the sales took place in the course of inter-State trade or commerce under Art. 286 (2) of the Constitution as it stood at the relevant period."

2. The High Court answered the first question in the negative and against the assessee. It answered the second question in the affirmative and in favour of the assessee. The assessee has not come up in appeal. This appeal has been brought by the State of Bihar contesting the correctness of the opinion given by the High Court on the second of the two questions referred to earlier.

3. The assessee is a Public Limited Co., incorporated under the Indian Companies Act, 1913. It carries on business of manufacturing and selling inter alia trucks and bus chassis and spare parts thereof to their appointed dealers, State Transport Organizations and individual buyers throughout India. The registered office of the assessee is at Bombay but its factory where manufacturing process is being carried on is at Jamshedpur in Bihar. The assessee has appointed several dealers all over India for the sale of its trucks, bus chassis and spare parts. Those dealers are appointed under agreements entered into between them and the assessee. The turn-over in dispute relates to the sales made by the assessee to its dealers of trucks, bus chassis, of spare parts for being sold in the territories assigned to them under the dealership agreements. The agreements between the assessee and its dealers appear to be similar. Under the agreements, each dealer is assigned a territory in which alone he can sell the trucks, bus-chassis and other spare parts purchased by him from the assessee company. He is forbidden from selling any one of those articles to any purchaser outside his territory. As per the agreements, dealers will have to place their indents, pay the price of the goods to be purchased and obtain delivery orders from the Bombay office of the assessee. In pursuance of those delivery orders, trucks, bus chassis and other spare parts were delivered in Bihar to be taken over to the territories assigned to them. Under the contracts of sale, the dealers were required to remove the trucks, bus chassis and the spare parts delivered to them in the State of Bihar to places outside Bihar. These are facts found by the Board of Revenue and affirmed by the High Court. On the basis of these facts, we have to decide whether the sales with which we are concerned in this appeal are sales that took place in the course of inter-State trade and commerce as contemplated by Article 286 (2) of the Constitution as it stood at the relevant time. In other words the question for decision is whether the sales in question were sales for the purpose of inter-State trade or commerce or whether they were sales in the course of inter-State trade or commerce. As seen earlier, the High Court has held that those sales took place in the course of inter-State trade or commerce.

4. The expression "in the course of" appearing in Art. 286 (1) (b) came up for consideration in State of Travancore Cochin v. Bombay Co. Ltd., 1952 SCR 1112 = (AIR 1952 SC 366). Therein this Court held that whatever else may or may not fall within Article 286 (1) (b) of the Constitution, sales and purchases which themselves occasion the export or import of the goods as the case may be out of or into, the territory of India come within the exemption. In that case this Court further observed that a sale by export involves a series of integrated activities commencing from the agreement of sale with a foreign buyer and ending with the delivery of the goods to a common carrier for transport out of the country by land or sea. Such a sale cannot be dissociated from the export without which it cannot be effectuated and the sale and the resultant export form parts of a single transaction. Of these two integrated activities which together constitute an export sale, whichever first occurs can well be regarded as taking place in the course of the other. Even in cases where the property in the goods passed to the foreign buyers and the sales were thus completed, within the State before the goods commenced their journey from the State, the sales must be regarded as having taken place in the course of the export and therefore exempt under Art. 286 (1) (b). The same exposition of the law is true of cl. (2) of Art. 286 as it stood prior to its amendment on September 11, 1956.

5. The next decision in which Art. 286 (1) (a), (1) (b) and (2) came to be considered by this Court is State of Travancore Cochin v. Shanmugha Vilas Cashew Nut Factory, 1954 SCR 53 = (AIR 1953 SC 333). Therein this Court observed that the word "course" etymologically denotes movement from one point to another and the expression "in the course of" in Art. 286 (1) (b) not only implies a period of time during which the movement is in progress but postulates also a connected relation. Consequently, a sale in the course of export out of the country should be understood in the context of Art. 286 (1) (b) as meaning a sale taking place not only during the activities directed to the end of exportation of the goods out of the country, but also as part of or connected with such activities. But a purchase of goods for the purpose of export is only an act preparatory to their export and not an act done in the course of the export of the goods.

6. In Bengal Immunity Co. Ltd. v. State of Bihar, 1955-2 SCR 603 = (AIR 1955 SC 661); Venkatarama Ayyar J. observed that a sale could be a sale in the course of inter-State trade only if two conditions concur: (1) a sale of goods and (2) a transport of those goods from one State to another under the contract of sale.

7. In Narasimham and Son v. State of Orissa, (1962) 1 SCR 314 = (AIR 1961 SC 1344) this Court held that in order that a sale or purchase might be inter-State, it is essential that there must be a transport of goods from one State to another under the contract of sale or purchase. A purchase made inside a State, for sale outside the State cannot itself be held to be in the course of inter-State and the imposition of tax thereon is not repugnant to Art. 286 (2) of the Constitution.

8. In Tata Iron and Steel Co. Ltd. v. S. R. Sarkar, (1961) 1 SCR 379 = (AIR 1961 SC 65) this Court held that within cl. (b) of S. 3 of the Central Sales Tax Act, 1956, are included sales in which property in the goods passes during the movement of the goods from one State to another by transfer of documents of title thereto and also covers sales in which movement of goods from one State to another is the result of a covenant or incident of the contract of sale and property in the goods passes in either State. Clause (b) of S. 3 of the Central Sales Tax Act, 1956 says:

"That no law of a State shall impose or authorise the imposition of, a tax on the sale or purchase of goods where such sale or purchase takes place in the course of the import of goods into, or export of the goods out of, the territory of India."

9. In Cement Marketing Co. of India (Private) Ltd. v. State of Mysore, (1963) 14 STC 175 = (AIR 1963 SC 980), this Court held that where the goods were transported outside the State as required by the contract of sale, they are inter-State sales and hence exempt from sales-tax. On the facts of that case it was held that the sales transactions themselves involved movement of goods across the border.

10. In Ben Gorm Nilgiri Plantations Co., Conoor v. Sales Tax Officer, Special Circle, Ernakulam, (1964) 7 SCR 706 = (AIR 1964 SC 1752), this Court had to consider what sales are sales in the course of export and what sales are for the purpose of export. In the course of the judgment Shah J. (one of us) observed:

"A sale in the course of export predicates a connection between the sale and export, the two activities being so integrated that the connection between the two cannot be voluntarily interrupted, without a breach of the contract or the compulsion arising from the nature of the transaction. In this sense to constitute a sale in the course of export it may be said that there must be an intention on the part of both the buyer and the seller to export, there must be obligation to export, and there must be an actual export. The obligation may arise by reason of statute, contract between the parties, or from mutual understanding or agreement between them, or even from the nature of the transaction which links the sale to export. A transaction of sale which is a preliminary to export of the commodity sold may be regarded as a sale for export, but is not necessarily to be regarded as one in the course of export, unless the sale occasions export."

11. In K. G. Khosla and Co. (P) Ltd. v. Deputy Commr. of Commercial Taxes, Madras, (1966) 17 STC 473 = (AIR 1966 SC 1216), this Court held that before a sale could be said to have occasioned the import, the movement of goods must have been incidental to the contract or in pursuance of the conditions of the contract and there should be no possibility of the goods being diverted by the assessee for any other purpose, meaning thereby that there should be no possibility of diversion according to law or contract and not in breach of them.

12. In Tata Engineering and Locomotive Co. Ltd. v. The Asst. Commr. of Commercial Taxes, (1970) 1 SCC 622 = (AIR 1970 SC 1281) this Court after referring to the earlier decisions observed:

"It has been laid down that the sale in the course of export predicated connection between the sale and export, the two activities being so integrated that the connection between the two cannot be voluntarily interrupted without a breach of the contract or the compulsion arising from the nature of the transaction. To occasion export there must exist such a bond between the contract of sale and the actual exportation that each link is inextricably connected with the one immediately preceding it. The principle thus admits of no doubt, according to the decisions of this Court, that the sales to be exigible to tax under the Act (Central Sales Tax Act, 1956) must be shown to have occasioned the movement of the goods or articles from one State to another. The movement must be the result of a covenant or incident of the contract of sale."

13. If we apply the principles enunciated by this Court in the decisions referred to above to the facts of this case, it is obvious that the sales with which we are concerned in this case are sales in the course of inter-State trade. The dealers were required to move the trucks, bus chassis and other spare parts purchased by them from the State of Bihar to places outside Bihar. They are so required by the terms of the contracts entered into by them with the assessee. They would have committed breach of their contracts and incurred the penalty prescribed in their dealership agreements, if they had failed to abide by the term requiring them to move the goods outside the State of Bihar.

14. The decided cases establish that sales will be considered as sales in the course of export or import or sales in the course of inter-State trade and commerce under the following circumstances:

(1) When goods which are in export or import stream are sold;

(2) When the contract of sale or law under which goods are sold require those goods to be exported or imported to a foreign country or from a foreign country as the case may be or are required to be transported to a State other than the State in which the delivery of goods takes place; and

(3) Where as a necessary incidence of the contract of sale goods sold are required to be exported or imported or transported out of the State in which the delivery of goods takes place.

15. But Mr. A. K. Sen, learned Counsel for the State of Bihar contended that this Court has taken a different view of the law in Coffee Board, Bangalore v. Joint Commercial Tax Officer, Madras, (1970) 25 STC 528 (SC). According to him the ratio of that decision is that whenever goods are delivered in a State in pursuance of a contract of sale, the sale in question becomes exigible to tax in the State in which the goods are delivered unless they are taken out of the State for purposes of consumption and not resale, or the same is taken out of the State in pursuance of an already existing agreement to resell in the State to which it is taken. The decision in Coffee Board's case, (1970) 25 STC 528 (SC) (supra) does not, in our opinion, afford any basis for these contentions.

16. We have earlier noticed that this Court in a series of decisions has pronounced in unambiguous terms that where under the terms of a contract of sale, the buyer is required to remove the goods from the State in which he purchased those goods to another State and when the goods are so moved, the sale in question must be considered as a sale in the course of inter-State trade or commerce. This is a well-established position in law. In the Coffee Board's case, (1970) 25 STC 528 (SC) this Court did not deviate from this position nor could it deviate as the earlier decisions were binding on it. Further in the course of his judgment, the learned Chief Justice who spoke for the Court referred with approval to the earlier decisions of this Court where distinction between the sales in the course of inter-State trade or commerce and sales for the purpose of inter-State trade and commerce were explained. On the basis of the facts in that case, his Lordship came to the conclusion that the export of the coffee in question was not integrated with the sales with which the Court was concerned and that there was no direct bond between the export and the sales. In the course of his judgment his Lordship observed:

"Here there are two independent sales involved in the export programme. The first is a sale between the Coffee Board as seller to the export promoter. Then there is the sale by the export promoter to a foreign buyer. Of the latter sale, the Coffee Board does not have any inkling when the first sale takes place. The Coffee Board's sale is not in any way related to the second sale. Therefore the first sale has no connection with the second sale which is in the course of export, that is to say, movement of goods between an exporter and an importer."

17. This finding clearly brings out the distinction between the facts of the Coffee Board's case, (1970) 25 STC 528 (SC) (supra) and the facts of the cases wherein this Court held that the sales in question were sales in the course of export or import. In the Coffee Board's case, (1970) 25 STC 528 (SC) this Court found that what was insisted on by the Coffee Board was that the coffee set apart for the purpose of the export must be exported: it was not incumbent for the purchasers at the auction to export that coffee themselves; they may do it themselves or they may sell it to somebody who may export it outside India. On that basis, this Court came to the conclusion that the sales effected by the Coffee Board are not sales in the course of export; they are only sales for the purpose of export. The ratio of that decision does not bear on the facts before us. Herein, under the terms of the contracts of sale, the purchasers were required to remove the goods from the State of Bihar to other States. Hence the sales with which we are concerned in this case must be held to be sales in the course of inter-State trade or commerce.

18. For the reasons mentioned above, we agree with the findings of the High Court. In the result this appeal fails and the same is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

M. HIDAYATULLAH, C. J., J. M. SHELAT, G. K. MITTER, C. A. VAIDIALINGAM AND A. N. RAY, JJ.

K. A. Abbas, Petitioner v. The Union of India & another, Respondents.

Writ Petition No. 491 of 1969, D/- 24-9-1970.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 14 — Cinematograph Act (1952), S. 5-B
(2) — Treatment of motion picture on different footing from other forms of art and expression is valid classification.

The treatment of motion pictures must be different from that of other forms of art and expression. This arises from the instant appeal of the motion picture, its versatility, realism (often surrealism), and its co-ordination of the visual and aural senses. The motion picture is able to stir up emotions more deeply than any other product of art. Its effect particularly on children and adolescents is very great since their immaturity makes them more willingly suspend their disbelief than mature men and women. Therefore, classification of films into two categories of 'U' films and 'A' films is a reasonable classification. The treatment of motion picture on a different footing is a valid classification. (Para 22)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) (a), (2) — Cinematograph Act (1952), Section 5-B (2) — Validity — Censorship justified by Constitution — General principles in directions by Central Government cannot be said to be vague — There is however absence of direction for preserving art — Some procedural safeguards are also needed — (Cinematograph Act (1952), S. 5-B (2)).

Censorship in India (from which pre-censorship is not different in quality) has full justification in the field of the exhibition of Cinema films and is justified under the Constitution. (Para 43)

Section 5-B (2) authorises the Central Government to issue such directions as it may think fit setting out the principles which shall guide the authority competent to grant certificates under the Act in sanctioning films for public exhibition. The Central Government in dealing with the problem of Censorship will have to bear in mind the principles stated in sub-section (1). The Central Government's regulations are there for consideration in the light of the guaranteed freedom and if they offend substantially against that freedom, they may be struck down. But as they stand they cannot be challenged on the ground that any recondite theory of law-making or a critical approach to the separation of powers is infringed. The general principles which are stated in the directions seek to do no more than restate the permissible restrictions as stated in Art. 19 (2) and Section 5-B (1) of the Act. They cannot be said to be vague at all. The items mentioned in the directions are not by themselves defective.

The real flaw in the scheme of the directions is total absence of any direction which would tend to preserve art and promote it. Such directions need to be included. Whether this is done by Parliament or by the Central Government it hardly matters. The whole of the law and regulations under it will have always to be considered and if the further tests laid down in AIR 1965 SC 881 are followed, the system of censorship with the procedural safeguards, that there must be a reasonable time-limit fixed for the decision of the authorities censoring the film, and that the appeal should lie to a Court or to an independent tribunal and not to the Central Government will make censorship accord with our fundamental law. Case law discussed. (Paras 44, 45, 49, 53, 54)

(C) Constitution of India, Art. 19 — Law uncertain and prima facie taking away guaranteed freedom — Law offends Constitution.

If a law is vague or appears to be so, the Court must try to construe it, as far as may be, and language permitting, the construction sought to be placed on it must be in accordance with the intention of the legislature. Where however the law admits of no such construction and the persons applying it are in a boundless sea of uncertainty and the law prima facie takes away a guaranteed freedom the law must be held to offend the Constitution. This is not application of the doctrine of due process. The invalidity arises from the probability of the misuse of the law to the detriment of the individual. If possible, the Court instead of striking down the law may itself draw the line of demarcation where possible but this effort should be sparingly made and only in the clearest of cases. Jain, V. J. Francis and Miss. S. Chakravarti, Advocates, for Petitioner, Mr. Niren De, Attorney-General, for India and Mr. Jagadish Swarup, Solicitor-General of India, (M/s. J. M. Mukhi, R. N. Sachthey, and B. D. Sharma, Advocates, with them), for Respondents.

HIDAYATULLAH, C. J.: — This petition seeks a declaration against the Union of India and the Chairman Central Board of Film Censors that the provisions of Part II of the Cinematograph Act, 1952 together with the rules prescribed by the Central Government, February 6, 1960, in the purported exercise of its powers under Section 5-B of the Act are unconstitutional and void. As a consequence the petitioner asks for a writ of mandamus or any other appropriate writ, direction or order quashing the directions contained in a letter (Annexure X) dated July 3, 1969 for deletion of certain shots from a documentary film entitled 'A Tale of Four Cities', produced by him for unrestricted public exhibition.

2. The petitioner is a journalist, play-wright and writer of short stories. He is also a producer and director of cinematograph films. He was a member of the Enquiry Committee on Film Censorship (1968) and is a member of the Children's Film Committee. He has produced and/or directed many films some of which have been well-received here and abroad and even won awards and prizes.

3. The petitioner produced in 1968 a documentary film in 2 reels (running time 16 minutes) called a Tale of Four Cities. In this film he purported to contrast the luxurious life of the rich in the four cities of Calcutta, Bombay, Madras and Delhi, with the squalor and poverty of the poor, particularly those whose hands and labour help to build beautiful cities, factories and other industrial complexes. The film is in black and white and is silent except for a song which the labourers sing while doing work and some background music and sounds for stage effect. The film in motion sequences or still shots, shows contrasting scenes of palatial buildings, hotels and factories — evidence of the prosperity of a few, and shanties, huts and slums — evidence of poverty of the masses. These scenes alternate and in between are other scenes showing sweating labourers working to build the former and those showing the squalid private life of these labourers. Some shots mix people riding in lush motor cars with rickshaw and handcart pullers of Calcutta and Madras. In one scene a fat and prosperous customer is shown riding a rickshaw which a decrepit man pulls, sweating and panting hard. In a contrasting scene the same rickshaw puller is shown sitting in the rickshaw pulled by his former customer. This scene is the epitomisation of the theme of the film and on view are the statues of the leaders of Indian Freedom Movement looking impotently from their high pedestals in front of palatial buildings, on the poverty of the masses. On the boulevards, the rich drive past in limousines while the poor pull rickshaws or handcarts or stumble along.

4. There is included also a scanning shot of a very short duration, much blurred by the movement of the photographer's camera, in which the red light district of Bombay is shown with the inmates of the brothels waiting at the doors or windows. Some of them wear abbreviated skirts showing bare legs up to the knees and sometimes a short way above them. This scene was perhaps shot from a moving car because the picture is unsteady on the screen and under exposed. Sometimes the inmates, becoming aware of the photographer, quickly withdraw themselves. The whole scene barely lasts a minute. Then we see one of the inmates shutting a window and afterwards we see the hands of a woman holding some currency notes and a male hand plucking away most of them leaving only a very few in the hands of the female. The two actors are not shown. The suggestion in the first scene is that a customer is being entertained behind closed shutters and in the next sequence that the amount received is being shared between the pimp and the prostitute, the former taking almost the whole of the money. The sequence continues and for the first time the woman who shut the window is again seen. She sits at the dressing table, combs her hair, glances at two love-birds in a cage and looks around the room as if it were a cage. Then she goes behind a screen and emerges in other clothes and prepares for bed. She sleeps and dreams of her life before she took the present path. The film then passes on to its previous theme of contrasts mentioned above, often repeating the earlier shots in juxtaposition as stills. There is nothing else in the film to be noticed either by us or by the public for which it is intended.

5. The petitioner applied to the Board of Film Censors for a 'U' certificate for unrestricted exhibition of the film. He received a letter (December 30, 1969) by which the Regional officer informed him that the Examining Committee and the Board had provisionally come to the conclusion that the film was not suitable for unrestricted public exhibition but was suitable for exhibition restricted to adults. He was given a chance to make representations against the tentative decision within 14 days. Later he was informed that the Revising Committee had reached the same conclusion. He represented by letter (February 18, 1969) explaining the purpose of the film as exposing the exploitation of man (or woman) by man and the contrast between the very rich few and the very poor masses. He claimed that there was no obscenity in the film. He was informed by a letter (February 26, 1969) that the Board did not see any reason to alter its decision and the petitioner could appeal within 30 days to the Central Government. The petitioner appealed the very next day. On July 3, 1969, the Central Government decided to give a 'U' certificate provided the following cuts were made in the film:

"Shorten the scene of women in the red light district, deleting specially the shot showing the closing of the window by the lady, the suggestive shots of bare knees and the passing of the currency notes". Dir. IC (iii) (b) (c); IV".

The mystery of the code numbers at the end was explained by a letter on July 23, 1969 to mean this:

"I. It is not desirable that a film shall be certified as suitable for public exhibition, either unrestricted or restricted to adults which

x x x x x x
C (iii) (b) and (c) deals with the relations between the sexes in such a manner as to depict immoral traffic in women and soliciting, prostitution or procuration.

IV. It is undesirable that a certificate for unrestricted public exhibition shall be granted in respect of a film depicting a story, or containing incidents unsuitable for young persons".

The petitioner then filed this petition claiming that his fundamental right of free speech and expression was denied by the order of the Central Government. He claimed a 'U' certificate for the film as of right.

6. Before the hearing commenced the film was specially screened for us. The lawyers of both sides (including the Attorney General) and the petitioner were also present. The case was then set down for hearing. The Solicitor-General (who had not viewed the film) appeared at the hearing. We found it difficult to question him about the film and at our suggestion the Attorney-General appeared but stated that Government had decided to grant a 'U' certificate to the film without the cuts previously ordered.

7. The petitioner then asked to be allowed to amend the petition so as to be able to challenge pre-censorship itself as offensive to freedom of speech and expression and alternatively the provisions of the Act and the rules, orders and directions under the Act, as vague, arbitrary and indefinite. We allowed the application for amendment, for the petitioner was right in contending that a person who invests his capital in promoting or producing a film must have clear guidance in advance in the matter of censorship of films even if the law of pre-censorship be not violative of the fundamental right.

8. When the matter came up for hearing the petitioner raised four points: (a) that pre-censorship itself cannot be tolerated under the freedom of speech and expression, (b) that even if it were a legitimate restraint on the freedom, it must be exercised on very definite principles which leave no room for arbitrary action, (c) that there must be a reasonable time-limit fixed for the decision of the authorities censoring the film, and (d) that the appeal should lie to a Court or to an independent tribunal and not the Central Government.

9. The Solicitor-General conceded (c) and (d) and stated that Government would set on foot legislation to effectuate them at the earliest possible opportunity. Since the petitioner felt satisfied with this assurance we did not go into the matter. But we must place on record that the respondents exhibited charts showing the time taken in the censorship of films during the last one year or so and we were satisfied that except in very rare cases the time taken could not be said to be unreasonable. We express our satisfaction that the Central Government will cease to perform curial functions through one of its Secretaries in this sensitive field involving the fundamental right of speech and expression. Experts sitting as a Tribunal and deciding matters quasi-judicially inspire more confidence than a Secretary and therefore it is better that the appeal should lie to a Court or tribunal.

10. This brings us to the remaining two questions. We take up first for consideration: whether pre-censorship by itself offends the freedom of speech and expression. Article 19 (1) (a) and (2) of the Constitution contain the guarantee of the right and the restraints that may be put upon that right by a law to be made by Parliament. They may be read here:

"19. Protection of certain rights regarding freedom of speech, etc.

(1) All citizens shall have the right—

(a) to freedom of speech and expression;

x x x x x"

(2) Nothing in sub-clause (a) of Clause (1) shall affect the operation of any existing law, or prevent the State from making any law, in so far as such law imposes reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the right conferred by the said sub-clause, in the interests of the sovereignty and integrity of India, the security of the State, friendly relations with foreign States, public order, decency or morality, or in relation to contempt of Court, defamation or incitement to an offence". The argument is that the freedom is absolute and pre-censorship is not permissible under the Constitution. It is submitted that pre-censorship is inconsistent with the right guaranteed. Now it is clear that some restraint is contemplated by the second clause and in the matter of censorship only two ways are open to Parliament to impose restrictions. One is to lay down in advance the standards for the observance of film producers and then to test each film produced against those standards by a preview of the film. The other is to let the producer observe those standards and make the infraction an offence and punish a producer who does not keep within the standards. The petitioner claims that the former offends the guaranteed freedom but reluctantly concedes the latter and relies upon the minority view expressed in the United States Supreme Court from time to time. The petitioner reinforces this argument by contending that there are other forms of speech and expression besides the films and none of them is subject to any prior restraint in the form of pre-censorship and claims equality of treatment with such other forms. He claims that there is no justification for a differential treatment. He contends next that even the standards laid down are unconstitutional for many reasons which we shall state in proper place.

11. This is the first case in which the censorship of films in general and precensorship in particular have been challenged in this Court and before we say anything about the arguments, it is necessary to set down a few facts relating to censorship of films and how it works in India. The Government of India appointed a Committee on March 28, 1968 to enquire into the working of the existing procedures for certification of cinematograph films for public exhibition in India and allied matters, under the Chairmanship of Mr. G. D. Khosla, former Chief Justice of the Punjab High Court. The report of the Committee has since been published and contains a valuable summary of the law of censorship not only in India but also in foreign countries. It is hardly helpful to the determination of this case to go into this history but it may be mentioned here that it is the opinion of experts on the subject that Indian film censorship since our independence has become one of strictest in the world: See Film Censors and the Law by Neville March Hunnings p. 227 and Filmrecht: ein Handbuch of Rerthold and von Hartleib (1957) p. 215 quoted by Hunnings. In 1966 Mr. Raj Bahadur (who succeeded Mrs. Indira Gandhi as Minister for Information and Broadcastings) said that Government would 'continue a liberal censorship' and was considering certain expert opinion on the subject. He also suggested to the film industry that it should formulate a code which would be the best from all standards so that Government may be guided by it in formulating directives to the censors'. See Journal of Film Industry, February 25, 1966 also quoted by Hunnings at page 18 of his book. This suggestion came to nothing for obvious reasons. Film industry in India is not even oligopolistic in character and it is useless to expect it to classify films according to their suitability, as is done in the United States by the Motion Picture Association of America (MPAA) founded in October, 1968. There the film industry is controlled by eight major producers and the private control of film-making is possible with the assistance of the National Association of Theatre Owners and Film Importers and Distributors of America. Having no such organisation for private censorship or even a private body like the British Board of Film Censors in England, the task must be done by Government if censorship is at all to be imposed. Films began to be exhibited in India at the turn of the last century and film censorship took birth in 1918 when the Cinematograph Act, 1918 (2 of 1918) was passed. Two matters alone were then dealt with: (a) the licensing of cinema houses, and (b) the certifying of films for public exhibition. The censors had a wide discretion and no standards for their action were indicated. Boards of Film Censors came into existence in the three Presidency towns and Rangoon. The Bombay Board drew up some instructions for Inspectors of Films and it copied the 43 rules formulated by T. P. O'Connor in England. These are more or less continued even today.

12. We do not wish to trace here the history of the development of film censorship in India. That task has been admirably performed by the Khosla Committee. Legislation in the shape of amendments of the Act of 1918 and a Production Code were the highlights of the progress. In 1952 a fresh consolidating Act was passed and it is Act 37 of 1952 (amended in 1959 by Act 3 of 1959) and that is the present statutory provision on the subject. It established a Board of Film Censors and provided for Advisory Panels at Regional Centres. Every person desiring to exhibit any film has to apply for a certificate and the Board after examining the film or having the film examined deals with it by

(a) sanctioning the film for unrestricted public exhibition;

(b) sanctioning the film for public exhibition restricted to adults;

(c) directing such excisions and modifications as it thinks fit, before sanctioning the film for unrestricted public exhibition or for public exhibition restricted to adults, as the case may be;

or (d) refusing to sanction the film for public exhibition.

The film producer is allowed to represent his views before action under (b) (c) and (d) is taken. The sanction under (a) is by granting a 'U' certificate and under (b) by an 'A' certificate and the certificates are valid for ten years.

13. The Act then lays down the principles for guidance and for appeals in Sections 5-B and 5-C respectively. These sections may be read here:

"5B. Principles for guidance in certifying films.

(1) A film shall not be certified for public exhibition if, in the opinion of the authority competent to grant the certificate, the film or any part of it, is against the interests of the security of the State, friendly relations with foreign States, public order, decency or morality, or involves defamation or contempt of Court or is likely to incite the commission of any offence.

(2) Subject to the provisions contained in sub-section (1), the Central Government may issue such directions as it may think fit setting out the principles which shall guide the authority competent to grant certificates under this Act in sanctioning films for public exhibition".

"5C. Appeals.

Any person applying for a certificate in respect of a film who is aggrieved by any order of the Board—

(a) refusing to grant a certificate; or

(b) granting only an "A" certificate; or

(c) directing the applicant to carry out any excisions or modifications;

may, within thirty days from the date of such order, appeal to the Central Government, and the Central Government may, after such inquiry into the matter as it considers necessary and after giving the appellant an opportunity for representing his views in the matter, make such order in relation thereto as it thinks fit".

By Section 6, the Central Government has reserved a general revising power which may be exercised during the pendency of a film before the Board and even after it is certified. Under the latter part of this power the Central Government may cancel a certificate already granted or change the 'U' certificate into an 'A' certificate or may suspend for 2 months the exhibition of any film.

14. The above is the general scheme of the legislation on the subject omitting allied matters in which we are not interested in this case. It will be noticed that Section 5-B (1) really reproduces Clause (2) of Article 19 as it was before its amendment by the First Amendment. This fact has led to an argument which we shall notice presently. The second sub-section of Section 5-B enables the Central Government to state the principles to guide the censoring authority, by issuing directions. In furtherance of this power the Central Government has given directions to the Board of Film Censors. They are divided into General Principles, three in number, followed by directions for their application in what are called 'rules'. The part dealing with the application of the principles is divided into Four Sections and each section contains matters which may not be the subject of portrayal in films. We may quote the General Principles here:

"1. No picture shall be certified for public exhibition which will lower the moral standards of those who see it.

Hence, the sympathy of the audience shall not be thrown on the side of crime, wrong-doing, evil or sin.

2. Standards of life, having regard to the standards of the country and the people to which the story relates, shall not be so portrayed as to deprave the morality of the audience.

3. The prevailing laws shall not be so ridiculed as to create sympathy for violation of such laws".

The application of the General Principles is indicated in the four sections of the rules that follow so that a uniform standard may be applied by the different regional panels and Boards. The first section deals with films which are considered unsuitable for public exhibition. This section is divided into Clauses A to F. Clause A deals with the delineation of crime, B with that of vice or immorality, C with that of relations between sexes, D with the exhibition of human form, E with the bringing into contempt of armed forces, or the public authorities entrusted with the administration of law and order and F with the protection of the susceptibilities of foreign nations and religious communities, with fomenting social unrest or discontent to such an extent as to incite people to crime and promoting disorder, violence, a breach of the law or disaffection or resistance to Government.

15. Clauses E and F are further explained by stating what is unsuitable and what is objectionable in relation to the topics under those clauses.

16. Section II then enumerates subjects which may be objectionable in a context in which either they amount to indecency, immorality, illegality or incitement to commit a breach of the law.

17. Section III then provides:

"It is not proposed that certification of a film should be refused altogether, or that it should be certified as suitable for adult audiences only, where the deletion of a part or parts, will render it suitable for unrestricted public exhibition or for exhibition restricted to adults, and such deletion is made, unless the film is such as to deprave the majority of the audience and even excisions will not cure the defects."

18. Section IV deals with the protection of young persons and enjoins refusal of a certificate for unrestricted public exhibition in respect of a film depicting a story or containing incidents unsuitable for young persons. Emphasis in this connection is laid in particular upon—

(i) anything which may strike terror in a young person, e. g., scenes depicting ghosts, brutality, mutilations, torture, cruelty, etc.;

(ii) anything tending to disrupt domestic harmony or the confidence of a child in its parents e. g., scenes depicting parents quarrelling violently, or one of them striking the other or one or both of them behaving immorally,

(iii) anything tending to make a person of tender years insensitive to cruelty to others or to animals.

19. In dealing with crime under Section I, Clause A, the glorification or extenuation of crime, depicting the modus operandi of criminals, enlisting admiration or sympathy for criminals, holding up to contempt the forces of law against crime etc., are indicated as making the film unsuitable for exhibition. In Clause B similar directions are given with regard to vice and immoral acts and vicious and immoral persons. In Clause C the unsuitability arises from lowering the sacredness of the institution of marriage and depicting rape, seduction and criminal assaults on women, immoral traffic in women soliciting, prostitution or procuration, illicit sexual relations, excessively passionate love scenes, indelicate sexual situations and scenes suggestive of immorality. In Clause D the exhibition of human form in nakedness or indecorously or suggestively dressed and indecorous and sensuous postures are condemned. In Section II are mentioned confinements, details of surgical operations, venereal diseases and loathsome diseases like leprosy and sores, suicide or genocide, female under clothing, indecorous dancing, importunation of women, cruelty to children, torture of adults, brutal fighting, gruesome murders or scenes of strangulation, executions, mutilations and bleeding cruelty to animals, drunkenness or drinking not essential to the theme of the story, traffic and use of drugs, class hatred, horrors of war, horror as a predominant element, scenes likely to afford information to the enemy in time of war, exploitation of tragic incidents of war, blackmail associated with immorality, intimate biological studies, crippled limbs or malformations, gross travesties of administration of justice and defamation of any living person.

20. We have covered almost the entire range of instructions. It will be noticed that the control is both thematic and episodic. If the theme offends the rules and either with or without excision of the offending parts, the film remains still offensive, the certificate is refused. If the excisions can remove its offensiveness, the film is granted a certificate. Certifiable films are classified according to their suitability for adults or young people. This is the essential working of censorship of motion pictures in our country.

21. The first question is whether films need censorship at all? Pre-censorship is but an aspect of censorship and bears the same relationship in quality to the material as censorship after the motion picture has had a run. The only difference is one of the stage at which the State interposes its regulations between the individual and his freedom. Beyond this there is no vital difference. That censorship is prevalent all the world over in some form or other and pre-censorship also plays a part where motion pictures are involved, shows the desirability of censorship in this field. The Khosla Committee has given a description generally of the regulations for censorship (including pre-censorship) obtaining in other countries and Hunning's book deals with these topics in detail separately for each country. The method changes, the rules are different and censorship is more strict in some places than in others, but censorship is universal. Indeed the petitioner himself pronounced strongly in favour of it in a paper entitled 'Creative Expression' written by him. This is what he said:

"But even if we believe that a novelist or a painter or a musician should be free to write, paint and compose music without the interference of the State machinery, I doubt if anyone will advocate the same freedom to be extended to the commercial exploitation of a powerful medium of expression and entertainment like the cinema. One can imagine the results if an unbridled commercial cinema is allowed to cater to the lowest common denominator of popular taste, specially in a country which, after two centuries of political and cultural domination, is still suffering from a confusion and debasement of cultural values.

Freedom of expression cannot and should not, be interpreted as a licence for the cinemagnates to make money by pandering to, and thereby propagating, shoddy and vulgar taste."

22. Further it has been almost universally recognised that the treatment of motion pictures must be different from that of other forms of art and expression. This arises from the instant appeal of the motion picture, its versatility, realism (often surrealism), and its co-ordination of the visual and aural senses. The art of the cameraman, with trick photography, vista-vision and three dimensional representation thrown in, has made the cinema picture more true to life than even the theatre or indeed any other form of representative art. The motion picture is able to stir up emotions more deeply than any other product of art. Its effect particularly on children and adolescents is very great since their immaturity makes them more willingly suspend their disbelief than mature men and women. They also remember the action in the picture and try to emulate or imitate what they have seen. Therefore, classification of films into two categories of 'U' films and 'A' films is a reasonable classification. It is also for this reason that motion pictures must be regarded differently from other forms of speech and expression. A person reading a book or other writing or hearing a speech or viewing a painting or sculpture is not so deeply stirred as by seeing a motion picture. Therefore the treatment of the latter on a different footing is also a valid classification.

23. The petitioner pressed for acceptance of the minority views expressed from time to time in the Supreme Court of the United States and it is, therefore, necessary to say a few words about censorship of motion pictures in America and the impact of the First Amendment guaranteeing freedom of speech and expression in that country. The leading cases in the United States are really very few but they are followed in a very large number of per curiam decisions in which, while concurring with the earlier opinion of the Court, there is sometimes a restatement with a difference. As early as 1914 in Mutual Film Corp. v. Industrial Commission of Ohio, (1915) 236 US 230, Mr. Justice McKenna, speaking for the full Court, said that legislative power is not delegated unlawfully when a board of censors is set up to examine and censor, as a condition precedent to exhibition, motion picture films, to be publicly exhibited and displayed, with a view to passing and approving only such of them as are in the judgment of the board, moral, educational or amusing and forbidding those that are not. Speaking of the criteria stated in general words, it was said that general terms get "precision from the sense and experience of men and become certain and useful guides in reasoning and conduct". The first notice of change came in 1925 in Gitlow v. New York, (1925) 268 US 652, when it was said that censorship had to pass the scrutiny of the First Amendment through the Fourteenth Amendment before speech and expression could be abridged by State laws. To this was added, in 1919 the test of 'clear and present danger' propounded by Justice Holmes as the only basis for curtailing the freedom of speech and expression, see Schenck v. United States, (1919) 249 US 47, and Justice Brandeis in Witney v. California, (1927) 247 US 357, laid down three components of the test:

"(a) There must be a clear and present danger that speech would produce a substantial evil that the State has power to prevent. This is not to say that it is enough if there is 'fear', there must be reasonable grounds to fear that serious evil would result from the exercise of speech and expression;

(b) There must be a 'present' or 'imminent' danger and for this there must be reasonable grounds to hold this opinion and that no reasonable opportunity was available to avert the consequences; and

(c) The substantive evil to be prevented must be 'serious' before there can be a prohibition on freedom of speech and expression for the police power of the State could not be exercised to take away the guarantee to avert a relatively trivial harm to society".

24. In 1931 in Near v. Minnesota, (1931) 283 US 697 immunity of press from pre-censorship was denied but pre-censorship (as it is termed previous restraint) was not to be unlimited. A major purpose of the First Amendment was to prevent prior restraint. The protection was not unlimited but put on the State the burden of showing that the limitation challenged in the case was exceptional.

25. In 1941 the Court handed down in Chaplinsky v. New Hampshire, (1941) 315 US 567 the opinion that free speech was not absolute at all times and in all circumstances, that there existed certain

"well-defined and narrowly limited classes of speech, the prevention and punishment of which had never been thought to raise any constitutional problem".

26. This state of affairs continued also in respect of motion pictures and the regulation of their public exhibition. Real attention was focussed on censorship after 1951. The effect of World War II on American Society was the real cause because peoples' notions of right and wrong from a social point of view drastically altered. Added to this were the inroads made by Justices Douglas and Black in Dennis v. United States, (1951) 341 US 494 in the previously accepted propositions which according to them made the First Amendment no more than an admonition to Congress. In Beauharnais v. Illinois, (1952) 343 US 250 Justice Douglas claimed for the freedom of speech, a preferred position because the provision was in absolute terms, an opinion which has since not been shared by the majority of the Court.

27. In 1951 there came the leading decision Burstyn v. Wilson, (1951) 343 US 495. This case firmly established that motion pictures were within the protection of the First Amendment through the Fourteenth. While recognising that there was no absolute freedom to exhibit every motion picture of every kind at all times and places, and that constitutional protection even against a prior restraint was not absolutely unlimited, limitation was said to be only in exceptional cases. It however laid down that censorship on free speech and expression was ordinarily to be condemned but the precise rules governing other methods of expression were not necessarily applicable.

28. The application of the 14th Amendment has now enabled the Court to interfere in all cases of State restrictions where censorship fails to follow due process. The result has led to a serious conflict in the accepted legal opinion. The Supreme Court has had to deal with numerous cases in which censorship was questioned.

29. The divergence of opinion in recent years has been very deep. Censorship of press, art and literature is on the verge of extinction except in the ever shrinking area of obscenity. In the field of censorship of the motion picture there has been a tendency to apply the 'void for vagueness' doctrine evolved under the due process clause. Thus regulations containing such words as 'obscene', 'indecent', 'immoral', 'prejudicial to the best interests of people', 'tending to corrupt morals', 'harmful' were considered vague criteria. In Kingsley International Pictures Corp. v. Regents, (1959) 360 US 684, where the film Lady Chatterley's Lover was in question, certain opinions were expressed. These opinions formed the basis of the arguments on behalf of the petitioner. Justice Black considered that the Court was the worst of Board Censors because they possessed no special expertise. Justice Frankfurter was of the opinion that

'legislation must not be so vague, the language so loose, as to leave to those who have to apply it too wide a discretion for sweeping within its condemnation what was permissible expression as well as what society might permissibly prohibit, always remembering that the widest scope for freedom was to be given to the adventurous and imaginative exercise of human spirit

Justice Douglas considered prior restraint as unconstitutional. According to him if a movie violated a valid law, the exhibitor could be prosecuted.

30. The only test that seemed to prevail was that of obscenity as propounded in Roth v. United States, (1957) 354 US 476. In that three tests were laid down:

(a) that the dominant theme taken as a whole appeals to prurient interests according to the contemporary standards of the average man;

(b) that the motion picture is not saved by any redeeming social value; and

(c) that it is patently offensive because it is opposed to contemporary standards.

The Hicklin test in Regira v. Hicklin, (1868) 3 QB 360 was not accepted.

31. Side by side procedural safeguards were also considered. The leading case is Freedmen v. Maryland, (1965) 380 US 51 where the Court listed the following requirements for a valid film statute:

1. The burden of proving that the film is obscene rests on the censor.

2. Final restraint (denial of licence) may only occur after judicial determination of the obscenity of the material.

3. The censor will either issue the license or go into Court himself for a restraining order.

4. There must be only a 'brief period' between the censor's first consideration of film and final judicial determination. (As summarized by Martin Shapiro Freedom of Speech: The Supreme Court and Judicial Review).

These were further strengthened recently in Teitel Film Corp. v. Cusack, (1968) 390 US 139 (a per curiam decision) by saying that a non-criminal process which required the prior submission of a film to a censor avoided constitutional infirmity only if censorship took place under procedural safeguards. The censorship system should therefore, have a time limit. The censor must either pass the film or go to Court to restrain the showing of the film and the Court also must give a prompt decision. A delay of 50-57 days was considered too much. The statute in question there had meticulously laid down the time for each stage of examination but had not fixed any time limit for prompt judicial determination and this proved fatal.

32. The fight against censorship was finally lost in the Times Film Corporation v. Chicago, (1961) 365 US 43 but only by the slender majority of one. Chief Justice Warren and Justices Black, Douglas and Brennan dissented. The views of these Judges were pressed upon us. Chief Justice Warren thought that there ought to be first an exhibition of an allegedly

'obscene film' because Government could not forbid the exhibition of a film in advance. Thus prior restraint was said to be impermissible. Justice Douglas went further and said that censorship of movies was unconstitutional. Justice Clark, on the other hand, speaking for the majority, said:

".....It has never been held that liberty of speech is absolute. Nor has it been suggested that all previous restraints on speech are invalid.

x x x x x x

It is not for this Court to limit the State in its selection of the remedy it deems most effective to cope with such a problem, absent, of course, a showing of unreasonable strictures on individual liberty resulting from its application in particular circumstances".

The argument that exhibition of moving pictures ought in the first instance to be free and only a criminal prosecution should be the mode of restraint when found offensive was rejected. The pre-censorship involved was held to be no ground for striking down a law of censorship. The minority was of the opinion that a person producing a film must know what he was to do or not to do. For, if he were not sure he might avoid even the permissible.

33. In Interstate Circuit Inc. v. Dallas, (1968) 390 US 676 certain expressions were considered vague including 'crime delinquency' 'sexual promiscuity' 'not suitable for young persons'. According to the Court the statute must state narrowly drawn, reasonably definite, standards for the Board to follow. Justice Harlan, however, observed that the Courts had not found any more precise expressions and more could not be demanded from the legislature than could be said by the Court. However precision of regulation was to be the touchstone of censorship and while admitting that censorship was admissible, it was said that too wide a discretion should not be left to the censors.

34. Meanwhile in Jacobellis v. Ohio, (1964) 378 US 184 it was held that laws could legitimately aim specifically at preventing distribution of objectionable material to children and thus it approved of the system of age-classification. (1968) 390 US 676, (supra) and Ginsberg v. New York

(1968) 390 US 629 set the seal on validity of age-classification as constitutionally valid.

35. There are two cases which seem to lie outside the main-stream. Recently in Stanley v. Georgia, (1969) 394 US 557 the Court seems to have gone back on the Roth case, (1957) 354 US 476 (supra) and held that the right to receive information and ideas, regardless of their social worth, is also fundamental to society. Another exception can only be understood on the basis of the recognition of the needs of a permissive society. Thus Mishkin v. New York, (1966) 383 US 502, removes the test of the average person by saying that if the material is designed for a deviant sexual group, the material can only be censored if taken as a whole, it appeals to the prurient interest in sex of the members of that group. This is known as the selective-audience obscenity test and even children are in a special class. See (1968) 390 US 629, (supra). On the whole, however, there is in this last case a return to the Hicklin test in that obscenity is considered even from isolated passages.

36. To summarize. The attitude of the Supreme Court of the United States is not as uniform as one could wish. It may be taken as settled that motion picture is considered a form of expression and entitled to protection of First Amendment. The view that it is only commercial and business and, therefore, not entitled to the protection as was said in Mutual Film Corpn., (1915) 236 US 230, (supra) is not now accepted. It is also settled that freedom of speech and expression admits of extremely narrow restraints in cases of clear and present danger, but included in the restraints are prior as well as subsequent restraints. The censorship should be based on precise statement of what may not be subject-matter of film-making and this should allow full liberty to the growth of art and literature. Age-classification is permissible and suitability for special audiences is not to depend on whether the average man would have considered the film suitable. Procedural safeguards as laid down in Freedmen case, (1965) 380 US 51 (supra) must also be observed. The film can only be censored if it offends in the manner set out in Roth's case.

37. The petitioner put before us all these dicta for our acceptance and added to them the rejection of censorship, particularly prior censorship by Chief Justice Warren and Justices Black and Douglas. He pointed out that in England too the censorship of the theatre has been abolished by the Theatres Act, 1968 (1968 C 54) and submitted that this is the trend in advanced countries. He also brought to our notice the provisions of the Obscene Publications Act, 1959 (7 and 8 Eliz. 2 C. 66), where the test of obscenity is stated thus:

"1. Test of obscenity.

(1) For the purposes of this Act an article shall be deemed to be obscene if its effect or (where the article comprises two or more distinct items) the effect of any one of its items is, if taken as a whole, such as to tend to deprave and corrupt persons who are likely, having regard to all relevant circumstances, to read, see or hear the matter contained or embodied in it.

"x x x x x x",
and the defence of public good is stated thus:

"4. Defence of public good.

(1) A person shall not be convicted of an offence against section two of this Act, and an order for forfeiture shall not be made under the foregoing section, if it is proved that publication of the article in question is justified as being for the public good on the ground that it is in the interests of science, literature, art or learning, or of other objects of general concern.

(2) It is hereby declared that the opinion of experts as to the literary, artistic, scientific or other merits of an article may be admitted in any proceedings under this Act either to establish or to negative the said ground". He contended that we must follow the above provisions.

38 We may now consider the English practice. In England there was little freedom of speech to start with. The Common Law made no provision for it. The two constitutional documents — the Petition of Right (1628) and the Bill of Rights (1689) — do not mention it. By the time of Queen Elizabeth I presses were controlled through licences and although they were granted, no book could be issued without the sanction of Government. The Star Chamber tried several cases of censorship and it even continued in the days of Cromwell. Milton was the first to attack censorship in his Areopagitica and that had profound effect on the freedom of speech. We find quotations from his writings in the opinions of Chief Justice Warren and Justice Douglas. Freedom of speech came to be recognised by slow stages and it was Blackstone who wrote in his Commentaries (Book IV p. 1517)—

"The liberty of the Press is indeed essential to the nature of a free State, but this consists in laying no previous restraints upon publications". But censorship of theatres continued and no theatre could be licensed or a play performed without the sanction of the Lord Chamberlain. By the Theatres Act, 1843 the Lord Chamberlain was given statutory control over the theatres. He could forbid the production of a play for the preservation of good manners, decorum or the public peace. There was ordinarily no censorship of the press in England. When cinematograph came into being the Cinematograph Act, 1909 was passed to control cinemas. It has now been amended by the Cinematograph Act of 1952. Restrictions were placed on the exhibition of films to children (Section 4) and on the admission of children to certain types of film. Today censorship of films is through the British Board of Film Censors which is an independent body not subject to control by the State. An elaborate inquiry is already on foot to consider whether State control is needed or not. Censorship of films is run on the lines set by T. P. O'Connor in 1918. These directions, as we said earlier, have had a great influence upon our laws and our directions issued by the Central Government, follow closely the 43 points of T. P. O'Connor. It is wrong to imagine that there is no censorship in England. The Khosla Committee (p. 32) has given examples of the cuts ordered and also a list of films which were found unsuitable. The Board has never worked to a Code although the directions are followed. By 1950 three general principles were evolved. They are

1. Was the story, incident or dialogue likely to impair the moral standards of the public by extenuating vice or crime or depreciating moral standards?

2. Was it likely to give offence to reasonably minded cinema audiences?

3. What effect would it have on the minds of children?

39. We have digressed into the practice of the United States and the United Kingdom because analogies from these two countries were mainly relied upon by the petitioner and they serve as a very appropriate background from which to begin discussion on the question of censorship and the extent to which it may be carried.

40. To begin with our fundamental law allows freedom of speech and expression to be restricted as Clause (2) itself shows. It was observed in Ranjit D. Udeshi v. State of Maharashtra, (1965) 1 SCR 65 at p. 70 = (AIR 1965 SC 881).

"Speaking in terms of the Constitution it can hardly be claimed that obscenity which is offensive to modesty or decency is within the constitutional protection given to free speech or expression, because the article dealing with the right itself excludes it. That cherished right on which our democracy rests is meant for the expression of free opinions to change political or social conditions, or for the advancement of human knowledge. This freedom is subject to reasonable restrictions which may be thought necessary in the interest of the general public and one such is the interest of public decency and morality. Section 292, Indian Penal Code, manifestly embodies such a restriction because the law against obscenity, of course, correctly understood and applied, seeks no more than to promote public decency and morality."

We adhere to this statement and indeed it is applicable to the other spheres where control is tolerated under our fundamental law. The argument that Section 5-B of the Cinematograph Act does not reproduce the full effect of the second clause of Article 19 need not detain us. It appears that the draftsman used a copy of the Constitution as it was before the First Amendment and fell into the error of copying the obsolete clause. That, however, does not make any difference. The Constitution has to be read first and the section next. The latter can neither take away nor add to what the Constitution has said on the subject. The word 'reasonable' is not to be found in Section 5-B but it cannot mean that the restrictions can be unreasonable. Not only the sense of the matter but the existence of the constitutional provision in pari materia must have due share and reading the provisions of the Constitution we can approach the problem without having to adopt a too liberal construction of Section 5-B.

41. It, therefore, follows that the American and the British precedents cannot be decisive and certainly not the minority view expressed by some of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the former. The American Constitution stated the guarantee in absolute terms without any qualification. The Judges try to give full effect to the guarantee by every argument they can validly use. But the strongest proponent of the freedom (Justice Douglas) himself recognised in the Kingsley case that there must be a vital difference in approach. This is what he said:

"If we had a provision in our Constitution for 'reasonable' regulation of the press such as India has included in hers, there would be room for argument that censorship in the interests of morality would be permissible".

In spite of the absence of such a provision Judges in America have tried to read the words 'reasonable restrictions' into the First Amendment and thus to make the rights it grants subject to reasonable regulation. The American cases in their majority opinions, therefore, clearly support a case of censorship.

42. It would appear from this that censorship of films, their classification according to age groups and their suitability for unrestricted exhibition with or without excisions is regarded as a valid exercise of power in the interests of public morality, decency etc. This is not to be construed as necessarily offending the freedom of speech and expression. This has, however, happened in the United States and therefore decisions, as Justice Douglas said in his Tagore Law Lectures (1939), have the flavour of due process rather than what was conceived as the purpose of the First Amendment. This is because social interests of the people override individual freedom. Whether we regard the state as the paren patriae or as guardian and promotor of general welfare, we have to concede, that these restraints on liberty may be justified by their absolute necessity and clear purpose. Social interests take in not only the interests of the community but also individual interests which cannot be ignored. A balance has therefore to be struck between the rival claims by reconciling them. The larger interests of the community require the formulation of policies and regulations to combat dishonesty, corruption, gambling, vice and other things of immoral tendency and things which affect the security of the State and the preservation of public order and tranquillity. As Ahrens said the question calls for a good philosophical compass and strict logical methods.

43. With this preliminary discussion we say that censorship in India (and pre-censorship is not different in quality) has full justification in the field of the exhibition of cinema films. We need not generalize about other forms of speech and expression here for each such fundamental right has a different content and importance. The censorship imposed on the making and exhibition of films is in the interests of society. If the regulations venture into something which goes beyond this legitimate opening to restrictions, they can be questioned on the ground that a legitimate power is being abused. We hold, therefore, that censorship of films including prior restraint is justified under our Constitution.

44. This brings us to the next questions: How far can these restrictions go? and how are they to be imposed? This leads to an examination of the provisions contained in S. 5B (2). That provision authorises the Central Government to issue such directions as it may think fit setting out the principles which shall guide the authority competent to grant certificates under the Act in sanctioning films for public exhibition.

45. The first question raised before us is that the legislature has not indicated any guidance to the Central Government. We do not think that this is a fair reading of the section as a whole. The first sub-section states the principles and read with the second clause of the nineteenth article it is quite clearly indicated that the topics of films or their content should not offend certain matters there set down. The Central Government in dealing with the problem of censorship will have to bear in mind those principles and they will be the philosophical compass and the logical methods of Ahrens. Of course, Parliament can adopt the directions and put them in schedule to the Act (and that may still be done), it cannot be said that there is any delegation of legislative function. If Parliament made a law giving power to close certain roads for certain vehicular traffic at stated times to be determined by the Executive authorities and they made regulations in the exercise of that power, it cannot for a moment be argued that this is insufficient to take away the right of locomotion. Of course, everything may be done by legislation but it is not necessary to do so if the policy underlying regulations is clearly indicated. The Central Government's regulations are there for consideration in the light of the guaranteed freedom and if they offend substantially against that freedom, they may be struck down. But as they stand they cannot be challenged on the ground that any recondite theory of law making or a critical approach to the separation of powers is infringed. We are accordingly of the opinion that Section 5B (2) cannot be challenged on this ground.

46. This brings us to the manner of the exercise of control and restriction by the directions. Here the argument is that most of the regulations are vague and further that they leave no scope for the exercise of creative genius in the field of art. This poses the first question before us whether the 'void for vagueness' doctrine is applicable. Reliance in this connection is placed on Municipal Committee Amritsar v. State of Punjab AIR 1969 SC 1100. In that case a Division Bench of this Court lays down that an Indian Act cannot be declared invalid on the ground that it violates the due process clause or that it is vague. Shah J., speaking for the Division Bench, observes:

"... The rule that an Act of a competent legislature may be 'struck down' by the Courts on the ground of vagueness is alien to our constitutional system. The Legislature of the State of Punjab was competent to enact legislation in respect of 'fairs': vide Entry 28 of List II of the 7th Schedule to the Constitution. A law may be declared invalid by the superior Courts in India if the legislature has no power to enact the law or that the law violates any of the fundamental rights guaranteed in Part III of the Constitution or is inconsistent with any constitutional provision, but not on the ground that it is vague".

The learned Judge refers to the practice of the Supreme Court of the United States in Claude C. Connally v. General Construction Co. (1926) 70 Law Ed 322 where it was observed:

"A statute which either forbids or requires the doing of an act in terms so vague that men of common intelligence must necessarily guess at its meaning and differ as to its application violates the first essential of due process of law."

The learned Judge observes in relation to this as follows:

"But the rule enunciated by the American Courts has no application under our constitutional set up. This rule is regarded as an essential of the 'due process clause' incorporated in the American Constitution by the 5th and 14th Amendments. The Courts in India have no authority to declare a statute invalid on the ground that it violates 'the due process of law'. Under our Constitution, the test of due process of law cannot be applied to the statutes enacted by the Parliament or the State Legislature."

Relying on the observations of Kania C. J. in A. K. Gopalan v. State of Madras, 1950 SCR 88 = (AIR 1950 SC 27) to the effect that a law cannot be declared void because it is opposed to the spirit supposed to pervade the Constitution but not expressed in words, the conclusion above set out is reiterated. The learned Judge, however, adds that the words 'cattle fair' in Act there considered, are sufficiently clear and there is no vagueness.

47. These observations which are clearly obiter are apt to be too generally applied and need to be explained. While it is true that the principles evolved by the Supreme Court of the United States of America in the application of the Fourteenth Amendment were eschewed in our Constitution and instead the limits of restrictions on each fundamental right were indicated in the clauses that follow the first clause of the nineteenth article, it cannot be said as an absolute principle that no law will be considered bad for sheer vagueness. There is ample authority for the proposition that a law affecting fundamental rights may be so considered. A very pertinent example is to be found in State of Madhya Pradesh v. Baldeo Prasad, (1961) 1 SCR 970 at p. 979 = (AIR 1961 SC 293) where the Central Provinces and Berar Goondas Act, 1946 was declared void for uncertainty. The condition for the application of Sections 4 and 4-A was that the person sought to be proceeded against must be a goonda but the definition of goonda in the Act indicated no tests for deciding which person fell within the definition. The provisions were therefore, held to be uncertain and vague.

48. The real rule is that if a law is vague or appears to be so, the Court must try to construe it, as far as may be, and language permitting, the construction sought to be placed on it, must be in accordance with the intention of the legislature. Thus if the law is open to diverse construction, that construction which accords best with the intention of the legislature and advances the purpose of legislation, is to be preferred. Where however the law admits of no such construction and the persons applying it are in a boundless sea of uncertainty and the law prima facie takes away a guaranteed freedom, the law must be held to offend the Constitution as was done in the case of the Goonda Act. This is not application of the doctrine of due process. The invalidity arises from the probability of the misuse of the law to the detriment of the individual. If possible, the Court instead of striking down the law may itself draw the line of demarcation where possible but this effort should be sparingly made and only in the clearest of cases.

49. Judging the directions from this angle, we find that there are general principles regarding the films as a whole and specific instances of what may be considered as offending the public interest as disclosed in the clause that follows the enunciation of the freedoms in Article 19 (1) (a). The general principles which are stated in the directions seek to do no more than restate the permissible restrictions as stated in Clause (2) of Article 19 and Section 5-B (1) of the Act. They cannot be said to be vague at all. Similarly, the principles in Section IV of the directions in relation to children and young persons are quite specific and also salutary and no exception can be taken. It is only the instances which are given in Section I, Clauses A to D which need to be considered. Read individually they give ample direction as to what may not be included. It is argued on the basis of some American cases already noticed by us that these expressions are vague. We do not agree. The words used are within the common understanding of the average man. For example the word 'rape' indicates what the word is, ordinarily, understood to mean. It is hardly to be expected or necessary that the definition of rape in the Penal Code must be set down to further expose the meaning. The same may be said about almost all the terms used in the directions and discussed before us. We do not propose to deal with each topic for that is really a profitless venture. Fundamental rights are to be judged in a broad way. It is not a question of semantics but of the substance of the matter. It is significant that Justice Douglas who is in favour of a very liberal and absolute application of the First Amendment in America is of the view that 'sexual promiscuity' was not vague, while those in favour of prior restraints thought that it was. We have referred earlier to the case. We are quite clear that expressions like 'seduction', 'immoral traffic in women', 'soliciting, prostitution or procurement', 'indelicate sexual situation' and 'scenes suggestive of immorality', 'traffic and use of drugs', 'class hatred', 'blackmail associated with immorality' are within the understanding of the average man and more so of persons who are likely to be the panel for purposes of censorship. Any more definiteness is not only not expected but is not possible. Indeed if we were required to draw up a list we would also follow the same general pattern.

50. But what appears to us to be the real flaw in the scheme of the directions is a total absence of any direction which would tend to preserve art and promote it. The artistic appeal or presentation of an episode robs it of its vulgarity and harm and this appears to be completely forgotten. Artistic as well as inartistic presentations are treated alike and also what may be socially good and useful and what may not. In Ranjit D. Udeshi's case, (1965) 1 SCR 65 = (AIR 1965 SC 881), this Court laid down certain principles on which the obscenity of a book was to be considered with a view to deciding whether the book should be allowed to circulate or withdrawn. Those principles apply mutatis mutandis to films and also other areas besides obscenity. The Khosla Committee also adopted them and recommended them for the guidance of the film censors. We may reproduce them here as summarized by the Khosla Committee:

"The Supreme Court laid down the following principles which must be carefully studied and applied by our censors when they have to deal with a film said to be objectionable on the ground of indecency or immorality:

(1) Treating with sex and nudity in art and literature cannot be regarded as evidence of obscenity without something more.

(2) Comparison of one book with another to find the extent of permissible action is not necessary.

(3) The delicate task of deciding what is artistic and what is obscene has to be performed by Courts and in the last resort, by the Supreme Court and so, oral evidence of men of literature or others on the question of obscenity is not relevant.

(4) An overall view of the obscene matter in the setting of the whole work would of course be necessary but the obscene matter must be considered by itself and separately to find out whether it is so gross and its obscenity is so decided that it is likely to deprave or corrupt those whose minds are open to influence of this sort and into whose hands the book is likely to fall.

(5) The interests of contemporary society and particularly the influence of the book etc., on it must not be overlooked.

(6) Where obscenity and art are mixed, art must be so preponderating as to throw obscenity into shadow or render the obscenity so trivial and insignificant that it can have no effect and can be overlooked.

(7) Treating with sex in a manner offensive to public decency or morality which are the words of our Fundamental Law judged by our national standards and considered likely to pander to lascivious, prurient or sexually precocious minds must determine the result.

(8) When there is propagation of ideas, opinions and informations or public interest or profits, the interests of society may tilt the scales in favour of free speech and expression. This books on medical science with intimate illustrations and photographs though in a sense immodest, are not to be considered obscene, but the same illustrations and photographs collected in a book from without the medical text would certainly be considered to be obscene.

(9) Obscenity without a preponderating social purposes or profit cannot have the constitutional protection of free speech or expression. Obscenity is treating with sex in a manner appearing to the carnal side of human nature or having that tendency. Such a treating with sex is offensive to modesty and decency.

(10) Knowledge is not a part of the guilty act. The offender's knowledge of the obscenity of the book is not required under the law and it is a case of strict liability".

Application of these principles does not seek to whittle down the fundamental right of free speech and expression beyond the limits permissible under our Constitution for however high or cherished that right it does not go to pervert or harm society and the line has to be drawn somewhere. As was observed in the same case:

"..... The test which we evolve must obviously be of a general character but it must admit of a just application from case to case by indicating a line of demarcation not necessarily sharp but sufficiently distinct to distinguish between that which is obscene and that which is not". A similar line has to be drawn in the case of every topic in films considered unsuitable for public exhibition or specially to children.

51. We may now illustrate our meaning how even the items mentioned in the directions may figure in films subject either to their artistic merit or their social value over-weighing their offending character. The task of the censor is extremely delicate and his duties cannot be the subject of an exhaustive set of commands established by prior ratiocination. But direction is necessary to him so that he does not sweep within the terms of the directions vast areas of thought, speech and expression of artistic quality and social purpose and interest. Our standards must be so framed that we are not reduced to a level where the protection of the least capable and the most depraved amongst us determines what the morally healthy cannot view or read. The standards that we set for our censors must make a substantial allowance in favour of freedom thus leaving a vast area for creative art to interpret life and society with some of its foibles along with what is good. We must not look upon such human relationships as banned in toto and for ever from human thought and must give scope for talent to put them before society. The requirements of art and literature include within themselves a comprehensive view of social life and not only in its ideal form and the line is to be drawn where the average man or moral man begins to feel embarrassed or disgusted at a naked portrayal of life without the redeeming touch of art or genius or social value. If the depraved begins to see in these things more than what an average person would, in much the same way, as it is wrongly said, a Frenchman sees a woman's legs in everything, it cannot be helped. In our scheme of things ideas having redeeming social or artistic value must also have importance and protection for their growth. Sex and obscenity are not always synonymous and it is wrong to classify sex as essentially obscene or even indecent or immoral. It should be our concern, however, to prevent the use of sex designed to play a commercial role by making its own appeal. This draws in the censors' scissors. Thus audiences in India can be expected to view with equanimity the story of Oedipus son of Laius who committed patricide and incest with his mother. When the seer Tiresias exposed him, his sister Jocasta committed suicide by hanging herself and Oedipus put out his own eyes. No one after viewing these episodes would think that patricide or incest with one's own mother is permissible or suicide in such circumstances or tearing out one's own eyes is a natural consequence. And yet if one goes by the letter of the directions the film cannot be shown. Similarly scenes depicting leprosy as a theme in a story or in a documentary are not necessarily outside the protection. If that were so Verrier Elwyn's Phunat of the Hills or the same episode in Henryson's Testament of Cressaid (from where Verrier Elwyn borrowed the idea) would never see the light of the day. Again carnage and bloodshed may have historical value and the depiction of such scenes as the sack of Delhi by Nadirshah may be permissible, if handled delicately and as part of an artistic portrayal of the confrontation with Mohammad Shah Rangila. If Nadir Shah made golgathas of skulls, must we leave them out of the story because people must be made to view a historical theme without true history? Rape in all its nakedness may be objectionable but Voltaire's Candide would be meaningless without Cunegonde's episode with the soldier and the story of Lucrece could never be depicted on the screen.

52. Therefore it is not the elements of rape, leprosy, sexual immorality which should attract the censor's scissors but how the theme is handled by the producer. It must however, be remembered that the cinematograph is a powerful medium and its appeal is different. The horrors of war as depicted in the famous etchings of Goya do not horrify one so much as the same scenes rendered in colour and with sound and movement, would do. We may view a documentary on the erotic tableaux from our ancient temples with equanimity or read the Kamasutra but a documentary from them as a practical sexual guide would be abhorrent.

53. We have said all this to show that the items mentioned in the directions are not by themselves defective. We have adhered to the 13 points of T. P. O'Connor framed in 1918 and have made a comprehensive list of what may not be shown. Parliament has left this task to the Central Government and, in our opinion, this could be done. But Parliament has not legislated enough, nor has the Central Government filled in the gap. Neither has separated the artistic and the socially valuable from that which is deliberately indecent, obscene, horrifying or corrupting. They have not indicated the need of society and the freedom of the individual. They have thought more of the depraved and less of the ordinary moral man. In their desire to keep films from the abnormal they have excluded the moral. They have attempted to bring down the public motion picture to the level of home movies.

54. It was for this purpose that this Court was at pains to point out in Ranjit D. Udeshi's case, (1965) 1 SCR 65 = (AIR 1965 SC 881) certain considerations for the guidance of censorship of books. We think that those guides work as well here. Although we are not inclined to hold that the directions are defective in so far as they go, we are of opinion that directions to emphasize the importance of art to a value judgment by the censors need to be included. Whether this is done by Parliament or by the Central Government it hardly matters. The whole of the law and the regulations under it will have always to be considered and if the further tests laid down here are followed, the system of censorship with the procedural safeguards accepted by the Solicitor General will make censorship accord with our fundamental law.

55. We allow this petition as its purpose is more than served by the assurance of the Solicitor General and what we have said, but in the circumstances we make no order about costs.

Petition allowed.

AIR 1971 SUPREME COURT 500

J. M. SHELAT AND C. A. VAIDIALINGAM, JJ.

Joginder Singh, Appellant v. The State of Himachal Pradesh, Respondent.

D/- 30-11-1970.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 549 — Rules under — Criminal Courts and Court-Martial (Adjustment of Jurisdiction) Rules (1952), Rr. 3, 4 — Army Act (1950), Ss. 125, 126 — Prosecution of military personnel before ordinary Criminal Court — Charge and investigation by Police known to competent Military Authority — Surrender of accused to civil authorities — Indicates decision of Military authority not to try accused by Court-Martial — No need for Magistrate to comply with S. 126 or Rule 4.

In respect of an offence which could be tried both by a criminal court as well as a court-martial, Ss. 125, 126 and the Rules, have made suitable provisions to avoid a conflict of jurisdiction between the ordinary criminal courts and the court-martial. But discretion is left to the officer mentioned in S. 125 to decide before which court the proceedings should be instituted. It is only when the designated officer does not exercise his discretion and decide that the proceedings should be instituted before a court-martial, that the Army Act would not obviously be in the way of a criminal court exercising its ordinary jurisdiction in the manner provided by law and S. 126 would not come into operation.

Rule 4 is related to cl. (a) of R. 3 and will be attracted only when the Magistrate proceeds to conduct the trial without having been moved by the competent military authority. When the competent military authorities, knowing full well the charge against the accused and the investigation that was being conducted by the Police release him from military custody and hand him over to the civil authorities, the Magistrate is justified in proceeding on the basis that the military authorities had decided that the accused need not be tried by the court-martial and that he can be tried by the ordinary criminal Court. (Para 29)

Surrender of the accused to the civil authorities to be dealt with by the latter, after being made aware of the nature of the offence against the accused is a clear indication that the decision of the military authorities was that the accused need not be tried by a court-martial and that his trial can take place before the criminal court. Under these circumstances there is no occasion to follow the procedure under S. 126 or R. 4 requiring notice to the Commanding Officer of the accused. Case law discussed.

Mr. R. L. Kohli, Advocate, for Appellant; M/s. V. C. Mahajan and R. N. Sachthey, Advocates, for Respondent.

VAIDIALINGAM, J.:— In this appeal on certificate issued by the Delhi High Court, the appellant who is governed by the Army Act, 1950 (hereinafter referred to as the Act) challenges the legality of his trial and conviction for an offence under S. 376

I.P.C. by the Assistant Sessions Judge, Nahan.

2. The main attack levelled against the proceedings is that the material provisions of the Army Act read with the Criminal Courts and Court-Martial (Adjustment of Jurisdiction) Rules, 1952 (hereinafter referred to as the Rules) framed by the Central Government under S. 549 (1) Cr. P.C. have not been complied with by the Assistant Sessions Judge. The prosecution case is briefly as follows:

3. The appellant was a military personnel attached to Punjab Regiment No. 24, which moved to Nahan on March 3, 1967. The appellant was a Lance Naik and was appointed as a temporary Granthi of the Katcha-Johar temple used by the military personnel. One Jiwa Nand with his wife and children was living close by the temple. On March 8, 1967 at about 8.30 a.m. Gayatri Devi aged about 10 years and daughter of Jiwa Nand was called by the appellant and when she came near him she was taken inside the adjoining room where the appellant had forcible sexual intercourse with her. The victim narrated the occurrence to her mother and sister. When Gayatri Devi, her mother and certain others were proceeding towards the Cantonment to complain to the military authorities, they met 4 or 5 sikh gentlemen and Gayatri Devi pointed out the appellant in that group as the one who had misbehaved with her. The Sikh gentlemen, who were in military uniform declined to permit Gayatri Devi and others to go inside the Cantonment area on the ground that the entry into the same was prohibited to non-military personnel. Later on the father of Gayatri Devi took her to the police station and lodged a report Ex. 12/A. The accused pleaded alibi and denied the offence. He also let in defence evidence. The learned Assistant Sessions Judge accepted the prosecution case and disbelieving the plea of the appellant convicted him of the offence under S. 376 I. P. C. and sentenced him to three years' rigorous imprisonment. The appeal filed by the appellant was dismissed by the learned Sessions Judge, who confirmed the conviction and sentence.

4. The appellant filed a criminal revision No. 26 of 1968 before the Delhi High Court, challenging his conviction and sentence passed by the learned Assistant Sessions Judge and as confirmed by the learned Sessions Judge. The learned Chief Justice before whom the criminal revision came for hearing held that the conviction of the appellant for the offence under S. 376 I.P.C. and the sentence imposed on him by the two subordinate courts on facts were justified and did not require any interference. However, a plea was taken before the learned Chief Justice on behalf of the appellant that according to a notification issued by the Ministry of Defence, Government of India dated November 28, 1962, the appellant on the material date must be considered to have been on active service. Based on this notification it was further urged that the appellant's trial should have been before a Court-Martial and that if the Assistant Sessions Judge decided to proceed with the trial, he should have given the required notice to the Commanding Officer of the Army as is mandatory under S. 126 (1) of the Act read with R. 4. As those provisions have not been complied with, the appellant's trial and conviction were illegal and null and void. The learned Chief Justice was, however, inclined to take the view that the omission by the Assistant Sessions Judge to follow the procedure indicated above does not affect his jurisdiction to conduct the trial.

5. In view of certain decisions of the High Courts wherein an opinion has been expressed that non-compliance with the provisions of the Act and the Rules vitiates the trial of a military personnel by the criminal courts, the learned Chief Justice referred the matter by his order dated June 25, 1968 to a Full Bench. The Full Bench which consisted of the learned Chief Justice Kapoor and Tatachari JJ. heard the criminal revision case. The learned Chief Justice and Tatachari J. after a very elaborate reference to the material provisions of the Act and the relevant Rules held that the Magistrates before conducting a trial of a military personnel have to conform normally to the relevant provisions of the Act and the Rules. But they held that in respect of offences for the trial of which both the Court-Martial and an ordinary Criminal Court had concurrent jurisdiction, the mere omission by a Magistrate, before conducting the trial, to issue the necessary notice under R. 4 will not vitiate the proceedings as being illegal. Kapoor J., on the other hand, disagreed with the majority opinion and held that under the Act read with the Rules the first option to try military personnel lies with the Army authorities and they have to decide the forum of the trial and that the Magistrate will get jurisdiction only after a decision in his favour by the Central Government in case of a conflict between the army authorities and the Magistrate. The learned Judge further held that a Magistrate cannot assume jurisdiction straightway without providing an opportunity to the military authorities to decide the forum. The learned Judge accordingly held that the observance of the Rules is obligatory and non-observance thereof makes the trial illegal. In accordance with the majority judgment, the High Court by its order dated July 28, 1968 held that non-observance of Rr. 3 and 4 of the Rules does not by itself deprive the Magistrate of his inherent jurisdiction or make the proceedings conducted by him null and void. The High Court further held that the effect of the violation is to be determined on the facts and circumstances of each case keeping in view the nature of the violation and all other relevant factors. After expressing opinion on the legal aspects, the case was remitted to the Single Judge for final disposal.

6. The matter came again before the learned Chief Justice, who by his order dated September 27, 1968 held that the trial by the Assistant Sessions Judge without conforming to the provisions of R. 4 has not caused any failure of justice to the appellant in this case. The learned Chief Justice further held that in view of certain circumstances it is legitimate to infer that there has been substantial compliance with the statutory provisions. Finally the learned Chief Justice held that the conviction of the appellant was proper and dismissed the revision filed by the appellant.

7. Mr. Kohli, learned counsel for the appellant, has reiterated the same objections taken on behalf of the appellant before the Delhi High Court.

According to Mr. Kohli, the offence in this case being one which could be tried, both by the Court Martial and the ordinary Criminal Court, it was for the competent officer to decide, in the first instance, whether the appellant is to be tried by a Court Martial. If the criminal court was of the opinion that the proceedings should be instituted before itself in respect of the offence alleged, it should have followed the mandatory provisions contained in Section 126 of the Act read with Rr. 3 and 4.

8. Under S. 549 (1), Cr. P. C. the Magistrate was bound to have regard to the rules. In this case inasmuch as the said procedure had not been followed and the appellant accused was tried straightway by the criminal court, the trial is illegal and void. Being a question of jurisdiction the objection raised by the appellant before the High Court goes to the root of the matter and vitiates the entire proceedings.

9. Mr. V. C. Mahajan, learned counsel for the State, on the other hand, urged two contentions: (i) as held by the High Court there has been a substantial compliance with the provisions of the Act and the Rules in this particular case and hence the trial by the Assistant Sessions Judge is legal and valid, and (ii) even assuming that there has been a breach of the rules, such a violation is at the most only an irregularity and not an illegality and as no prejudice has been shown to have been caused to the accused by such an irregular proceeding held by the Assistant Sessions Judge, the conviction is legal.

10. At the outset we may state that the question regarding the competency of the criminal court to try the appellant does not appear to have been raised before the learned Assistant Sessions Judge. It is no doubt seen, that the learned Assistant Sessions Judge, appears to have made enquiries from the counsel appearing for the appellant and the State regarding the position of the appellant who was in military employ. The public prosecutor drew the attention of the Court to S. 70 of the Act and appears to have pointed out that as the Punjab Regiment No. 24 to which the appellant was attached was not 'on active service', the appellant could be tried by the ordinary criminal court.

11. On behalf of the appellant it was urged that in view of the declaration of Emergency, the appellant must be deemed to be 'on active service'. But this contention was not accepted by the Court. Nahan station where the Punjab Regiment was then stationed being a rest station, the court proceeded with the trial reserving liberty to the counsel for both the parties to raise any further point before the close of the trial to establish that the appellant must be considered to be 'on active service'. Obviously neither party cared to place any material before the Court and the trial was proceeded with resulting in the conviction of the appellant.

12. Mr. Kohli, learned counsel for the appellant, has drawn our attention to certain decisions of the High Courts in support of his contention that a trial held by a Magistrate without conforming to the provisions of the Act and the Rules is illegal and not a mere irregularity. Those decisions are: In re Captain Hugh May Stollery Mundy, AIR 1945 Mad 289; Major F. K. Mistry, 1949-2 Mad LJ 44; C. Ramanujan v. State of Mysore, AIR 1962 Mys 196; Major Gopinathan v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1963 Madh Pra 249 and Awadh Behari Singh v. The State, AIR 1967 Cal 323.

13. On the other hand Mr. Mahajan drew our attention to the Full Bench decision of the Punjab and Haryana High Court reported in Ajit Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1970 Punj and Har 351, wherein the High Court has held that the trial suffers not from an illegality but only an irregularity. Such an irregularity does not render the trial liable to be set aside, unless it is shown that prejudice has been caused to the accused.

14. In view of certain decisions of this Court, to which we will presently refer and having regard to the particular circumstances of this case we do not think it necessary to consider the question whether non-observance of the Rules by the Magistrate trying and convicting a person who is governed by the Act is illegal or only irregular. The scheme of the Act and the Rules have been considered in three decisions of this Court.

which are being referred to presently and hence we do not think it necessary to either quote Sections 125 and 126 or Section 549, Criminal P. C. We will, however, refer to the relevant rules at the appropriate stage. They have been referred to in particular in the latest decision of this Court in Som Datt Datta v. Union of India, 1969-2 SCR 177 = (AIR 1969 SC 414).

15.. There is no controversy that the appellant is one subject to the Act as a person enrolled under the Act under Section 2 (1) (b). Section 3 (1) defines 'on active service'. Over and above that, power is given to the Central Government under Section 9, by notification, to declare any person or class of persons subject to the Act and who may be deemed to be 'on active service' within the meaning of the Act. The Government of India, Ministry of Defence, had issued the following notification on November 28, 1962:

"In exercise of the powers conferred by Section 9 of the Army Act, 1950 (46 of 1950), the Central Government hereby declare that all persons subject to that Act, who are not on active service under Clause (1) of Section 3 thereof, shall, wherever they may be serving, be deemed to be on active service within the meaning of that Act for the purpose of the said Act and of any other law for the time being in force".

16. By virtue of this notification it follows that on the material date Punjab Regiment No. 24, to which the appellant was attached though it was at Nahan, which was a rest station, must be considered to have been 'on active service'. This notification was issued in the year 1962. Unfortunately, it was not brought to the notice of the learned Assistant Sessions Judge, notwithstanding the specific enquiry he made about the position of the accused. Section 70 of the Act runs as follows:

"A person subject to this Act who commits an offence of murder against a person not subject to military, naval or air force law, or of culpable homicide not amounting to murder against such a person or of rape in relation to such a person, shall not be deemed to be guilty of an offence against this Act and shall not be tried by a court-martial, unless he commits any of the said offences—

- (a) while on active service, or
- (b) at any place outside India, or
- (c) at a frontier post specified by the Central Government by notification in this behalf”.

17. As the appellant was alleged to have committed rape in relation to a person who was not subject to military, naval or air law, under Section 70, normally he could be tried by the ordinary criminal Court, but inasmuch as he was on active service at the time of the alleged offence, the Court-martial also gets jurisdiction to try the appellant. Therefore, this is a case where both the Court-martial and the ordinary criminal Court had concurrent jurisdiction to try the appellant. To meet such a situation suitable provisions have been made in Sections 125, 126 of the Act and the Rules framed under Section 549, Criminal P. C. In Major E. G. Barsay v. The State of Bombay, 1962-2 SCR 195 = (AIR 1961 SC 1762) the jurisdiction of the Special Judge to try an officer who was subject to the Army Act was questioned. No doubt the ultimate decision of the Court rested on a construction of the provisions of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 and the jurisdiction of the Special Judge to try the military officer in that case was upheld. But in dealing with the contention raised on behalf of the appellant therein that the Special Judge had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offences with which the accused was charged and that he should have been tried only by a Court-martial under the Act, this Court had to consider the scheme of the Act.

18. After holding that the Act does not expressly bar the jurisdiction of the criminal Court in respect of the acts or omission punishable under the Act if they are also punishable under any other law in force in India, this Court held that Sections 125, 126 and 127 excluded any inference about prohibition regarding jurisdiction of the criminal Courts and those sections in express terms provide not only for resolving conflict of jurisdiction between a criminal Court and a court-martial in respect of the same offence, but also provide for successive trials of an accused in respect of the same offence. This Court has further laid down that Sections 125 and 126 provide a satisfactory machinery to resolve the conflict of jurisdiction having regard to the exigencies of the situation. This decision in our opinion lays down that there is no exclusion of jurisdiction of the ordinary criminal Courts in respect of offences which are triable also by the Court-martial.

19. In dealing with the Act, this Court in Ram Sarup v. The Union of India, 1964-5 SCR 931 = (AIR 1965 SC 247) has observed that there could be a variety of circumstances which may influence the decision as to whether the offender is to be tried by the court-martial or by the ordinary criminal court and the military officers, who are charged with the duty of exercising discretion are to be guided by the circumstances and the exigencies of the service, maintenance of discipline in the army, speedier trial, nature of the offence and the person against whom the offence is committed.

20. In 1969-2 SCR 177 = (AIR 1969 SC 414) this Court has again elaborately considered the scheme of the Act as well as the Rules. Dealing with Sections 125 and 126, at p. 183 (of SCR) = (at p. 418 of AIR) this Court observes:

“Section 125 presupposes that in respect of an offence both a criminal Court as well as a court-martial have each concurrent jurisdiction. Such a situation can arise in the case of an act or omission punishable both under the Army Act as well as under any law in force in India. It may also arise in the case of an offence deemed to be an offence under the Army Act. Under the scheme of the two sections, in the first instance, it is left to the discretion of the officer mentioned in Section 125 to decide before which Court the proceedings shall be instituted, and, if the officer, decides that they should be instituted before a Court-martial, the accused person is to be detained in military custody; but if a criminal Court is of opinion that the said offence shall be tried before itself, it may issue the requisite notice under Section 126 either to deliver over the offender to the nearest Magistrate or to postpone the proceedings pending a reference to the Central Government. On receipt of the said requisition, the officer may either deliver over the offender to the said Court or refer the question of proper court for the determination of the Central Government whose order shall be final. These two sections of the Army Act provide a satisfactory machinery to resolve the conflict of jurisdiction having regard to the exigencies of the situation in any particular case".

21. A reference to the Act particularly to Chapter VI, which comprises of Sections 34 to 70, under the heading 'offences', the position that emerges according to the above decisions is that under Chapter VI there are three categories of offences, namely, (1) offences committed by a person subject to the Act triable by a Court-martial in respect whereof specific punishments have been assigned; (2) civil offences committed by the said person at any place in or beyond India, but deemed to be offences committed under the Act and, if charged under Section 69 of the Act, triable by a Court-martial; and (3) offences of murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder or rape committed by a person subject to the Act against a person not subject to the military law. Subject to a few exceptions, they are not triable by Court-martial, but are triable only by ordinary criminal Courts. The said categorisation of offences and tribunals necessarily bring about a conflict of jurisdiction. Where an offence is for the first time created by the Army Act, such as those created by Sections 34, 35, 36, 37, etc., it would be exclusively triable by a Court-martial; but where a civil offence is also an offence under the Act or deemed to be an offence under the Act, both an ordinary criminal Court as well as a court-martial would have jurisdiction to try the person committing the offence.

22. It is further clear that in respect of an offence which could be tried both by a criminal Court as well as a Court-martial, Sections 125, 126 and the Rules, have made suitable provisions to avoid a conflict of jurisdiction between the ordinary criminal courts and the Court-martial. But it is to be noted that in the first instance, discretion is left to the officer mentioned in Section 125 to decide before which court the proceedings should be instituted. Hence the officer commanding the army, army corps, division or independent brigade in which the accused person is serving or such other officer as may be prescribed will have to exercise his discretion and decide under Section 125 in which court the proceedings shall be instituted. It is only when he so exercises his discretion and decides that the proceeding should be instituted before a court-martial, that the provisions of Section 126 (1) come into operation. If the designated officer does not exercise his discretion and decide that the proceedings should be instituted before a Court-martial, the Army Act would not obviously be in the way of a criminal Court exercising its ordinary jurisdiction in the manner provided by law.

23. We will presently show that in the case before us the designated officer in Section 125 has not chosen to exercise his discretion and decided before which Court the proceedings should be instituted and in particular he has also not decided that the proceedings should be instituted before a Court-martial. When that is so, in our opinion, there was no occasion for the Criminal Court in this case to adopt the procedure laid down in Section 126 of the Act. This view finds support from the second part of Section 126 (1) which requires the Criminal Court to issue a notice to the officer designated in Section 125 of the Act to deliver over the offender to the nearest Magistrate or to postpone the proceedings pending a reference to the Central Government. This is a clear indication that Section 126 (1) presupposes that the designated officer has decided under Section 125 that the proceedings shall be instituted before a Court-martial and has also directed that the accused person shall be detained in military custody.

24. As the facts on which we are basing our conclusion that there was no necessity for the Criminal Court in question to adopt the procedure laid down in Section 126 of the Act, will have also bearing on the construction of the relevant rules, it is desirable to refer to the relevant rules relied on by the appellant

25. The rules have been framed by the Central Government under Section 549 (1), Criminal P. C. That section provides for the Central Government making rules consistent with the Criminal Procedure Code and the Acts mentioned therein in respect of offences which could be tried by an ordinary criminal court or by a court-martial. It enjoins upon a Magistrate when any person is brought before him, in respect of such an offence, to have due regard to the rules and to deliver him in proper cases to the appropriate officers mentioned therein, for being tried by a Court-martial. The material rules that are to be referred are Rules 2, 3, 4, 5 and 8.

26. Rule 2 defines the expressions "commanding officer", "competent military authority", "competent naval authority" and "competent Air Force authority". Rules 3, 4, 5 and 8 are as follows:

"Rule 3. Where a person subject to Military, Naval or Air Force Law is brought before a Magistrate and charged with an offence for which he is liable to be tried by a Court-martial, such Magistrate shall not proceed to try such person or to inquire with a view to his commitment for trial by the Court of Session or the High Court for any offence triable by such Court, unless

- (a) he is of opinion, for reasons to be recorded, that he should so proceed without being moved thereto by competent Military, Naval or Air Force Authority, or
- (b) he is moved thereto by such authority.

Rule 4. Before proceeding under Clause (a) of Rule 3, the Magistrate shall give a written notice to the Commanding Officer of the accused and until the expiry of a period of—

(i) three weeks, in the case of a notice given to a Commanding Officer in command of a unit or detachment located in any of the following areas of the hill districts of the State of Assam, that is to say—

- (1) Mizo,
- (2) Naga Hills
- (3) Garo Hills
- (4) Khasi and Jaintia Hills; and
- (5) North Cachar Hills.

(ii) seven days, in the case of a notice given to any other Commanding

Officer in command of a unit of detachment located elsewhere in India. from the date of the service of such notice, he shall not—

- (a) convict or acquit the accused under Sections 243, 245, 247 or 248 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (Act 5 of 1898), or hear him in his defence under Section 244 of the said Code; or
- (b) frame in writing a charge against the accused under Section 254 of the said Code; or
- (c) make an order committing accused for trial by the High Court or the Court of Session under Section 213 of the said Code; or
- (d) transfer the case for inquiry or trial under Section 192 of the said Code.

Rule 5. Where within the period of seven days mentioned in Rule 4, or at any time thereafter before the Magistrate has done any act or made any order referred to in that rule, the Commanding Officer of the accused or competent Military, Naval or Air Force authority, as the case may be, gives notice to the Magistrate that in the opinion of such authority, the accused should be tried by a court-martial, the Magistrate shall stay proceedings and if the accused is in his power or under his control, shall deliver him, with the statement prescribed in sub-section (1) of Section 549 of the said Code to the authority specified in the said sub-section.

Rule 8. Notwithstanding anything in the foregoing rules, where it comes to the notice of a Magistrate that a person subject to Military, Naval or Air Force Law has committed an offence, proceedings in respect of which ought to be instituted before him and that the presence of such person cannot be procured except through military, naval or Air Force authorities, the Magistrate may by a written notice require the Commanding Officer of such person either to deliver such person to a Magistrate to be named in the said notice for being proceeded against according to law, or to stay the proceedings against such person before the court-martial, if since instituted, and to make a reference to the Central Government for determination as to the Court before which proceedings should be instituted".

27. The main contention that has been urged by Mr. Kohli, on behalf of the appellant is that in this case the Assistant Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction to proceed with the trial of the appellant as he has not complied with the provisions of Rules 3 and 4. From a perusal of Rules 3 and 4, the scheme of these two rules appears to us to be that the Magistrate shall not proceed to try a Military personnel unless he forms an opinion for reasons to be recorded to proceed with the trial without being moved by the competent authority or the Magistrate has been so moved by the competent Military authority; but before a Magistrate decides to proceed with the trial without being moved by the competent authority, he is obliged to give a written notice to the Commanding Officer of the accused and is further enjoined not to pass any of the orders enumerated as (a) to (i) in Rule 4, till the expiry of the said period of the notice mentioned in Clauses (1) and (2).

28. According to Mr. Kohli the criminal Court has not been moved by the competent military authority to conduct the trial before it. The Magistrate has not also framed an opinion that he should try the accused without being moved by the competent military authority. Even assuming that he has formed such an opinion, he has not given the requisite notice and waited for the required period under R. 4. Hence it is argued that the criminal court has acted illegally in proceeding with the trial of the appellant. We are not inclined to accept this contention of the learned counsel.

29. Rule 4 is related to cl. (a) of Rule 3 and will be attracted only when the Magistrate proceeds to conduct the trial without having been moved by the competent military authority. It is no doubt true that in this case the Assistant Sessions Judge has not given a written notice to the Commanding Officer as envisaged under Rule 4. But, in our view, that was unnecessary. When the competent military authorities, knowing full well the nature of the offence alleged against the appellant, had released him from military custody and handed him over to the civil authorities, the Magistrate was justified in proceeding on the basis that the military authorities had decided that the appellant need not be tried by the court-martial and that he could be tried by the ordinary criminal Court.

30. We will now refer in some detail to the particular circumstances in this case which will show that there has been no violation of the Act or the Rules. The High Court has pointed out that the District Inspector of Police, P. W. 12, has stated that after recording the statements of some of the witnesses he proceeded to the Cantonment area and contacted the officer commanding the Punjab Regiment No. 24. The said witness has also stated that with the permission of the said officer he interrogated the accused and examined his person. The Commanding Officer was not willing to hand over the accused till he obtained permission from the headquarters. The Commanding Officer assisted P. W. 12 in carrying out the identification parade of the accused. The High Court has further stated that after having full knowledge of the charge against the appellant and the investigation that was being conducted by the police, the competent authority ultimately released the appellant from military custody and delivered him to the civil authorities for being tried according to law.

31. From these circumstances, in our opinion, it is legitimate to hold that the competent authority had handed over the appellant to the civil authorities for being tried after the former had considered the question of so handing him over after consultations with the headquarters. In these circumstances, it follows that the designated officer under Section 125, who had the discretion in the first instance to decide that the appellant should be tried before a Court-martial had decided to the contrary. Surrender of the accused to the civil authorities to be dealt with by the latter, after being made aware of the nature of the offence against the appellant, is a clear indication that the decision of the military authorities was that the appellant need not be tried by a Court-martial and that his trial can take place before the criminal Court. Under these circumstances there was no occasion to follow the procedure under Section 126 or Rule 4 as the military authorities had made abundantly clear that the appellant need not be tried by the court-martial. That being so, it would have been altogether superfluous for the Magistrate to give the notice as required by the said provisions. Rules 5 and 8 have no application to the facts of this case.

32. We agree with the High Court that there has been a substantial compliance with the relevant provisions of the Act and the Rules and hence the trial of the appellant and his conviction by the learned Assistant Sessions Judge are valid and legal.

33. In the result, the appeal fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

S. Mohan Kumaramangalam, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. S. S. Javali and R. B. Datar, Advocates, with him), for Appellant; Mrs. Shyamla Pappu and S. P. Nayar, Advocates, for Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

MITTER, J. — The appellant was convicted of an offence under Section 5 (1) (d) read with Section 5 (2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act and sentenced to six months' simple imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000/-; in default of payment of fine to further simple imprisonment for six months by the Special Judge, Bidar in Special Case No. 1/2 of 1963. He appealed to the High Court against the conviction and on the admission of the appeal, the High Court suo motu gave him notice for enhancement of the sentence. Subsequently the State also filed Criminal Petition No. 126 of 1965 for enhancement of the sentence on the ground that under Section 5 (2) of the Act the minimum punishment was to be not less than one year unless the Court for special reasons thought fit to do otherwise. The reasons given by the Special Judge did not appeal to the High Court which dismissed the appeal of the appellant and confirmed the conviction under Section 5 (1) (d). It reduced the fine of Rs. 1,000/- to one of Rs. 100/- but increased the sentence under Section 5 (2) of the Act for the offence under Section 5 (1) (d) to simple imprisonment for one year and in default of payment of fine to simple imprisonment for one month.

2. The main point advanced by Mr. Mohan Kumarmangalam appearing for the appellant was that the sanction to investigate the offence given by the Magistrate was not proper inasmuch as he had not recorded any reason as to why he had given permission to an inspector of police, P. Ramarao, to investigate the offence of criminal misconduct of obtaining illegal gratification.

3. Section 5-A of the Act contains certain safeguards from undue harassment of public officers from enquiry by ensuring that the investigation in regard to the offences specified is conducted by a police officer of certain designated high ranks except under orders of a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the First Class. A police inspector does not come within the designated ranks and such an officer could only investigate into the offences wherewith the appellant was charged by order of a Magistrate.

4. In order to appreciate the point urged on behalf of the appellant, it is necessary to state in brief the events as disclosed in the prosecution case culminating in his trial and conviction. The appellant was the District Surgeon in Bidar in 1961. One Abdul Qadeer who figured as the complainant in the case had submitted an application to the office of the Divisional Controller M. G. R. T. D. Gulbarga for an appointment to the post of bus conductor. To get the appointment he had to secure a certificate of training in First Aid. He approached the appellant who told him that no such certificate could be given from his office as there was no arrangement there for giving the requisite training. After rejecting the complainant's written application to him as the District Medical Officer Bidar, the appellant asked the complainant to meet him at his residence the same day. On the 2nd March the complainant met the appellant as requested when the appellant demanded Rs. 150/- for issuing the required certificate. The appellant informed the complainant that as the certificate had to be issued without training the money asked for must be paid. The complainant met the appellant again on the 22nd March and told him that he had arranged for Rs. 50/- and could pay some more money afterwards. On receipt of Rs. 50/- the appellant gave him a letter addressed to the Medical Officer Bhalki and two type-written first aid certificate forms. The appellant asked the complainant to give Rs. 20 to the Medical Officer at Bhalki for getting the latter to sign the certificate and bring the same back to the appellant for his signature on payment of a further sum of Rs. 50/-. On the 25th March 1961 the complainant went to Bhalki and gave the letter and the forms of the certificate to the Medical Officer. He also paid Rs. 20/- and got the certificate signed by the said officer without receiving any training. On the 28th March the complainant met the appellant again at his residence and asked for his signature on the certificates. The appellant demanded a sum of Rs. 50/- for the purpose. The complainant told him that all that he could put up was Rs. 40/-. The appellant agreed to accept this amount but said that he would not put his signature on the certificate and issue the same unless the money and the certificates were brought to him immediately. The complainant then went to the Inspector of Police, Anti-Corruption, Gulbarga, P. W. 20, and narrated all the above facts in a written complaint. On the same day the Police Inspector submitted an application to the First Class Magistrate, Bidar asking for permission under Section 5-A of the Act to investigate the offences under Section 161, I. P. C. and Section 5 (1) (d) of the Act against the District Medical Officer. The application shows that the complainant had arranged for Rs. 40/- to be paid to the appellant and records the numbers of the currency notes to be given to the appellant. The Inspector stated in the application:

"The nature of the complaint is such as warrants immediate investigation".

The Police Inspector prayed that permission be accorded as asked for and that he be authorised to conduct the search of the person of the appellant and the place where he kept the bribe amount after accepting it from the complainant.

5. The Magistrate who figured as a prosecution witness in the case gave evidence to the effect that the application was put up before him on the 29th March and that the Police Inspector had gone to him along with the complainant and the currency notes, that he had examined the complainant and made his order in writing then and there. The written order shows that the Magistrate was satisfied that there were grounds to investigate the case against the District Surgeon and that he was authorising the Inspector to investigate into the matter to search the person of the appellant and the premises where he kept the money and to seize the same and any other incriminating material. The Magistrate made it clear in his evidence that he had not enquired of the Inspector as to whether the Superintendent of Police or the Deputy Superintendent of Police were present at the headquarters; further the Inspector did not tell him why he and not the High ranking officer mentioned in Section 5-A of the Act was going to investigate the case. In his cross-examination he stated that he felt that the matter was urgent and the offence was likely to be committed; otherwise he would not have given the sanction.

6. The evidence led by the prosecution shows that after the usual formalities a trap was laid and search witnesses P. W. 3 and P. W. 5 besides another Sub-Inspector, P. W. 18, were present on the occasion. The complainant went inside the examination room of the appellant after the patients had left. On enquiry by the appellant as to whether he had brought the money the complainant handed the four currency notes smeared over with phenolphthalein and the appellant put them in the pocket of his shirt. The appellant asked for the certificates which were handed over to him by the complainant and counter-signed by the appellant. On a signal being given the police, the search witnesses along with others entered the room. On being accosted the appellant denied having taken any money. He was asked to dip his hands in water mixed with soda powder. The water turned pink indicating the presence of phenolphthalein on the appellant's hand. On the Inspector asking him to produce the money the appellant put his hand into his shirt pocket and brought out the notes and a punchnama was drawn up.

7. It is unnecessary for the purpose of the appeal to examine the facts of the case in any greater detail. It appears that on April 1, 1961, P. W. 20 filed a second application before the Magistrate praying for sanction to investigate further into the case which was given. On August 14, 1961, on the transfer of P. W. 20 from Bidar his successor-in-office, Inspector Desai, asked for the Magistrate's sanction to carry on the investigation from the state at which it had been left by his predecessor and the Magistrate accorded permission. A charge sheet was filed and the case registered in the Court of the Special Judge on November 14, 1961. On August 13, 1962 the appellant presented two applications before the Special Judge by one of which he questioned the legality of the proceedings inter alia on the ground that the investigation had not been carried on by a designated officer under Section 5-A of the Act. The Special Judge went into the question in some detail and held that on the facts of the case there was "administrative exigency to permit the Inspector to investigate". He however directed re-investigation as from April 1, 1961 by the Deputy Superintendent, Anti-Corruption Measures, State Level, Bangalore.

8. The matter was taken up in revision to the High Court of Mysore. The High Court dismissed the revision petition. In rejecting the appeal the High Court relying upon the decision in Rishbud v. State of Delhi, 1955-1 SCR 1150 = (AIR 1955 SC 196), that the illegality, if any, had not resulted in miscarriage of justice observed that the Magistrate was satisfied about the urgency of the matter and had therefore sanctioned permission to investigate.

9. Before us counsel for the appellant referred to the evidence of the Police Inspector P. W. 20 to show that neither the Deputy Superintendent of Police nor the Superintendent of Police at Bidar had been contacted. It was argued that Section 5-A did not require that any officers of the Anti-Corruption department could investigate into the matter and it should be held that the Magistrate did not apply his mind to the facts of the case when he granted the sanction to investigate to P. W. 20.

10. It is quite clear from the facts and circumstances that the Magistrate felt that the case required immediate investigation and it was only on that basis that he gave permission to the Police Inspector to investigate into the matter. The fact that there is no mention in the Magistrate's order as to whether he had asked the Inspector about the possibility of the case being investigated into by a Deputy Superintendent of Police is not of much moment in the circumstances of the case.

11. However the question still remains as to whether any prejudice was caused to the appellant by reason of the investigation being conducted and the trap being laid by the Inspector of Police in the way it was done. According to the High Court even if there was any irregularity committed at the early stage no miscarriage of justice had been caused thereby as re-investigation from April 1, 1961 had been made by P. W. 21, a Superintendent of Police, Bellary. It must be added here that the trap could not be laid for a second time and therefore the Special Judge could not have done anything about the initial investigation. He did all that was possible to be done on the facts of the case, namely, order investigation from April 1, 1961, that is to say, immediately after the happening of the incident and the carrying out of the trap.

12. Counsel contended—as was done before the High Court—that prejudice had been caused to his client by the selection of the search witnesses, P. W. 3 and P. W. 5 who were said to be friendly with P. W. 18, the Assistant Sub-Inspector taking part in the laying of the trap and the conduct of the search. All that P. W. 3 said in his evidence was that he knew both the complainant and the appellant-accused and that when he was in front of the New Mysore Cafe P. W. 18, a police officer had approached him and requested him to act as a search witness. P. W. 5 in his evidence similarly stated that he had been asked by P. W. 18 to be a search witness.

He further admitted that he had formerly worked in the Reserve Police when P. W. 18 was a tenant under him. At the most, all that can be said with regard to P. Ws. 3 and 5 is that P. W. 18 knew them but counsel was not able to point out any fact disclosing intimacy of P. W. 20 with the search witnesses.

13. The judgment of the High Court shows that no suggestion was made that either P. W. 18 or P. W. 20 bore any ill-will towards the appellant to get up a false case against him and the High Court found no reason for rejecting the evidence of P. W. 3, one of the search witnesses, as also of P. W. 18 and P. W. 20.

14. The High Court rejected the version put forward by the appellant with regard to the incident on the 29th March as false. According to the appellant, the complainant had rushed into his examination room when he was treating another patient and had thrust the money into his pocket—a story which is palpably false, for if he had not touched the notes himself the soda water solution would not have turned pink when he dipped his hand in it.

15. Although laying the trap was part of the investigation and it had been done by a police officer below the rank of a Deputy Superintendent of Police, we cannot on that ground hold that the sanction was invalid or that the conviction ought not to be maintained on that ground. It has been emphasised in a number of decisions of this Court that to set aside a conviction it must be shown that there has been miscarriage of justice as a result of an irregular investigation. The observations in State of Madhya Pradesh v. Mubarak Ali, 1959 Supp 2 SCR 201 at pp. 210 and 211 = (AIR 1959 SC 707 at pp. 710-711) to the effect that when the Magistrate without applying his mind only mechanically issues the order giving permission the investigation is tainted cannot help the appellant before us.

16. Counsel for the appellant wanted to raise an additional ground by producing certain documents and relying on certain rules of the Mysore Medical Department to show that the appellant in countersigning the certificate issued by the Medical Officer of Bidar, P. W. 27, was only doing a professional act by way of private practice and that he was entitled to payment of fees therefor. Such a case requires investigation into facts, which were not brought forward in the trial and never mentioned either before the Special Judge or before the High Court. We therefore refused permission to counsel to urge the additional grounds.

17. In the result, the appeal fails and the conviction is maintained. The appellant's bail bond is cancelled and he must surrender himself for serving out the sentence awarded by the High Court.

Appeal dismissed.

J. M. SHELAT,
C. A. VAIDIALINGAM AND
P. JAGANMOHAN REDDY, JJ.

Haji Hafiz Tanwar Ahmed, Appellant v. Union of India, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 138 of 1967, D/- 24-11-1970.

Arbitration Act (1940), Section 20 — Arbitration agreement — Arbitrator to be appointed under Section 19, Defence of India Act, 1939 and not under Section 20 (4) — Award given by Arbitrator appointed under S. 20 (4) held on facts not binding. Civil Rule No. 1324 of 1961, D/- 14-3-1963 (Cal), Reversed.

Certain disputes having arisen in respect of property belonging to the appellant which were requisitioned for the Government of India under the Defence of India Rules, the appellant entered into an agreement with the Governor-General in Council in the matter of payment of compensation. The agreement was signed by the appellant but was not executed by any one on behalf of the Governor-General in Council or the Government of West Bengal which had requisitioned the property on behalf of the Central Government. The agreement also contained an arbitration clause in case of dispute. The properties were derequisitioned and the appellant who claimed compensation etc., applied to the Court under Section 20 of the Arbitration Act on the basis of the clause in the agreement to appoint an arbitrator. The parties to the application were the appellant and the Province of Bengal and not the Governor-General in Council. The Court passed an order in terms of the application and set out the items of difference to be decided by the arbitrator and fixed a date to submit the award. After years of this order the Government of West Bengal in exercise of powers under Section 6 of Requisitioned Land (Continuance of Powers) Act (1947). Section 6 of General Clauses Act and a Central Government Notification appointed an arbitrator. This appointment was not made under the Arbitration Act but was one made under Section 19 of the Defence of India Act (1939) and therefore the arbitrator was not bound by the order of the Court or the questions framed for adjudication and the date fixed for submission of award. The arbitrator could not conclude the arbitration. Subsequently the Government appointed another arbitrator M. and in this order there was no mention of Section 19 of Defence of India Act but it referred to the original agreement between parties and the order of the Court for appointment of arbitrator. The arbitrator started the proceedings afresh, gave a fresh number to the case and issued notices to parties under the Arbitration Act as well as Section 19 of Defence of India Act. There were successive appointments of arbitrators who continued these proceedings and the award was ultimately passed.

Held, that the award was without jurisdiction as the appointment of M. arbitrator was under Section 20(4) of the Arbitration Act which did not apply and it was made in pursuance of the order passed in suit to which the Union Government was not a party and the agreement on the basis of which the order was passed was never executed by either of the two Governments. Civil Rule No. 1324 of 1961, D/- 14-3-1963 (Cal), Reversed.

Mr. A. K. Sen, Senior Advocate, (Mr. D. N. Mukherjee, Advocate, with him), for Appellant; Mr. B. R. L. Iyengar, Senior Advocate, (Mr.

*(Civil Rule No. 1324 of 1961, D/- 14-3-1963 — Cal.)

Ram Punjani Advocate, with him), for Respondent.

SHELAT, J. — This appeal by special leave, arises out of a writ petition filed by the appellant under Article 227 of the Constitution in the High Court of Calcutta for quashing an Arbitrator's award for compensation in respect of certain premises belonging to him which were requisitioned for the period between March 1942 to November 1947 under Rule 75-A of the Defence of India Rules, 1939. The award granted compensation to the appellant at the rate of Rs. 475/- per month for the said period during which the premises remained under requisition as against the appellant's claim for Rs. 6 lacs and odd.

2. Certain disputes having arisen as early as 1944, the appellant entered into an agreement, dated January 27, 1944, with the Governor-General in Council. Under Clause (1) of the said agreement the appellant agreed to accept Rs. 475/- per month "for the said property in full settlement of the construction for structure" from March 15, 1942 till the Government remained in possession and the requisitioning thereof continued. Clause (5) of the said agreement provided for arbitration by an arbitrator to be appointed by Government in case of any dispute or difference arising out of or concerning the said requisitioned property. It further provided that such arbitration would be governed by the Arbitration Act, 1940.

3. It is not disputed that although the said agreement was signed by the appellant it was not executed by any one on behalf of the Governor-General in Council or the Government of West Bengal which had requisitioned the said property on behalf of the Central Government. Even so, the Government paid and the appellant received Rs. 475/- as monthly compensation. According to the appellant, he accepted the compensation at the rate of Rs. 475/- per month under protest. According to him, that was the rent he used to receive from his tenant for one of the buildings and the compensation for other structures and premises had not been taken into account.

4. The said property was de-requisitioned with effect from November 28, 1947. In 1948, the appellant filed an application under Section 20 (1) of the Arbitration Act in the Court of the 5th Subordinate Judge, Alipore, which was numbered as Suit No. 169 of 1948, requiring the Government of West Bengal to appoint an arbitrator as provided under Clause (5) of the said agreement. The parties to the said application were the appellant (the plaintiff) and the Province of Bengal, but not the Governor-General in Council. A number of contentions were raised on behalf of the Province of Bengal including waiver, estoppel and acquiescence, but no question was at that time raised that the said agreement was not valid and binding as it had not been signed by any one on behalf of the Government of West Bengal or the Governor-General in Council. By its order dated September 13, 1949 the Court allowed the said suit No. 169 of 1948 and ordered that the said agreement be filed by the Government of West Bengal. In passing the said order the learned Judge observed that the monthly compensation of Rs. 475/- mentioned in Clause (1) of the said agreement was in respect of the structures standing on the said property only and that no compensation had been agreed upon in respect of the lands, tanks, loss of fishery rights and other rights, and therefore, disputes regarding compensation in respect of them had arisen which required arbitration as provided by Clause (5) of the said agreement. The learned Judge set out the items of differences to be decided by the arbitrator to be appointed in terms of Clause (5) of the said agreement.

5. Although the said order required the arbitrator to submit his award by September 11, 1950, no steps were taken to proceed with the arbitration until February 9, 1955 when the Government of West Bengal, in exercise of the power conferred by Section 6 of the Requisitioned Land (Continuance of Powers) Act (XVII of 1947), Section 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1897 and Government of India, Defence Department Notification No. 1365-OR-42, dated September 19, 1942, appointed one D. N. Chakravarty, Additional District Judge, 24-Parganas as the Arbitrator. The said Chakra-varty not having been able to complete the arbitration, the Government of West Bengal, by its order dated September 19, 1955, appointed his successor, one G. S. Chatterji as the Arbitrator.

6. It appears that these appointments were made not under the Arbitration Act, 1940, but under Section 19 of the Defence of India Act, 1939. That being so, the Arbitrator was not bound by the terms of the said order of the Court and the questions which the Court had framed for adjudication by the Arbitrator or the date fixed for making the award. The arbitration case was registered by the said Chakravarty as Arbitration Case No. 5 of 1955. When the said Chatterji took it over, he continued the said arbitration proceedings under the said number, namely, No. 5 of 1955.

7. During the pendency of the said arbitration proceedings before the said Chatterji, the Government of West Bengal applied on December 6, 1955 for amendment of its written statement filed on July 12, 1955. By that amendment it submitted that the appellant's claim was unenforceable as (a) the said agreement, dated January 27, 1944 was not executed by the Governor-General in Council or any one on his behalf, and (b) the Governor-General in Council was not a party to the said Suit No. 169 of 1948, nor to the instant reference. On December 23, 1955, the said Chatterji allowed the said amendment application.

8. The said Chatterji also could not conclude the arbitration. Consequently, the Government of West Bengal, by its order dated December 16, 1957, appointed one G. Kumar as the Arbitrator. It is important to bear in mind that the said order did not mention or refer to Section 19 of the Defence of India Act, but on the other hand recited the said agreement dated January 27, 1944, the said Suit No. 169 of 1948 and the said order passed therein by the learned Subordinate Judge, Alipore.

9. The said G. Kumar started the arbitration proceedings afresh on December 19, 1955 substituting the Union of India in place of the State of West Bengal and also registered them under a new number, namely,

No. 280 of 1957, and issued notices both under Section 20 of the Arbitration Act and Section 19 of the Defence of India Act. The parties also filed their statements afresh, adopting the statements filed by them previously, the Union of India adopting the statement filed earlier by the State of West Bengal. The said G. Kumar also did not complete the arbitration and thereupon the Governor of West Bengal successively appointed N. G. Ganguli, P. M. Lahiri and lastly, W. Basu Mazumdar as arbitrators on January 2, 1958, January 21, 1959 and November 10, 1960 respectively. It was the last named arbitrator who ultimately completed the arbitration and whose award, dated March 18, 1961 has been challenged in the present proceedings.

10. We may note that all the arbitrators appointed after the said G. Kumar continued the arbitration proceedings under the number given to them by him, namely, No. 280 of 1957. As in the case of the said G. Kumar, Ganguli and Lahiri, the order dated November 10, 1960 appointing the said W. Basu Mazumdar was passed in the name of Governor of West Bengal and recited the requisitioning and the derequisitioning of the said property, the said agreement dated January 27, 1944 and its principal terms, the said Suit No. 169 of 1948 and the said order passed therein by the Subordinate Judge, Alipore. No reference whatsoever was made therein of Section 19 of the Defence of India Act or any other provision thereof. Thus, it is clear that whereas the first two appointments of the said Chakravarty and Chatterji were made under Section 19 of the Defence of India Act, the rest of the orders, it would appear, were issued under Section 20 (4) of the Arbitration Act and in pursuance of the order passed in the said Suit No. 169 of 1948.

11. Such a conclusion appears to be borne out by an application made on behalf of the Union of India on February 8, 1961 before the said W. Basu Mazumdar. It appears, the appellant contended that it was necessary to obtain an order from the Subordinate Judge, Alipore for extension of time for making the award as the order of that Court in Suit No. 169 of 1948 had fixed time within which the ward had to be made, i. e., by September 11, 1950. Counsel for the Union of India, no doubt, argued that no such order was necessary as the said order of the Court at Alipore was not binding on the Union of India as the Union of India was not a party to that suit. It is true that the Arbitrator accepted the submission made on behalf of the Union and passed an order to the effect that there was no necessity for obtaining an order for extension of time. It is significant however, that counsel for the Union of India did not argue that an order for extension of time was unnecessary because the arbitration proceedings were under the Defence of India Act and not under Section 20 of the Arbitration Act, nor did the arbitrator so rule in his said order, nor did he rule that his appointment was under Section 19 of the Defence of India Act, and therefore, the order of the learned Subordinate Judge fixing the time for making the award was not binding on him. It is true that Section 19 of the Defence of India Act was referred to by counsel for the Union of India, but that was done with a view to assert that if the award was made under Section 19 which provided for payment of compensation, the award would not have to be filed before the Alipore Court as under the rules framed by the Government on March 30, 1943 the award would by itself operate as a decree. What is important is that it was never contended at that time that the arbitrator was appointed under Section 19 of the Defence of India Act and not under Section 20 (4) of the Arbitration Act, and therefore, the Alipore Court's order was not binding on the arbitrator or that that Court had no jurisdiction to fix the time for making the award or extending it. Besides, if the appointment of the said G. Kumar, and following him that of the said Ganguli, Lahiri and Mazumdar, had been made under the Defence of India Act, 1939, or understood to be so, as were the appointments of the first two arbitrators, namely, Chakravarty and Chatterji, there was no need for the said G. Kumar, to start the arbitration proceedings afresh, register a new number to the proceedings, namely No. 280 of 1957 (which number was continued by his successors, including the present Arbitrator, W. Basu Mazumdar) and for the parties to file afresh their claims and counter-statements. Furthermore, in para 13 of the writ petition the appellant expressly averred that the appointments beginning from that of the said G. Kumar and ending with that of the present arbitrator, the said Mazumdar, were all made under the Arbitration Act pursuant to the said order passed in Suit No. 169 of 1948. Neither the Union of India nor the State of West Bengal contradicted or denied the said averments. Indeed, neither of them filed any counter-affidavit at all.

12. In these circumstances, the contention of counsel for the appellant is that the appointment of W. Basu Mazumdar was under S. 20 (4) of the Arbitration Act and not under S. 19 of the Defence of India Act, 1939. That being so, the argument proceeded, no such appointment under S. 20 (4) could be made as, on the contention raised by the Union of India and the State of West Bengal, the said agreement dated January 27, 1944 was not valid and binding as it was never executed by or on behalf of the Governor-General in Council or the Province of West Bengal, and that therefore, the said award was without jurisdiction.

13. This very contention was raised by the appellant before the High Court. But the High Court rejected it relying on a Memorandum, No. LA/VIII/50 of 1941-42, dated November 18, 1960, by the office of the Land Acquisition Collector, Alipore in which it was stated that the reference to arbitration was under S. 19 of the Defence of India Act. The High Court concluded that in view of this Memorandum

"it cannot be said that Shri Basu Mazumdar was not appointed an Arbitrator under the Defence of India Act. Therefore, the argument of Mr. Sen Gupta that the impugned order was passed without jurisdiction cannot be accepted."

14. But the appointment of the said Basu Mazumdar as the arbitrator was surely not made by or under the said Memorandum. That was done by the Government Order bearing No. 16516 Reqn., dated November 10, 1960.

That order, as already stated, recited the said agreement dated January 27, 1944, the said Suit No. 169 of 1948 and the said order passed therein by the learned Subordinate Judge, Alipore. There was no reference in the order of appointment passed in the name of the Governor to S. 19 of the Defence of India Act, 1939 or to any other provision thereof, nor did it have any reference to any notification under which the Governor of West Bengal had been authorised to appoint an arbitrator on behalf of the Union of India in arbitration proceedings against it. Obviously, the order of appointment was, like the previous three orders appointing the said G. Kumar, Ganguli and Lahiri, under the Arbitration Act pursuant to the said order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Alipore in Suit No. 169 of 1948 on the footing of the said agreement which, according to the case of the Union of India and the State of West Bengal, was never executed by or on behalf of either of them.

15. It is clear that at the time of the appointment of the said Basu Mazumdar as arbitrator the Land Acquisition Department (Requisition Branch) of the Government of West Bengal and the Land Acquisition Collector, Alipore were acting at cross purposes, the former thinking that the appointment had to be made under the Arbitration Act, 1940 pursuant to the said order in Suit No. 169 of 1948 and the latter thinking that the order of appointment was made under S. 19 of the Defence of India Act, 1939. But if the said appointment was under the Defence of India Act, surely the order of appointment would have said so, as it did when the first two arbitrators, viz., the said Chakravarti and Chatterji, were appointed.

16. Mr. Iyengar, appearing for the Union of India, candidly conceded that he was not in a position to support the judgment of the High Court on the basis of the said Memorandum of the Land Acquisition Collector. He, however, urged that even if the order of appointment under S. 20 (4) of the Arbitration Act were to be found invalid, as the Union of India was not a party to the said Suit No. 169 of 1948 and the said agreement dated January 27, 1944 was not executed by any one on behalf of either of the two Governments, the appointment should still be upheld if the power of appointment were to be found under the Defence of India Act, 1939. He argued that the fact that the said G. Kumar substituted the Union of India as a party in place of the State of West Bengal and started the arbitration proceedings afresh giving a new number to them indicated that he was consciously acting under S. 19 of the Defence of India Act and breaking away from the Arbitration Act. The fact that he issued notices under S. 19 of the Defence of India Act was another fact showing that he was acting under the Defence of India Act.

17. The difficulty which, however, faces us is that the appointment orders, right from the order of appointment of the said G. Kumar to that of the present arbitrator, were all made and continued to be made under Section 20 (4) of the Arbitration Act and none of them referred to S. 19 of the Defence of India Act. The said G. Kumar substituted the Union of India and issued notices under S. 19 of the Defence of India Act because the liability to pay compensation arose under S. 19. The order-sheet of the arbitration proceedings shows that as early as February 8, 1961 the appellant had pointed out that an order for extending the time for making the award from the Court of the Fifth Subordinate Judge, Alipore, who had passed the order in Suit No. 169 of 1948 under S. 20 of the Arbitration Act, was necessary. As stated earlier, he was overruled on the ground that that order was not binding on the arbitrator as the Union of India was not a party to the said suit. On being overruled, the appellant appeared before the Arbitrator under protest and his doing so was recorded. At that time at least a fresh order of appointment under S. 19 of the Defence of India Act could have been made. Instead, the Arbitrator went on with the arbitration proceedings under the order of his appointment in pursuance of the said order in Suit No. 169 of 1948. Once the said G. Kumar, on an application by the Government of West Bengal, had substituted the Union of India as the opposite party in the arbitration proceedings before him, a fresh order under the Defence of India Act ought to have been passed.

In any event, when his successors, including the said Basu Mazumdar were appointed, orders of their appointments could have been passed under the Defence of India Act. Surprisingly, all those orders uniformly recited the said agreement, the said Suit No. 169 of 1948 and the order passed therein under the Arbitration Act. When all these orders were so passed, it is difficult for us to uphold them as if they were passed under the Defence of India Act. Apart from that difficulty, there is such a vast difference between the amount awarded and the claim made by the appellant, (into the merits of which we do not enter) that it would be hardly fair or just to stretch the language of the several orders of appointment of arbitrators and treat them as having been made under S. 19 of the Defence of India Act. Reluctant as we are, in view of the long time that has elapsed, we are compelled, in the circumstances and for the reasons earlier set out, to accept the contentions of Mr. Sen and order that the award was without jurisdiction as the appointment of the said W. Basu Mazumdar as the arbitrator was under S. 20 (4) of the Arbitration Act, which did not apply and it was made in pursuance of the said order passed in Suit No. 169 of 1948 to which the Union of India was not a party and the said agreement, on the basis of which the said order was passed, was never executed by either of the two Governments. The delay in the appellant's recovering compensation due to him has primarily arisen because of the lapse of time between the time when the property was derequisitioned in 1947 and the time when the impugned award was at last made.

18. The consequence is that the High Court's order is set aside and the appeal is allowed with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Appeal No. 2214 of 1969 and Civil Appeal No. 308 of 1970, D/- 19-8-1970.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 265 — Tax by rule or regulation cannot be imposed unless specially authorised by statute.

No tax can be imposed by any bye-law or rule or regulation unless the statute under which the subordinate legislation is made specially authorises the imposition even if it is assumed that the power to tax can be delegated to the executive. The basis of the statutory power conferred by the statute cannot be transgressed by the rule-making authority. A rule-making authority has no plenary power. It has to act within the limits of the power granted to it. (Para 18)

(B) M. P. Excise Act (2 of 1915), Ss. 25 and 62—Duty on excisable articles under S. 25 — Liquor which contractors failed to lift is not an excisable article — Notification issued under S. 62 imposing duty on liquor which contractors failed to lift is, therefore, invalid. 1965 MPLJ (Notes) 95, Reversed. (Para 17)

HEGDE, J.: These appeals by certificates granted by the High Court of Madhya Pradesh raise common questions of law. Hence we propose to dispose them of by a common order.

2. The appellants herein are excise contractors. They are the successful bidders for some of the shops in Madhya Pradesh for the financial year 1964-65. The sale memorandum on the strength of which auction was held intimated that the successful bidders will have to sell a prescribed minimum quantity of liquor in their shops and if they fail to take delivery of the prescribed minimum quantity of liquor, they will have to pay excise duty on the quantity of liquor which they failed to take delivery. On March 20, 1964, the Government in the purported exercise of its powers under cls. (d) and (h) of S. 62 of the Madhya Pradesh Excise Act, 1915 (Act II of 1915) (to be hereinafter referred to as the Act) issued the notification

No. 144401089/V-SR amending the rules published on January 7, 1960. This notification prescribed that the conditions mentioned therein should be inserted in the licences to be issued to the successful bidders. At present we are only concerned with Clause 2 (C) thereof. That Clause reads:

"The minimum quantity for taking issues from the Warehouse for sale is fixed at 3213 p. litres spiced spirit and 25940 p. litres plain spirit. You shall be liable to make good every month the deficit of monthly average of the total minimum duty on or before the 10th day of each month following the month to which the deficit duty relates."

3. The appellants are challenging the validity of this notification.

4. An excise licensee in Madhya Pradesh as in other places has to meet three charges namely (1) he has to pay the prescribed licence fee for obtaining the privilege of vending liquor in a shop (2) he has to pay the price of the liquor purchased by him — generally the Government has a monopoly of liquor manufacture and (3) he has to pay excise duty on the liquor purchased by him.

5. In this case there is no dispute that the appellants had paid the prescribed licence fee, the price of the liquor purchased by them and also the duty on the liquor taken delivery of by them. The dispute centres round the duty required to be paid by them under the impugned clause in the notification of March 20, 1964 referred to earlier. The controversy is whether the said clause is valid in law.

6. The Government of Madhya Pradesh have issued demand notices on the appellants demanding the duty said to be due from them as per the impugned clause in the notification. The appellants have challenged the validity of these notices as well.

7. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that excise duty is a tax. The same can be levied on the basis of a valid law. No tax can be levied on the basis of a contract nor can tax be levied by executive orders. Tax can only be levied by the legislature. Hence the fact that cl. 2 (C) in the notification of March 20, 1964 has been made a part of the licence condition is immaterial. It was contended that the question for decision is whether the Government of Madhya Pradesh was entitled to amend its rules and add the impugned clause as a part of the licence conditions.

8. The scheme of the Act is similar to the scheme of other excise Acts in this country. In the Act 'Excise Duty' and "countervailing duty" have been defined (in S. 2 (6-A)) as meaning any such excise duty or countervailing duty, as the case may be, as is mentioned in entry 51 of list II in the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution, which entry reads:

"Duties of excise on the following goods manufactured or produced in the State and countervailing duties at the same or lower rates on similar goods manufactured or produced elsewhere in India:

(a) alcoholic liquors for human consumption;

(b) opium, Indian hemp and other narcotic drugs and narcotics; but not including medicinal and toilet preparations containing alcohol or any substance included in sub-paragraph (b) of this entry."

9. In view of this entry the State is competent to levy excise duty only on goods manufactured or produced in the State. The expression "export" is defined in S. 2 (9) of the Act as meaning to take out of the State otherwise than across customs frontier as defined by the Central Government. The term manufacture is defined in S. 2 (14). It reads:

"manufacture" includes every process whether natural or artificial by which any intoxicant is produced or prepared and also redistillation and every process for the rectification, flavouring, blending or colouring of liquor."

10. The word "transport" is defined in S. 2 (19) to mean to move from one place to another within the State.

11. The excise duty is a duty on manufacture or production and countervailing duty is a tax imposed on excisable articles brought into the State from other parts of the country. Chapter V of the Act deals with Duties and Fees. That Chapter contains four sections, viz. Ss. 25, 26, 27 and 27-A. Section 25 deals with duty on excisable articles. Section 26 prescribes the ways of levying such duty. Section 27 provides for payment for grant of leases — licence fee. Section 27A saves the duties that were being levied at commencement of the Constitution. Herein we are not concerned with section 27-A.

12. Section 25 reads:

"Duty on excisable articles: (1) An excise duty or a countervailing duty as the case may be, shall, if the State Government so direct, be levied on excisable articles—

- (a) imported; or
- (b) exported; or
- (c) transported; or

(d) manufactured, cultivated or collected under any licence granted under S. 13; or

(e) manufactured in any distillery established, or any distillery or brewery licensed under this Act;

Provided that it shall be lawful for the State Government to exempt any excisable article from any duty to which the same may be liable under this Act.

(2) Duty may be imposed under sub-section (1) at different rates according to the places to which any excisable article is to be removed or according to the strength and quality of such article.

(3) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1) duty shall not be imposed thereunder on any article which has been imported into India and was liable, on such importation, to duty under the Sea Customs Act, VIII of 1878 or the Indian Tariff Act, VIII of 1894."

13. Under this section excise duty or countervailing duty can be imposed on excisable articles when they are either imported or exported or transported or manufactured or cultivated or collected and not otherwise.

14. Section 26 deals with the manner of levying the duty. It says:

"Subject to such rules regulating the time, place and manner as the State Government may prescribe, such duty shall be levied rateably on the quantity of excisable articles imported, exported, transported, collected or manufactured in or issued from a distillery, brewery or warehouse.

Provided that:

(1) duty may be levied—

(a) on intoxicating drugs by an acreage rate levied on the cultivation of the hemp plant or by a rate charged on the quantity collected;

(b) on spirit or beer manufactured in any distillery established or any distillery or brewery licensed under this Act—

(i) in accordance with such scale of equivalents calculated on the quantity of materials used, or by the degree of attenuation of the wash or wort, as the case may be, as the State Government may prescribe, or

(ii) by rate charged directly on the materials used;

(c) on tari, by a tax on each tree from which the tari is drawn.

(2) Where payment is made upon the issue of an excisable article for sale from a warehouse, it shall be at the rate of duty in force on the date of issue of such article from the warehouse."

Section 27 says:

"Payment for grant of leases: Instead of or in addition to any duty leviable under this chapter, the State Government may accept payment of a sum in consideration of the grant of any lease under section 18."

15. Section 18 deals with the power to grant lease of right to manufacture or right to sell excisable articles.

16. The only other relevant section for our present purpose is Section 62 which confers power on the State Government to make rules. Clause (1) of that section says:

"The State Government may make rules for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this Act."

In Clause 2 reliance was placed on sub-cl. (d) and (h). Those sub-clauses read:

"In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision, the State Government may make rules. . . .

xx xx xx

(d) regulating the import, export, transport, manufacture, collection, possession, supply or storage of any intoxicant, or the cultivation of the hemp plant and may, by such rules, among other matters—

(i) regulate the tapping of tari producing trees, the drawing of tari from such trees, the marking of the same and the maintenance of such marks;

(ii) declare the process by which spirit shall be denatured and the denaturation of spirit ascertained, and

(iii) cause spirit to be denatured through the agency or under the supervision of its own officers;

(d-1) regulating the import, export, transport, collection, possession, supply, storage or sale of Mahua flowers prescribing licences and permits therefor, throughout the State or in any specified area or for any specified period."

x x x

(h) prescribing the authority by the form in which and the terms and conditions on and subject to which any licence, permit or pass shall be granted, and may by such rules among other matters—

(i) fix the period for which any licence, permit or pass shall continue in force,

(ii) prescribe the scale of fees or the manner of fixing the fees payable in respect of any such license, permit or pass,

(iii) prescribe the amount of security to be deposited by holders of any licence, permit or pass — for the performance of the conditions of the same;

(iv) prescribe the account to be maintained and the returns to be submitted by licence holders, and

(v) prohibit or regulate the partnership in, or the transfer of, licences."

17. Neither S. 25 or S. 26 or S. 27 or S. 62 (1) or cls. (d) and (h) of S. 62 (2) empower the rule-making authority viz. the State Government to levy tax on excisable articles which have not been either imported, exported, transported, manufactured, cultivated or collected under any licence granted under S. 13 or manufactured in any distillery established or any distillery or brewery licensed under the Act. The legislature has levied excise duty only on those articles which come within the scope of S. 25. The rule-making authority has not been conferred with any power to levy duty on any articles which do not fall within the scope of S. 25. Therefore it is not necessary to consider whether any such power can be conferred on that authority. Quite clearly the State Government purported to levy duty on liquor which the contractors failed to lift. In so doing it was attempting to exercise a power which it did not possess.

18. No tax can be imposed by any bye-law or rule or regulation unless the statute under which the subordinate legislation is made specially authorises the imposition even if it is assumed that the power to tax can be delegated to the executive. The basis of the statutory power conferred by the statute cannot be transgressed by the rule-making authority. A rule-making authority has no plenary power. It has to act within the limits of the power granted to it.

19. We are of the opinion that the impugned rule as well as the demands are not authorised by law. Hence we allow these appeals as well as the writ petitions from which these appeals arise and quash the impugned notification as well as the demand notices. The State of Madhya Pradesh shall pay the costs of the appellants in both these appeals — hearing fee one set.

Appeals allowed.

Public servant charged for serious misdemeanour — Preliminary enquiry necessary before lodging FIR — Duty of enquiring officer.

Before a public servant, whatever be his status, is publicly charged with acts of dishonesty which amount to serious misdemeanour and a first information is lodged against him, there must be some suitable preliminary enquiry into the allegations by a responsible officer. The lodging of such a report against a person, specially one who occupied the top position in a department, even if baseless, would do incalculable harm not only to the officer in particular but to the department he belonged to, in general. If the Government had set up a Vigilance and Anti-Corruption Department as was done in the State of Madras and the said department was entrusted with enquiries of this kind, no exception can be taken to an enquiry by officers of this department but any such enquiry must proceed in a fair and reasonable manner. The enquiring officer must not act under any preconceived idea of guilt of the person whose conduct was being enquired into or pursue the enquiry in such a manner as to lead to an inference that he was bent upon securing the conviction of the said person by adopting measures which are of doubtful validity or sanction. The means adopted no less than the end to be achieved must be impeccable. In ordinary departmental proceedings against a Government servant charged with delinquency, the normal practice before the issue of a charge-sheet is for some one in authority to take down statements of persons involved in the matter and to examine documents which have a bearing on the issue involved. It is only thereafter that a charge sheet is submitted and a full-scale enquiry is launched. When the enquiry is to be held for the purpose of finding out whether criminal proceedings are to be resorted to the scope thereof must be limited to the examination of persons who have knowledge of the affairs of the delinquent officer and documents bearing on the same to find out whether there is prima facie evidence of guilt of the officer. (Para 17)

Where the enquiring officer was a high ranking police officer, simply because he was technically not exercising powers under Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code in that a formal first information report had not been lodged he should not overlook or deliberately overstep the limits of investigation contained in the said Chapter. Howsoever serious the crime and howsoever incriminating the circumstances may be against a person supposed to be guilty of a crime the Code of Criminal Procedure aims at securing a conviction if it can be had by the use of utmost fairness on the part of the officers investigating into the crime before the lodging of a charge sheet.

As soon as it became clear to such enquiring officer that the servant appeared to be guilty of serious misconduct, it was his duty to lodge a FIR and proceed further in the investigation according to Chapter XIV of the Code. (Paras 19, 21, 24 and 25)

View of the High Court in AIR 1968 Mad 117 with regard to the date of the commencement of the investigation so far as Chap. XIV of Cr. P.C. was concerned held not correct.

(Para 29)

(B) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 156 and 337 — Prevention of Corruption Act (1947), Ss. 5 and 5A — Preliminary enquiry — Granting of amnesty by enquiring Officer to persons who were to be examined as prosecution witnesses, is highly irregular—Neither Code nor Act recognises immunity from prosecution — Grant of pardon is not in discretion of police authorities. AIR 1968 Mad 117, Affirmed.

(Para 26)

(C) Constitution of India, Art. 14 — Discrimination — Public servant, head of department found actively responsible for directing commission of offences by his subordinates in particular manner — He cannot be allowed to take plea that subordinates must also be joined as co-accused with him. AIR 1968 Mad 117, Affirmed.

(Para 27)

(D) Prevention of Corruption Act (1947), S. 5 (1) (b) — "Any person having any connection with the official functions of himself" — Includes any subordinate of person who accepts valuable things. AIR 1968 Mad 117, Reversed.

The portion of provision "whom he knows to have been or to be or to be likely to be concerned in any proceeding or business transacted or about to be transacted by him or" qualifies the expression "any person" in the same way as the portion reading "having any connection with the official function of himself". So read "any person having any connection with the official functions of himself" would include any subordinate of the person who accepts the valuable thing. The words "of himself" do not refer to the person in the expression "any person" but refers to the pronoun "he" at the beginning of the sub-section. A subordinate of the public servant would have connection with his official functions. The sub-section aims at folding within its ambit not only outsiders "who are likely to be concerned in any proceeding or business transacted or about to be transacted" by the public officer but also any subordinate or any other person who is connected with the official functions of the public servant. Nos. 9 to 11 of 1967); Mr. S. Govind Swaminadhan, Advocate-General for the State of Tamil Nadu (M/s. A. V. Rangam, K. S. Ramaswami Thevar and N. S. Sivan, Advocates, with him), for Respondent (In Cr. As. Nos. 233 to 235 of 1966) and for Appellants (In Cr. As. Nos. 9 to 11 of 1967).

MITTER, J.: These six appeals arise out of certificates granted by the High Court of Madras arising out of two Writ Petitions and a petition under Ss. 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure filed in that court by P. Sirajuddin, the appellant in the first set of appeals. It is not necessary to give an outline of these petitions as the salient features thereof appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court and the substance thereof is dealt with hereafter.

2. The facts are as follows. The appellant was the Chief Engineer, Highways and Rural Works, Madras having risen from the status of a District Board Engineer in which capacity he joined service in the year 1935. He attained the age of 55 years on March 14, 1964 on which date he was asked to hand over charge of his office to one Shiv Sankar Mudaliar, Superintending Engineer, Madras. He expected to be retained in service up to the age of 58, a privilege said to be normally accorded to person physically and otherwise fit for public service. It appears that on March 1, 1964 a copy of a petition concerning him and dated February 28, 1964 addressed to the Minister, Public Works by one Rangaswami Nadar was received by the Chief Minister of the State. It is said that apart therefrom allegations about want of rectitude of the appellant had already reached the Government. The Chief Minister asked the Director of Vigilance and Anti-Corruption to make confidential enquiries. On March 10, 1964 Government received a note from the said officer which cast serious aspersions on the appellant's reputation and mentioned quite a few instances of his lack of probity. The endorsement of the Chief Minister on the note read:

"Secretary, P. W. D. I had this (petition already mentioned) from the Director of Vigilance. This may be immediately looked into. I have asked the Director to pursue the investigation further."

Thereupon the Chief Secretary orally ordered a full-fledged enquiry in the matter and the Deputy Superintendent of Police, Vigilance and Anti-Corruption one G. K. Ranganathan, was asked to make a personal enquiry and report under the supervision of R. N. Krishnaswamy. The Director of Vigilance registered an enquiry numbering 8/HD/64 on 15th April, 1964. That the enquiry was taken up with great keenness appears from a note of Ranganathan to the effect that he would require the assistance of two Inspectors to assist him. There can be no doubt that the enquiry launched by the Vigilance and Anti-Corruption Department was a very thorough and searching one. A very large number of persons were examined by the Vigilance and Anti-Corruption officers including 18 public servants who spoke to matters touching the allegations against the appellant. Statements in writing signed by the makers were taken from no less than nine public servants regarding the above and two of them, namely, S. Sivasubrahmanyam and S. Chidambaram were given certificates assuring them immunity from prosecution for the part played by them in rendering aid to the appellant in the commission of his malpractices. These two persons occupied the position of an Assistant Engineer and a Junior Engineer and were subordinates of the appellant. On June 27, 1964 a first information report was lodged in the Directorate of Vigilance and Anti-Corruption, Madras and the case recorded as 3/AC/64. The offences to be investigated into were under Ss. 161 and 165 of the Indian Penal Code and S. 5 (1) (a) and (d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. The complaint was made by Ranganathan, Deputy Superintendent of Police, Vigilance and Anti-Corruption Department to the Additional Superintendent of Police in the same department. It is pertinent to note that the Directorate of Vigilance and Anti-Corruption which had been set up under a Government order dated 8th April 1964 was declared to be a 'police station' under clause (s) of sub-section (1) of section 4 of the Code of Criminal Procedure by a notification dated May 25, 1964 and by another notification of the same date the Governor of Madras conferred upon the Director and the Superintendents of Police of the said Directorate all the ordinary powers of a Magistrate of the First Class under section 5-A of the Prevention of Corruption Act within the limits of the whole of the State of Madras except the Presidency Town. The complaint by Ranganathan to the Additional Superintendent of Police, Vigilance and Anti-Corruption, gave details of various malpractices with which the appellant was charged. He was inter alia said to have obtained various articles of furniture with the help of Sivasubrahmanyam and Chidambaram mentioned above by paying only a small fraction of the cost and asking them to adjust the balance by manipulations of the muster rolls claims. He was also said to have got his residence whitewashed in similar manner. It was also alleged against him that he had constructed a kungallow by diverting building materials allotted for the construction of the Cauveri bridge at Tiruchirapalli. The complaint wound up with a paragraph to the effect that a criminal case would be registered against him as a regular investigation alone would facilitate the collection of additional evidence by way of recovery of valuable things which he had obtained from his subordinates by various illegal means and in addition more incriminating evidence was likely to be forthcoming during the investigation. Sanction to prosecute the appellant was obtained on September 27, 1964 and a charge-sheet was filed against the appellant in the Court of the Special Judge, Madras on October 5, 1964 numbered as C. C. No. 10 of 1964. No less than 47 witnesses had been examined during the investigation following the first information report and at least nine of them had been previously examined at what was termed as a "preliminary or detailed enquiry."

3. No less than 19 malpractices were alleged against him in different paragraphs of the charge sheet and the appellant was charged with having obtained for himself or for members of his family various valuable things from his subordinates by corrupt and illegal means and by abusing his position as a public servant. The charges were for offences already mentioned.

4. In the enquiry the appellant was supplied with copies of records on which the prosecution proposed to rely including the statements recorded by the investigating officer which according to the appellant showed prima facie that a number of public servants who had given the statements were themselves responsible for commission of various offences including falsification of accounts and forgery of public records.

5. Before the Special Judge the appellant moved an application for discharge under Section 251-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure on the ground that the charges against him were groundless. In that application he also complained: (a) that the instances alleged against him related mostly to his personal matters unconnected with his official functions; (b) that none of the items referred to in the charge had been handed over to or delivered to him for the purpose of securing an advantage in order to attract Section 5 (1) (d) read with Section 5 (2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, and (c) that on the admitted statements of the public servants they were liable to be charged with various offences and he had been greatly prejudiced by discriminatory treatment.

6. While holding that there was no basis of charging the appellant under Section 165, I. P. C., or under Section 5 (2) read with Section 5 (1) (b) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, the Judge held that a charge could be framed against him under Section 5 (2) read with Section 5 (1) (d) of the Act. He observed that the "investigating officers evidently felt that if they arraigned the subordinate officers along with the appellant the case may fail for lack of evidence".

7. Against that order dated January 16, 1965 the Public Prosecutor preferred Cr. R. C. 294 of 1965 and the appellant preferred Cr. M. P. 934 of 1965 under Section 561-A of the Code, for quashing the proceedings and discharging him as the charge was groundless. The appellant filed two writ petitions before the High Court, namely, one for a writ of mandamus directing the forbearing from prosecution of C. C. No. 10 of 1964 and a second for a writ of certiorari to quash the order of the Special Judge mentioned above. There was a petition under Sections 435/439 of the Criminal Procedure Code for revision of the order of the Special Judge and one under Section 561-A of the Code for quashing his said order.

8. The High Court dealt with all the Writ Petitions and the different allied matters together. Broadly speaking, it was urged before the High Court:

(1) There had been such a violent departure from the provisions of the Code in the matter of investigation and cognizance of offences as to amount to denial of justice and to call for interference by the issue of prerogative writs.

(2) The investigation and prosecution were wholly mala fide and had been set afoot by his immediate junior officer, one Sivasankar Mudaliar, Superintending Engineer, Madras who was related to the Chief Minister of the State.

(3) The appellant's case was being discriminated from those of others who though equally guilty according to the prosecution case were not only not being proceeded against but were promised absolution from all evil consequences of their misdeeds because of their aid to the prosecution.

9. In his petition for the issue of a writ of mandamus by the High Court the appellant stated that it was only by perusing copies of the statements furnished to him under Section 173 (4), Criminal P. C., that he found that 18 public servants had stated having given him valuables without any or adequate consideration and that it was at his instance that they had committed offences of criminal conspiracy under Section 120-B, I. P. C., and criminal breach of trust of Government moneys under Section 409, I. P. C. besides falsification of accounts etc. His positive case was that the Director of Vigilance and Anti-Corruption had obtained signed statements which were confessional and self-incriminatory from persons who were going to be called as witnesses by giving them assurances of immunity. These assurances were not only directed towards immunising them from prosecutions but also any departmental action likely to affect adversely the makers of the statements. The case of discrimination was based mainly on the above averments that the Directorate had singled him out leaving others who were equally guilty. According to the appellant this also showed mala fides and malice directed towards him.

10. Another main argument which was canvassed before the High Court related to the applicability of Sections 162 and 163 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the effect of the violation thereof, if any. For the appellant, it was argued that the taking of signed statements from persons who were eventually going to be examined in the criminal proceedings by giving them assurances of immunity and thereafter relying on their subsequent unsigned statements as those under Section 161 (3) of the Code for the purpose of Section 173 amounted to a fraud on the procedure established by law. It was contended that as the statements recorded under Section 161 were the material on which the Special Judge had to consider whether the charge was groundless under Section 251-A of the Code, the illegality "corroding the foundation vitiated the enquiry and necessitated the discharge of the appellant".

11. The High Court examined the case made out in the affidavits of the appellant and the counter affidavits on behalf of the State

It expressed great dissatisfaction at the variance in the attitude of the State in the different affidavits in that whereas in the first counter-affidavit there was no contradiction of the appellant's averment that assurances of immunity had been given to all the 18 persons examined before the lodging of the first information report, the plea put forward in a subsequent affidavit was that such assurance had been given only to two persons, namely, the two subordinates of the appellant and only after signed statements had been given by them. The Court was however not satisfied that a direction was called for for the prosecution of the subordinate officers also. Further the High Court was not impressed with the plea of hostile discrimination against the appellant observing that although the "policy of not securing judicial pardon to accomplices by bringing them as approvers but retaining them at the sole discretion of the prosecution might be open to question" "that cannot by itself invalidate the arraignment of the persons actually put up for trial" specially where the person charged was in a position to wield influence and power over those asked by him to aid him in commission of misconduct.

12. Although not of the view that the record before it established a case of mala fide or hostile discrimination against the appellant which called for the quashing of the proceedings, the High Court took the view that the investigation of the case under Chapter XIV of the Code should be held to have commenced when Ranganathan, the Deputy Superintendent of Police, started the enquiry on 15th April 1964 on the reasoning that though "an enquiry may start with shadowy beginnings and vague rumours, once a police officer forms a definite opinion that there are grounds for investigating a crime, an investigation under the Code has started". According to the High Court

(a) "substantial information and evidence had been gathered before the so-called first information report was registered".

(b) the police officer who had conducted the enquiry prior to 27th June 1964 was a person competent to enter upon investigation:

(c) admittedly there had been an earlier probe by the Vigilance Department prior to 10th March 1964 on the basis whereof he was not re-employed;

(d) there was definite information to the Government contained in the report dated 13th March, 1964 relating to corrupt activities of the appellant; and

(e) the "delay on the part of the investigating officer in registering the first information report may be an irregularity, but certainly the statements recorded subsequent to the receipt of definite information of the commission of an offence in gathering evidence of the offence would nonetheless be statements recorded during investigation and hit by Section 162 of the Criminal Procedure Code".

13. With regard to the disregard of the provisions of Sections 162 and 163 of the Code, the High Court observed that the result of taking his signature to a statement would be to tie a witness down to the statement or at least to give him the impression that he would not be free to make a different statement at the trial but the statement of a witness at the trial would not become inadmissible by reason of his having signed a statement before going into the witness box. Reference was made to several decisions bearing on Section 162 of the Code and in particular to Zahiruddin v. King Emperor, 74 Ind App 80 at p. 85 = (AIR 1947 PC 75 at p. 77), that the evidence of a witness who had previously signed a statement in writing did not become inadmissible or vitiate the whole proceeding although the value of the evidence would be seriously impaired thereby.

14. The Court seems to have been of the view that it was the duty of the Magistrate or the presiding Judge on discovering that a witness had while giving evidence, made material use of a statement given by him to the police to disregard the evidence of that witness as inadmissible. The High Court's definite conclusion was that there had been a deliberate violation of the provisions of the Code and a departure from a recognised and lawful procedure for investigation.

15. With regard to the propriety of taking self-incriminatory statements even when there had been no assurance of immunity from prosecution, the High Court observed that as the learned Advocate-General for the State had stated that the record of manipulations in the muster rolls by the subordinate officers of the appellant had to be disregarded as not proper material for consideration as the "Special Judge had not considered these vitiating features in regard to the documents placed before him while ordering the framing of charges against the appellant" it was unnecessary to examine the question at length.

16. The High Court found partly in favour of the appellant and held that the order of the Special Judge directing the framing of a charge on consideration of the statements before him under Section 173 (4) of the Code without reference to the illegalities in the investigation should be quashed. The High Court further directed the Special Judge to take up the matter once again and consider the case excluding from consideration all statements recorded under Sections 161 (3) and 164 which were found vitiated in the light of the observations made by it. A direction was also given to exclude portions of the statements which were self-incriminatory and confessional in character of the maker even if the same did not otherwise violate the provisions of Sections 162 and 163 of the Code.

17. In our view the procedure adopted against the appellant before the laying of the first information report though not in terms forbidden by law, was so unprecedented and outrageous as to shock one's sense of justice and fairplay. No doubt when allegations about dishonesty of a person of the appellant's rank were brought to the notice of the Chief Minister it was his duty to direct an enquiry into the matter. The Chief Minister in our view pursued the right course. The High Court was not impressed by the allegation of the appellant that the Chief Minister was moved to take an initiative at the instance of a person who was going to benefit by the retirement of the appellant and who was said to be a relation of the Chief Minister. The High Court rightly held that the relationship between the said person and the Chief Minister, if any, was so distant that it could not possibly have influenced him and we are of the same view. Before a public servant, whatever be his status, is publicly charged with acts of dishonesty which amount to serious misdemeanour or misconduct of the type alleged in this case and a first information is lodged against him, there must be some suitable preliminary enquiry into the allegations by a responsible officer. The lodging of such a report against a person, specially one who like the appellant occupied the top position in a department, even if baseless, would do incalculable harm not only to the officer in particular but to the department he belonged to, in general. If the Government had set up a Vigilance and Anti-Corruption Department as was done in the State of Madras and the said department was entrusted with enquiries of this kind, no exception can be taken to an enquiry by officers of this department but any such enquiry must proceed in a fair and reasonable manner. The enquiring officer must not act under any preconceived idea of guilt of the person whose conduct was being enquired into or pursue the enquiry in such a manner as to lead to an inference that he was bent upon securing the conviction of the said person by adopting measures which are of doubtful validity or sanction. The means adopted no less than the end to be achieved must be impeccable. In ordinary departmental proceedings against a Government servant charged with delinquency, the normal practice before the issue of a charge-sheet is for someone in authority to take down statements of persons involved in the matter and to examine documents which have a bearing on the issue involved. It is only thereafter that a charge-sheet is submitted and a full-scale enquiry is launched. When the enquiry is to be held for the purpose of finding out whether criminal proceedings are to be resorted to the scope thereof must be limited to the examination of persons who have knowledge of the affairs of the delinquent officer and documents bearing on the same to find out whether there is prima facie evidence of guilt of the officer. Thereafter the ordinary law of the land must take its course and further inquiry be proceeded with in terms of the Code of Criminal Procedure by lodging a first information report.

18. The Code of Criminal Procedure is an enactment designed inter alia to ensure a fair investigation of the allegations against a person charged with criminal misconduct. Chapter XIV of the Code gives special powers to the police to investigate into cases whether cognizable or non-cognizable in the manner provided therein. Section 160 empowers a police officer making an investigation to require the attendance before himself of any person who appears to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case. Section 161 (1) gives him the right to examine orally any person supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case. Although bound to answer questions put to him, sub-section (2) of the section exempts a person from answering any question which would have a tendency to expose him to a penal charge or to a penalty for forfeiture. Under sub-s. (3) the police officer is empowered to reduce into writing any statement made to him in the course of such examination. Section 162 (1) expressly lays down that such a statement made in the course of an investigation if reduced into writing is not to be signed by the maker thereof and no part of such statement except as expressly provided is to be used for any purpose at any enquiry or trial in respect of any such offence under investigation at the time when the statement was made. The only exceptions to these are cases when the statement falls under Section 32, Clause (1) of the Evidence Act and to statements which are covered by Section 27 of that Act. The obvious idea behind this provision is that an over-zealous police officer may not misuse his position by getting a statement in writing signed by the maker which would tend to pin him down to the statement but leave him free to speak out freely when called to give evidence in Court. In order that statements made in the course of such investigations be recorded without any pressure or inducement by an investigating officer, Section 163 (1) lays down an embargo on the investigating authorities using any inducement, threat or promise to the maker which might influence his mind and lead him to suppose that thereby he would gain any advantage or avoid any evil in reference to his conduct as disclosed in the proceedings. It is to be noted that whereas the other sections hereinbefore referred to contain guidelines for the police officers in making investigation, this section expressly provides that any person in authority even if he is not a police officer must guide himself accordingly, in case where a crime is being investigated under this Chapter of the Code. All this is however subject to the provisions of sub-section (2) which allows a person to make any statement against his own interest by way of confession if he does so of his own free will. Even then the law enjoins by Section 164 that such a statement or confession can only be recorded by a Magistrate of the Class mentioned therein and even such a Magistrate must explain to the person making the confession before recording the same, that he is not bound to make it and if he does so it may be used as evidence against him. Further the Magistrate must make sure that the person was making the confession voluntarily and not acting under any pressure from an outside source.

19. All the above provisions of the Code are aimed at securing a fair investigation into the facts and circumstances of the criminal case: howsoever serious the crime and howsoever incriminating the circumstances may be against a person supposed to be guilty of a crime the Code of Criminal Procedure aims at securing a conviction if it can be had by the use of utmost fairness on the part of the officers investigating into the crime before the lodging of a charge sheet. Clearly the idea is that no one should be put to the harassment of a criminal trial unless there are good and substantial reasons for holding it.

20. Section 169 of the Code empowers a police officer making investigation to release an accused person from custody if there is no sufficient evidence or reasonable ground of suspicion to justify the forwarding of him to a Magistrate by taking a bond from him with or without sureties. Section 173 enjoins upon a police officer to complete the investigation without unnecessary delay and forward to a Magistrate empowered to take cognizance of the offence a report in the form prescribed by Government setting forth inter alia the names of the parties, the nature of the information and the names of the persons who appear to be acquainted with the circumstances of the case and to communicate to the State Government the action taken by him to the person, if any, by whom information relating to the commission of the offence was first given. When a report has been made under this section it is the duty of the officer in charge of the police station to furnish to the accused before the commencement of the enquiry or trial a copy of the report above mentioned and of the first information report under Section 154 and of all other documents or relevant extracts on which the prosecution proposes to rely including the statements and confessions, if any recorded under Section 164 and the statements recorded under sub-section (3) of Section 161 of all persons whom the prosecution proposes to examine as its witnesses.

21. In our view the enquiring officer pursued the investigation with such zeal and vigour that he even enquired into and took down statements of persons who were supposed to have provided the appellant with articles of food worth trifling sums of money long before the launching of the enquiry. The whole course of investigation as disclosed in the affidavits is suggestive of some predetermination of the guilt of the appellant. The enquiring officer was a high-ranking police officer and it is surprising that simply because he was technically not exercising powers under Chapter XIV of the Criminal Procedure Code in that a formal first information report had not been lodged he overlooked or deliberately over-stepped the limits of investigation contained in the said Chapter. He recorded self-incriminating statements of a number of persons and not only secured their signatures thereto obviously with the idea of pinning them down to those but went to the length of providing certificates of immunity to at least two of them from the evil effects of their own misdeeds as recorded. It was said that the certificates were given after the statements had been signed. It is difficult to believe that the statements could have been made before the grant of oral assurances regarding the issue of written certificates. There can be very little doubt that the persons who were given such immunity had made the statements incriminating themselves and the appellant under inducement, threat or promise as mentioned in Section 24 of the Indian Evidence Act.

22. It is no doubt the duty of the State to track down and punish all delinquent officers but it is certainly not in accordance with justice and fairplay that their conviction should be sought for by such questionable means.

23. The office of the Directorate of Vigilance and Anti-Corruption Department, Madras became a police station for the purpose of the Criminal Procedure Code under sub-clause (s) of sub-section (1) of Section 4 of the Code by a notification dated 25th May, 1964. Prior to that it was only functioning under a Memorandum No. 1356/64-2 dated 8th April, 1964 when it was set up to ensure the maintenance of the highest standard of integrity and probity in public servants. If the investigation had been taken up after May 25, 1964 it would have been one under Chapter XIV of the Code without any doubt.

24. Although we are not disposed to concur with the view that the investigation under Chapter XIV of the Code started as early as 15th April, 1964 we are of opinion that there was no warrant for the Vigilance and Anti-Corruption Department which was in charge of one of the highest police officers of the State to disregard the provisions of Sections 162 and 163 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The investigation was of a type more thorough and elaborate than is usually to be found; as noticed already it was in charge of a senior police officer who had the assistance of two police inspectors in the matter. No blame attaches to them for making enquiries of a large number of persons, but the whole course of investigation is suggestive of guidance by someone who was intimately familiar with the affairs of the appellant and his department and throwing out scents which the investigating officers were only too keen to pick up and follow. The appellant may have been guilty of all the charges levelled against him but we cannot approve of the manner in which the investigation against him was conducted and an attempt made to lay a guideline for the persons who were to be cited as prosecution witnesses in their evidence at the trial. To say the least it would be surprising to find so many persons giving confessional and self-incriminatory statements unless they had been assured of immunity from the evil effects thereof whether oral or in writing.

25. There can be no excuse for the Directorate of Vigilance and Anti-Corruption for proceeding in the manner adopted in the preliminary enquiry before the lodging of the first information report. As soon as it became clear to them—and according to the High Court it was before March 13, 1964 in which we concur—that the appellant appeared, to be guilty of serious misconduct, it was their duty to lodge such a report and proceed further in the investigation according to Chapter XIV of the Code. Their omission to do so cannot prejudice the appellant and the State ought not to be allowed to take shelter behind the plea that although the steps taken in the preliminary enquiry were grossly irregular and unfair, the accused cannot complain because there was no infraction of the rules of the Evidence Act or the provisions of the Code.

26. In our view the granting of amnesty to two persons who are sure to be examined as witnesses for the prosecution was highly irregular and unfortunate. It was rightly pointed out by the High Court:

"Neither the Criminal Procedure Code nor the Prevention of Corruption Act recognises the immunity from prosecution given under these assurances and that the grant of pardon was not in the discretion of police authorities".

27. We are not impressed by the argument that the appellant was singled out from a number of persons who had aided the appellant in the commission of various acts of misconduct and that they were really in the position of accomplices. It was pointed out by the High Court that the prosecution may have felt that "if the subordinate officers were joined along with the appellant as accused the whole case may fall for lack of evidence". In our view, if it be a fact that it was the appellant who was the head of the department actively responsible for directing the commission of offences by his subordinates in a particular manner, he cannot be allowed to take the plea that unless the subordinates were also joined as co-accused with him the case should not be allowed to proceed.

28. It was contended before us by the learned Advocate-General for the State of Madras that both the High Court and the Special Judge had gone wrong in the interpretation of Section 5 (1) (b) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. Having heard counsel on both sides, we find ourselves unable to sustain the view of the High Court on this point. Omitting the portions of the section which are not relevant it reads:

"5 (1) A public servant is said to commit the offence of criminal misconduct—

(a) * * * *

(b) if he habitually accepts or obtains for himself any valuable thing without consideration or for a consideration which he knows to be inadequate, from any person (whom he knows to have been, or to be, or to be likely to be concerned in any proceeding or business transacted or about to be transacted by him, or) having any connection with the official functions of himself, or
* * * *

The portion of the sub-section within brackets in our view qualifies the expression "any person" in the same way as the portion reading "having any connection with the official function of himself". So read "any person having any connection with the official functions of himself" would include any subordinate of the person who accepts the valuable thing. The words "of himself" do not refer to the person in the expression "any person" but refers to the pronoun "he" at the beginning of the sub-section. A subordinate of the public servant would have connection with his official functions. In our view the sub-section aims at folding within its ambit not only outsiders "who are likely to be concerned in any proceeding or business transacted or about to be transacted" by the public officer but also any subordinate or any other person who is connected with the official functions of the public servant.

29. In the result, all the appeals are dismissed. Although we do not endorse the view of the High Court with regard to the date of the commencement of the investigation so far as Chapter XIV of the Code of Criminal Procedure is concerned, we do hold that serious irregularities were committed in the so-called "full-fledged enquiry" to the prejudice of the appellant. We do not however feel that there is any need to modify the directions given by the High Court to the Special Judge who will follow the directions of the High Court in addition to the modification indicated by us.

Appeals dismissed.

H. H. Maharajadhiraja Madhav Rao Jivaji Rao Scindia Bahadur and others etc., Petitioners v. Union of India, Respondent. H. H. Maharaja Satbir Singh of Jind, Intervener.

Writ Petns. Nos. 376 to 383 of-1970,
D/- 15-12-1970.

(A) Constitution of India, Article 366 (22) — In recognising or derecognising Ruler, President exercises executive and not political power. (Constitution of India, Article 53). AIR 1970 SC 1946 Rel. on; AIR 1955 SC 549, AIR 1964 SC 648 and AIR 1965 SC 1798, Distinguished.

(Per majority; Ray, J., Contra):— The functions of the State are classified as legislative, judicial and executive: the executive function is the residue which does not fall within the other two functions. Constitutional mechanism in a democratic polity does not contemplate existence of any function which may qua the citizens be designated as political and orders made in exercise thereof are not liable to be tested for their validity before the lawfully constituted courts. In recognising or de-recognising a person as a Ruler the President does not exercise any political power. He exercises only an executive function. (Paras 94, 96)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 362 — Agreements between Rulers and Union of India were not political agreements — (Constitution of India, Arts. 32, 363).

(Per majority, Ray J. Contra):

The history of negotiations which culminated in the integration of the territories of the Princely States before the commencement of the Constitution clearly indicates that the recognition of the status of the Rulers and their rights was not temporary, and also not liable to be varied or repudiated in accordance with "State policy". The relevant agreements in which the rights of the Rulers were recognised were not political agreements and were not liable to be set at naught by the unilateral act of the Union of India. By the merger agreements the Princes ceased to retain any vestige of sovereign rights or authority qua their former States. They acquired the status of citizen of India. Power of the President to determine the status of the Rulers by cancelling or withdrawing their recognition to effectuate the policy of the Government to abolish the concept of Rulership is liable to be challenged under Article 32 of the Constitution.

(C) Constitution of India, Art. 291 — Under the article there is an obligation on the part of the Union to pay and a corresponding right in the Rulers to require payment of privy purse. (1908) ILR 35 Cal 837 and AIR 1922 Pat 529, Rel. on; (1875) 19 Eq 509 and (1906) 1 KB 613 and AIR 1964 SC 1903, Distinguished.

(Per majority, Mitter and Ray, JJ. Contra.)

The words of Article 291 clearly raise an obligation on the Union to pay the privy purse. Our Constitution does not recognize any sequence of priorities. But that does not alter the fundamental character of a charge that it specifies a fund out of which satisfaction of the expenditure charged must be made, and the prescribed expenditure shall have priority in payment to the person for whose benefit the expenditure is charged on the Fund.

The constitutional obligation to proceed in the manner set out in Arts. 112, 113 and 114 imposed upon the President and the Parliament implies a right in the person or persons in respect of whom the expenditure is to be incurred. By leaving the payee innominate in Article 291 (a) no intention to raise an obligation without a corresponding right is disclosed. The expression "shall be charged on, and paid out of the Consolidated Fund" in Article 291, is intended to enact that the privy purse "shall be charged on, and shall be paid out of the Consolidated Fund". The expression "sums so paid to any Ruler" does not mean "sums if paid to any Ruler": it means that "sums when paid to any Ruler".

The Article does not raise an imperfect obligation. An obligation which arises out of a constitutional provision to pay to the citizen sums of money in recognition of obligations of the predecessor Government can scarcely be called imperfect. Article 291 does not merely incorporate recognition of the obligation to pay the privy purse under covenants incurred by the Government of the Dominion of India: it gives rise to a liability de hors the covenants.

The obligation which arose out of the merger agreement and was on that account an act of State shed its original character on acceptance by the Constitution. The entity obliged to pay the privy purse did not after the Constitution remain the same; the source out of which the obligation was to be satisfied was not the original source; the incident relating to exemption from payment of tax was vitally altered, and the amount also was in some cases different. Whereas the liability to pay the privy purse to the Rulers under the merger agreements was assured by the Dominion Government, the Constitution imposed upon the Union Government a directive to pay the privy purse.

(D) Constitution of India, Art. 362 — Article implies acceptance and recognition of personal rights, privileges and dignities but guarantee under the article relates to original covenants and agreements.

The structure of Article 362 is somewhat different from Article 291. That Article imposes restrictions upon the exercise of legislative and executive functions. Recognition of the personal rights and privileges of the Rulers arising out of the covenants is not explicit, but the injunction that in the exercise of legislative and executive power due regard shall be had to the guarantees, clearly implies acceptance and recognition of the personal rights, privileges and dignities.

The Constitution thereby affirms the binding force of the guarantees and assurances under the covenants, of personal rights, privileges and dignities, but unlike the guarantee of payment of the privy purse in Article 291, the guarantee under Article 362 is of the obligations under the original covenants and agreements executed by the Rulers, barring those regarding which there is express legislation enacted to give effect to certain personal rights and privileges, e. g. Wealth-tax Act, 1957, Gift-tax Act, 1958, notifications under the Sea Customs Act, 1878, Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 and Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898.

(E) Constitution of India, Art. 363 — Dispute in respect of right to privy purse under Article 291 is not barred under Article 363. AIR 1964 SC 1043 Rel. on; Observations in AIR 1965 SC 1798 held to be obiter and not correct. (Constitution of India, Articles 299, 366 (22), 362).

(Per majority, Mitter and Ray, JJ. Contra.):

Exclusion of the jurisdiction of the Courts is emphasized by the non obstante clause with which Article 363 commences. Notwithstanding the investment of jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court by Article 32, notwithstanding the jurisdiction conferred upon the High Courts by Article 226, and notwithstanding the competence of all Civil Courts to decide disputes in respect of the obligations of the Union, it is declared that the Courts have no jurisdiction in respect of the two classes of disputes. The exception carved out of the exclusion in respect of the jurisdiction conferred upon the Supreme Court by Article 143 is not a real exception for the jurisdiction of the Court under Article 143. It is merely advisory. The non obstante clause, however, does not enlarge the field of exclusion of judicial authority. (Para 128)

An act of State need not, it is true, arise out of war or conquest; it may be the result of an agreement, and the terms of the agreements and the obligations flowing only from such agreements may not be enforced in the Municipal Courts of either State, unless the rights and obligations are recognised and accepted by the States, or unless the document evidencing the act of State is itself the Constitution of the State or States.

But there can be no act of State against its own citizen by the State. The Rulers who were before integration of their States aliens qua the Dominion Government are now citizens. Their rights and obligations which arose from an act of State are now recognized and accepted by the Union of India. Enforcement of those rights and obligations is governed by the municipal laws, and unless the jurisdiction of the Courts is excluded in respect of any dispute, the Courts will be competent to grant relief. An act of State vanishes when the new sovereign recognizes either expressly or by implication the rights flowing therefrom. (Para 129)

Jurisdiction of the Courts in matters specified in Article 363 is excluded not because the Union of India is a successor to the paramountcy of the British Crown, nor because the rights and obligations accepted and recognised by the Constitution may still be regarded as flowing from acts of State; it is only excluded in respect of specific matters by the express provision in Article 363 of the Constitution. Jurisdiction of the Courts even in those matters is not barred "at the threshold". The President cannot lay down the extent of the Supreme Court's jurisdiction. He is not made by the Constitution the arbiter of the extent of his authority, nor of the validity of his acts.

Action of the President is liable to be tested for its validity before the Courts unless their jurisdiction is by express enactment or clear implication barred. It is within the province of the Court alone to determine what the dispute brought before it is, and to determine whether the jurisdiction of the Court is, because it falls within one of the two limbs of Article 363, excluded qua that dispute. (Para 132)

The expression "provisions of this Constitution relating to" in Article 363 means "provisions having a dominant and immediate connection with": it does not mean merely having a reference to. A wide meaning of the expression may exclude disputes from the jurisdiction of the Courts in respect of rights or obligations, however indirect or tenuous the connection between the constitutional provision and the covenant may be. Jurisdiction to try a proceeding is barred under the first limb of Article 363 if the dispute arises out of the provision of a covenant; it is barred under the second limb of Article 363 if the Court holds that the dispute is with respect to a right arising out of a provision of the Constitution relating to a covenant.

A dispute that an order of an executive body is unauthorised, or a legislative measure is ultra vires, is not one arising out of any covenant under the first limb of Article 363, merely because the order or the measure violates the rights of the citizen which, but for the act or measure, were not in question. The dispute in such a case relates to the validity of the acts or the vires of the measure. Exclusion of the Court's jurisdiction by the terms of the relevant words in the second limb lies in a narrow field. If the constitutional provision relating to a covenant is the source of the right claimed to accrue, or liability claimed to arise, then clearly under the second limb the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain a dispute arising with respect to the right or obligation is barred. (Paras 134, 135)

Article 366 (22) is a provision relating to recognition of Rulers; that is the direct and only purpose of the provision. It is not a provision relating to a covenant. The qualification of a person being recognized as a Ruler is undoubtedly that he is a Prince, Chief or other person who had entered into a covenant or agreement as is referred to in Art. 291, or that he is the successor to such a Ruler. Reference to the covenant or the agreement of the nature mentioned in Article 291 is for determining who may be recognized as a Ruler. Because of that reference the provision enacted with the object of conferring authority upon the President to recognize a Ruler, will not be deemed one relating to the covenant or agreement.

The source of the right to receive the privy purse is the constitutional mandate, it is not in the covenant. A dispute as to the right to receive the privy purse is therefore not a dispute arising out of the covenant within the first limb of Article 363, nor is it a dispute with regard to a right accruing or obligation arising out of a provision of the Constitution relating to a covenant. The personal rights (other than the right to the Privy Purse), privileges and dignities are recognized by Article 362 of the Constitution and the Legislature and the executive are enjoined to have due regard to those personal rights, privileges and dignities in exercising their respective power.

Article 362 is plainly a provision relating to covenants within the meaning of Article 363. A claim to enforce the rights, privileges and dignities under the covenants will therefore be barred by the first limb of Article 363 and a claim to enforce the recognition of rights and privileges recognised by Article 362 will be barred under the second limb of Article 363. Jurisdiction of the Court will, however, not be excluded where the relief claimed is founded on a statutory provision enacted to give effect to personal rights under Article 362. The Courts have jurisdiction to interpret and to determine the true meaning of Articles 366 (22), 291, 362 and 363. The bar to the jurisdiction of the Courts by Article 363 is a limited bar: it does not arise merely because the Union of India sets up a plea that the dispute falling within Article 363 is raised.

The Court will give effect to the constitutional mandate if satisfied that the dispute arises out of any provision of a covenant which is in force and was entered into or executed before the commencement of the Constitution and to which the predecessor of the Government of India was a party, or that it is in respect of rights, liabilities or obligations accruing or arising under any provision of the Constitution relating to a covenant.

But since the right to the Privy Purse arises under Article 291 the dispute in respect of which does not fall within either clause, the jurisdiction of the Court is not excluded. Again, the jurisdiction of the Court is not excluded in respect of disputes relating to personal rights and privileges which are granted by statutes. (Paras 137, 140, 141, 142)

(F) Interpretation of Statutes — Provisions ensuring security of fundamental human rights to be liberally construed.

In an avowedly democratic polity, statutory provisions ensuring the security of fundamental human rights including the right to property will, unless the contrary mandate be precise and unqualified, be construed liberally so as to uphold the right. These rules apply to the interpretation of Constitution and statutory provisions alike. (Para 133)

(G) Interpretation of Statutes — Interpretation of constitutional provision — Considerations stated.

A constitutional provision will not be interpreted in the attitude of a lexicographer, with one eye on the provision and the other on the lexicon. The meaning of a word or expression used in the Constitution often is coloured by the context in which it occurs: the simpler and more common the word or expression, the more meanings and shades of meanings it has. It is the duty of the Court to determine in what particular meaning and particular shade of meaning the word or expression was used by the Constitution makers and in discharging the duty the Court will take into account the context in which it occurs, the object to serve which it was used, its collocation, the general congruity with the concept or object it was intended to articulate and a host of other considerations. Above all, the Court will avoid repugnancy with accepted norms of justice and reason. (Para 134)

(H) Precedents — It is not proper to regard a word, a clause or a sentence occurring in a judgment of the Supreme Court, divorced from its context, as containing a full exposition of the law on a question when the question did not even fall to be answered in that judgment. (Para 138)

(I) Constitution of India, Article 32 — President does not exercise political power and exercise of powers by him is justiciable.

The President is not invested with any political power transcending the Constitution, which he may exercise to the prejudice of citizens. The powers of the President arise from and are defined by the Constitution. Validity of the exercise of those powers is always amenable to the jurisdiction of the Courts, unless the jurisdiction is by precise enactment excluded. Power of the Supreme Court under Article 32 or of the High Courts under Article 226, cannot be bypassed under a claim that the President has exercised political power. (Para 143)

(J) Constitution of India, Art. 366(22) — Power to recognize implies power to withdraw recognition — But an order merely de-recognizing a ruler without continuation of the institution of Rulership is illegal. AIR 1970 SC 1946, Rel. on.

(Per majority, Mitter and Ray, JJ. Contra.):

Granting that under Art. 366 (22) the President may withdraw the recognition of a person as a Ruler, no power to nullify important provisions of the Constitution flows from that clause. The power to recognise a Ruler may be exercised in the case of first recognition only in favour of a person who has signed the covenant; and in favour of his successor having regard to the custom and law governing the State if the Ruler dies, or becomes incapable of functioning or his recognition is withdrawn. By the use of the expression "for the time being" in Clause (22) of Article 366 the President is not invested with authority to accord a temporary recognition to a Ruler, nor with authority to recognise or not to recognise a Ruler arbitrarily; the expression "for the time being" predicates that there shall be a Ruler of the Indian State, that if the first recognised Ruler dies, or ceases to be a Ruler, a successor shall be appointed, and that there shall not be more Rulers than one at a given time. Granting that power to recognise a Ruler carries with it the power to withdraw recognition of the Ruler the power must be exercised bona fide, and in the larger interests of the people consistently with the provisions of the Constitution to maintain the institution of Rulership.

Power may therefore be exercised in the course of and for recognising another person as a successor to the Ruler, having regard to the laws and customs governing the State. The President is not competent to recognise a person as a Ruler who is not by the custom and laws governing succession to Rulership qualified to be a Ruler. The President cannot obviously withdraw recognition of a Ruler and recognise another person, as a matter of political patronage.

Nor can he lawfully depart from the laws and customs governing succession so as to introduce a person as a Ruler who is not by ties of blood or affiliation related to the previous Ruler. The power of the President is plainly coupled with a duty, a duty to maintain the constitutional institution, the constitutional provisions, the constitutional scheme, and the sanctity of solemn agreements entered into by the predecessor of the Union Government which are accepted, recognised and incorporated in the Constitution. An order merely "de-recognising" a Ruler without providing for continuation of the institution of Rulership which is an integral part of the constitutional scheme is, therefore, plainly illegal. AIR 1970 SC 1946, Rel. on.

(K) Constitution of India, Article 19 — Privy Purse is property — (X Ref. Constitution of India, Articles 31, 32).

Per Hidayatullah, C. J. and Hegde, J., Ray, J. Contra):

Rulers are citizens of India. Their privy purses are property within Arts. 19 and 31. As soon as an Appropriation Act is passed there is established a credit debt and the outstanding Privy Purse becomes the property of the Ruler in the hands of Government. It is also a sum certain and absolutely payable. A petition under Article 32 would be maintainable for the action of depriving the rulers of the privy purses as it would amount to an infringement of Articles 19 and 31. AIR 1964 SC 444, Rel. on.

(L) Constitution of India, Article 366 (22) — Ruler means a former Prince, Chief or other person who was recognised as Ruler on or after 26-1-1950.

Some degree of obscurity is introduced by the use of the expressions "Ruler" and "Ruler of an Indian State" in the Articles. But the meaning is reasonably plain. Ruler as defined in Article 366 (22) is a former Prince, Chief or other person who was on or after January 26, 1950 recognised as a Ruler, he having signed the covenant, or his successor. The Ruler of an Indian State had sovereign authority over his State. The Ruler recognized by the President rules over no territory, and exercises no sovereignty over any subjects. He has no status of a potentate and no privileges which are normally exercised by a potentate. He is a citizen of India with certain privileges accorded to him because he or his predecessor had surrendered his territory his powers and his sovereignty.

(Para 136)

(M) Constitution of India, Art. 366 (22) — 'Other person' means some one analogous to a Prince.

(Per Hegde, J.):— The words "other person" in the first part of Art. 366 (22) means some one analogous to a Prince or Chief of a former Indian State who had entered into the Covenant or Agreement referred to in that clause. It cannot be some third person because no person other than a Ruler of an Indian State had entered into any Covenant or Agreement with the Dominion of India. The words "other person" should be read ejusdem generis with the words "Prince, Chief" preceding the words "other person". Indian Rulers were known by various names such as Maharana, Maharao, Maharaja, Nizam etc. To avoid listing all those names in Art. 366 (22), the draftsman has used the words "other person" but the meaning of those words has been made clear by the words accompanying the words "other person" viz. by whom any such agreement as is referred to in Clause (1) of Article 291 was entered into and who for the time being is recognised by the President as Ruler. (Para 263)

(N) Constitution of India, Article 366 (22) — Order dated 6-9-70 by President derecognising Rulers of former Indian States being for a collateral purpose i.e., to do that indirectly what could not be done directly in Parliament must be held to be ultra vires Article 366 (22). AIR 1963 SC 649, Rel. on. — (Per Hegde, J.) (Para 271)

In W. P. No. 376 of 1970:—

M/s. A. C. Gulati, Rajinder Jain, D. P. Ghosh, and G. Banerjee, Advocates for the Intervener.

The following Judgments of the Court were delivered by

HIDAYATULLAH, C. J. — On September 6, 1970, the President of India passed a laconic order in respect of each of the Rulers of former Indian States. The order was served by a Secretary to Government of India. A sample order issued to the Ruler of Gwalior State may be read here:

"No. 21/14/70-Poll. III, Government of India, Ministry of Home Affairs.

New Delhi,

September 6, 1970

ORDER

In exercise of the powers vested in him under Article 366 (22) of the Constitution, the President hereby directs that with effect from the date of this Order His Highness Maharajadhiraja Madhav Rao Jiwaji Rao Scindia Bahadur do cease to be recognised as the Ruler of Gwalior.

By order and in the name of the President,

Secretary to the Government of India."

All these orders were notified together in the Gazette of India of September 19, 1970, Part II. They resulted in the forthwith stoppage of the Privy Purses received by the Rulers and the discontinuance of their personal privileges.

2. These writ petitions under Article 32 of the Constitution were filed by some of the Rulers as test cases to question the orders. They ask for a writ, direction or order, declaring the Presidential Order to be unconstitutional, mala fide, ultra vires and void, and for quashing it, a writ, direction or order declaring that the several petitioners continue to be rulers and thus to be entitled to their respective Privy Purses and personal rights and privileges and a further writ, direction or order directing the Union of India to continue to pay the Privy Purses as before and to recognise the personal rights and privileges and to observe the provisions of the Covenants and Merger Agreements.

3. This judgment and order will govern all these petitions. Since the issues involved in all the petitions are common and there are only minor differences in the steps before the States merged with the Indian Union, it is sufficient if an illustrative petition is dealt with. In this judgment I shall refer to the petition filed by the Ruler of Gwalior which is first on my list and embraces almost all the varying aspects of the question. The other petitions are identical except for some details which are special to a particular Ruler but are not material for the discussion of the issues involved.

4. The Ruler of the Gwalior State succeeded to the gaddi of the State on July 13, 1961 on the demise of his father. On August 15, 1947 the father had signed an Instrument of Accession of his State to the Dominion of India, as then established, and it was accepted by the Governor-General of India on the following day. This Instrument of Accession was similar to those which the other Rulers signed on diverse dates. It is to be found at p. 165 of the White Paper on Indian States and is exhibited with the Petition as Ex. A. On April 22, 1948 the father, as Ruler, signed a Covenant with other Rulers of this area and the United States of Madhya Bharat was formed on June 15, 1948. On the coming into force of the Constitution of India, the State of Madhya Bharat became a Part B State. On the passing of the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956, Madhya Bharat States ceased to be a Part B State and was integrated with the State of Madhya Pradesh as provided under the States Reorganisation Act, 1956. I shall now say something in more detail about these several steps.

5. The Instruments of Accession were executed in furtherance of the Indian Independence Act, 1947. On June, 3, 1947 the British Government announced their plan of transfer of power in India. The Government of India formed a Ministry of States under Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel and it was decided to secure the accession of Indian States on three subjects: Defence, External Affairs and Communications. The Act provided for lapse of sovereignty of the British Crown in India over the Indian States and they were free to accede to any of the two Dominions of India or Pakistan or to continue as independent sovereigns. A reference to the Indian Independence Act, 1947 appears necessary at this stage.

6. The preamble of the Act stated that the Act was to make provision for the setting up in India of two independent Dominions and to provide for matters consequential on or connected with the setting up of those Dominions and to substitute certain provisions in the Government of India Act, 1935. Section 1 of the Act fixed the 15th day of August, 1947 as the appointed date, from which the two independent Dominions were to come into existence. Section 2 demarcated their territories, but without prejudice to the generality of the provisions of sub-section (3) of that section the accession of Indian States to either of the two Dominions was not to be prevented. Immediately afterwards the India (Provisional Constitution) Order 1947 was promulgated and certain substitutions were made in the Government of India Act, 1935 by the Governor-General by virtue of sub-section (2) of Section 8 read with Section 9 of the Indian Independence Act. Sections 5 and 6 of the Government of India Act, 1935 were replaced by the following sections:

"5. Establishment of the Dominion:

(1) The Dominion of India established by the Indian Independence Act, 1947, shall as from the fifteenth day of August 1947, be a Union comprising—

- (a) the Provinces hereinafter called Governors' Provinces;
- (b) the Provinces hereinafter called Chief Commissioners' Provinces;
- (c) the Indian States acceding to the Dominion in the manner hereinafter provided, and
- (d) any other areas that may with the consent of the Dominion be included in the Dominion.

(2) The said Dominion of India is hereinafter in this Act referred to as "the Dominion" and the said fifteenth day of August is hereafter in this Act referred to as 'the date of the establishment of the Dominion'.

"6. Accession of Indian States—

(1) An Indian State shall be deemed to have acceded to the Dominion if the Governor General has signified his acceptance of an Instrument of Accession executed by the Ruler thereof whereby the Ruler on behalf of the State:—

(a) declares that he accedes to the Dominion with the intent that the Governor-General, the Dominion Legislature, the Federal Court and any other Dominion authority established for the purposes of the Dominion shall, by virtue of his Instrument of Accession but subject always to the terms thereof, and for the purposes only of the Dominion exercise in relation to the State such functions as may be vested in them by order under this Act; and

(b) assumes the obligation of ensuring that due effect is given within the State to the provisions of this Act so far as they are applicable therein by virtue of the Instrument of Accession.

(2) An Instrument of Accession shall specify the matters which the Ruler accepts as matters with respect to which the Dominion Legislature may make laws for the State and the limitations, if any, to which the power of the Dominion Legislature to make laws for the State, and the exercise of the executive authority of the Dominion in the State, are respectively to be subject.

(3) A Ruler may, by a supplementary Instrument executed by him and accepted by the Governor General vary the Instrument of Accession of his State by extending the functions which by virtue of that Instrument are exercisable by any Dominion authority in relation to his State.

(4) References in this Act to the Ruler of a State include references to any persons for the time being exercising the powers of the Ruler of the State whether by reason of the Ruler's minority or for any other reason.

(5) In this Act a State which has acceded to the Dominion is referred to as an acceding State and the Instrument by virtue of which a State has so acceded construed together with any supplementary Instrument executed under this section, is referred to as the Instrument of Accession of that State.

(6) As soon as may be after an instrument of Accession or supplementary instrument has been accepted by the Governor-General under this Section, copies of the Instrument and of the Governor-General's acceptance thereof shall be laid before the Dominion Legislature and all courts shall take judicial notice of every such instrument and acceptance”.

7. In furtherance of these new provisions, the Instruments of Accession were executed on different dates, after negotiations between the Government of India and the Rulers, but nothing turns upon the date of an Instrument. Many Rulers had immediately signed Instruments of Merger, transferring full and exclusive authority, jurisdiction and powers in relation to the governance of their States to the Government of India. They were merged with the existing Provinces or were set up as Chief Commissioner's Provinces. Some others signed Instruments of Accession first and Instruments of Merger later. The remaining at first formed themselves into different Unions of States, making over the administration of their States to a Rajpramukh of the Union of the States vesting in him all rights, authority, and jurisdiction belonging to the Ruler which appertained to or were incidental to the Government of the Covenanting States. In this way several Unions of States or United States emerged. A brief reference to the Instrument of Accession, the Covenants and the Instruments of Merger is necessary at this stage. The Ruler of Gwalior, father of the present petitioner, joined the United State of Madhya Bharat as already indicated. I can therefore conveniently study the Instrument of Accession and the Covenant executed by him as illustrative of the documents signed by the Rulers.

8. I begin with the Instrument of Accession. In the Preamble to the Instrument the Ruler observed that he was executing it in the exercise of his sovereignty in and over his State. He declared that he was acceding to the Dominion of India and authorised the Governor-General of India, the Dominion Legislature, the Federal Court and any other Dominion Authority, established for the purposes of the Dominion to exercise in relation to his State functions vested in them by or under the Government of India Act, 1935 as in force on the 15th August, 1947. On his part he undertook the obligation of ensuring that effect was given to the provisions of the Government of India Act, 1935 in his State. He accepted that the Dominion Legislature would make laws with respect to matters specified in the Schedule to his Instrument. These topics have only a historical significance and need no mention here. There were certain reservations, particularly in regard to any future constitution of India affecting the continuance of his sovereignty in and over the State, and the exercise of any powers, authority and rights then enjoyed by him as Ruler. The Governor-General accepted the Instrument of Accession and signed it in token thereof.

9. The Ruler of Gwalior next signed a Covenant with certain Rulers in the former Madhya Bharat area and agreed to form a United State of Madhya Bharat. The covenant contains 18 articles and 4 schedules. This covenant is a detailed document and is reproduced in the White Paper and is also exhibited in the case before me. It is not necessary to refer to all its terms but the relevant ones may be noted here. The Covenanting States agreed to unite and integrate their territories into one State with common Executive, Legislature and Judiciary. Room was kept for other Rulers to join later if they were so minded. The Covenant established a Council of Rulers, with a right to elect a President (to be called the Rajpramukh of the United State) and one Senior Vice-President and two Junior Vice-Presidents. The President and the Senior Vice-President were to hold office during their lifetime and the Junior Vice-Presidents for a term of five years. The Rajpramukh was to be aided and advised by a Council of Ministers to be chosen by him and they were to hold office during his pleasure. July 1, 1948 was fixed for making over the administration of the Covenanting States to the Rajpramukh including a transfer of all assets and liabilities of the State and of the Scheduled Areas. The Rajpramukh had jurisdiction to make laws for the peace and good government of those areas whether with or without consultation with his Council of Ministers but subject to directions or instruments of the Government of India. The Rajpramukh was to execute by 15th June, 1948, a fresh Instrument of Accession in place of the separate Instruments already executed by the Covenanting Rulers. By that Instrument he was to accept the making of laws by the Dominion Legislature on all matters mentioned in Lists I and III of the Seventh Schedule to the Government of India Act, 1935 except the entries in List I relating to any tax or duty. The Rajpramukh and the Vice-Presidents were to enter upon their duties on 11th May, 1948. The Rajpramukh and the Vice-President were to be paid Rs. 2,50,000 per year as consolidated allowances and the Junior Vice-Presidents were to be paid such allowances as the Rajpramukh was to fix. The executive authority of the United State (subject to the provisions of the Covenant and a Constitution to be framed later) was to be exercised by the Rajpramukh and the competent Legislature of the United State was to be given the competence to confer functions upon the subordinate authorities but the Covenant was not to be deemed to transfer to the Rajpramukh any functions conferred by any existing law on any Court, Judge, officer or local or other authority in a Covenanting State.

10. The Covenant next provided for the setting up, as soon as possible, of a Constituent Assembly in the manner set out in the Third Schedule to the Covenant to frame a Constitution of a unitary type for the United State within the framework of the Covenant and the Constitution of India and for providing a Government responsible to the Legislature. The Rajpramukh was to constitute not later than August 1, 1948 an interim Legislative Assembly for the United State in accordance with the provisions set out in Schedule IV till the formation of the Constituent Assembly which was then to perform legislative functions as well. The Rajpramukh was also given power to promulgate Ordinances. Articles XI to XV were as follows:

"ARTICLE XI

(1) The Ruler of each Covenanting State shall be entitled to receive annually from the revenues of the United State for his privy purse the amount specified against that Covenanting State in Schedule I:

Provided that the sums specified in the Schedule in respect of the Rulers of Gwalior and Indore shall be payable only to the present Rulers of these States and not to their successors for whom provision will be made subsequently.

(2) The said amount is intended to cover all the expenses of the Ruler and his family including expenses of his residence, marriages and other ceremonies, etc., and shall subject to the provisions of paragraph (1) neither be increased nor reduced for any reason whatsoever.

(3) The Rajpramukh shall cause the said amount to be paid to the Ruler in four equal instalments at the beginning of each quarter in advance.

(4) The said amount shall be free of all taxes whether imposed by the Government of the United State or by the Government of India.

ARTICLE XII

(1) The Ruler of each Covenanting State shall be entitled to the full ownership, use and enjoyment of all private properties (as distinct from State properties) belonging to him on the date of his making over the administration of that State to the Rajpramukh.

(2) He shall furnish to the Rajpramukh before the first day of August 1948, an inventory of all immovable properties, securities and cash balances held by him as such private property.

(3) If any dispute arises as to whether any item of property is the private property of the Ruler or State property, it shall be referred to such person as the Government of India may nominate in consultation with the Rajpramukh and the decision of that person shall be final and binding on all parties concerned:

Provided that no such dispute shall be so referable after the first day of July 1949.

ARTICLE XIII

The Ruler of each Covenanting State, as also the members of his family, shall be entitled to all the personal privileges, dignities and titles enjoyed by them, whether within or outside the territories of the State, immediately before the 15th day of August, 1947.

ARTICLE XIV

(1) The succession, according to law and custom to the gaddi of each covenanting State, and to the personal rights, privileges, dignities and titles of the Ruler thereof, is hereby guaranteed.

(2) Every question of disputed succession in regard to a Covenanted State shall be decided by the Council of Rulers after referring it to a bench consisting of all the available Judges of the High Court of the United State and in accordance with the opinion given by the High Court".

Article XV gave complete immunity to the Ruler in respect of past acts and omissions. The next two articles guaranteed the continuance in service of the permanent members of the public service of the States on conditions not less advantageous than those existing on April 15, 1948 or payment to them of reasonable compensation. There were other guarantees and also immunity for past acts or omissions in the execution of duty as a public servant. Article XVIII continued in their respective States the prerogative of suspension, remission or commutation of death sentences enjoyed by the former Rulers of Gwalior and Indore. Schedule I then stated the Privy Purses of the Rulers. It was divided into two sections — Salute States and Non-Salute States. They ranged from Rs. 25,00,000 to the Ruler of Gwalior to Rs. 6,000 to the Ruler of Mathwar. The rest of the provisions are not material for my discussion.

11. The Covenant was signed by all the Rulers of the Covenanted States and the Government of India endorsed on it their acceptance thus:

"The Government of India hereby concur in the above Covenant and guarantee all its provisions. In confirmation whereof Mr. Vapal Pangunni Menon, Secretary to the Government of India in the Ministry of States, appends his signature on behalf and with the authority of the Government of India.

Secretary to the Government of India, Ministry of States".

Further agreements were devised for each of such other States as might join later and the Government of India concurred in the same way with such agreements.

12. A fresh Instrument of Accession was executed by the Rajpramukh on behalf of the United State of Madhya Bharat. Special provisions were made for avoiding legislative conflict, and for any future agreement between the Rajpramukh and the Government of India. Such agreements were to form part of the Instrument of Accession. It was however expressly provided by Clause 6 as follows:

"6. The terms of this Instrument of Accession shall not be varied by any amendment of the Act or of the Indian Independence Act, 1947, unless such amendment is accepted by the Rajpramukh of the United State by an Instrument supplementary to this Instrument".

The Governor-General of India accepted this Instrument of Accession on September 13, 1948. By then 23 Rulers had joined the United State. On November 24, 1948, on the passing of the Constitution of India, the Rajpramukh issued a Proclamation after a resolution of the Covenanted Rulers. It affirmed the 'constitutional relationship' between the United State and the Dominion of India and provided as follows:

"Proclamation for Madhya Bharat Gwalior, the 24th November 1949.

Whereas with the inauguration of the new Constitution for the whole of India now being framed by the Constituent Assembly of India, the Government of India Act, 1935, which now governs the constitutional relationship between the State and the Dominion of India, will stand repealed;

And whereas, in the best interests of the State of Madhya Bharat, which is closely linked with the rest of India by a community of interests in the economic, political and other fields, it is desirable that the constitutional relationship established between this State and the Dominion of India, should not only be continued as between this State and the contemplated Union of India but further strengthened, and the Constitution of India as drafted by the Constituent Assembly of India, which includes duly appointed representatives of this State, provides a suitable basis for doing so;

I, Jiwajirao Madhavrao Scindia, Rajpramukh of the Madhya Bharat, now hereby declare and direct —

That the Constitution of India shortly to be adopted by the Constituent Assembly of India shall be the Constitution for the Madhya Bharat as for the other parts of India and shall be enforced as such in accordance with the tenor of its provisions;

That the provisions of the said Constitution shall, as from the date of its commencement, supersede and abrogate all other constitutional provisions inconsistent therewith which are at present in force in this State."

13. This in short is the constitutional history of the States which united to form the United State of Madhya Bharat. It is apparent that the Instrument of Accession and the Covenants operated as a constitution in little for the governance of the United State. The identity of the United State as a semi-independent unit was preserved and the constitutional framework of this State was indicated. The Covenant was an Act of State on the part of the Rulers. It may be regarded also as such by the Government of India although no volition, beyond concurrence, of the Government played any part whatever might have been the diplomatic consultations between the acceding United State and the Government of India. The Government of India merely accorded them recognition and guaranteed its provisions. If treated as an act of State it ended with the recognition. It was also an act of State on the part of the Rulers who surrendered their rights but the provisions that they evolved for the joint governance of their territories made a constitution proper of which the Courts were to take judicial notice and apply according to their tenor as occasion demanded. From these documents flowed consequences which were binding alike upon the Covenanting States, the United State of Madhya Bharat and the Government of India and the Courts. None of them could avoid these consequences.

14. The Merger agreements were much simpler documents. As an illustration I may refer to the Bilaspur Merger agreement. It was executed on the 15th August 1948 by the Raja of Bilaspur. It consisted of five articles. By the first article the Raja acceded to the Dominion government full and exclusive authority, jurisdiction and powers for and in relation to the governance of the State, agreeing to transfer the administration on October 12, 1948. By article 2 the Raja was to receive annually a sum of Rs. 70,000 as privy purse free of taxes.

The sum included Rs. 10,000 as an allowance for the Yuvraj. These amounts were to cover all expenses and were not to be increased nor reduced for any reason whatsoever. By article 3 the Raja was entitled to the full ownership, use and enjoyment of all private properties (as distinct from State properties) belonging to him, and he was to furnish an inventory of such properties. In case of dispute the matter was to be referred to such officers with judicial experience as the Dominion government might nominate and the decision was to be binding on both parties. By article 4, the Raja, the Rajmata, the Yuvraj and the Yuvrani were to enjoy all personal privileges enjoyed by them within and without the territories immediately before the 15th day of August 1947. By article 5 the Dominion government guaranteed the succession, according to law and custom, to the gaddi of the State and to the Raja's personal rights, privileges, dignities and titles. The Merger agreement was signed by the Raja and Mr. V. P. Menon, Secretary in the Ministry of States.

15. Although the Merger Agreement of the Raja of Bilaspur sufficiently illustrates the line followed it may be mentioned here that some of the Merger Agreements had more clauses than the one noticed. In the Merger Agreement of the Maharao of Kutch there were other articles such as immunity for past acts of the Maharao in his personal capacity or otherwise and also a guarantee for continuance in service of the permanent members of the Public services of Kutch and for their conditions of service, pensions and leave salaries and immunity for past acts. In the Bhopal Merger Agreement the Nawab was to receive Rs. 11,00,000 as Privy Purse but each of his successors was to receive only Rs. 9,00,000. Article IV however provided that the income derived annually from the share of the Nawab in the original investment by Qudsia Begum in the Bhopal State Railway, which share was agreed to be Rs. 5,50,000, was to be treated as the personal income of the Nawab and to be paid by the Government of India to the Nawab and his successors. Article VII provided that the succession to the throne of Bhopal State would be governed by and regulated in accordance with the provisions of the Act known as "The Succession to the Throne of Bhopal Act of 1947", and then in force in the Bhopal State. The Government of India further agreed that all rights and privileges secured by the Agreement to the Nawab would be continued to his successor.

16. The course of historical events is different according to the States emerged in or merely acceded to the Dominion. The merged States were either incorporated in the existing Governor's Provinces or, were administered centrally as Chief Commissioner's Provinces. I am not concerned with these historical events and, therefore, I refrain from saying anything here.

17. The next step in the chain of historical events in regard to Gwalior came with the Constitution which was accepted by the Rajpramukh in his Proclamation. Special provisions were incorporated in the Constitution to which reference may be made here. Four Articles in the Constitution are only relevant and are quoted here. Article 291 was amended by the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956 by deleting clause (2) but is quoted here as it was before the Amendment:

"291 (1) Where under any covenant or agreement entered into by the Ruler of any Indian State before the commencement of this Constitution, the payment of any sums, free of tax, has been guaranteed or assured by the Government of the Dominion of India to any Ruler of such State as Privy Purse—

(a) such sums shall be charged on, and paid out of, the Consolidated Fund of India; and

(b) the sums so paid to any Ruler shall be exempt from all taxes on income.

(2) Where the territories of any such Indian State as aforesaid are comprised within a State specified in Part A or Part B of the First Schedule, there shall be charged on, and paid out of, the Consolidated Fund of that State such contribution, if any, in respect of the payments made by the Government of India under clause (1) and for such period as may, subject to any agreement entered into in that behalf under clause (1) of article 278, be determined by order of the President".

This Article does not apply to the State of Jammu and Kashmir. Article 366 contained a definition in (21) which was deleted by the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act 1956. This definition may be read here:

"366. In this Constitution, unless the context otherwise requires, the following expressions have the meanings hereby respectively assigned to them, that is to say—

(21) "Rajpramukh" means—

(a) in relation to the State of Hyderabad, the person who for the time being is recognised by the President as the Nizam of Hyderabad;

(b) in relation to the State of Jammu and Kashmir or the State of Mysore, the person who for the time being is recognised by the President as the Maharaja of that State; and

(c) in relation to any other State specified in Part B of the First Schedule, the person who for the time being is recognised by the President as the Rajpramukh of the State, and includes in relation to any of the said States any person for the time being recognised by the President as competent to exercise the powers of the Rajpramukh in relation to that State;"

These two repeals were occasioned by the constitutional readjustment of States when Part B States disappeared. The definitions became obsolete after the Reorganisation and hence they were deleted. Article 366 contained other definitions in (15) and (22) which may be quoted:

"(15) 'Indian State' means any territory which the Government of the Dominion of India recognised as such a State;"

"(22) 'Ruler' in relation to an Indian State means the Prince, Chief or other person by whom any such covenant or agreement as is referred to in clause (1) of article 291 was entered into and who for the time being is recognised by the President as the Ruler of the State, and includes any person who for the time being is recognised by the President as the successor of such Ruler;"

They are intact till today. So also two other Articles, namely, 362 and 363. Of these the former does not apply to the State of Jammu and Kashmir, but the latter does. They may be quoted here:

"362. In the exercise of the power of Parliament or of the Legislature of a State to make laws or in the exercise of the executive power of the Union or of a State, due regard shall be had to the guarantee or assurance given under any such covenant or agreement as is referred to in clause (1) of article 291 with respect to the personal rights, privileges and dignities of the Ruler of an Indian State.

363 (1). Notwithstanding anything in this Constitution but subject to the provisions of article 143, neither the Supreme Court nor any other court shall have jurisdiction in any dispute arising out of any provision of a treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instrument which was entered into or executed before the commencement of this Constitution by any Ruler of an Indian State and to which the Government of the Dominion of India or any of its predecessor Governments was a party and which has or has been continued in operation after such commencement, or in any dispute in respect of any right accruing under or any liability or obligation arising out of any of the provisions of this Constitution relating to any such treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instrument.

(2) In this article—

(a) 'Indian State' means any territory recognised before the commencement of this Constitution by His Majesty or the Government of the Dominion of India as being such a State; and

18. The intention behind the definitions in 2 (a) and (b) specially included here was to bind even those Rulers who were recognised before and who might not have been recognised by the President under Art. 366 (22).

19. The Indian States formed a significant but separate part of India before they merged with the rest of India. It is common knowledge that the aim of the Government of India Act, 1935 was to associate the Indian States with British India as equal partners in a loose federation. When

India became independent by the Indian Independence Act 1947, British paramountcy in respect of the Indian States lapsed. In theory the Rulers became independent but, as shown above, in actual fact, almost all the Rulers signed almost immediately, Instruments of Accession in August 1947 surrendering Defence, External Affairs and Communications. The Rulers immediately after Independence became divided into four classes:

(a) those who had signed Instruments of Accession;

(b) those who had signed Instruments of Merger;

(c) those who had formed themselves into Unions and the Unions had signed Instruments of Accession;

(d) Hyderabad, Mysore and Jammu and Kashmir.

20. The merged States were either directly administered by the Dominion Government as Chief Commissioner's Provinces or were handed over to the neighbouring Provinces. Thus 216 States merged in the adjoining Provinces, 61 States were converted into centrally administered areas and 275 States formed Unions. Only three States retained their integrity; but when the Constitution came into force, they too became part of the Union of India on a later date. They were Hyderabad, Mysore and Jammu and Kashmir.

21. The Indian States covered about 48 per cent of the area of the Indian Dominion. The population of this area formed 28 per cent of the total population of the Dominion. All the Rulers (including the Rajpramukhs of the Unions) issued proclamations of which reference has earlier been made in relation to Gwalior. On the merger or integration of the States with the Union of India the Rulers were left with a Privy Purse and a few of their personal privileges and properties. The Privy Purses were fixed with due regard to the incomes of the Rulers before integration with a ceiling of Rs. 10 lakhs. Eleven Rulers were to be paid more than that sum as a personal Privy Purse. The total amount of the Privy Purses came to Rs. 5.8 crores. Today the highest Privy Purse is Rs. 26 lakhs per annum to the Ruler of Mysore and the lowest is Rs. 192 per annum to the Ruler of Kotodia.

22. The Privileges of the Rulers included many items. A memorandum on these privileges was issued by the Ministry of States in 1949. It did not contain an exhaustive list but was drawn up to inform Provincial and Union Governments about them. It contained an itemised list of 34 privileges. They included several exemptions from the operation of Indian laws, the enjoyment of Jagir and personal property of the Rulers and members of their families, the payment by the States of the marriage expenses of the brothers and sisters of the Rulers, immunity from some processes of courts of law, immunity from requisitioning of the private properties of the Rulers and their families and so on and so forth. During the negotiations letters were written to the Rulers to assure them that the Privy Purses was fixed in perpetuity and the freedom enjoyed by them would be continued.

23. The Privy Purses and the Privileges were continued till 6th September 1970. Their payment or enjoyment was a part of the guarantee of the Constitution. However the All India Congress Committee passed a Resolution on 25th June 1967 for their abolition. In furtherance of this resolution the Union Home Ministry held several conferences with the representatives of the Rulers. Although shorn of all but a shadow of their former power and panoply, the Rulers seemed to regard themselves as something different from the people or perhaps, as princes in exile. They had their Concord, their Intendant-General and Conciliar Committee, thereby evoking a certain measure of hostility among persons who were oblivious of the constitutional transition in India. The summary of the proceedings of these conferences were marked collectively as Annexure A annexed to the affidavit of the Union of India. It shows six meetings between November 3, 1967 and January 8, 1970. There were perhaps a number of informal meetings and consultations. Nothing seems to have been achieved. Government of India repeated their intention of withdrawing the recognition of the Rulers and stoppage of the Privy Purses and Privileges, and was prepared only for a negotiated settlement as to the terms on which the abolition should take place. The Concord of Princes was not prepared to enter into any negotiations and were chary of a fresh settlement which might be broken just as simply as the past solemn engagements and assurances. The Rulers who, before Independence, had always displayed the sentiment Ego at rex meus had realised that Princes were not the only people in whose word trust should not be placed.

24. The Government of India acted rapidly. The President in his speech to the Houses gave expression to the policy of Government. A Resolution recommending the abolition was moved and passed in the Rajya Sabha. A Bill was then moved in the Lok Sabha intitled The Constitution (Twenty Fourth Amendment) Bill 1970. It consisted of three clauses and a short statement of Objects and Reasons. The Statement read:

"The concept of rulership, with Privy Purses and Special Privileges unrelated to any current functions and social purposes, is incompatible with an egalitarian social order. Government have therefore decided to terminate the Privy Purses and Privileges of the Rulers of former Indian States. Hence this Bill

Y. B. Chavan"

The Address of the President to the Joint Session of Parliament, the Resolution above referred to and the Statement of Objects and Reasons all gave identical reasons. The Bill was voted upon in the Lok Sabha on September 2, 1970. 332 votes for and 154 votes against it, were cast. It was considered in the Rajya Sabha on September 5, 1970 and was defeated, 149 voting for and 75 against it. It failed in the Rajya Sabha to reach the requisite majority of not less than two-thirds of the members present and voting.

25. The Bill originally gave no indication of the date when the Act was to come into operation but in the Lok Sabha an amendment was accepted by which it was to come into force from October 15, 1970. By the second clause the Bill omitted Articles 291 and 362 of the Constitution and the third clause omitted Article 366 (22). The same evening the Cabinet is said to have met and to have decided to advise the President to withdraw the recognition of the Rulers. The same night the President signed at Hyderabad an instrument withdrawing recognition of all the Rulers. Separate orders were issued to all the Rulers on the 6th September 1970 and they were also notified in the Gazette as already mentioned.

26. On September 7, 1970, the Finance Minister laid on the table of the Rajya Sabha a statement. He claimed that the power of the President to withdraw the recognition of the Rulers was unquestioned and had also been suggested as alternative to the amendment of the Constitution and that Government was in fact going to use the power after the adoption of the Bill amending the Constitution. He gave as his reason for the President's action that the Bill amending the Constitution was lost by a fraction of a vote in one of the Houses, that there was widespread support against this 'out-moded and antiquated system of Privy Purses', that even those who opposed the Bill supported the abolition and that it was Government's policy to put an end to the concept of Rulership and to abolish Privy Purses and the Privileges. He hinted that arrangements would be made to enable Rulers to make adjustments in the transitory period. These petitions were then filed to question the action of the President and the Government of India.

27. The petitioners put at the forefront the sentiments expressed at the time of the Merger of the Indian States. The Princes were then described as imbued with imagination, foresight and patriotism and as co-architects of a democratic and united India. Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel as the Minister in the newly formed Ministry of States made a speech on October 12, 1949 in the Constituent Assembly (Ex. C) in which he pointed out that the Madhya Bharat Rajpramukh alone gave sufficient cash assets which, if invested, would cover payments to the Rulers as Privy Purses, and that the payments to the Rulers represented one-fourth of what they were previously enjoying. He said that there was nothing by which the Rulers could be forced to merge their States with India and that the Privy Purses were quid pro quo for parting with the ruling power by the Rulers and the dissolution of their States as separate units. He regarded this as a small price for the bloodless revolution and avoidance of mischief. He exhorted the Constituent Assembly that the Indian Peoples on their part should ensure fully the guarantee given to them and concluded:

"Our failure to do so would be a breach of faith and seriously prejudice the stabilization of the New Order". The same sentiments were reiterated by Mr. V. P. Menon (who was the Secretary to the Ministry) in his recent book "The Story of the Integration of the Indian States" (1961) Pp. 461 and 462. He catalogued the number of villages, palaces, museums, buildings, stables, garages, fleets of motor cars, aeroplanes etc. surrendered by the Rulers. He pointed out that cash balances were to the tune of Rs. 77 crores and that palaces in Delhi alone were worth several lakhs of rupees. According to him, the price paid as Privy Purses was not too high for integration and indeed it was insignificant when compared with what the Rulers had lost.

28. The petitions are long argumentative documents and the reply affidavit equally so. The verbosity of the petitions (which are almost identical) and the reply affidavit (which is common to all petitions) does not render the task of the Court in this important case any the easier. It is, therefore, necessary to place in their proper perspective the respective cases of the parties.

29. According to the petitioners, the failure to amend the Constitution resulted in the retention in it of the articles relevant to the Rulers' rights. These Articles, particularly Articles 291 and 362 continued the obligation of the Government to pay the Privy Purses and also to recognise the Privileges. The Privy Purses stood charged on and were to be paid out of the Consolidated Fund of India and even Parliament could not vote upon them. The assurances and guarantees being that of the people in their Constitution, the Executive Government could not by the indirect device of withdrawing the recognition of the Rulers avoid the obligations created by the Constitution. These assurances and guarantees of the Constitution, the Accession and Integration were but steps and the fixation of Privy Purses and the recognition of the Privileges was no doubt a historical fact but the guarantees flowed from the Constitution and were independent of the historical fact, and had thus to be carried out according to the constitutional provisions. They based their claim not on the agreements or the covenants but on the constitutional provisions. According to them, the order of the President was in violation of the spirit and meaning of Articles 366 (22), 291 and 362 and was an affront to Parliament which had turned down the move for amendment of these articles. The President's action robbed the articles of their content which Parliament did not allow to be done and thus the order of the President indirectly had the effect of amending the Constitution. The President's order itself was said to be mala fide, ultra vires since his power was to recognise a Ruler at a time and for the time being or to withdraw recognition from a Ruler for cogent and valid reasons, naming in his place a successor, and not to withdraw recognition from all Rulers en masse for no reason except that the concept of Rulership was considered outmoded or that some persons held the view that it should not be continued. According to the petitioners the gaddi of a Ruler had to be filled in accordance with the law and custom of the family and could not be left vacant. The vast power to withdraw recognition from all the Rulers at the same time without nominating any successor could not and did not flow from the definition of a Ruler in Article 366 (22) which contemplated the continuance of a Ruler who had signed the Merger Agreement or his successor. The President was thus guilty of a breach of his duties under the Constitution and acted outside his jurisdiction. The act of the President was thus said to offend Articles 53, 294, 295, 291 and 362 of the Constitution.

30. In supporting their petition under Article 32, the petitioners claimed that important questions of deprivation of property and of personal liberty were involved. As illustrations the petitioners contended that the right to receive Privy Purses was a right to property of which the Rulers stood deprived as also of other personal properties and benefits of exemptions under diverse laws was also an inroad upon property rights. Since there was no authority of law and no compensation, the action was said to offend Articles 19 (1) (f) and 31 of the Constitution. They also claimed that Government was prevented by promissory estoppel and had acted in breach of a fiduciary duty.

31. In the reply affidavit filed by Mr. Asoka Sen (Joint Secretary in the Ministry of Home Affairs) all the allegations and submissions (besides the patent facts) were denied. The main contentions in reply were that this Court lacked jurisdiction to enter upon this dispute in view of the express bar of Article 363 that the petitions did not lie as no right of property or personal liberty of the petitioners was jeopardised and lastly that the action of the President was perfectly valid and binding as it was a political act in the exercise of the sovereignty of India, as to which this Court could say nothing being outside its jurisdiction. Article 363, it was claimed, barred the jurisdiction of all Courts (including the Supreme Court of India) in any dispute arising out of any provision of a treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instrument which was executed before the commencement of the Constitution and to which the Government of the Dominion of India or any of its predecessor Governments was a party and which had or had been continued in operation or in any dispute in respect of any right accruing under or any liability arising out of any of the provisions of the Constitution relating to any such treaty etc. and the present was such a dispute. Since the article began with the words "Notwithstanding anything in this Constitution", the article could only be read by itself and even the chapter on Fundamental Rights was excluded. The reason given was that these instruments were political agreements between High Contracting Parties and the Municipal Courts had no say in matters which were political or Acts of State. The Covenants were not self-executing and created imperfect obligations and depended for their enforceability upon the willingness of Government to implement them. Since the claim was based upon what was recognised in these instruments, this Court could not give any relief as it had no jurisdiction to do so. The President's powers to recognise a Ruler, which carried with it the power to withdraw such recognition flowed from Article 366 (22) and this power being an incident of sovereignty and a political act was not questionable in Courts of Law. The bar of Art. 363 covered such a case also because there was nothing to show that any recognition carrying with it a Privy Purse and Privileges was ever intended to be perennial even when the State policy demanded an abolition. The Privy Purse itself being in the nature of a political pension, a claim to it was not property and no claim could arise if it was stopped. Article 291 did not create any legal right but only laid down the source and method of payment of Privy Purse guaranteed by the Dominion of India and even if it were assumed that it was private property or that other property rights were affected by the withdrawal of the recognition, the matter was not justiciable because of the bar of Article 363 which applied to Articles 291 and 362.

32. The pleadings in the case are long but the points are few. The case involves a positive and a negative approach in so far as this Court is concerned. The positive approach involves the consideration of the reliefs that can be granted and the negative approach the bar operating under Article 363. The first approach requires consideration of the validity of the action of the President. It is obvious that if the action of the President is valid and operative, the implications of that action must necessarily follow. If it is invalid, for any reason, then the question of the bar of the jurisdiction of the Court to give relief will arise. The Union Government however places the bar at the very threshold and contends that the dispute is such as is expressly barred by Article 363 but the petitioners contend that there is no dispute at all under Articles 291 and 362 or it is not of the kind contemplated by that Article. The Union Government asks that the question of jurisdiction be decided first because in their opinion it is conclusive, while the other side contends that there is no dispute once the invalidity of the President's order is established, since articles 291 and 362 would then speak for themselves.

33. I intend considering first the question of the validity of the order of the President because everything turns on it. The arguments for and against that action may, therefore, be considered. According to the Union of India the act is political and in the exercise of sovereignty and paramountcy. It cannot therefore, be questioned in a Court of Law. According to the petitioners it is not, and is a plain executive order open to question like any other such act and the bar of article 363 does not apply to such a dispute.

34. The Union government invokes the analogy of the British Crown Paramountcy which lapsed on the Indian Independence. In this connection the claim is that the provisions of Articles 363 and 366 (15) and (22) preserve the paramountcy of the Crown in the President. This argument is independent of the question of bar of jurisdiction under Article 363. It seeks to put the President's act outside the jurisdiction of the Court by reason of the nature of the act. A word may, therefore, be said about the paramountcy of the British Crown and what it meant. Reference was made in this connection by the Attorney General to the White Paper on Indian States, Mr. V. P. Menon's book already referred to, and the account contained in a recent book 'The Great Divide' by Mr. Hodson. He traced the paramountcy of the British Crown in India. I do not consider it necessary to refer to them. The best exposition of British Paramountcy is to be found in a famous letter by Lord Reading Viceroy of India addressed to the Nizam of Hyderabad when the latter claimed rights of kingship. It is printed as Appendix I to the White Paper. This is what the Viceroy said:

"4. The Sovereignty of the British Crown is Supreme in India, and therefore no ruler of an Indian State can justifiably claim to negotiate with the British Government on an equal footing. Its supremacy is not based only upon treaties and engagements, but exists independently of them and, quite apart from its prerogative in matters relating to foreign powers and policies, it is the right and duty of the British Government, while scrupulously respecting all treaties and engagements with the Indian States, to preserve peace and good order throughout India. The consequences that follow are so well known, and so clearly apply no less to Your Exalted Highness than to other Rulers, that it seems hardly necessary to point them out. But if illustrations are necessary, I would remind Your Exalted Highness that the Ruler of Hyderabad along with other Rulers received in 1862 a Sanad declaratory of the British Government's desire for the perpetuation of his House and Government, subject to continued loyalty to the Crown; that no succession in the Masnad of Hyderabad is valid unless it is recognised by His Majesty the King-Emperor; and that the British Government is the only arbiter in cases of disputed succession.

5. The right of the British Government to intervene in the internal affairs of Indian States is another instance of the consequences necessarily involved in the supremacy of the British Crown. The British Government have indeed shown again and again that they have no desire to exercise this right without grave reason. But the internal, no less than the external security which the Ruling Princes enjoy is due ultimately to the protecting power of the British Government, and where Imperial interests are concerned, or the general welfare of the people of a State is seriously and grievously affected by the action of its Government, it is with the Paramount Power that the ultimate responsibility of taking remedial action, if necessary, must lie. The varying degrees of internal sovereignty which the Rulers enjoy are all subject to the due exercise by the Paramount Power of this responsibility. Other illustrations could be added no less inconsistent than the foregoing with the suggestion that except in matters relating to foreign powers and policies, the Government of Your Exalted Highness and the British Government stand on a plane of equality. But I do not think I need pursue the subject further. I will merely add that the title "Faithful Ally" which Your Exalted Highness enjoys has not the effect of putting Your Government in a category separate from that of other States under paramountcy of the British Crown".

35. The 1858 Act had recognised all treaties made by the East India Company with the Rulers, as binding on the Crown. Lord Canning in his despatch of April 30, 1860 recommended the perpetuation of the rule of the Princes over their States. This was accepted and a special power of adoption was recognised and new sanads were issued. The policy of annexation started by Lord Dalhousie then ceased. The Ruler could, thereafter, be punished only for extreme bad conduct but even so the territory was not annexed.

The Ruler was deposed but a successor was recognized in his place.

36. This position continued down to 1935. In 1927 the Butler Committee clearly recognised the claim of the Princes that making any transfer of the Crown's rights and obligations in relation to the States, to persons not under the Crown's authority, would be conditional on the agreement of the States. This was particularly directed against an Indian Government responsible to the Indian Legislature. To keep the Indian Government away from the States, after the advent of the Government of India Act, 1935 the old political department under the charge of the Governor-General disappeared. Previously the Governor-General's Executive Council had left the States entirely to the Governor-General. The Act of 1935 formed the basis of a personal relationship between the States and the rest of India. This meant a reversal of the policy and the British Indian Executive was slowly deprived of all constitutional status vis-a-vis the States. A Crown Representative was introduced as the link between the States and British India. The Government of India Act 1935 had visualised a federation between British India and the Indian States but that scheme did not materialise. The Indian States were anxious to create sovereign States but the Crown prerogatives in respect of them continued. Lord Linlithgow's declaration promised no commitment about the States without their consent in any future constitution that the Indians might frame for themselves. This was implemented by instructions to the Governor-General not to hand over paramountcy to the future Indian Government and paramountcy, so long as it lasted was that of the Crown and not of the Government of India.

37. When the Constitution came paramountcy had already lapsed. The Indian States were able to make several reservations in their own favour. They were anxious to frame their own Constitutions but many States could not withstand pressure of the Ministry of States and thought better of merging with such reservations as the Merger Agreements made in their favour. The other States like Hyderabad, Mysore and Jammu and Kashmir on the one hand and the United States or Union of States on the other also dropped the idea of separate Constitutions for themselves (except Jammu & Kashmir) and integrated with India, accepting the Indian Constitution. The Rulers were allowed to get a Privy Purse free of taxes on income and to enjoy personal property and privileges. Articles 291, 362, 366 (15) and (22) were included to recognise those conditions on which surrender of power had taken place. Article 363 was included to keep certain matters away from Courts and now the most important question is what was granted to the Rulers by the Constitution and how far their rights could be enforced in a Court of Law. Paramountcy as such was no more as there was no paramount power and no vassal. The Rulers had lost their territories and their right to rule and administer them. They were left only a recognition of their original title, a privy purse, their private properties and a few privileges. These rights were the only indicia of their former sovereignty but they enjoyed them by the force of the Constitution although in every respect they were ordinary citizens and not potentates. The paramountcy which the Crown exercised over them was different. Then the Crown had an absolute freedom to make and unmake Rulers in the exercise of paramountcy. The Constitution ensured the position of the Ruler and his successor with regard to the Privy Purse and privileges, although leaving the President the right to confer that status on a Ruler by recognition. This result was reached by treaties, covenants and agreements.

38. The source or origin of paramountcy of the Crown was not the treaties, sanads or agreements. There were no paramountcy rights by reason of which the British were paramount but because they were paramount, therefore, they had paramountcy rights. When paramountcy lapsed it did not fall on the shoulders of Indian Government. The right to recognise a Ruler from out of several claimants was not an act of paramountcy. The selection had to be in accordance with law and custom. It was not the arbitrary power which made the conferral of Rulership a gift from the Crown. There is no provision to that effect in the Constitution or even the Covenants and Agreements. That the Constitution gave the right to the President to recognise a Ruler for the time being, is apparent enough but it cannot be stretched to give a paramountcy of the same character as that enjoyed by the British crown. To claim such a paramountcy one has to ignore completely the arrangements by which the Rulers parted with their territories and Ruling rights and were assured of their Privy Purses and privileges. These rights became constitutionally protected rights which so long as the Ruler's line was not extinct belonged to the Ruler for the time being. In one sentence when the guarantees were given by the Constitution paramountcy, if any, went out. If it was intended that rightful claims could be disregarded, at any time, a very clear provision authorising that they be overridden would have been included. On the other hand Article 362 says in admonitory terms that in the exercise of the power of Parliament or of the Legislature of a State to make laws or in the exercise of executive power of the Union or of a State, due regard shall be had to the guarantee or assurance given in any such Covenant or Agreement as is referred to in Cl. (1) of Article 291 with respect to the personal rights, privileges, and dignities of the Ruler of an Indian State. This provision is rather the converse of paramountcy inasmuch as it compels the two limbs of Government to have 'due regard' to the guarantees and assurances given to the Rulers.

39. There can be no paramountcy against a citizen of India and the Rulers today are not potentates they were. They are citizens of India like other citizens albeit with some privileges and privy purses which other citizens do not get. That is an accident of history and with the concurrence of the Indian people in their Constituent Assembly. The power that has been exercised against them must, therefore, be justified under the Constitution and the laws and not by invoking a nebulous doctrine of paramountcy which Lord Jowitt describes in his Dictionary of English Law thus:

"The relationship of the Sovereign as Emperor of India to the rulers of the native States, terminated by the Indian Independence Act, 1947"

40. The Attorney General contended that Article 363 'recreated paramountcy.' That article was intended to keep certain matters outside the jurisdiction of the Court. It must be construed according to its own terms. No meaning, beyond what the words convey, can be attributed to those words by resorting to the imperial doctrine. What those words mean, I shall consider later but I reject the claim that the President or the Government of India can invoke the doctrine to sustain an illegal inroad upon the rights of citizens.

41. Nor is the argument that this was some kind of an 'act of State' of any more validity. This Court has ruled on more than one occasion that an 'act of State' is not available against a citizen. An act of State is a sovereign act which is neither grounded on law nor does it pretend to be so. It was described by me, quoting from Fletcher-Moulton L. J. Salaman v. Secy. of State for India, (1906) 1 KB 613 at p. 640, as 'a catastrophic charge constituting a new departure', in the State of Saurashtra v. Memon Haji Ismail, (1960) 1 SCR 537 at p. 544 = (AIR 1959 SC 1383 at p. 1387). I have not been able to better that expression. I further pointed out that 'in civil commotion, or even in war or peace, the State cannot act 'catastrophically' outside the ordinary law and there is legal remedy for its wrongful acts against its own subjects or even a friendly alien within the State.' I may again reaffirm the observations in that case based upon the statement of the law by Lord Kingsdown in Secy. of State in Council for India v. Kamachee Boye Sahaba, (1859) 13 Moo PC 22. This is what I said:

"The question thus is always: Did the State or its agents purport to act 'catastrophically' or subject to the ordinary course of the Law? This question was posed in (1859) 13 Moo PC 22 by Lord Kingsdown in these words:

"What was the real character of the act done in this case? Was it a seizure by arbitrary power on behalf of the Crown of Great Britain, of the dominations and property of a neighbouring State, an act not affecting to justify itself on grounds of Municipal Law? Or was it, in whole or in part, a possession taken by the Crown under colour of legal title of the property of the late Raja of Tanjore, in trust for those who, by law, might be entitled to it on the death of the last possessor? If it were the latter the defence set up, of course, has no foundation'." The defence is not available if there is only a colour of legal title against a citizen. In that event the action must fail unless supported by law. Since there are no sovereign or political powers under our Constitution every action of the Executive limb of Government must seek justification in some law. The very existence of Article 363, which is said to incorporate some kind of paramountcy or act of State, shows that there is no political power outside the law, otherwise an additional bar would hardly have been necessary.

42. The learned Attorney General when faced by the rulings on the act of State of this Court and the English Courts, gave up the attempt for justification as such and pleaded that the Covenants and Agreements created 'imperfect obligations'. The phrase 'imperfect obligations' is more often to be met with in the Law of Contract but it was applied by Tindal C. J. to political treaties in G. Gibson and Ors. Assignees of J. Mallandaino, Bankrupt v. The East India Co., (1839) 132 ER 1105. There the claim was made by a retired Military Officer for pension against the Directors of the East India Company based on certain treaties. It was held that such agreements lacked vinculum juris. The phrase 'imperfect obligations' was thus used in regard to individuals as subjects of international rights and duties. The recognition in an international treaty or other instrument of rights ensuring to the benefit of individuals other than the parties to the agreement, is sometimes held not to confer the right of enforceability at the instance of such other persons. Therefore, the beneficiary under these rights cannot take measures to enforce them by his own independent steps. In the Peter Pazmany University,* case the Permanent Court of International Justice observed:

"It is scarcely necessary to point out that the capacity to possess civil rights does not necessarily imply the capacity to exercise those rights oneself".

* (Series A/B No. 61 p. 231)

Thus a rule of International Law formerly held the field that persons holding such rights are incapable of asserting them in the international sphere or in the Municipal Courts. The instrument may make them owners of rights and yet take away the remedy from them. This is the sense in which Tindal C. J. used the phrase 'lacking in vinculum juris'.

43. This position has now altered and there is a rethinking on the subject. It is now gradually gaining recognition that if there be some municipal legislation giving enforceability to the right, then the right can be claimed in a Municipal Court. This change of view followed the Advisory Opinion of the Permanent Court of International Justice in the jurisdiction of the Courts of Danzig in the matter of Railway Officials in Danzig. () The rights given by a treaty received a broader acceptance there. This case gives an exposition of the rights of individuals in the international sphere and the Municipal Courts. The argument of Poland in the case was that the agreement between Poland and Danzig regulating the conditions of employment of the Railway Officials taken over in Railway Service, created rights only between Poland and Danzig and as that agreement was not incorporated in the laws of Poland, it created no rights for individuals, and that the Danzig Courts had no jurisdiction to decide in respect of those rights. The Court did not accept the contention. It observed:

"It may be readily admitted that, according to a well-established principle of international law, the Beamtenabkommen, being an international agreement, cannot, as such, create direct rights and obligations for private individuals. But it cannot be disputed that the very object of an international agreement, according to the intention of the contracting parties, may be the adoption by the parties of some definite rules, creating individual rights and obligations and enforceable by the national Courts. That there is such an intention in the present case can be established by reference to the terms of the Beamtenabkommen." (Page 17)

() Advisory Opinion No. 15, series B No. 15.

44. Before dealing with the position of the Rulers themselves, let me illustrate the application of this observation in our country in relation to third parties, safeguarded by an international agreement. The Covenants and Merger Agreements contained clauses guaranteeing continuance of service to the Civil Servants and of their pensions. Those Civil servants would not have been able to enforce these agreements in Municipal Courts by their own individual steps if there was no law or the rights were not otherwise recognised. But when they shared with the Civil servants of the former British India, the benefits of Articles 309-311 of the Constitution and the Rules governing such services, it is not possible to deny to them the benefits that the Constitution and the Rules confer. The Covenants cannot then be said to create 'imperfect obligations' since the Constitution takes the matter into itself and gives them its own guarantees. The individual rights and obligations no doubt originally flowed from a contract between High Contracting Parties and might not have created a vinculum juris in favour of third parties but the Constitution having granted rights and created corresponding obligations, those rights and obligations are enforceable in our Courts. This Court has ruled on many occasions that a recognition of rights by law or otherwise makes them justiciable: see for example State of Rajasthan v. Shyam Lal, (1964) 7 SCR 174 = (AIR 1964 SC 1495).

45. The case of the Rulers is a fortiori for they are the contracting parties. In so far as those guarantees became a part of our Constitution and were included in various statutes passed by Parliament such as the Income-tax Act, the Wealth-tax Act, etc., they would be enforceable according to the tenor of the Constitution and the other laws (subject of course to such bar as the Constitution creates by Article 363). Then no question of an 'act of State' or of 'imperfect obligations' arises. To sustain the President's act repudiating the rights and obligations on the basis of a discarded theory of 'imperfect obligations' would drain the Constitution and the laws of their efficacy by an executive act without amendment of the Constitution or the laws and that cannot be permitted. This is not a right for enforcement in foro conscientiae to make good, or of which the performance could only be sought for by petition, memorial or remonstrance. This is a case for an action in a Court of Law if the dispute is not barred by the Constitution itself.

46. Therefore there is no bar to the jurisdiction of this Court except that created by Article 363. The ambit of that bar will be worked out by me on the terms of that article later but before that bar can be applied one must know what is it that is in controversy here. The main dispute is as to the validity of the action of the President in withdrawing recognition from the Rulers without an exception. The petitioners question the power, authority and jurisdiction of the President to do so. They characterise the act as mala fide, ultra vires and therefore a nullity. I will consider the matter in the same order.

47. The charge of mala fide action in this connection can only mean want of good faith. Good faith according to the definition in the General Clauses Act means a thing which is in fact done honestly, whether it is done negligently or not. In other words an act done honestly must be deemed to be done in good faith. Mr. Palkhivala described the act as wanting in good faith and relying on many cases contended that want of good faith must avoid the act. It is hardly necessary to refer to those cases here as it is well settled that lack of bona fides unravels every transaction. I do not think that it is open to Mr. Palkhivala to describe the act as wanting in good faith without pleading any collateral fact. Further it is not open to me to probe the reasons for a decision by the President. To begin with under Article 74 (2) the question, whether any and if so what, advice was tendered by the Ministers to the President cannot be inquired into by any Court. Again by Article 361 (1) the President is not answerable to any Court for the exercise and performance of the powers and duties of his office or for any act done or purporting to be done by him in the exercise of those powers and duties except in an investigation of a charge under Article 61. All that is saved is that appropriate proceedings against the Government of India can be taken. Therefore, whether the President acted rightly or wrongly in the matter may be decided against the Government of India without questioning the conduct of the President. Therefore, the only question open is whether the act of the President was ultra vires the Constitution.

48. The question of ultra vires was put thus by the petitioners:

"An executive exercise of power must be in accordance with the Constitution under Article 53. Article 362 says that the President must exercise the power with due regard to the guarantees and assurances. The President in his action has completely disregarded Articles 291 and 362 and by withdrawing the recognition of the Princes has acted ultra vires the Constitution. Under Article 73 the Executive power of the Union is continuous with the law making power of Parliament. When Parliament refused to amend the Constitution, the President's power did not extend that far by executive action. By his executive act the President has denuded Articles 291 and 362 of their content forever. The President was required to recognise the Rulers and has with one stroke withdrawn the recognition. He is trying to do indirectly what Parliament refused to do directly that is to say remove Articles 291, 362 and 366 (2) from the Constitution. This has been done without a hearing to the Rulers and is in breach of accepted principles of natural justice. The rule of law prevails and no unconstitutional act of any authority, unsupported by law, can avail: 1964-2 SCR 454 at p. 460 = (AIR 1967 SC 1170 at pp. 1173, 1174).

The action is not only against the Constitution but it also affects a large body of tax and other concessions. Prominent among them are Wealth Tax Act, 1957, Sections 2 (p) and 5 (1) (iii), Gift Tax Act, 1958, Section 5 (1) (xiv), Hindu Succession Act, 1956, Section 5 (iii), Income-tax Act, 1922, Section 4 (3) (x); Income-tax Act, 1961, Section 10 (19), Estate Duty Act, 1953, Section 33 (1) (i); Part B States (Taxation Concessions) Order, 1950, Cl. 15; Sea Customs Act, 1878, Section 23. Freedom from prosecutions and Civil suits to a certain extent is assured respectively by the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, Section 197-A and the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, Sections 87-A and 87-B read with Sections 85 and 86. These privileges have fallen with Rulership and it could not have been intended that these laws would be rendered nugatory by the expedient of removing the Princes".

49. The power to withdraw recognition from a Ruler is claimed by the Attorney General to be implicit in Article 366 (22) because it defines a Ruler in terms of recognition 'for the time being' by the President. It is also contended that the power to recognise itself includes the power to withdraw recognition. It is, therefore, necessary to see how far the President can go on the words of the article. The critical words in the article are 'for the time being'. These words show that the Ruler is a person, who, to be considered as a Ruler must, at any given moment of time, be recognised by the President whether he be the original signatory of a Covenant or Agreement or his successor. The words thus indicate that only one person at a time can be recognised as the Ruler of a State. It also shows a continuity of succession so that an interregnum is avoided. It does show that Rulership cannot be permanent since the continuance as Ruler depends upon the continuance of the recognition. But the definition neither expressly nor by implication places the power in the hands of the President to say that although a Ruler was in existence or a successor was available that, there shall be no Ruler of any particular State. Such a power does not flow from the definition which contemplates the existence of a Ruler for the time being. The phrase 'for the time being' cannot mean that any person can be appointed who has no claim whatever or that temporary appointments may be made or that no appointment need be made. The continuity of a Ruler of an Indian State is obligatory so long as the Ruler is alive or a successor can be found. It may be that where the line becomes extinct (as happened in some cases) or no suitable successor could be found that no Ruler need be recognised. But where the Ruler exists or there is a suitable successor the power to recognise a Ruler is implicit just as much as the power to withdraw recognition in suitable cases. The Union Government cannot escape this obligation by invoking paramountcy or some state policy. The obligation to recognise a Ruler is bound up with the other guarantees contained in Articles 291 and 362. The definition in Article 366 (22) is merely the key to find a particular Ruler. The withdrawal of recognition from all the Rulers renders the guarantees as also the relevant articles of the Constitution inoperative. It could never be the intention of the Constitution that by an Executive act the operation of those articles would come to a stop. The action of the President has the indirect effect not only of abrogating these articles but also of rendering certain provisions in the Income-tax Act, Wealth Tax Act, the Gift Tax Act, the Codes of Civil and Criminal Procedure, etc., completely otiose. Executive action can never be allowed to have that effect unless the power is explicitly conferred. The intention of Article 366 (22) is exactly the converse of what the Union Government understands it to be.

50. The answer to the first question is that the power of the President was wholly outside Article 366 (22). However wide that power, it does not extend to withdrawing recognition of all the Rulers by a mid-night order. The President was incompetent to do so and, therefore, his act must be treated as a nullity. This question is independent of Article 363 and has no bearing upon any Covenant, etc. It relates only to the power of the President in behalf of recognition of Rulers and withdrawal of recognition. The Court is, therefore, free from Article 363 to consider whether the act can be sustained or not. That Article only applies to acts within the four corners of the Article and not to acts wholly outside. I will show later how that bar can operate on Article 366 (22) when I consider Article 363. For the present I state my conclusion that having considered the matter I am satisfied that the act must be declared to be ultra vires and a nullity. This answers the first ground of attack in favour of the petitioners. The question, is however, reserved for answer whether I am barred by Article 363.

51. Before I consider the matter from the angle of the Articles of the Constitution bearing upon the controversy and the bar of Article 363 I wish to dispose of one matter which is also, in a manner of speaking, a bar at the very threshold. That bar would arise if this is not a petition covered by Article 32. The petitioners seem to base their claim to relief on four grounds:

(a) that the order of the President is a nullity;

(b) that by the order of the President their privy purses are stopped and that is an infringement of Articles 19 (1) (f) and 31;

(c) that the order also deprives them of their privileges and some are property rights and some affect personal liberty; and

(d) that statutory rights under certain statutes (already mentioned above) are destroyed and they result in deprivation of property through illegal taxes.

52. It is sufficient for this purpose to find out if any right of property is involved. The most outstanding effect of the order is the deprivation of the Privy Purses. These Privy Purses are charge on and paid out of the Consolidated Fund of India, free of all taxes on income (Article 291). If the payments are obligatory and they can be regarded as property a petition under Article 32 will lie as the action to deprive the Rulers of their Privy Purses must be an infringement of Articles 19 and 31.

53. Therefore, I need begin only with the Privy Purses, the stoppage of which is the direct consequence of the order withdrawing recognition. A preliminary point arises under Article 19 whether the Rulers can be regarded as citizen. I have assumed this so far as I cannot see how otherwise they can be described. In Bagwat Singh Bahadur of Udaipur v. State of Rajasthan, (1964) 5 SCR 1 at p. 6 = (AIR 1964 SC 444 at p. 446) it is laid down that:—

"The appellant has also, since the Constitution, been a citizen of India, and his recognition as Ruler under Article 366 (22) of the Constitution has not altered his status, but as a citizen he is undoubtedly assured a privileged position".
Therefore, the matter can be considered both under Article 19 and Article 31.

54. In two cases of the Court Madhaorao Phalke v. State of Madhya Bharat, (1961) 1 SCR 957 = (AIR 1961 SC 298) and State of Madhya Pradesh

v. Ranojirao Shinde, (1968) 3 SCR 489 = (AIR 1968 SC 1053), pensions and cash grants were regarded as property. The reason for the decision is not as fully given as the importance of the subject required and, therefore, I permit myself to say a few words here.

55. I shall show later that the obligation to pay the Privy Purse to a Ruler is absolute and the right to claim it when due subsists in each Ruler. This is a position for the enforcement of Fundamental Right to property and therefore the petitioners must show that a right to property is infringed or is in imminent danger of being threatened. The learned Attorney General questioned the competency of these petitions and the claim that property rights were involved. According to him the right is one to continue to receive a payment de futuro and no more. A right to receive payment is not, according to him, a right to property.

56. The attempt is to equate the periodic payment as being in the nature of payments of debts. It is said that this creates a right in personam and not a right in rem. Therefore, there is enforcement of an obligation in personam but not a right to reach property which can be said to belong to the Rulers. I do not accept the contention of the learned Attorney General.

57. In his summary of the Law of Contract (p. 124) Langdell remarked that 'a debt according to the popular conception of the term, is a sum of money belonging to one person (the creditor), but in the possession of another the debtor'. He questioned this approach. Blackstone contrasted property in possession and property in action and held contracts to be within the latter (*). He was in effect thinking of a debt. According to him property in action exists:

"Where a man hath not the occupation, but merely a bare right to occupy the thing in question, the possession whereof may, however, be recovered by a suit or action at law"

He was of opinion that till then the thing or its equivalent, remains in suspense, and the injured party has only the right and not the occupation. It being a thing in potentia and not in esse it is only a thing in action and not possession. Sohm (The Institutes) also says that till the fulfilment of the obligations the creditor has right only against the debtor and not against a thing.

58. This old concept of property is no longer held to be true. Markby (*) regards the liability of the promisor as itself a thing which is capable of being bought and sold, assigned and transferred and if of money value may itself be regarded as an object of ownership. An obligation according to him is as much a res as any other property and the only difference is in the mode of enjoyment. The creditor realizes this ownership by compelling the debtor to perform his obligation. As illustration he gives a catalogue of passive rights of ownership. Anson (Principles of Law of Contract) supports him by pointing out that an obligation is a right of control exercisable by one person over others for acts which have a money value.

59. The dynamic theory of obligations regards a debt as a claim to an equivalent in value to a floating charge against the generality of things which are the properties of the debtor. From this is developed the notion of a credit-debt where property rights arise from a promise, express or implied in respect of ascertained or readily ascertained sums of money. Thus a debt or a liability to pay money passes through four stages. First there is a debt not yet due. The debt has not yet become a part of the obligor's 'things' because no net liability has yet arisen. The second stage is when the liability may have arisen but is not either ascertained or admitted. Here again the amount due has not become a part of the obligor's things. The third stage is reached when the liability is both ascertained and admitted. Then it is property proper of the debtor in the creditor's hands. The law begins to recognise such property in insolvency, in dealing with it in fraud of creditors, fraudulent preference of one creditor against another, subrogation, equitable estoppel, stoppage in transitu etc. A credit-debt is then a debt fully provable and which is fixed and absolutely owing. The last stage is when the debt becomes a judgment-debt by reason of a decree of a Court. Thus an American Judge held 'outstanding uncollected accounts' as property: Standard Marine Insurance Co. v. Board of Assessors, 123 La 717 at p. 720. It is because of this that the French Law includes such obligations in mobiles.

60. Applying these tests to the Privy Purses, it is clear that they would be property. As soon as an Appropriation Act is passed there is established a credit-debt and the outstanding Privy Purse becomes the property of the Ruler in the hands of Government. It is also a sum certain and absolutely payable.

61. The learned Attorney-General however contends that Article 291 which charges the Privy Purse on the Consolidated Fund of India, to be paid to the Ruler free of all taxes on income does not provide that it shall be paid and, therefore, the Article only lays down the source and manner of payment but creates no right to claim, receive or enforce payment. In my judgment this is a complete misreading of the Article.

62. The word 'charged', is a term of art. In general law 'a charge' creates a pledge and also a priority in payment. The word also denotes in parliamentary practice non-votability. The latter meaning distinguishes it from those items which are payable indiscriminately from the same fund. The result of charging a sum on the Consolidated Fund is to provide that its destination shall not be altered even by vote of Parliament and the charging is sufficiently effective for ensuring the right application. It also sometimes creates priorities as in the Constitutions of some other countries. In our Constitution numerous items of payment are charged on the Consolidated Fund but no priority inter se is established. Yet Article 291 makes the amount payable to the Ruler and, therefore, creates a right in him to demand it. The words of the Article are 'shall be charged on and paid out of etc.'. The article makes the payment obligatory. The words when expanded read 'shall be charged on and shall be paid out of etc.'. The direction to pay is in no uncertain terms. The article is thus self-ordaining. The recipient is mentioned in (b) where the Article says 'and the sums so paid to any Ruler' and this shows who is to be paid. Therefore, the article in addition to the source and manner also lays down that it shall be paid and paid free of taxes on income to the Ruler. The Article thus not only creates a liability but also a right in the Ruler. It is self-supporting and self-ordaining.

63. The learned Attorney-General contends that even accepting all this as a valid construction of Article 291 of the Constitution, the petitioners must fail because they are seeking either to enforce the Covenants and Agreements or on seeking to enforce a provision of the Constitution relating to such Covenants and Agreements. The same argument is also raised in respect of articles 362 and 366 (22). According to him the petitioners stand excluded by Article 363. This is the crux of the case before us. The answer to this question depends on the meaning to be attributed to the four articles in question, and determines the fate of these petitions.

64. I begin with Article 363. That article was quoted in extenso earlier. The learned Attorney-General used the historical events as background for his contention that Article 363 must be construed as giving an exclusive right of determination to the President on the subject of recognition and withdrawal of recognition. He submitted that just as an act of State cannot be questioned in a Municipal Court so also the withdrawal of recognition cannot be called in question. He cited a large number of authorities in support of his case that an act of State is not subject to the scrutiny of the Courts.

65. The question here is not one of an act of State. Nor can any assurance be drawn from the doctrine of act of State. What we have to do is to construe the article. It bars jurisdiction of Courts. It has no bearing upon the rights of the Rulers as such. It neither increases nor reduces those rights by an iota. I shall presently attempt to find out its meaning. Before I do so I must say that it is a well known rule of interpretation of provisions barring the jurisdiction of Civil Courts that they must be strictly construed for the exclusion of the jurisdiction of a Civil Court, and least of all the Supreme Court, is not to be lightly inferred. The gist of the present dispute is whether the article bars the relief to the petitioners although as held by me, the order of the President is ultra vires.

66. The article commences with the opening words 'notwithstanding anything in this Constitution.' These exclusionary words are no doubt potent enough to exclude every consideration arising from the other provisions of the Constitution including the Chapter on Fundamental Rights, but for that reason alone we must determine the scope of the article strictly. The article goes on to say that jurisdiction of all Courts including the Supreme Court is barred except that the President may consult the Supreme Court. Having said this the article goes on to specify the matters on which the jurisdiction is barred. This it does in two parts. The first part is:

"in any dispute arising out of any provision of a treaty etc. which was entered into or executed before the commencement of this Constitution by any Ruler of an Indian State to which the Government of the Dominion of India was a party and which has or has been continued in operation after such commencement."

This shows that a dispute relating to the enforcement, interpretation or breach of any treaty etc. is barred from the Courts' jurisdiction. The words 'arising out of the provisions of a treaty etc.' limit the words. Thus if a treaty, covenant etc., is characterised as forged by any party, that would not be a dispute 'arising out of any provision of a treaty, covenant, etc.' That dispute would be whether there is a genuine treaty or not. This illustration is given by me to show that the exclusion is not all embracing. The dispute to be barred must arise from a provision of the treaty, etc.

67. The second part bars the Courts' jurisdiction 'in any dispute in respect of any right accruing under or any liability or obligation arising out of any of the provisions of this Constitution relating to any such treaty etc.' Here the dispute must be in respect of a right which accrues under a provision of the Constitution or the liability or obligation must arise similarly from a provision. The words 'provisions of this Constitution' are not left unqualified. They could not be left unqualified for then the latter part would have barred every dispute from the Courts. The provision had to be pointed out. The article however does not refer to any article by its number. If the article had said in any dispute in respect of any right accruing under or any liability or obligation arising out of Articles 291, 362 and 366 (22), all controversy in this case would have been at an end. But the article uses a qualifying phrase which does not name, but describes the provisions. A search has, therefore, to be made with a view to determining which provision answers the description and which does not. In other words, we have to satisfy ourselves, before we deny our jurisdiction, that of the Articles 291, 362, 366 (22) which one, or all of them answer the description. The requirement is that the article must be a provision 'relating to' a treaty covenant, etc. I must therefore examine each of the three Articles 291, 362, 366 (22) to discover if all of them and, if not, which of them would fit in with those words.

68. The learned Attorney-General practically read every word through some dictionary or other. The words are 'relating to'. They mean that the provisions must bear upon treaties, etc. as its dominant purpose or theme. It is not sufficient if the treaties, etc., are mentioned there for some collateral purpose. During the course of arguments I illustrated my meaning by referring to Article 102 which provides that a person is disqualified if he is an undischarged insolvent and asked the question whether the provision could be said to be 'relating to membership or to insolvency and got the obvious answer that it is the former. The fact that it mentions 'insolvency', 'insanity' etc., does not make it any other than a provision relating to membership of Parliament. The dominant purpose and theme of the article is one and one only and that has to be discovered before one can say that it is 'relating to' this or that. A similar illustration is to be found in Article 105 (3) where a provision is to be found relating to powers etc., of Indian Parliament and not to those of the House of Commons. Therefore, in trying to find out whether any provision is 'relating to' a treaty, etc., it is not enough to find a mention of treaty etc.' That may be for a subsidiary purpose, not sufficient to qualify for consideration as the dominant theme. It is the dominant purpose and theme which alone determines the quality of the provision.

69. I shall now apply this test to Articles 291, 362 and 366 (22) beginning with Art. 362 since to my mind it is the plainest of all and is definitely within the description. It provides directly for the enforcement of guarantees and assurances by requiring Parliament, the Legislatures and the Executive Governments of the Union and the States to have 'due regard' for those guarantees and assurances. The article can only be used to support a claim to rights, privileges and dignities. Its dominant theme is the rights, privileges and dignities of the Rulers under Covenants and Agreements and therefore, the provision is 'relating to' Covenants and Agreements. The reference to Article 291 does not influence the application of the test to Article 291 because that is merely a legislative device and does not tie the two Articles together. It only saves repetition of certain phrases already used in Article 291. If Article 362 were earlier in the Constitution the phrase would have occurred in it and would have been referred to in the other article. Therefore no conclusion can be drawn from this description in Article 362. Therefore Article 362 is one of the provisions relating to a treaty, covenant etc. A litigant invoking its aid really relies on a provision relating to a Covenant etc.

70. I shall now consider Art. 366 (22). That is only a definition clause. It is intended to point out who is the Ruler and of which State. It does so by saying that a Ruler is a person (a) who entered into a Covenant or Agreement before the commencement of the Constitution and the payment of any sum free of tax had been guaranteed or assured by the Government of the Dominion of India as Privy Purse or (b) the successor of such Ruler. For purposes of (a) the same repetition is again avoided by the same legislative device of referring to Article 291 for brevity. This Article renders the certainty of assumption of Rulership to depend upon recognition and that recognition is worked out primarily under Covenants and Agreements. The dominant and immediate purpose and application of the Article depends upon Covenants and Agreements. I have earlier said that the President in recognising a Ruler or withdrawing his recognition does not act arbitrarily but in the light of Covenants and Agreements. All such instruments mention law and custom of the family except the Bhopal Agreement where a local statute has to be observed. The selection of a Ruler's successor thus has to be worked out under a Covenant or Agreement. The Article, therefore, has for its dominant purpose the selection of Rulers through the application of the Covenants and Agreements. After the President has exercised his jurisdiction and power to recognise a Ruler according to his understanding of the implications of a Covenant etc., no one else has jurisdiction to enter upon the same question unless it can be proved that the act was null and void in toto. When the President acts within the four corners of his authority the matter is barred by Article 363. If this were not so then the recognition of a Ruler or successor by the President would be subject to further confirmation by the Courts and that is not the meaning of Article 366 (22).

71. During the course of arguments I pointed out that if the Maharaja of Jhind were recognised as the Nizam of Hyderabad, there would be no application of Article 366 (22) and the action so wholly arbitrary as not to be protected by Article 363. The answer was that the President would never do so. But who would have thought in 1950 that recognition of all the Rulers would be withdrawn by a single order? Therefore, extreme examples are necessary to solve extreme cases. I have questioned the action of the President because the bar of Article 363 does not operate. Neither is the recognition of an original signatory of a Covenant or Agreement involved, nor the recognition of a successor. The act is not even one which the Court leaves alone because the discretion is exercised in a manner and to the extent a President in the proper discharge of his functions can go. What is done is to take away recognition from all Rulers and as such power does not flow from Article 366 (22), the bar of Article 363 does not apply to such a dispute. It arises neither from the Covenants etc. nor from the provisions of the Constitution. It ceases to have the protection of Article 363.

72. Article 363 immediately follows Article 362. Although not much significance can be attached to the collocation of the articles, it is to be noticed that the exclusionary article wants us to search for a provision relating to a treaty etc., before staying our hands. It does leave the matter open when it could have ruled out the mystery by naming the articles under which relief was to be barred. By applying the test, I have indicated, the provision is located. One such provision is Article 366 (22) when the President acts within the discretion given by Covenants and Agreements.

73. There remains Article 291 to consider. That article was read and re-read before us. Every word in that article was commented upon and dictaries were consulted. I do not propose to refer to dictionaries at all. The words of the article are plain enough to me and I have only to discover its dominant and immediate purpose or theme to say whether it is a provision relating to Covenants or Agreements. It, no doubt, begins by mentioning Covenants and Agreements but that is not all. We cannot from that fact alone bar ourselves. The relationship between the dominant purpose of the provision and the Covenants and Agreements still remains to be established and their involvement in the dispute must be found. In this connection we must ask the question: Is this provision in reality and substance a provision on the subject-matter of Covenants and Agreements? It is not enough that it refers to the Covenants and Agreements. It should make them the subject-matter of enactment and decision.

74. The Article when carefully analysed leads to these conclusions: The main and only purpose of the provision is to charge Privy Purses on the Consolidated Fund of India and make obligatory their payment free of taxes on income. It narrows the guarantee of the Dominion Government from freedom from all taxes to freedom only from taxes on income. Earlier I had occasion to show that the Princes had guaranteed to themselves their Privy Purses free of all taxes. The Dominion Government had guaranteed or assured the same freedom. The Constitution limits the freedom to taxes on income and creates a charge on the Consolidated Fund. There were other guarantees as in the Merger Agreements of Bilaspur and Bhopal (quoted earlier) which are ignored by the Article. The guarantee of the Dominion Government is thus continued in a modified form. The reference to Covenants and Agreements is casual and subsidiary. The immediate and dominant purpose of the provision is to ensure payment of Privy Purses, to charge them on the Consolidated Fund and to make them free of taxes on income. The argument of the learned Attorney-General that it indicates only the source and manner of payment rather destroys the case for the application of Article 363 than lends support to it. The mention therein of Covenants and Agreements is for its own purpose so that the amounts need not be specified. In this connection there is no difference between Articles 290-A and 291 although the learned Attorney-General made much of the mention of the name of the Travancore Devasom Fund in the former and absence of the names of the Rulers in the latter, or again the mention of a specific sum in the former and no sum in the latter. The article is self-sustaining and self-ordaining. Its purpose is not relating to Covenants etc., but to something else. Article 291 differs from Articles 362 and 366 (22) in this that the Privy Purses have already been settled and one has not to enforce the Covenants at all. One does not enforce the Covenants but the mandate of the Article itself. Whenever the Privy Purse is modified under the terms of a Covenant, the Article is again invoked ab extra. That dispute is not related to Article 291 and the bar of Article 363 operates. That matter is outside the jurisdiction of Courts. It is only when the Privy Purse is a settled fact of which the Courts can take notice, without having to construe the Covenants for itself that the bar of Article 363 is avoided. In that case the Article does not answer the description of 'a dispute' or of the latter part of Article 363.

75. My conclusions on Arts. 291, 362 and 366 (22) are that Article 291 is not a provision relating to Covenants and Agreements but a special provision for the source of payment of privy purses by charging them on the Consolidated Fund and for making the payment free of taxes on income. It does not in its dominant purpose and theme answer the description in the latter part of Article 363. Article 362 is within the bar of Article 363 because its dominant purpose is to get recognised the Covenants and Agreements with Rulers. However, in so far as the same guarantees find place in legislative measures the provisions of Art. 362 need not be invoked and the dispute decided on the basis of those statutes. Such a case may not attract Article 362 and consequently the bar of Article 363 may not also apply. Article 366 (22) is within the description so long as the President in recognising a Ruler or a successor is effectuating the provisions of a Covenant or Agreement. It may apply when the discretion exercised is relatable to his powers flowing from the Covenants read with the Article. However where the President acts wholly outside the provisions of Article 366 (22) his action can be questioned because the bar applies on bona fide and legitimate action and not to ultra vires actions.

76. The error in the case of the Union of India arises from certain circumstances. The first is to think that the paramountcy of the Crown descended upon the President of Indian Government. In that paramountcy the recognition of a Ruler was a gift from the Crown. In view of the history of integration of States and the provisions of the Constitution in Articles 291, 362 and 366 (22), there is no paramountcy left at all, if paramountcy could at all be exercised against citizens. The only discretion left is to select a suitable successor to a Ruler and perhaps to withdraw recognition on grounds which are sound and sufficient. Whether such another kind of withdrawal of recognition may be equally capable of being questioned in a Court of law, is a matter on which I do not express an opinion. Therefore the President cannot claim a total immunity for his acts from the scrutiny of the Court. Neither the paramountcy of the Grand Moghul who could give Subehdarships to his Generals as he pleased nor the paramountcy of the British Crown has descended to him. This error is further enhanced by too facile a reading of Article 363. Any tenuous connection between an Article and the Covenant or Agreement, however remote, is not to be considered sufficient to make a provision fall within the description in the latter part of Article 363. Due regard was not paid to the fact that the draftsman would have referred to numbers of Articles if the disputes of every kind under those articles stood excluded.

77. The learned Attorney-General relied in particular on some cases which he said had laid down that the act of recognition is a political act, that it cannot be questioned before a Court of Law. He also referred to cases in which the question of the application of Article 363 had arisen. My brother Hegde in his judgment has sufficiently considered them and I am in such agreement with him that I find it unnecessary to repeat what he has said there. I adopt his reasoning.

78. In conclusion I hold the orders of the President to be ultra vires and declare them to be so. In consequence a writ of mandamus shall issue not to enforce the orders. The petitions are allowed with costs.

The Judgment of Shah, Sikri, Shelat, Bhargava, Vaidialingam, Grover and Dua, JJ., was delivered by SHAH, J.:— 79. On August 15, 1947, Maharajadhiraja Jivaji Rao Scindia of Gwalior—hereinafter called 'Jivaji Rao'—executed an instrument of accession stipulating that the Governor-General of India, the Dominion Legislature, the Federal Court of India, and other Dominion authorities shall for the purpose of the Dominion, exercise in relation to the State of Gwalior, such functions as may be vested in them by the Government of India Act, 1935, in respect of Defence, External Affairs, Communications and matters ancillary thereto.

80. On April 22, 1948, twenty heads of States in the Madhya Bharat region executed a covenant to form the United State of Gwalior, Indore and Malwa. The covenant guaranteed to each head of covenanting State payment of the amount specified therein as his Privy Purse out of the revenues of the United State; to full ownership, use and enjoyment of all private properties belonging to him on the date of making over the administration of the State to the Rajpramukh; to succession to the gaddi of the State according to law and custom; and to all personal privileges, dignities and titles enjoyed by him within and outside the territories of his State immediately before the 15th day of August, 1947.

81. Five more States joined the United State of Gwalior, Indore and Malwa (Madhya Bharat) with effect from July 1, 1948. On July 19, 1948, Jivaji Rao executed on behalf of the United State of Gwalior, Indore and Malwa (Madhya Bharat) a revised instrument of accession. Pursuant to the merger agreements, it was proclaimed on November 24, 1949, that the United State of Madhya Bharat adopted the Constitution of India as the Constitution of the United State. The Constitution of India was promulgated on November 26, 1949, and was brought into force (except for certain articles specified in Article 394) with effect from January 26, 1950.

82. The President of India recognized Jivaji Rao as the Ruler of Gwalior. The Government of India continued to pay the privy purse and accorded to him the privileges specified in the instrument of accession and the merger agreement, except those which were modified by statutes. After the death of Jivaji Rao the President recognized Madhav Rao—petitioner herein—as the Ruler of Gwalior.

83. Under the Madhya Bharat Gangajali Fund Trust Act, 1954, enacted by the State Legislature the Ruler of the State of Gwalior is one of the three trustees authorised to manage the Gangajali Fund settled by the State and to apply the income thereof for charitable purposes.

84. On September 2, 1970, a Bill intituled the Constitution (Twentyfourth Amendment) Bill, 1970, and providing that "Articles 291 and 362 of the Constitution and clause (22) of Article 366 shall be omitted" was introduced in the Lok Sabha. The Bill was declared passed with the amendment that the provisions thereof shall come into operation with effect from October 15, 1970. On September 5, 1970, the motion for consideration of the Bill did not obtain, in the Rajya Sabha, the requisite majority of not less than two-thirds of the members present and voting as required by Article 368 of the Constitution. The motion for introduction of the Bill was declared lost. A few hours thereafter the President of India purporting to exercise power under Clause (22) of Article 366 of the Constitution signed an instrument withdrawing recognition of all the Rulers. A communication dated September 6, 1970 issued "by Order and in the name of the President" was received by the petitioner stating that:

"In exercise of the powers vested in him under Article 366 (22) of the Constitution, the President hereby directs that with effect from the date of this Order His Highness Maharajadhiraja Madhav Rao Jivaji Rao Scindia Bahadur do cease to be recognised as the Ruler of Gwalior."

Similar orders were communicated to all other Rulers in India who had been previously recognised under Art. 366 (22) of the Constitution.

85. The Union Finance Minister laid on the table of the Rajya Sabha, on September 7, 1970, a statement, inter alia, that:

"....Government is fortified in the belief that there is widespread support in the country for putting an end to an outmoded and antiquated system which permitted the enjoyment of privileges and privy purses by a small section of our people without any corresponding social obligations on their part.

As it has been Government's declared policy to abolish these privileges and privy purses and also to put an end to the very concept of Rulership, Government felt they would be justified in de-recognising the Rulers and thus putting an end to a period of political and other uncertainties so undesirable in a matter of this nature. Accordingly, President has decided to derecognise all the Rulers and thereby terminate their privy purses and privileges with immediate effect. Orders have been issued in pursuance of the decision."

86. Madhav Rao Scindia moved a petition on September 11, 1970, in this Court under Article 32 of the Constitution claiming — (a) a declaration that the order dated September 6, 1970 was "un-constitutional, ultra vires and void" and a direction quashing that order; (b) a declaration that the petitioner continues to be the Ruler of Gwalior and to be entitled to the privy purse and to personal rights and privileges accorded to him as Ruler; and (c) a direction to the Union of India to continue to pay the privy purse and to continue to recognise the Rulership and the personal rights and privileges of the petitioner and to implement and observe the provisions of the covenant and the merger agreement. He claimed that in making the order the President acted without authority of law; that the order was made for a collateral purpose; and that by the order the rights guaranteed to the petitioner under Articles 14, 19 and 31 of the Constitution were infringed. The petition was later amended with leave of the Court and it was claimed that the order infringed the guarantee under Article 21 of the Constitution also.

87. The Union of India by their affidavit contended, inter alia, that the petition was not maintainable because the source of the right to receive the privy purse and to be accorded the privileges claimed was a political agreement and the privy purse was in the nature of a political pension; that Article 291 did not impose any obligation upon the Union to pay the privy purse; that Articles 291 and 362 of the Constitution did not invest the petitioner and the other Rulers with any enforceable rights; that recognition of the Rulers under Art. 366 (22) was a "matter of State policy" and the President was competent to pass the order dated September 6, 1970, that the order was not made for a collateral purpose as alleged; and that by the order the guarantee of Articles 14, 19 (1) (f), 31 (1) or any other article of the Constitution was not infringed.

88. By the order of the President withdrawing his recognition as a Ruler, the petitioner is denied the right to the privy purse and to the personal rights, privileges and dignities accorded to him as a Ruler; he is also denied the benefit of the exemption from liability to pay income-tax under Section 10 (1a) of the Income-tax Act, 1961; Wealth-tax under Section 5 (1) (iii) and (xiv) of the Wealth-tax Act, 1957; gift-tax under S. 5 (1) (xiv) of the Gift-tax Act, 1958; and of the exemption from liability to pay duty under the Sea Customs Act, 1878, which remains operative under the Customs Act, 1961; he is also deprived of the statutory protection that he shall not be sued without the consent of the Central Government under Section 87-B of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and that cognizance of any offence alleged to have been committed by him shall not be taken by any Court without the previous sanction under Section 197-A of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898. The petitioner is also disentitled to the management and administration of the Gangajali Fund Trust.

89. By his order dated August 22, 1961, the President recognised the petitioner as the Ruler of Gwalior. If the order of the President is without authority of law, as the petitioner contends it is, there is a clear infringement of the guarantee of the fundamental rights under Articles 19 (1) (f), 21 and 31 (1) of the Constitution. It is unnecessary in the view we take, to deal with the plea raised by Mr. Palkhivala that Rulership is "property" and the order of the President deprives the petitioner of that property without authority of law.

90. Validity of the order of the President is challenged on the grounds that—(1) the President has no power to withdraw recognition of a Ruler once recognised; (2) exercise of the power to withdraw recognition, assuming that the President has such power, is coupled with the duty to recognise his successor and an order made without recognising a successor is invalid; (3) the order of the President "de-recognising" all the Rulers en masse amounted to arbitrary exercise of power; and (4) in any event, the order was made for a collateral purpose, that is, to give effect to the "policy of the Government" after the Government was unable to secure the requisite majority in the Parliament to the Constitution Amendment Bill.

91. Article 366 (22) of the Constitution reads:

"In this Constitution, unless the context otherwise requires, the following expressions have the meanings hereby respectively assigned to them, that is to say—

(22) "Ruler" in relation to an Indian State means the Prince, Chief or other person by whom any such covenant or agreement as is referred to in clause (1) of Article 291 was entered into and who for the time being is recognised by the President as the Ruler of the State, and includes any person who for the time being is recognised by the President as the successor of such Ruler."

Clause (15) of Article 366 defines an "Indian State" as meaning "any territory which the Government of the Dominion of India recognised as such a State." Article 291, as amended by the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956, reads as follows:

"Where under any covenant or agreement entered into by the Ruler of any Indian State before the commencement of this Constitution, the payment of any sums, free of tax, has been guaranteed or assured by the Government of the Dominion of India to any Ruler of such State as privy purse—

- (a) such sums shall be charged on, and paid out of, the Consolidated Fund of India; and
- (b) the sums so paid to the Ruler shall be exempt from all taxes on income."

The definition of "Ruler" in Clause (22) of Article 366 is in two parts; a person is a Ruler if he being (a) a Prince, Chief or other person who had entered into the covenant or agreement as is referred to in Clause (1) of Article 291, is for the time being recognised by the President as the Ruler; or (b) if he is for the time being recognised by the President as the successor of the Ruler mentioned in part (a). Use of the expression "for the time being" in relation to the persons who had entered into covenants or agreements and in relation to the successor, may perhaps imply that the President has the power in appropriate cases and for adequate reasons to withdraw recognition, but that is a matter on which it is unnecessary for the purpose of this petition to express any final opinion.

92. Granting that the President may withdraw recognition of a Ruler once granted, the power conferred by Article 366 (22) is exercisable only for good cause, i. e., because of any personal disqualifications incurred by a Ruler. By the provisions enacted in Arts. 366 (22), 291 and 362 of the Constitution the privileges of Rulers are made an integral part of the constitutional scheme. Thereby a class of citizens are, for historical reasons, accorded special privileges. They cannot be deprived of those privileges arbitrarily, for the foundation of our Constitution is firmly laid in the Rule of Law and no instrumentality of the Union, not even the President as the head of the Executive, is invested with arbitrary authority.

93. In the affidavit on behalf of the Union of India it was averred that "the concept of Rulership, the privy purse and the privileges without any relatable function or responsibility have become incompatible with democracy, equality and social justice in the context of India of today"; and that since "the commencement of the Constitution many things have changed; many hereditary rights and unearned income have been restricted and many privileges and vested interests have been done away with and many laws have been passed with the object of checking the concentration of economic power—both rural and industrial, the Union of India have decided that the concept of Rulership, the privy purse and the privileges should be abolished." Thereby the executive arrogates to itself power which it does not possess: our Constitution does not invest the power claimed in the executive branch of the Union.

94. The plea that in recognising or "de-recognising" a person as a Ruler, the President exercises "political power which is a sovereign power" and that after an order of de-recognition "no erstwhile Ruler can make a claim in respect of the Rulership or the privy purse or any of the privileges" since the relevant covenants under which the rights of the Rulers were recognised were "political agreements" and the rights and obligations thereunder were liable to be varied or repudiated in accordance with "State policy" in the interests of the people also received no countenance from our Constitution. The first branch of the argument is inconsistent with the basic concept under our Constitution of division of State functions; the second is inconsistent with the history of events between 1947 and 1949, and the third receives, for reasons to be presently stated, no support from the relevant constitutional provisions.

95. Whether the Parliament may by constitutional amendment abolish the rights and privileges accorded to the Rulers is not, and cannot be, debated in this petition, for no such constitutional amendment has been made. The petitioner challenges the authority of the President by an order purporting to be made under Article 366 (22) to withdraw recognition of Rulers so as to deprive them of the rights and privileges to which they are entitled by virtue of their status as Rulers.

96. The functions of the State are classified as legislative, judicial and executive; the executive function is the residue which does not fall within the other two functions. Constitutional mechanism in a democratic polity does not contemplate existence of any function which may qua the citizens be designated as political and orders made in exercise whereof are not liable to be tested for their validity before the lawfully constituted courts. Rai Sahib Ram Jawaya Kapur v. State of Punjab, (1955) 1 SCR 225 = (AIR 1955 SC 549), Jayantilal Amritlal Shodhan v. F. N. Rana, (1964) 5 SCR 294 = (AIR 1964 SC 648); and Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edn., Vol. 7, Art. 409, at p. 192. Observations made in two judgments of this Court, on which the Attorney-General relied, do not support a contrary view. In Nawab Usman Ali Khan v. Sagarmal, (1965) 3 SCR 201 = (AIR 1965 SC 1798) this Court held that the amount payable to the Ruler of Jaora "on account of the privy purse" was exempt from attachment in execution of the decree of a Civil Court, because it was a "political pension" within the meaning of Section 60 (1) (g) of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court in determining the true nature of the privy purse, characterised the sanction for payment as "political and not legal". That has, however, no bearing on the question in issue here. In Kunwar Shri Vir Rajendra Singh v. Union of India, (1970) 2 SCR 631 = (AIR 1970 SC 1946) this Court negated the claim of an applicant that his right to property was violated because the President accepted another claimant to the gaddi of Dholpur as Ruler. The Court observed that the recognition of Rulership by the President, in exercise of his political power, did not amount to recognition of any right to private properties of the Ruler. The Court did not attempt to classify the exercise of the Presidential function under Art. 366 (22) as distinct from executive functions; that is clear from the dictum that the exercise of the President's power was "an instance of purely executive function".

97. The history of negotiations, which culminated in the integration of the territories of the Princely States before the commencement of the Constitution clearly indicates that the recognition of the status of the Rulers and their rights was not temporary, and also not liable to be varied or repudiated in accordance with "State policy". Power of the President to determine the status of the Rulers by cancelling or withdrawing recognition to effectuate the policy of the Government to abolish the concept of Rulership is therefore liable to be challenged in these petitions.

98. The circumstances in which the constitutional provisions under cls. (15) and (22) of Article 366, and Articles 291 and 362 were incorporated may be briefly set out.

99. In the era before 1947 the term "State" applied to a political community occupying a territory in India of defined boundaries and subject to a single Ruler who enjoyed or exercised, as belonging to him, any of the functions and attributes of internal sovereignty duly recognised by the British Crown. There were in India more than 560 States: forty out of those States had treaty relations with the Paramount Power; a larger number of States had some form of engagements or sanads, and the remaining enjoyed in one or the other form recognition of their status by the British Crown. The treaties, engagements and sanads covered a wide field, and the rights and obligations of the States arising out of those agreements varied from State to State. The rights that the British Crown as the Paramount Power exercised in relation to the States covered authority in matters external as well as internal. The States had no international personality, the Paramount Power had exclusive authority to make peace or war or to negotiate or communicate with foreign States. The Paramount Power had the right of intervention in internal affairs which could be exercised for the benefit of the head of the State, of India as a whole, or for giving effect to international commitments.

100. The Government of India Act, 1935, was a step in the direction of achieving a political unity over the entire sub-continent: it envisaged a constitutional relationship between the Indian States and Provinces in British India on a federal basis. But the concept of a loose federation of disparate constituent units in which the power and authority of the Federation were to differ between one constituent unit and another was soon abandoned as inherently impracticable. The Second World War awakened a new consciousness which regarded colonialism as an anachronism. With the object of transferring power to a Dominion, several schemes were evolved by the British authorities from time to time. There was the Cripps Plan, followed by the Simla Conference of 1945, and the Cabinet Mission Plan of 1946. The Cabinet Mission issued a Memorandum dated May 12, 1946, in regard to the States' Treaties and to Paramountcy: it affirmed that the rights of the States which flowed from their relationship with the Crown will no longer exist and that the rights surrendered by the States to the Paramount Power will revert to the States. The void caused by the lapse of paramountcy, it was said, may be filled either by the States entering into a federal relationship with the successor Government or Governments in British India, or by entering into a particular arrangement with it or them. On May 16, 1946, the Cabinet Mission announced its Plan for the entry of the States into the proposed Union of India. They simultaneously declared that the paramountcy of the British Crown could not be retained nor transferred to the new Government.

101. The British Parliament decided to set up the two Dominions of India and Pakistan, and promulgated on July 18, 1947, the Indian Independence Act, 1947. By Section 1, two new independent Dominions of India and Pakistan were set up as from August 15, 1947, and Section 7 of the Act provided:

"(1) As from the appointed day—

- (a) His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom have no responsibility as respects the government of any of the territories which, immediately before that day, were included in British India;
- (b) the suzerainty of His Majesty over the Indian States lapses, and with it, all treaties and agreements in force at the date of the passing of this Act between His Majesty and the rulers of Indian States, all obligations of His Majesty at that date, towards Indian States or the rulers thereof and all powers, rights, authority or jurisdiction exercisable by His Majesty at that date in or in relation to Indian States by treaty, grant, usage, sufferance or otherwise; and

(c) * * *

Provided that, notwithstanding anything in paragraph (b) or paragraph (c) of the sub-section, effect shall, as nearly as may be continued to be given to the provisions of any such agreement as is therein referred to which relate to customs, transit and communications, posts and telegraphs, or other like matters, until the provisions in question are denounced by the ruler of the Indian State or person having authority in the tribal areas on the one hand, or by the Dominion or Province or other part thereof concerned on the other hand, or are superseded by subsequent agreements.

(2) The assent of the Parliament of the United Kingdom is hereby given to the omission from the Royal Style and Titles of the words "Indian Imperator" and the words "Emperor of India", and to the issue by His Majesty for that purpose of His Royal Proclamation under the Great Seal of the Realm."

By the Indian (Provisional Constitution) Order, 1947, Sections 5 and 6 of the Government of India Act, 1935, were extensively amended, setting up machinery for the Indian States to accede to the Dominion of India. Promulgation of the Indian Independence Act generated great political activity. On July 5, 1947, Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel, Minister for Home Affairs, made a statement defining the policy of the Government of India, and inviting the Princes to accede to the Dominion on three subjects—Defence, Foreign Affairs and Communications, in which the common interests of the country were involved. He assured the Princes that the policy of the States Department (which had been set up in place of the Political Department) was not to conduct the relations with the States in a manner savouring of domination of one over the other; the domination, if any, would be the domination of mutual interests and welfare. He expressed the hope that the Princes would bear in mind that the alternative to co-operation in the general interest was anarchy and chaos which would overwhelm the great as well as the small in a common ruin, if the States and Provinces were unable to act together in the minimum of common tasks. On July 25, 1947, at a special meeting of the Princes, Lord Mountbatten—the Crown representative—advised the Princes to accede to the appropriate Dominion in regard to the three subjects of Defence, External Affairs and Communications and assured them that their accession on those subjects would involve no financial liability and in other matters there would be no encroachment on their internal sovereignty.

102. The plea for accession met with a favourable response. Negotiations for accession of the States were soon completed and instruments of accession were executed by the heads of the Indian States. Simultaneously, Standstill Agreements, the acceptance of which was made by the Government of India a condition of accession by the States concerned, were also entered into between the Dominion Government and the acceding States. The Standstill Agreements recited:

"Whereas it is to the benefit and advantage of the Dominion of India as well as of the Indian States that existing agreements and administrative arrangements in the matters of common concern, should continue for the time being between the Dominion of India or any part thereof and the Indian States:

Now therefore it is agreed between the State and the Dominion of India that:—

"1. (1) Until new agreements in this behalf are made, all agreements and administrative arrangements as to matters of common concern now existing between Crown and any Indian State shall, insofar as may be appropriate, continue as between the Dominion of India, or, as the case may be, the part thereof, and the State.

(2) In particular, and without derogation from the generality of sub-cl. (1) of this clause the matters referred to above shall include the matters specified in the Schedule to this Agreement.

3. Nothing in this agreement includes the exercise of any paramountcy functions."

103. By the instruments of accession the Princes were assured that the terms of the instruments will not be varied by any amendment of the Government of India Act, 1935, or the Indian Independence Act, 1947, unless such amendment be accepted by the Prince by the supplementary instrument; that nothing in the instrument shall be deemed to commit the Prince in any way to acceptance of any future Constitution of India or to fetter his discretion to enter into agreements with the Government of India under any such future Constitution, and that nothing in the instrument shall affect the continuance of the Prince's sovereignty in and over the State, or, save as provided by or under the instrument, the exercise of any powers, authority and rights enjoyed by the Prince as head of the State or the validity of any law in force in the State.

104. This was a significant step in the direction of forging a vital constitutional link between the Dominion of India and the States. It was followed by the next phase culminating in integration of some States in the Provinces, consolidation of other States into sizable administrative units, and some other States executing agreements integrating with the Dominion. The process of integration of States varied from State to State. 216 out of the States merged with the existing Provinces; 61 States were taken over as centrally administered areas; and 275 States were integrated in five Unions of States, Saurashtra, Madhya Bharat, Rajasthan, Pepsu and Travancore Cochin. Merger of the States with the Provinces was achieved initially in name only, because the authority—executive, legislative and judicial—was still exercised under the Extra-Provincial Jurisdiction Act by the Provinces within which the States were initially merged. The merger agreements of the Unions of States were to operate as their provisional constitutions. Even the centrally administered areas did not become part of the Dominion territory.

105. The instruments of merger provided for the integration of States and for transfer of power from the Ruler and guaranteed to the Princes the privy purse, succession to the gaddi, rights and privileges, and full ownership, use and enjoyment of all private properties belonging to them. The covenants for establishing Union of States and the agreements of merger contained provisions guaranteeing to the heads of merged States or integrated States payment of privy purses. These instruments were concurred in and guaranteed by the Government of the Dominion of India.

106. The next phase was of assimilation and consolidation of the unity achieved till then. In the case of the "provincially merged" and centrally administered States, authority for exercising the powers of administration and legislation originally derived from the Extra-Provincial Jurisdiction Act, 1947, was later exercisable by virtue of orders issued under Sections 290A and 290B incorporated in the Government of India Act, 1935 with effect from January 15, 1949. By an order issued under Section 290A diverse steps were taken for integration of the former States into the Provinces.

107. To ensure an organic unity of India, the Princes were invited to accede to the Dominion, and later to integrate with India under a Constitution with a Republican form of Government. The Princes, some out of patriotism and others from motives of self-interest, agreed to merge their territories and to abandon all authority in regard to their territories in consideration of certain special concessions. To give constitutional sanction to the merger agreements, special provisions were expressly incorporated in the draft Constitution recognising the status of the Princes, the obligation to pay the privy purse, and the personal rights and privileges guaranteed to them. The territories of the States after integration retained no political or legal identity. Special recognition was given to the status of the Princes and to their rights and the obligations of the Union and for that purpose, Articles 366 (15), 366 (22), 291 and 362 were incorporated in the Constitution. In Article 366 (15) the expression "Indian State" was defined as meaning any territory which the Government of the Dominion of India recognised as such a State; and in Article 366 (22) a special definition of the expression "Ruler" was evolved for the purpose of the Constitution; by Art. 291 the privy purse was charged on, and made payable out of, the Consolidated Fund of India, and the sum so paid as privy purse to the Ruler was declared exempt from all taxes on income. By Article 362 the Parliament, the State Legislatures and the executive of the Union and the States were enjoined to have "due regard to the guarantees and assurances" under the covenants and agreements between the Government of the Dominion of India and the heads of the former Indian States.

108. The stage was then set for the promulgation of the Constitution. A few days before November 26, 1949, a large majority of the States proclaimed that the Constitution of India will be the Constitution for their respective territories, and shall be enforced as such in accordance with its provisions, and that the provisions of that Constitution shall, as from the date of its commencement, supersede and abrogate all other existing constitutional provisions inconsistent therewith. Merger agreements were executed to give effect to the proclamations. The proclamation and the execution of the merger agreements resulted in complete extinction of the States and Unions of States as separate units. The princes ceased to retain any vestige of sovereign rights or authority qua their former States. They acquired the status of citizens of India.

109. The plea raised by the Union must be considered in the light of these developments. The negotiations, the assurances given by leading statesmen, and the terms of the covenants and agreements were certainly not intended to be an exercise in futility. The argument that the parties to the instruments were entering into solemn undertakings intending the arrangements to be temporary, and liable to be set at naught by the unilateral act of the Union of India, must be rejected.

110. In form Article 366 (22) is a definition clause. It however invests the President with authority to recognize a person as a Ruler. Granting that under Article 366 (22) the President may withdraw the recognition of a person as a Ruler, the power to nullify important provisions of the Constitution does not flow from that clause. The plea raised by the Attorney-General that recognition of Rulership was a "gift of the President" or was "in the gift of the President" is not borne out by the position of and the nature of the powers and functions of the President under our constitutional scheme. The President is made by the Constitution repository of the power to recognise the Rulers. That power may be exercised consistently with and in aid of the Constitutional scheme. A democratic Constitution founded in the Rule of Law does not envisage authority in any instrumentality of the Union reminiscent of autocracy. The power to recognise a Ruler may be exercised in the case of first recognition only in favour of a person who has signed the covenant, and in favour of his successor having regard to the custom and law governing the State if the Ruler dies, or becomes incapable of functioning or his recognition is withdrawn. By the use of the expression "for the time being" in Clause (22) of Article 366 the President is not invested with authority to accord a temporary recognition to a Ruler nor with authority to recognise or not to recognise a Ruler arbitrarily: the expression "for the time being" predicates that there shall be a Ruler of the Indian State, that if the first recognised Ruler dies, or ceases to be a Ruler, a successor shall be appointed, and that there shall not be more Rulers than one at a given time.

111. By express injunction in Article 53 (1) of the Constitution the executive power vested in the President is directed to be exercised "in accordance with the Constitution". That power is intended to be exercised in aid of and not to destroy constitutional institutions. Granting that power to recognise a Ruler carries with it the power to withdraw recognition of the Ruler, the power must be exercised bona fide, and in the larger interest of the people consistently with the provisions of the Constitution to maintain the institution of Rulership. Power may therefore be exercised in the course of and for recognising another person as a successor to the Ruler, having regard to the laws and customs governing the State. The President is not competent to recognise a person as a Ruler who is not by the custom and laws governing succession to Rulership qualified to be a Ruler. The President cannot obviously withdraw recognition of a Ruler and recognise another person, as a matter of political patronage. Nor can he lawfully depart from the laws and customs governing succession so as to introduce a person as a Ruler who is not by ties of blood or affiliation related to the previous Ruler. Whether in certain exceptional circumstances the President may in granting recognition to a successor depart in the larger interest of the country from the strict rule or custom governing succession to the gaddi, is a question which need not be decided. But unquestionably the President is not invested with authority to recognise a stranger as successor to the gaddi, or not to recognise any person at all as a successor if he so chooses. The power of the President is plainly coupled with a duty; a duty to maintain the constitutional institution, the constitutional provisions, the constitutional scheme, and the sanctity of solemn agreements entered into by the predecessor of the Union Government which are accepted, recognised and incorporated in the Constitution. An order merely "de-recognising" a Ruler without providing for continuation of the institution of Rulership which is an integral part of the constitutional scheme is, therefore, plainly illegal.

112. Clause (22) of Article 366 is intended to invest the President with authority to recognise Rulers; see Kunvar Shri Vir Rajendra Singh v. Union of India, (1970) 2 SCR 631 = (AIR 1970 SC 1946). The clause incorporates the history of momentous events which took place in India between 1947 and 1949 leaving a lasting impression upon our national and constitutional structure. Articles 291, 362 and Part VII of the Constitution were when incorporated intended to grant recognition to the solemn promises on the strength of which the former Princes were invited by those at the helm of affairs to join the experiment for achieving for the millions their dream of securing a truly democratic form of Government in a united independent India, and clauses (15) and (22) of Article 366 were intended to serve the purpose of identifying the persons who remained entitled to the benefits of those constitutional guarantees.

113. A brief reference may be made to what was said in the Constituent Assembly by the Minister for Home Affairs who was in charge of the States when he moved for adoption of Art. 291. He used memorable words:

"These guarantees (merger agreements) form part of the historic settlements which enshrine in them the consummation of the great ideal of geographical, political and economic unification of India, an ideal which for centuries remained a distant dream and which appeared as remote and as difficult of attainment as ever even after the advent of Indian Independence.

"Human memory is proverbially short. Meeting in October, 1949, we are apt to forget the magnitude of the problem which confronted us in August, 1947 * * * the so-called lapse of paramountcy was a part of the Plan announced on June 3, 1947, which was accepted by the Congress. We agreed to this arrangement in the same manner as we agreed to the partition of India. We accepted it because we had no option to act otherwise. While there was recognition in the various announcements of the British Government of the fundamental fact that each State should link up its future with that Dominion with which it was geographically contiguous, the Indian Independence Act released the States from all their obligations to the British Crown. In their various authoritative pronouncements, the British spokesmen recognised that with the lapse of paramountcy technically and legally the States would become independent. * * * The situation was indeed fraught with immeasurable potentialities of disruption, for some of the Rulers did wish to exercise their technical right to declare independence and others to join the neighbouring Dominion.

It was against this unpropitious background that the Government of India invited the Rulers of the States to accede on three subjects of Defence, External Affairs and Communications. At the time the proposal was put forward to the Rulers, an assurance was given to them that they would retain the status quo except for accession on these subjects. It had been made clear to them that * * * there was no intention either to encroach on the internal autonomy or the sovereignty of the States or to fetter their discretion in respect of their acceptance of the new Constitution of India. These commitments had to be borne in mind when the States Ministry approached the Rulers for the integration of their States. There was nothing to compel or induce the Rulers to merge the identity of their States. Any use of force would have not only been against our professed principles but would have also caused serious repercussions. * * * The minimum which we could offer to them as quid pro quo for parting with their ruling powers was to guarantee to them privy purses and certain privileges on a reasonable and defined basis. The privy purse settlements are therefore in the nature of consideration for the surrender by the Rulers of all their ruling powers and also for the dissolution of the States as separate units.

"The Rulers have now discharged their part of the obligations by transferring all ruling powers and by agreeing to the integration of their States. The main part of our obligation under these agreements, is to ensure that the guarantees given by us in respect of privy purse are fully implemented. Our failure to do so would be a breach of faith and seriously prejudice the stabilisation of the new order."

In the larger interest of achieving the unity of the country, our statesmen chose to appeal to the patriotism of the Princes and not to rely upon the force of arms or methods of political agitation within the States. Negotiation of a friendly settlement was in the circumstances then prevailing the only advisable course. A discontented group of Princes was a serious threat to a smooth and orderly transition. The Constituent Assembly resolved to honour, without reservation, the promises made to the Princes from time to time. Clauses in the draft Constitution relating to the obligation of the Union to pay the privy purses and recognising certain rights, privileges and dignities till then enjoyed by the Princes, were intended to incorporate a just quid pro quo for surrender by them of their authority and powers and dissolution of their States.

114. A legislative mechanism was devised to grant the benefit to the former Princes by making a provision for recognising them as Rulers, and of incorporating in the Constitution the guarantees of the privy purse and personal rights and privileges. The former Princes were accordingly recognised as a class of citizens with special privileges granted to them because they had surrendered their powers, privileges and authority. The argument that the President as the head of the Executive may, in exercise of his executive power, destroy that institution, is plainly contrary to the fundamental concept of the Rule of Law.

115. There are many analogous provisions in the Constitution which confer upon the President a power coupled with a duty. We may refer to two such provisions. The President has under Articles 341 and 342 to specify Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes; and he has done so. Specification so made carries for the members of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes certain special benefits, e. g., reservation of seats in the House of the People, and in the State Legislative Assemblies by Arts. 330 and 332, and of the numerous provisions made in Schedules V and VI. It may be noticed that expressions 'Scheduled Castes' and 'Scheduled Tribes' are specially defined for the purposes of the Constitution by Articles 366 (24) and 366 (25). If power to declare certain classes of citizens as belonging to Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes includes power to withdraw declaration without substituting a fresh declaration, the President will be destroying the constitutional scheme. The power to specify may carry with it the power to withdraw specification, but it is coupled with a duty to specify in a manner which makes the constitutional provisions operative.

116. Article 366 (21) before it was deleted by the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956, defined "Rajpramukh" as meaning:—

- (a) in relation to the State of Hyderabad, the person who for the time being is recognised by the President as the Nizam of Hyderabad;
- (b) in relation to the State of Jammu and Kashmir, or the State of Mysore, the person who for the time being is recognised by the President as the Maharaja of that State; and
- (c) in relation to any other State specified in Part B of the First Schedule, the person who for the time being is recognised by the President as the Rajpramukh of that State.

and includes in relation to any of the said States any person for the time being recognised by the President as competent to exercise the powers of the Rajpramukh in relation to that State;" The first two clauses contemplated recognition of the Nizam of Hyderabad and the Maharajas of Jammu and Kashmir and of Mysore to be the Rajpramukhs. There can be no dispute that the Ruler of Hyderabad was the Nizam, and the Rulers of Jammu and Kashmir and Mysore were the Maharajas of those States. Assuming that power to recognise a person as the Nizam or Maharaja may carry with it the power to withdraw recognition, it carried with it a duty to recognise the successor. If no successor was recognised the constitutional scheme of administration of Part B States would be destroyed. Such a result could never have been contemplated.

117. By Article 291 payment of any sum free of tax guaranteed or assured under any covenant or agreement with a Ruler of an Indian State as privy purse, is charged on and is made payable out of the Consolidated Fund of India, and the sum so paid to any Ruler is exempt from all taxes on income. The Attorney-General said that the recognition by Article 291 of the existence of the guarantees and assurances under the covenants and agreements gives rise to no obligation to pay the privy purse, that even if the constitutional provisions raise an obligation of the Union, they do not raise corresponding rights in the Rulers; that in any event the covenants being acts of State violation of their terms will not because of Article 363, first limb and also on general principles of law found an action in the Municipal Courts. He finally submitted that the dispute with respect to the rights claimed to accrue in favour of the Rulers arises out of the provisions of the Constitution relating to the covenants, and on that account the jurisdiction of the Courts is excluded in regard to that dispute.

118. The Constitution in terms recognizes and accepts the obligation of the Union to pay the privy purse to the Rulers, Clause (a) of Article 291 enacts that the privy purse shall be charged on and be paid out of the Consolidated Fund of India. The words clearly raise an obligation of the Union to pay the privy purse.

119. The second branch of the argument is also without force. Article 266 provides that all revenues received by the Government of India, all loans raised by the issue of treasury bills, loans or ways and means advances, and all moneys received in repayment of loans shall form the Consolidated Fund of India. By Article 112 (2) the President is required in respect of every financial year to cause to be laid before the Houses of Parliament the annual financial statement of the estimated receipts and expenditure of the Government of India showing separately—(a) sums required to meet expenditure charged upon the Consolidated Fund of India; and (b) sums required to meet other expenditure proposed to be made from the Consolidated Fund of India. Clause (3) of Article 112 categorizes heads of expenditure charged on the Consolidated Fund of India. So much of the estimates as relate to expenditure charged upon the Consolidated Fund are by Art. 113 (1) open to discussion in, but not to be submitted to the vote of the Houses of Parliament. After demands in respect of sums required to meet other expenditure have been made and assented to by the House of the People, a Bill is introduced to provide for appropriation out of the Consolidated Fund of India of all moneys required to meet the expenditure charged on the Consolidated Fund of India and the grants: Article 114 (1). No amendment may be proposed in either House to vary the amounts or to alter the destination of the grant or the expenditure charged.

120. In support of his contention that by using the expression "charged" in Articles 291 and 112 (2) it is only intended to enact that the expenditure is not subject to the vote of the Parliament and that no priority in payment in respect of expenditure is declared, and in any event the expression "charged" creates no obligation enforceable at the instance of the person for whose benefit it is charged, the Attorney-General invited our attention to different provisions of the Constitution in each of which there is both a charge on the Consolidated Fund of an item of expenditure and an express direction for payment of the prescribed sum, and contended that Article 291 which merely recognizes the obligations of the Union Government to abide by the pre-existing covenants, creates no obligation for payment of the privy purse to the Rulers. He urged that the word "charge" in the Constitution in dealing with State financial procedure has the meaning it has in accountancy practice; it merely specifies the source from which payment is to be made and does not create a right in the Ruler or any enforceable obligation against the Union. Under the general law relating to transfer of property, a charge does not give rise to a right in rem the right is however more than a mere personal obligation, for it is a jus ad rem, a right to payment out of property specified: Govind Chandra Pal v. Dwarka Nath Pal, (1908) ILR 35 Cal 837 at p. 843; Raja Sri Shiva Prasad v. Beni Madhab, ILR 1 Pat 387 = (AIR 1922 Pat 529). A charge gives a right to payment out of a specific fund or property and a right to prior payment; but it does not create a right in rem in the fund or the property. A charge therefore gives rise to a right to receive payment, out of a specified fund or property in preference over others. In the absence of a clear indication to the contrary, it would be difficult to hold that the expression "charged" used in the context of financial matters of the State, has a different meaning. Our Constitution-makers borrowed the concept of a Consolidated Fund from the British system. That has also been adopted in the Constitutions of Canada, Australia, South Africa and other Commonwealth Countries. Certain Acts in the United Kingdom and elsewhere prescribe a sequence of priorities in payment of different heads of expenditure charged on the Consolidated Fund: s. 1 Consolidated Funds Act, 1816; s. 1 The House of Commons (Speaker) Act, 1832; ss. 103, 104 and 105 of the British North America Act, 1867; ss. 117, 119 Constitution of the Union of South Africa, 1909; ss. 81 and 82 of the Australian Constitution 1900.

121. Our Constitution does not recognize any sequence of priorities. But that does not alter the fundamental character of a charge that it specifies a fund out of which satisfaction of the expenditure charged must be made, and the prescribed expenditure shall have priority in payment to the person for whose benefit the expenditure is charged on the Fund. The constitutional obligation to proceed in the manner set out in Articles 112, 113 and 114 imposed upon the President and the Parliament implies a right in the person or persons in respect of whom the expenditure is to be incurred. That view is supported by other provisions in the Constitution. The expression "shall be charged on and paid out of the Consolidated Fund" is used in Articles 290, 290A and 291. Articles 290 and 291 do not expressly designate the payee: Art. 290A designates the payee. Article 273 merely uses the expression "shall be charged" in dealing with the grants-in-aid to the States of Assam, Bihar, Orissa and West Bengal, without any direction for payment. Article 275 (1) deals with grants-in-aid to the revenues of such States as the Parliament may determine: it is only the provisions dealing with the capital and recurring sums which refer to the obligation to pay, but in respect of these heads of expenditure there is no charge. There are also other provisions in the Constitution which charge expenditure on the Consolidated Fund, e. g. Article 148 (6); Article 146 (3); Article 229 (3) and Article 332, without any express provisions in the Constitution relating to payment. By leaving the payee indeterminate in Article 291 (a) no intention to raise an obligation without a corresponding right is disclosed. The expression "shall be charged on, and paid out of the Consolidated Fund" in Article 291, is intended to enact that the privy purse "shall be charged on, and shall be paid out of the Consolidated Fund." The expression "sums so paid to any Ruler" does not mean "sums if paid to any Ruler": it means that "sums when paid to any Ruler". Clauses (a) and (b) of Art. 291 read with Articles 112, 113 and 114 are, in our judgment, parts of a single scheme: they contemplate that the privy purse shall be included in the financial statement as charged upon the Consolidated Fund: it shall be beyond the voting power of the Parliament: its destination shall not be altered: it shall be paid to the Ruler after the Appropriation Bill is passed, and when paid it shall be free from liability to pay taxes on income. This is an integrated process, which cannot be interrupted without dislocating the constitutional mechanism.

122. The Attorney-General said that Article 291 raises an "imperfect obligation". An imperfect obligation is used to describe a moral duty—for instance, a duty to pay a debt of honour or a debt barred by limitation, but is properly left to the free will of him whose duty it is to discharge the obligation. A perfected obligation pertains to the domain of law and justice: an imperfect obligation to the domain of benevolence. An obligation which arises out of a constitutional provision to pay to the citizens sums of money in recognition of obligations of the predecessor Government may scarcely be called imperfect.

123. Article 291 does not merely incorporate recognition of the obligation to pay the privy purse under covenants incurred by the Government of the Dominion of India: it gives rise to a liability dehors the covenants. Under the covenants and agreements the obligation to pay the privy purse was undertaken in the case of all Princes (bar the heads of the States of Bhopal, Hyderabad and Mysore) to be made out of the revenues of their respective States. The Government of India concurred in and guaranteed payment of the amount of the privy purse under the terms of the agreements constituting the Unions. By the States Merger (Governors' Provinces) Order, 1949, this liability was imposed upon the Provinces when the States merged with those Provinces. In the case of a Union of States the liability to pay the privy purse to a head of State lay upon the Union of States to be discharged out of the revenues of the State. In the case of centrally merged States the Dominion Government had to pay the privy purse out of the revenues of the State.

124. Even after the integration of States, the obligations under the covenants were to be met out of the revenues of the respective States. The covenants and the various stages through which ultimate integration was achieved probably remained acts of State. The rights and obligations accruing or arising under those acts of State could be enforced only if the Union of India accepted those rights and obligations. After the Constitution the obligation to pay the privy purse rested upon the Union of India, not because it was inherited from the Dominion of India; but because of the constitutional mandate under Article 291. The source of the obligation was in Article 291, and not in the covenants and the agreements. Reference to the covenants and agreements in Article 291 was for defining the privy purse: the obligations of the Provinces in respect of the "Provincially merged States", and obligation of the Union of States in respect of the States merged in such Unions, ceased by recognition to retain their original character. The obligation which arose out of the merger agreement and was on that account an act of State shed its original character on acceptance by the Constitution. The entity obliged to pay the privy purse did not after the Constitution remain the same; the source out of which the obligation was to be satisfied was not the original source; the incident relating to exemption from payment of tax was vitally altered, and the amount also was in some cases different. Whereas the liability to pay the privy purse to the Rulers under the merger agreements was assured by the Dominion Government, the Constitution imposed upon the Union Government a directive to pay the privy purse.

125. In support of his contention that even if Article 291 itself gives rise to a fresh obligation, the Union of India has the same defences against the claim by the Rulers which the predecessor Government had and on that account if the Dominion Government could plead an act of State as a defence, the Union of India could do so, the Attorney-General relied upon two decisions: Doss v. Secy. of State for India in Council, (1875) 19 Eq 509; and (1906) 1 KB 613. These cases were decided on the interpretation of the Government of India Act, 1858, which by Section 67 enacted that treaties and all contracts, covenants, liabilities and engagements of the East India Company made before the Act of 1858 were declared enforceable against the Secretary of State as they might have been by and against the East India Company, if the Government of India Act, 1858, had not been passed. There is no such reservation in Article 291, or in Articles 294(1)(b) and 295(1)(b) of the Constitution. The cases of Doss, (1875) 19 Eq 509 and Salaman, (1906) 1 KB 613 have therefore no application.

126. The judgment of this Court in Union of India v. Gwalior Rayon Silk Manufacturing (Weaving) Co. Ltd., (1964) 7 SCR 892 = (AIR 1964 SC 1903) has also no bearing on the character of the obligation arising by virtue of Art. 291. In that case a company which had entered into an agreement with the State of Gwalior in 1947, whereby the State of Gwalior granted exemption from liability to taxation of certain industries started in the State, claimed to enforce that right against the Union of India after integration of the State. This Court held that by virtue of the agreement the Central Legislature was not deprived of its legislative power to impose taxes, and on that account after the extension of the Income-tax Act, 1922, the exemption granted under the agreement of 1947 must fall and that the Company was entitled only to such concessions as may be provided by the State law applicable thereto after the integration.

127. The structure of Article 362 is somewhat different. That Article imposes restrictions upon the exercise of legislative and executive functions. Recognition of the personal rights and privileges of the Rulers arising out of the covenants is not explicit, but the injunction that in the exercise of legislative and executive power due regard shall be had to the guarantees, clearly implies acceptance and recognition of the personal rights, privileges and dignities. The Constitution thereby affirms the binding force of the guarantees and assurances under the covenants, of personal rights, privileges and dignities, but unlike the guarantee of payment of the privy purse in Article 291, the guarantee under Article 362 is of the obligations under the original covenants and agreements executed by the Rulers, barring those regarding which there is express legislation enacted to give effect to certain personal rights and privileges, e. g. Wealth-tax Act, 1957, Gift-tax Act, 1958, notifications under the Sea Customs Act, 1878, Code of Civil Procedure 1908 and Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898. A Ruler seeking to enforce privileges which parliamentary statutes have recognised relies for right to relief upon the mandate of the statutes, and not of the covenant.

128. Article 363 of the Constitution provides:

"(1) Notwithstanding anything in this Constitution but subject to the provisions of Article 143 neither the Supreme Court nor any other court shall have jurisdiction in any dispute arising out of any provision of a treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instrument which was entered into or executed before the commencement of this Constitution by any Ruler of an Indian State and to which the Government of the Dominion of India or any of its predecessor Governments was a party and which has or has been continued in operation after such commencement, or in any dispute in respect of any right accruing under or any liability or obligation arising out of any of the provisions of this Constitution relating to any such treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad, or other similar instrument.

(2) In this article—

(a) "Indian State" means any territory recognised before the commencement of this Constitution by His Majesty or the Government of the Dominion of India as being such a State; and

Exclusion of the jurisdiction of the Courts is emphasized by the non obstante clause with which the Article commences. Notwithstanding the investment of jurisdiction upon this Court by Article 32, notwithstanding the jurisdiction conferred upon the High Courts by Art. 226, and notwithstanding the competence of all Civil Courts to decide disputes in respect of the obligations of the Union, it is declared that the Courts have no jurisdiction in respect of the two classes of disputes. The exception carved out of the exclusion in respect of the jurisdiction conferred upon this Court by Article 143 is not a real exception for the jurisdiction of this Court under Art. 143 is merely advisory. The non obstante clause however, does not enlarge the field of exclusion of judicial authority.

129. The Attorney-General urged that the jurisdiction of the Courts to enforce rights and obligations arising out of the covenants entered into by the Rulers to which the Government of the Dominion or the predecessor Governments were parties was excluded, because the rights and obligations arose out of acts of State and by constitutional provision that exclusion was affirmed and extended after the Constitution. An act of State need not, it is true, arise out of war or conquest: it may be the result of an agreement, and the terms of the agreements and the obligations flowing only from such agreements may not be enforced in the Municipal Courts of either State, unless the rights and obligations are recognised and accepted by the States or unless the document evidencing the act of State is itself the Constitution of the State or States. But there can be no act of State against its own citizen by the State. The Rulers who were before integration of their States aliens qua the dominion Government are now citizens. Their rights and obligations which arose from an act of State are now recognized and accepted by the Union of India. Enforcement of those rights and obligations is governed by the municipal laws, and unless the jurisdiction of the Courts is excluded in respect of any dispute, the Courts will be competent to grant relief.

An act of State vanishes when the new sovereign recognizes either expressly or by implication the rights flowing from the reform. State of Gujarat v. Vora Fiddali Badruddin Mithibarwal, (1964) 6 SCR 461 = (AIR 1964 SC 1043).

130. We are unable to agree with the Attorney-General that the "old unidentified concept of paramountcy of the British Crown" was inherited by the Union, by reason of the instruments of accession and merger agreements, and that "recognition of Rulership was a 'gift of the President', and not a matter of legal right, existing as it did in the area of paramountcy and remaining with the Government of India". The British Crown did not acquire paramountcy rights by any express grant, cession or transfer: it exercised paramountcy because it was the dominant power. Paramountcy had no legal origin, and no fixed concept: its dimensions depended upon what in a given situation the representatives of the British Crown thought expedient. Paramountcy meant those powers which the British authorities by the might of arms, and in disregard of the sovereignty and authority of the States chose to exercise. But that paramountcy lapsed with the Indian Independence Act, 1947; even its shadows disappeared with the integration of the States with the Indian Union. After the withdrawal of the British power and extinction of paramountcy of the British power the Dominion Government of India did not and could not exercise any paramountcy over the States. In clause 3 of the Standstill Agreement it was expressly recited that "Nothing in the agreement includes the exercise of any paramountcy functions." The relations between the States and the Dominion Government were strictly governed by the instruments executed from time to time. Subject to the power conferred in respect of certain matters of common interest to legislate and exercise executive authority the Princes had sovereignty within their territories. With the advent of the Constitution the States ceased to exist, and the Princes and Chiefs who were recognised as Rulers were left with no sovereign authority in them. It is difficult to conceive of the government of a democratic Republic exercising against its citizens "paramountcy" claimed to be inherited from an Imperial Power. The power and authority which the Union may exercise against its citizens and even aliens spring from and are strictly circumscribed by the Constitution.

131. The fundamentals on which paramountcy rested—i. e., the compulsion of geography and the essentials for ensuring security and special responsibility of the Government of India to protect all territories in India survived the enactment of the Indian Independence Act, for between August 15, 1947 and the date of integration of the various States the Government of India was the only fully sovereign authority. But paramountcy with its brazen-faced autocracy no longer survived the enactment of the Constitution. Under our Constitution an action not authorised by law against the citizens of the Union cannot be supported under the shelter of paramountcy. The functions of the President of India stem from the Constitution—not from a “concept of paramountcy of the British Crown” identified or unidentified. What the Constitution does not authorise, the President cannot grant. Rulership is therefore not a privilege which the President may in the exercise of his discretion bestow or withhold.

132. Jurisdiction of the Courts in matters specified is excluded not because the Union of India is a successor to the paramountcy of the British Crown, nor because the rights and obligations accepted and recognized by the Constitution may still be regarded as flowing from acts of State; it is only excluded in respect of specific matters by the express provision in Article 363 of the Constitution. Jurisdiction of the Courts even in those matters is not barred “at the threshold” as contended by the Attorney-General. The President cannot lay down the extent of this Court’s jurisdiction. He is not made by the Constitution the arbiter of the extent of his authority, nor of the validity of his acts. Action of the President is liable to be tested for its validity before the Courts unless their jurisdiction is by express enactment or clear implication barred. To accede to the claim that the jurisdiction of the Court is barred in respect of whatever the executive asserts is valid is plainly to subvert the Rule of Law. It is therefore within the province of the Court alone to determine what the dispute brought before it is, and to determine whether the jurisdiction of the Court is, because it falls within one of the two limbs of Article 363, excluded qua that dispute.

133. In dealing with the dimensions of exclusion of the exercise of judicial power under Article 363, it is necessary to bear in mind certain broad considerations. The proper forum under our Constitution for determining a legal dispute is the Court which is by training and experience, assisted by properly qualified advocates, fitted to perform that task. A provision which purports to exclude the jurisdiction of the Courts in certain matters and to deprive the aggrieved party of the normal remedy will be strictly construed, for it is a principle not to be whittled down that an aggrieved party will not, unless the jurisdiction of the Courts is by clear enactment or necessary implication barred, be denied recourse to the Courts for determination of his rights. The Court will interpret a statute as far as possible, agreeably to justice and reason and that in case of two or more interpretations, one which is more reasonable and just will be adopted, for there is always a presumption against the law maker intending injustice and unreason. The Court will avoid imputing to the Legislature an intention to enact a provision which flouts notions of justice and norms of fairplay, unless a contrary intention is manifest from words plain and unambiguous. A provision in a statute will not be construed to defeat its manifest purpose and general values which animate its structure. In an avowedly democratic polity, statutory provisions ensuring the security of fundamental human rights including the right to property will, unless the contrary mandate be precise and unqualified, be construed liberally so as to uphold the right. These rules apply to the interpretation of constitution and statutory provisions alike.

134. Article 366 (22) defines a “Ruler” as a Prince, Chief or other person who has entered into a covenant or agreement as is referred to in Article 291, and is recognized for the time being by the President and includes the Successor of such Ruler. Article 291 in defining the sum guaranteed or assured to the Ruler as Privy Purse refers to covenants and agreements entered into by the Rulers which guarantee or assure the payment of sums as Privy Purse free from tax. It was contended on behalf of the Union that the expression “relating to” in Article 363 means “referring to”, and since Articles 291, 362 and 366 (22) refer to covenants, the Courts have no jurisdiction to entertain disputes with respect to rights arising from those provisions. In support of that argument counsel for the Union referred us to the diverse meanings in which the expression "relating to" is used. But a constitutional provision will not be interpreted in the attitude of a lexicographer, with one eye on the provision and the other on the lexicon. The meaning of a word or expression used in the Constitution often is coloured by the context in which it occurs: the simpler and more common the word or expression, the more meanings and shades of meanings it has. It is the duty of the Court to determine in what particular meaning and particular shade of meaning the word or expression was used by the Constitution makers and in discharging the duty the Court will take into account the context in which it occurs, the object to serve which it was used, its collocation, the general congruity with the concept or object it was intended to articulate and a host of other considerations. Above all, the Court will avoid repugnancy with accepted norms of justice and reason. The expression "provisions of this Constitution relating to" in Article 363 means provisions having a dominant and immediate connection with": it does not mean merely having a reference to. A wide meaning of the expression may exclude disputes from the jurisdiction of the Courts in respect of rights or obligations, however indirect or tenuous the connection between the constitutional provision and the covenant may be.

135. Jurisdiction to try a proceeding is barred under the first limb of Article 363 if the dispute arises out of the provision of a covenant: it is barred under the second limb of Article 363 if the Court holds that the dispute is with respect to a right arising out of a provision of the Constitution relating to a covenant. A dispute that an order of an executive body is unauthorised, or a legislative measure is ultra vires, is not one arising out of any covenant under the first limb of Article 363, merely because the order or the measure violates the rights of the citizen which, but for the act or measure, were not in question. The dispute in such a case relates to the validity of the acts or the vires of the measure. Exclusion of the Court's jurisdiction by the terms of the relevant words in the second limb lies in a narrow field. If the constitutional provision relating to a covenant is the source of the right claimed to accrue, or liability claimed to arise, then clearly under the second limb the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain a dispute arising with respect to the right or obligation is barred. We need in the present case express no opinion on the question whether a dispute that an executive act or legislative measure operating upon a right accruing or liability arising out of a provision is invalid falls within the second limb of Article 363.

136. As a quid pro quo for agreeing to surrender their power and authority, it was enacted in the Constitution that the Princes who had signed the covenant of the nature specified will be recognized as Rulers. But under the treaties, covenants and agreements executed by the former Princes, there was no provision for recognition of Rulers. The President was invested by the Constitution with power to recognise Rulers under Article 366 (22). The status of the Rulers under the Constitution is not the status which the Princes had: their rights, privileges and functions are fundamentally different from those of the former Princes. Some degree of obscurity is introduced by the use of the expression "Ruler" and "Ruler of an Indian State" in the Articles. But the meaning is reasonably plain. Ruler as defined in Article 366 (22) is a former Prince, Chief or other person who was on or after January 26, 1950 recognised as a Ruler, he having signed the covenant, or his successor. The Ruler of an Indian State means a Prince, or Chief who was recognized before the Constitution by the British Crown. The Ruler of an Indian State had sovereign authority over his State. The Ruler recognized by the President rules over no territory, and exercises no sovereignty over any subjects. He has no status of a potentate and no privileges which are normally exercised by a potentate. He is a citizen of India with certain privileges accorded to him because he or his predecessor had surrendered his territory, his powers and his sovereignty.

137. Article 366 (22) is, in our judgment, a provision relating to recognition of Rulers: that is the direct and only purpose of the provision. It is not a provision relating to a covenant. The qualification of a person being recognized as a Ruler is undoubtedly that he is a Prince, Chief or other person who had entered into a covenant or agreement as is referred to in Article 291, or that he is the successor to such a Ruler. Reference to the covenant or the agreement of the nature mentioned in Article 291 is for determining who may be recognized as a Ruler. Because of that reference the provision enacted with the object of conferring authority upon the President to recognize a Ruler, will not be deemed one relating to the covenant or agreement.

138. The Attorney-General urged that this Court has decided that the Courts have no jurisdiction to determine whether the order of the President under Article 366 (22) is valid, and that the Court will not be justified in unsettling the law. The decisions relied upon are: (1965) 3 SCR 201 = (AIR 1965 SC 1798), and (1970) 2 SCR 631 = (AIR 1970 SC 1946). In our judgment, in neither of these cases the question about the bar to the Court's jurisdiction by virtue of Article 363 was directly in issue. In Nawab Usman Ali Khan's case, (1965) 3 SCR 201 = (AIR 1965 SC 1798) this Court upheld the claim that the Privy Purse payable to the Ruler of Jaora was exempt from attachment under Section 60 (1) (g) of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court in that case considered the nature of the Privy Purse and held that it was a "political pension" within the meaning of Section 60 (1) (g) of the Code of Civil Procedure. Bachawat, J., speaking for the Court, after setting out the history of integration and absorption of States, summarised the provisions of Articles 291, 362, 363 and 366 (22) of the Constitution and observed at p. 208 (of SCR) = (at p. 1802 of AIR):

"Now, the Covenant entered into by the Rulers of Madhya Bharat States was a treaty entered into by the Rulers of independent States by which they gave up their sovereignty over their respective territories and vested it in the new United State of Madhya Bharat. The Covenant was an act of State, and any violation of its terms cannot form the subject of any action in any municipal courts. The guarantee given by the Government of India was in the nature of a treaty obligation contracted with the sovereign Rulers of Indian States and cannot be enforced by action in municipal courts. Its sanction is political and not legal. On the coming into force of the Constitution of India, the guarantee for the payment of periodical sums as Privy Purse is continued by Article 291 of the Constitution, but its essential political character is preserved by Article 363 of the Constitution, and the obligation under this guarantee cannot be enforced in any municipal court. Moreover, if the President refuses to recognise the person by whom the covenant was entered into as the Ruler of the State, he would not be entitled to the amount payable as Privy Purse under Article 291."

The dictum that the essential political character of the guarantee for the payment of periodical sums as Privy Purse is preserved by Article 363, and the obligation cannot be enforced in any municipal Court was not necessary for the purpose of the decision, and is, in our judgment, not correct. Article 363 prescribes a limited exclusion of the jurisdiction of Courts, but that exclusion does not operate upon the claim for a Privy Purse, relying upon Article 291. The question as to the jurisdiction of the Courts to entertain a claim for payment of Privy Purse did not fall to be determined in Nawab Usman Ali Khan's case, (1965) 3 SCR 201 = (AIR 1965 SC 1798). The only question raised was whether the Privy Purse was not capable of attachment in execution of the decree of a Civil Court, because of the specific exemption of political pensions under Section 60 (1) (g) of the Code of Civil Procedure. In Kunwar Shri Vir Rajendra Singh's case, (1970) 2 SCR 631 = (AIR 1970 SC 1946) the Court did not express any opinion that Article 366 (22) was a provision relating to a covenant within the meaning of Article 363. In that case the petitioner who was not recognised as a Ruler by the President abandoned at the hearing of his petition his claim to the privy purse payable to the Ruler of Dholpur, and pressed his claim by succession under the Hindu Law to the private property of the former Ruler. The Court was not called upon to decide and did not decide that Article 366 (22) was a provision relating to a covenant within the meaning of Article 363. It is difficult to regard a word, a clause or a sentence occurring in a judgment of this Court, divorced from its context, as containing a full exposition of the law on a question when the question did not even fall to be answered in that judgment.

139. In the view we have expressed, the argument raised by Mr. Palkhivala that even if clause (22) of Article 366 is a provision relating to the covenants the jurisdiction of this Court under Article 32 to grant relief against an invalid exercise of power withdrawing recognition of the Rulers is not barred, needs no consideration.

140. The source of the right to receive the privy purse is for reasons already stated the constitutional mandate: it is not in the covenant. Reference to the covenant in Article 291 merely identifies the sum payable as privy purse: it does not make Article 291 a provision relating to the covenant. A dispute as to the right to receive the privy purse is therefore not a dispute arising out of the covenant within the first limb of Article 363, nor is it a dispute with regard to a right accruing or obligation arising out of a provision of the Constitution relating to a covenant.

141. The personal rights (other than the right to the Privy Purse), privileges and dignities are recognised by Article 362 of the Constitution and the Legislature and the executive are enjoined to have due regard to those personal rights, privileges and dignities in exercising their respective power. Article 362 is plainly a provision relating to covenants within the meaning of Article 363. A claim to enforce the rights, privileges and dignities under the covenants will therefore be barred by the first limb of Article 363 and a claim to enforce the recognition of rights and privileges recognised by Article 362 will be barred under the second limb of Article 363. Jurisdiction of the Court will, however, not be excluded where the relief claimed is founded on a statutory provision enacted to give effect to personal rights under Art. 362.

142. We are accordingly of the view that the Courts have jurisdiction to interpret and to determine the true meaning of Articles 366 (22), 291, 362 and 363. The bar to the jurisdiction of the Courts by Article 363 is a limited bar: it does not arise merely because the Union of India sets up a plea that the dispute falling within Article 363 is raised. The Court will give effect to the constitutional mandate if satisfied that the dispute arises out of any provision of a covenant which is in force and was entered into or executed before the commencement of the Constitution and to which the predecessor of the Government of India was a party, or that it is in respect of rights, liabilities or obligations accruing or arising under any provision of the Constitution relating to a covenant. But since the right to the Privy Purse arises under Article 291 the dispute in respect of which does not fall within either clause; the jurisdiction of the Court is not excluded. Again, the jurisdiction of the Court is not excluded, in respect of disputes relating to personal rights and privileges which are granted by statutes.

143. We further hold that the President is not invested with any political power transcending the Constitution, which he may exercise to the prejudice of citizens. The powers of the President arise from and are defined by the Constitution. Validity of the exercise of those powers is always amenable to the jurisdiction of the Courts, unless the jurisdiction is by precise enactment excluded. Power of this Court under Article 32 or of the High Courts under Article 226, cannot be by-passed under a claim that the President has exercised political power.

144. On the view we have expressed, it is unnecessary to express any opinion on the plea that the order was made for a collateral purpose.

145. A writ will therefore issue declaring that the order made by the President on September 6, 1970 "de-recognising" the Rulers is illegal and on that account inoperative and the petitioner will be entitled to all his pre-existing rights and privileges including the right to the Privy Purse, as if the order had not been made. The petitioner will get his costs of the petition.

146. Writ Petitions Nos. 377 to 383 of 1970 raise the identical question which is raised in the main petition. For reasons set out in the principal petition a similar writ will issue. Each petitioner will get his costs of the petition. One hearing fee in those petitions in which the petitioners have appeared through the same counsel.

MITTER, J.:— 147. On the 6th September, 1970 there was issued in the name of the President an order of the following text:

"In exercise of the powers vested in him under Article 366 (22) of the Constitution of India, the President hereby directs with effect from the date of this order His Highness Maharajadhiraj Madhav Rao Jiwaji Rao Scindia Bahadur do cease to be recognised as a Ruler of Gwalior."

Admittedly this followed the signing of an instrument by the President on the night of 5th September, 1970 purporting to withdraw recognition of all the Rulers. Orders like the above were issued in the case of each and every individual Ruler of an Indian State numbering over three hundred and sixty. The petitioner in Writ Petition No. 376 of 1970 is the person to whom the above order was directed. He is a national and citizen of India and was recognised by the President of India as a Ruler on 16th July, 1961, as the successor to the gaddi of the State of Gwalior on the death of the preceding Ruler of the State. The late Ruler had signed an instrument of Accession on the 15th August 1947, which was accepted by the then Governor-General of India on the 16th August, 1947. On 22nd April, 1948, the said preceding Ruler of the State had signed a covenant with the other Rulers of various States in Central India which led to the formation of the Madhya Bharat State on the 15th June, 1948. As such Ruler, the petitioner was being paid a Privy Purse of Rs. 10,00,000 per year and was also entitled to certain rights and privileges under various statutes.

148. The recognition as a Ruler was not an empty formality. Different Articles of the Constitution provide for and deal with the rights and privileges of the Rulers. The foremost among them is Article 291 which after its amendment as a result of the Seventh Amendment of the Constitution Act, 1956, runs as follows:

"Where under any covenant or agreement entered into by the Ruler of any Indian State before the commencement of this Constitution, the payment of any sums, free of tax, has been guaranteed or assured by the Government of the Dominion of India to any Ruler of such State as Privy Purse—

(a) such sums shall be charged on, and paid out of the Consolidated Fund of India;

(b) the sums so paid to any Ruler shall be exempt from all taxes on income."

Article 362 of the Constitution in its present form deals with the rights and privileges of Rulers of Indian States other than the Privy Purse and reads:

"In the exercise of the power of Parliament or of the Legislature of a State to make laws or in the exercise of the executive power of the Union or of a State, due regard shall be had to the guarantee or assurance given under any such covenant or agreement as is referred to in Article 291 with respect to the personal rights, privileges and dignities of the Ruler of an Indian State."

149. The only article in the Constitution which mentions the recognition of a person as a Ruler is Article 366 which is a key to the meaning of various words and expressions used throughout the Constitution. Clause 22 of the Article provides:

"In this Constitution unless the context otherwise requires, the following expressions have the meaning hereby respectively assigned to them, that is to say—

(22) "Ruler" in relation to an Indian State means the Prince, Chief or other person by whom any such covenant or agreement as is referred to in clause (1) of Article 291 was entered into and who for the time being is recognised by the President as the Ruler of the State, and includes any person who for the time being is recognised by the President as the successor of such Ruler;"

Clause (15) of Article 366 defines an Indian State as any territory which the Government of the Dominion of India recognised as such a State. Clause (21) of Article 366 (now deleted) provided as follows:—

"Rajpramukh" means—

(a) In relation to the State of Hyderabad the person who for the time being is recognised by the President as the Nizam of Hyderabad;

(b) in relation to the State of Jammu and Kashmir or the State of Mysore, the person who for the time being is recognised by the President as the Maharaja of that State; and

(c) in relation to any other State specified in Part B of the First Schedule, the person who for the time being is recognised by the President as the Rajpramukh of that State,

and includes in relation to any of the said States any person for the time being recognised by the President as competent to exercise the powers of the Rajpramukh in relation to that State;"

150. To complete the account of the provisions of the Constitution with regard to Rulers it is necessary to set out Article 363 of the Constitution, the interpretation of which is the most important point in the series of petitions presented by a number of Rulers of Indian States to this Court with identical prayers.

"363 (1) Notwithstanding anything in this Constitution but subject to the provisions of Article 143, neither the Supreme Court nor any other court shall have jurisdiction in any dispute arising out of any provision of a treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instrument which was entered into or executed before the commencement of this Constitution by any Ruler of an Indian State and to which the Government of the Dominion of India or any of its predecessor Governments was a party and which has or has been continued in operation after such commencement, or in any dispute in respect of any right accruing under or any liability or obligation arising out of any of the provisions of this Constitution relating to such treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instrument.

150A. The grievance of the petitioners in this series of petitions is the same as the rights asserted by them flow from more or less similar transactions.

151. We have to delve into the past history of India in order to appreciate the setting in which these persons or their ancestors who were formerly Rulers of territories in India were brought within the fold of the Constitution. Though not sovereign within the meaning of that expression in International Law these former Rulers had certain attributes of sovereignty during the days preceding the independence of India.

152. As is well known to all students of history the achievement of setting up a British Empire in India was "in its early stages at any rate, brought about by the agents of the East India Company in India." The Company entered into treaties with Indian States in the early stages aiming at no more than securing for the Company a privileged position in trade against its rivals. For the first time the Parliament of England asserted its authority and control over the East India Company's activities both in India and in England by the Regulating Act of 1773 under which the Governor of Bengal became the Governor-General in Council with a certain amount of control over the Presidencies of Bombay and Madras. The Marquis of Wellesley as the Governor-General felt convinced when he came to India in 1798 and saw the state of affairs here that the British must become the one paramount power in the country. He set up a system under which no Indian State which had accepted subsidiary alliance with the British could make any war or carry on negotiations with another State without the Company's knowledge and consent. It was during his time that the British Dominion in India expanded considerably. He had practically eliminated the French influence in India and brought many States under the subsidiary alliance, the notable instances being Hyderabad, Travancore, Mysore, Baroda and Gwalior. Under this system of subsidiary alliance the bigger States were to maintain armies commanded by British officers for preservation of the public peace and their rulers were to cede certain territories for the upkeep of these forces; the smaller States were to pay a tribute to the Company. In return the Company was to protect them, one and all, against external aggression and internal rebellion. A British Resident was also installed in every State that accepted the subsidiary alliance. This process was carried on during the regime of Hastings and Dalhousie. The Marquis of Hastings who came out as a Governor-General in 1813 crushed the Pindaris and finally broke the Maharatta power and carried the spread of the British Dominion over Northern and Central India to a stage which it was only left for Lord Dalhousie, a quarter of century later, to complete. He resumed Wellesley's policy by extending the Company's supremacy and protection over almost all the Indian States. By the time he left the country in 1823, the British Empire in India had been formed and its map in essentials drawn. Every State in India outside the Punjab and Sind was under the Company's control. The influence of the company over the internal administration of the States rapidly increased during the period following the retirement of Lord Hastings. Residents became gradually transformed into diplomatic agents representing a foreign power into executive and controlling officers of a superior government. The charter of 1833 abolished the Company's trading activities and the Company assumed the functions of the Government of India. Lord Dalhousie acquired vast territories for the Company conquering the Punjab and pushing the frontiers to the natural limits of India, i.e., the base of the mountains of Afghanistan. Whatever may have been the cause which led to the Mutiny of the year 1857 it was realised by the British people that the Indian States could play a vital role as one of the bulwarks of British rule. An Act of 1858 intituled "An Act for the Better Government of India" provided by the 67th section that

"all treaties made by the Company shall be binding upon Her Majesty". In her proclamation Queen Victoria made it clear that the Government would respect the rights, dignity and honour of Native Princes. The policy of annexation vigorously pursued by Dalhousie gave way to the perpetuation of the States as separate entities. Lord Canning carried this new policy to its next logical step by recommending that the integrity of the States should be preserved by perpetuating the rule of the Princes whose power to adopt heirs should be recognised. The Secretary of State for India agreed to this recommendation and sanads were granted to the Ruler under which in the event of the failure of the natural heirs, they were authorised to adopt their successors according to their law and custom. These sanads were intended to remove mistrust and suspicion and knit the Native Sovereigns to the paramount power. The new policy was to punish the ruler for extreme mis-government and if necessary to depose him but not to annex his State for misdeeds. The Indian States thus became part and parcel of the British Empire in India. In the words of Lord Canning:

"The territories under the sovereignty of the Crown became at once as important and as integral a part of India as territories under its direct domination. Together they form one direct core and the political system which the Moghuls had not completed and the Maharattas never contemplated is now an established fact of history."

153. The next five decades were occupied with the task of evolving a machinery for controlling the States. A political department was set up under the direct charge of the Governor-General. It had at its disposal a service known as the Indian Political Service, manned by officers taken from the Indian Civil Service and the Army. It had a police force which was maintained partly by the revenues of the Central Government and partly by contributions made by the States. The Political Department had Residents and Political Agents in all important States and groups of States. The Secretary of State kept a close control over the activities of the Political Department mainly because of the interest of the Crown in matters affecting the rights and privileges of the Rulers.

154. Constitutionally the States were not part of the British India nor were their inhabitants British subjects.

Parliament had no power to legislate for the States or their people. The Crown's relationship with the Indian States was conducted by the Governor-General in Council and since he was in charge of the political Department, his Executive Council tended in practice to leave States' affairs to him which meant that the Political Department came gradually to assume the position of a government within a government.

155. With the building up of a strong Political Department the Crown started asserting rights never claimed by the East India Company and even at times cutting across treaties. The most outstanding example and at the same time one of far-reaching consequence, in the relations of the paramount power with the Rulers was the prerogative assumed of recognising succession in the case of natural heirs. The first ruling in this behalf was laid down by the Government of India in 1884 in a letter addressed to the Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces in which it was stated that succession to a native State is invalid until it receives in some form the sanction of the British authority. In the view of the Secretary of State expressed in 1891 it was admittedly the right and duty of Government to settle successions in the protected States in India. This right it was claimed flowed essentially from the position of the British as the Supreme power responsible for maintaining law and order throughout the country. That power alone had the necessary sanction to enforce decisions regarding disputed successions. The Ruler thus did not inherit his gaddi as of right but as a gift from the paramount power.

156. A definite pattern of the Government of India's relationship with the States had been developed by the time the first World War broke out in 1914. The Rulers rallied to fight for the Empire, and the organisation of the war effort involved closer co-ordination of administrative activity in the States as well as in the Provinces.

157. Throughout the country the tide of national aspirations was rising fast. Although Britain claimed to be fighting a war to defend freedom and democracy the system of government by which she continued to hold India in imperial thrall was clearly at variance with her professed aims. The British Government recognised that the situation needed new handling. In 1917 Montagu, the Secretary of State for India, announced that the policy of His Majesty's Government with which the Government of India was in complete accord, was that of an increasing association of Indians in every branch of the administration and the gradual development of self-governing institutions with a view to progressive realisation of responsible government in India as an integral part of the British Empire.

158. The Secretary of State for India and the Viceroy Lord Chelmsford published a joint report on Constitutional Reforms which was the first major investigation into the relations of the States with the rest of India and with the paramount power. The authors of the report visualised that the Provinces would ultimately become self-governing units held together by a Central Government which would deal solely with matters of common concern to all of them.

159. With regard to the Rulers the authors of the report felt that the time had come to end their isolation and that steps should be taken for joint consultations by them for the furtherance of their common interest. There was a conference of ruling Princes and Chiefs in 1919 which recommended that the Rulers of States having full and unrestricted powers of civil and criminal jurisdiction in their States, and the power to make their own laws should be termed sovereign Princes as against those who lacked such powers. This was however not favoured by the Government of India. In 1921 a Chamber of Princes was brought into being by a Royal Proclamation which announced that the Viceroy would take counsel of the Chamber freely in matters relating to that territories of Indian States generally and in matters which affected these territories jointly with British India or with the rest of the Empire. The Chamber of Princes would have no concern in the internal affairs of individual States or relations of individual States with the Government of India while the existing rights of these States and their freedom of action would in no way be prejudiced or impaired.

160. In the years following the first world War the Nationalist Movement in India gained considerable impetus. Lord Irwin who came out as Viceroy in 1926 felt that the political situation in the country demanded some gesture on the part of Britain. In March 1927 an announcement was made for appointing a statutory Commission to enquire into the working of the Government of India Act 1919 and to make recommendations regarding further constitutional advancement. At or about this time the Rulers of the Indian States also demanded an impartial enquiry into the whole relationship between themselves and the paramount power. The Secretary of State appointed a Committee of three members headed by Sir Harcourt Butler to enquire into the relationship between the States and the paramount power and to suggest means for the more satisfactory adjustment of the existing economic relations between the States and the British India.

161. On behalf of the State it was contended before the Committee that all original sovereign powers except those which had been transferred with their consent to the Crown were still possessed by them and that such transfers could be effected only by the consent of the States and that the paramountcy of the British Crown was limited to certain matters only — those relating to foreign affairs and external and internal security. The Committee was not prepared to accept this and held that none of the States ever had any international status. The Committee refused to define paramountcy but asserted that paramountcy must remain paramount; it must fulfil its obligations defining or adopting itself according to the shifting necessities of the time and the progressive development of the States. They however observed that if any Government in the nature of a Dominion Government should be constituted in British India such Government could clearly be a new Government resting on a new written Constitution. The Committee voted the grave apprehension of the Princes on this score and recorded a strong opinion that in view of the fact of the historical nature of the relationship of the paramount power and the Princes the latter should not be transferred without their agreement to a relationship with a new Government in British India responsible to an Indian Legislature. This really laid the foundation of a policy whereby in later years a wedge was effectively driven between the States and the British India.

162. The Rulers were certainly disappointed with the finding of the Butler Committee with regard to their main hopes of being freed from the unfettered discretion of the Political Department to intervene in their internal affairs. Nationalist opinion in the country viewed the recommendations of the Butler Committee with grave apprehension and emphatic protests were entered in the report of a committee presided over by Pandit Motilal Nehru and All Parties Conference was arranged in 1928 to frame a Dominion Constitution for India. It gave a warning that it was inconceivable that the people of the States who were fired by the same ambitions and aspirations as the people of British India would quietly submit to existing conditions forever, or that the people of British India bound by the closest ties of family, race and religion to their brethren on the other side of an imaginary line would never make common cause with them. The Viceroy Lord Irwin who had conferred with the British Government in 1929 made an official pronouncement on his return to India to the effect that the natural issue of India's constitutional progress was the attainment of Dominion Status. He also announced that the British Government had accepted the suggestion of Sir John Simon for a Round Table Conference. There was a series of these conferences which debated on many and various points including Federation of the States with the Provinces of British India.

163. Then came the Government of India Act 1935 which provided for a constitutional relationship between the Indian States and British India on a federal basis. A special feature of the scheme was that whereas in the case of the provinces accession to the Federation was to be automatic in the case of the states it was to be voluntary. A State was to be considered to have acceded when its Ruler executed an Instrument of Accession and after it was accepted by His Majesty the King of England. The Government of India Act 1935 other than the Part relating to Federation, came into force on the 1st April, 1937. From that date the functions of the Crown in the relations with the States were entrusted to the Crown Representative; those functions included negotiations with the Rulers after accession to the Federation. The Federation however never took shape.

164. An important announcement in the Constitutional set up of India which came after the Second World War had broken out was the Draft Declaration known as Cripp's Plan. This accepted the principle of self-determination but it contained numerous pitfalls which imperilled the future of India. The mission failed but its failure gave a new turn to India's political struggle. In spite of the deepening crisis of war no further serious effort was made to resolve the political deadlock in India until the Simla Conference of 1945. This also proved abortive. After the assumption of power by the Labour Government in England a Parliamentary delegation visited India and later the Secretary of State announced the Government's decision to send a delegation of three Cabinet Ministers to India. In May 1946 the Cabinet Mission issued the memorandum dated 12th May 1946 in regard to States' treaties and paramountcy; it affirmed that the rights of the States which flowed from the relationship of the Crown would no longer exist and that the rights surrendered by the States to the Paramount Power would revert to the States. The plan provided for the entry of the States to the proposed Union of India in the following manner:—

(a) Paramountcy could neither be retained by the British Crown nor transferred to the new Government. But according to the assurance given by the Rulers that they were ready and willing to do so, the States were expected to co-operate in the new development of India.

(b) The precise form which the co-operation of the States would take must be a matter for negotiation during the building up of the new constitutional structure.

(c) The States were to retain all subjects and powers other than those ceded to the Union, namely, Foreign Affairs, Defence and Communications.

(d) In the preliminary stage the States were to be represented on the Constituent Assembly by a Negotiating Committee.

165. The Viceroy Lord Mountbatten made it clear that the British Government resolved to transfer power by June 1948 and a solution had to be found in a few months' time. On June 3, 1947 he announced that His Majesty's Government would be prepared to relinquish power to two Governments of India and Pakistan on the basis of Dominion Status and this relinquishment of power would take place much earlier than June 1948. In regard to States the plan laid down that the policy of His Majesty's Government towards the Indian States contained in the Cabinet Mission Memorandum of May 1945 remained unchanged. At a Press Conference held by him Lord Mountbatten gave it out that the date of transfer of power would be about 15th August, 1947.

166. The Indian Independence Act enacted for the purpose of giving effect to the plan envisaged as above received the Royal Assent on 18th July 1947. It provided for the setting up of two independent Dominions as and from the 15th August, 1947. Section 2 of the Act defined what the territories of the two Dominions would be. Section 6 provided that the Legislature of each of the new Dominions would have power to make laws for that Dominion. Under Section 7 (1) (b) the suzerainty of His Majesty over the Indian States would lapse and with it all treaties and agreements in force at the date of the passing of the Act between His Majesty and the Rulers of Indian States, all functions exercisable by His Majesty at that date with respect to Indian States, all obligations of His Majesty existing at that date towards Indian States or the Rulers thereof. Under cl (c) any treaties or agreements in force at the date of passing of this Act between His Majesty and any person having authority in the tribal areas were also to lapse. Section 9 empowered the Governor-General to promulgate orders for making such provisions as appeared to him to be necessary or expedient for bringing the provisions of the Act into effective operation, for dividing between the new Dominions, and between the new Provinces to be constituted under the Act, the powers, rights, property, duties and liabilities of the Governor-General in Council etc. Even before the passing of the Act Lord Mountbatten was debating the States' problems with Indian leaders. He put forward to them a peaceful settlement he had in mind, namely to allow the Rulers to retain their titles, extra territorial rights and personal property and civil list in return for which they would join a Dominion—most of them India, and a few like Bahawalpur Pakistan — only three subjects of defence, external affairs and communications being reserved for the Central Government. A draft Instrument of Accession was prepared in the States Department of the Dominion of India. The Instrument of Accession took three forms according to the existing status and powers of the various States. By the Instrument of Accession the States were to accede to the Dominion of India on the three subjects, Defence, External Affairs and Communications and their content being as defined in Schedule VII of the Government of India Act, 1935. Shortly before the 15th August with the helpful efforts of Lord Mountbatten negotiations were concluded and barring Hyderabad, Kashmir and Junagadh all the States within the geographical limits of the Indian Union had acceded to the Indian Dominion by the 15th August. The accession of the Indian States to the Dominion of India established a new organic relationship between the States and the Government of India.

167. The second phase which rapidly followed involved a process of two-fold integration, consolidation of States into sizable administrative units and their democratization.

168. With the advent of independence in India the popular urge in the States for attaining the same measure of freedom as was enjoyed by the people in the Provinces gained momentum and unleashed strong movements for the transfer of power from the Rulers to the people.

169. So far as the larger units were concerned democratization of administration could be a satisfactory solution of their constitutional problem. However in the case of small States responsible Government could have only proved a farce. The Rulers of smaller States were in no position to meet the demand for equating the position of their people with that of their countrymen in the Provinces. Without doubt the smaller State units could not have continued in modern conditions as separate entities; integration provided the only approach to the problem.

170. The integration of States did not however follow a uniform pattern. Merger of States in the Provinces geographically contiguous to them was one form of integration; the second was conversion of States into Centrally administered areas; and the third form was the creation of new viable units known as Unions of States. Each of these forms was adopted according to size, geography and other factors relating to each State or group of States.

171. The problem of integration was first faced in Orissa where the States formed scattered bits of territory with no geographical contiguity. After long discussions with the Rulers of the States and the Minister of the State Department it was eventually decided to integrate the small States with the adjoining Provinces. Agreements were signed by the Rulers of these States in December 1947 and on subsequent dates providing for cession by them to the Dominion of India full and exclusive authority, jurisdiction and power in relation to the governance of their States.

172. There were several groups of States which with due regard to geographical, linguistic, social and cultural affinities of the people could be consolidated into sizable and viable units consisting entirely of States. In such cases, territories of States were united to form Unions of States on the basis of full transfer of power from the Rulers to the people. A special feature of these Unions was the provision for the Rajpramukh as the constitutional head of the State who was to be elected by a Council of Rulers. The United State of Gwalior, Indore and Malwa and other small States came to be known as Madhya Bharat of which the Ruler of Gwalior became the Rajpramukh. Integration of Rajputana was completed in three stages.

173. As a result of the application of the various merger and integration schemes 216 States were merged in Provinces, 61 States were taken over as Centrally administered areas and 275 States were integrated into the Union of States.

174. The process of the merger of the States with the Provinces or their constitution into Centrally Administered areas, transfer of power to the people was automatic in that the merged States became part of the Administrative units which were governed by the popular Government of the Provinces and the Centre as the case might be. So far as the Provincially merged States were concerned, under the arrangements made virtually by the statutory orders issued under Section 290-A of the Government of India Act 1935 provision was made for the representation of the people of the merged States in the Provincial Legislature. As regards the Unions of States wherever practicable popular interim ministries were set up to conduct their administration.

175. The Instruments of Merger and the covenants establishing the various units of States were in the nature of overall settlements with the Rulers who had executed them. While they provided for the integration of States and for the transfer of powers from the Rulers they also guaranteed to the Rulers Privy Purse, succession to the gaddi, rights and privileges and full ownership, use and enjoyment of all private properties belonging to them as distinct from State properties.

176. The above is a thumb-nail sketch of the political developments and the major political events between 1773 and 1948 or 1949. Most of the historical account is taken verbatim from V. P. Menon's "Story of Integration of Indian States" and the White Paper on Indian Constitution — both of which were freely referred to by counsel appearing in the case. In the above setting I now propose to examine the implications of the important documents to which the Ruler of Gwalior became a party.

177. An Instrument of Accession was signed by the Ruler of Gwalior on the 15th August, 1947 in the exercise of his sovereignty in and over his State containing inter alia the following material terms:—

"I declare that I accede to the Dominion of India with the intent that the Governor-General of India, the Dominion Legislature, the Federal Court and any other Dominion authority established for the purpose of the Dominion shall, by virtue of this instrument of Accession but subject always to the terms thereof, and for the purposes only of the Dominion, exercise in relation to the State ... such functions as may be vested in them by or under the Government of India Act, 1935.

Clause 3. I accept the matters specified in the Schedule hereto as the matters with respect to which the Dominion Legislature may make laws for the State. (The schedule mentioned contained several matters of which the main were defence, external affairs and communications).

Clause 5. The terms of this Instrument of Accession shall not be varied by any amendment of the Act (Government of India Act) or the Indian Independence Act, 1947 unless such amendment is accepted by me by an instrument supplementary to this instrument.

Clause 7. Nothing in this Instrument shall be deemed to commit me in any way to acceptance of any future constitution of India or to fetter my discretion to enter into arrangements with the Government of India under any such future constitution.

Clause 8. Nothing in this Instrument affects the continuance of my sovereignty in and over this State, or, save as provided by or under this Instrument, the exercise of any powers, authority and rights now enjoyed by me as Ruler of this State or the validity of any law at present in force in this State.

Clause 9. I hereby declare that I execute this Instrument on behalf of this State and that any reference in this Instrument to me or to the Ruler of the State is to be construed as including a reference to my heirs and successors"

178. This Instrument was accepted by the Governor-General of India and signed by him.

179. On 22nd April 1948 a document was executed by the Ruler of Gwalior, Indore and certain other States in Central India for the formation of the United State of Madhya Bharat. The recitals to the document show that the Rulers were entering into a covenant on the terms mentioned therein as they were convinced that the welfare of the people of the region could best be secured by the establishment of a State with a common executive, legislature and judiciary, and they were resolved to entrust to a Constituent Assembly consisting of elected representatives of the people the drawing up of a democratic constitution of the State within the framework of the Constitution of India. By Article II the Covenanted States agreed to unite and integrate their territories into one State with a common executive, legislature and judiciary and to include therein any other State the Ruler of which agreed with the approval of the Government of India to the merger of his State in the United State. Article III provided for the constitution of a Council of Rulers with a President known as the Rajpramukh. Article IV provided inter alia for payment of a sum of Rs. 2,50,000 to the Rajpramukh from the revenues of the United State as consolidated allowance. Under Article V there was to be a council of Ministers to aid and advise the Rajpramukh in the exercise of his functions. Under Article VI the Rulers of each Covenanted State agreed as soon as possible and not later than the 1st July, 1948, to make over the administration of his State to the Rajpra-mukh whereupon all rights, authority and jurisdiction belonging to the Ruler which pertained to or were incidental to the Government of the Covenanted State were to vest in the United State and all the assets and liabilities of the Covenanted State were to be the assets and liabilities of the United State. Under Article VIII the Rajpramukh was to execute on behalf of the United State, as soon as practicable and in any event not later than 15th June, 1948 an Instrument of Accession in accordance with the provisions of Section 6 of the Government of India Act, 1935 and he was to accept as matters with respect to which the Dominion Legislature might make laws for the United State all the matters mentioned in List I and List III of the Seventh Schedule to the said Act, except the entries in List I relating to any tax or duty, by such instrument. Under Article XI the Ruler of each Covenanted State was to be entitled to receive annually from the revenues of the United State for his Privy Purse the amount specified against that Covenanted State in Schedule I; provided that the sums specified in the Schedule in respect of the Rulers of Gwalior and Indore were to be payable only to the Rulers of these States and not to their successors for whom provision was to be made subsequently. The said amount was intended to cover all expenses of the Ruler and his family including expenses of his residence, marriage and other ceremonies and subject to the provisions of paragraph 1 were neither to be increased nor reduced for any reason whatever. Under paragraph 3 the Rajpramukh was to cause the said amount to be paid to the Ruler in four equal instalments at the beginning of each quarter in advance. Under paragraph 4 the said amount was to be free of all taxes whether imposed by the Government of the United State or by the Government of India. Under Article XII the Ruler of each Covenanted State was to be entitled to the full ownership, use and enjoyment of all private properties (as distinct from State properties) belonging to him on the date of his making over the administration of that State to the Rajpramukh. Under paragraph 3 of this Article if any dispute arose as to whether any item of property was the private property of the Ruler or State Property, it was to be referred to such person as the Government of India might nominate in consultation with the Rajpramukh and his decision was to be final and binding. Article XIII ran as follows:—

“The ruler of each Covenantee State, as also the members of his family, shall be entitled to all the personal privileges, dignities and titles enjoyed by them, whether within or outside the territories of the State immediately before the 15th day of August, 1947.”

Article XIV provided:

(1) The succession, according to law and custom to the gaddi of each Covenantee State, and to the personal rights, privileges, dignities and titles of the Ruler thereof, is hereby guaranteed.

(2) Every question of disputed succession in regard to a Covenantee State shall be decided by the Council of Rulers after referring it to a Bench consisting of all the available Judges of the High Court of the United State and in accordance with the opinion given by that High Court.”

180. The document ends with the following paragraph:—

“The Government of India hereby concur in the above Covenant and guarantee all its provisions. In confirmation whereof Mr. V. P. Menon, Secretary to the Government of India in the Ministry of States, appends his signature on behalf and with the authority of the Government of India.”

181. On July 19, 1948 the Ruler of Gwalior who had become the Rajpramukh of the United State of Madhya Bharat executed a revised Instrument of Accession reciting the covenant of April 1948 referring in particular to Article VIII of the same and declaring that he as Rajpramukh was acceding to the Dominion of India with intent that the Governor-General of India, the Dominion Legislature, the Federal Court and any other Dominion authority established for the purpose of the Dominion would by virtue of the Instrument of Accession but subject always to the terms thereof and for the purposes only of the Dominion exercise in relation to the United State such functions as may be vested in them or under the Government of India Act, 1935. By Clause (2) he assumed the obligation of ensuring that due effect was given to the provisions of the Act (the Government of India Act, 1935) within the United State so far as they were applicable by virtue of the Instrument of Accession. By Clause (3) he accepted all matters enumerated in List I and List III of the Seventh Schedule to the Act as matters in respect of which the Dominion Legislature might make laws for the United State. This was of course subject to some provisos which it is not necessary to set out. Under Cl. (6) that terms of the Instrument of Accession were not to be varied by any amendment of the Act or the Indian Independence Act, 1947 unless such amendment was accepted by the Rajpramukh. Under Clause (8) it was made clear that nothing in the instrument was to be deemed to commit the United State in anyway to acceptance of any further Constitution of India or to fetter the discretion of the Government of the United State to enter into arrangements with the Government of India under any such future Constitution.

182. This Instrument of Accession was duly accepted by the Governor-General of India.

183. The Constituent Assembly was in session about this time and the future Constitution of India was being discussed and given a final shape and form.

184. The provisions of the Constitution had been finally settled before the 24th November, 1949, the date on which the Rajpramukh made a solemn declaration that the Constitution of India shortly to be adopted by the Constituent Assembly of India was to be the Constitution for the Madhya Bharat as for the other parts of India and was to be enforced as such in accordance with the tenor of its provisions. The preamble to the proclamation shows that the Rajpramukh took this step in the best interest of the State of Madhya Bharat which was closely linked with the rest of India by the community of interests in the economic, political and other fields and it was felt desirable that the Constitutional relationship established between the State of Madhya Bharat and the Dominion of India should not only be continued but further strengthened and the Constitution of India as drafted by the Constituent Assembly of India, which included duly appointed representatives of the States provided a suitable basis for doing so.

185. The Constitution of India was finally adopted by the Constituent Assembly on the 26th November, 1949. Under Article 394 of the Constitution fifteen of its articles were to come into force at once and the remaining provisions of the Constitution were to come into force on the 26th day of January, 1950 referred to in the Constitution as the commencement of the Constitution. By Article 395 the Indian Independence Act, 1947 and the Government of India Act, 1935 together with all enactments amending or supplementing the latter were replaced.

186. The above gives a fairly complete picture of the disappearance of the former Indian States which formed the combination of the United States of Madhya Bharat with the commencement of the Constitution of India as also the rights and privileges of the Rulers save as expressly provided otherwise in the Constitution itself, or the covenants, agreements etc. to the extent necessary.

187. The above pattern did not however apply to all the Indian States. A number of small States of Orissa executed Merger agreements which were confirmed on behalf and with the authority of the Governor-General by the Secretary to the Ministry of States. Those agreements were entered into in December, 1947. By Article I of the agreement the Raja of the State ceded to the Dominion Government full and exclusive authority, jurisdiction and powers for and in relation to the governance of the State and agreed to transfer the administration of the State to the Dominion Government on the 1st January, 1948. As from that date the Dominion Government was to be competent to exercise the said powers and authority and jurisdiction in such manner and through such agency as it might think fit. Under Article II the Raja was to be entitled to receive from the revenues of the State annually for the privy purse a certain sum of money which was to cover all the expenses of the Ruler and his family etc. Under Article III he was to be entitled to the full ownership, use and enjoyment of all private property (as distinct from State properties) belonging to him on the date of the agreement. Under Article IV the Raja and certain other persons were to be entitled to all personal privileges enjoyed by them whether within or outside the territories of the State immediately before the 15th August, 1947. By Article V the Dominion Government guaranteed the succession according to law and custom to the gaddi of the State and to the Ruler's personal rights, privileges, dignities and titles.

188. Similar Merger agreements were signed by the Rulers of Gujarat and Deccan States. The terms of the agreements were on similar lines.

189. There were however departures from the above in some cases. For instance, the Nawab of Bhopal executed a Merger agreement on the 30th April, 1949 whereby the administration of the State of Bhopal was to be taken over and carried on by the Government of India and for a period of five years next after the date of transfer the State was to be administered as a Chief Commissioner's Province. The personal rights and privileges and the privy purse were secured as in the case of other Rulers. With regard to succession to the throne of Bhopal State it was agreed that the same would be governed and regulated in accordance with the provisions of the Act known as the Succession to the Throne of Bhopal Act, 1947. It may be mentioned that in the case of Bhopal Article III of the agreement provided that although the then Ruler was to get a sum of Rs. 11 Lakhs per annum free of all taxes, each of his successors with effect from the date of succession was to be entitled to receive for his privy purse a sum of Rs. 9 lakhs per annum free of all taxes.

190. There was some similar provision in the cases of Mysore and Hyderabad but it is hardly necessary for the purpose of this series of petitions to go into the differences. There were separate agreements with the Nizam of Hyderabad regarding the privy purse, private property and rights and privileges entered into on the 25th January, 1950. Under Article I of the agreement with the Nizam the said Ruler was to be entitled to receive annually for his privy purse a sum of Rs. 50 lakhs free of all taxes. But with regard to his successors provision was to be made subsequently by the Government of India. Under Article IV the Government of India guaranteed the succession according to law and custom to the gaddi of the State. A very similar agreement was entered into with the Maharaja of Mysore on the 23rd January, 1950. The then Maharaja was to receive Rs. 26 lakhs free of all taxes as and by way of privy purse per annum but provision was to be made subsequently by the Government of India with regard to his successor.

191. For another instance of integration through Merger Agreement I may refer to the Kutch Merger Agreement dated 4th May, 1948 between the Governor-General of India and the Maharao of Kutch. The preamble shows that the agreement was being entered into in the best interests of the State of Kutch as well as of the Dominion of India to provide for the administration of the said State by or under the authority of the Dominion Government. Under Article 1 the Maharao ceded to the Dominion Government full and exclusive authority, jurisdiction and powers for and in relation to the governance of the State and agreed to transfer the administration of the State to the Dominion Government on the 1st day of June, 1948. As from that day the Dominion Government was to be competent to exercise the said powers, authority and jurisdiction in such manner and through such agency as it might think fit. By Article 2 the Maharao was to be entitled to continue the same personal rights, privileges, dignities and titles which he would have enjoyed had the agreement not been made. Under Article 3 the Maharao was to be entitled with effect from the said day to receive from the revenues of the State annually for his Privy Purse the sum of Rs. 8 lakhs free of all taxes. The Government of India undertook that the said sum of Rs. 8 lakhs would be paid to the Maharao in four equal instalments in advance. Article 4 provided for the retention by the Maharao of full ownership, use and enjoyment of all private properties (as distinct from State properties). Under Article 6 the Dominion Government guaranteed the succession of the State according to law and customs of the gaddi of the State and to the Maharao his personal rights, privileges, dignities and titles. As the original Government of India Act, 1935 did not provide for any Merger agreement steps had already been taken towards that end. The Extra Provincial Jurisdiction Act, 1947 was passed giving power to the Central Government to exercise extra Provincial jurisdiction over a State only if it had by a treaty-agreement etc. acquired full and exclusive authority and jurisdiction and power for and in relation to the governance of the State. The Government of India Act, 1935 was also amended by insertion of Sections 290-A and 290-B.

192. The States' Merger (Governors' Provinces) Order, 1949 was promulgated on the 27th July, 1949 under Section 290A of the Government of India Act for the administration of the States specified in the Schedule together with the adjoining Governors' Provinces. Under Clause 3 the States specified in each of the Schedules were to be administered as from the appointed day in all respects as if they formed part of the Provinces specified in the heading of that Schedule and, accordingly, any reference to an Acceding State in the Government of India Act, 1935, or in any Act or Ordinance made on or after the appointed day was to be construed as not including a reference to any of the merged States, and any reference in any such Act or Ordinance as aforesaid to Provinces specified in that Schedule. Under Clause 4 all the law in force in a merged State or in any part thereof immediately before the appointed day including orders made under Section 3 or Sec. 4 of the Extra-Provincial Jurisdiction Act, 1947 was to continue in force until repealed, modified or amended by a competent Legislature or other competent authority. Under Clause 5 all property wherever situate which immediately before the appointed day was vested in the Dominion Government for purposes of the governance of a merged State was as from that date to vest in the Government of the absorbing Province unless the purposes for which the property was held immediately before the appointed day were central purposes.

193. Another Order known as the States Merger (Chief Commissioners' Provinces) Order, 1949 was promulgated on the 29th July, 1949. The State of Kutch along with other States was to be administered by and under this Order in all respects as if they were a Chief Commissioner's Province to be known as the Chief Commissioner's Province of Kutch.

194. The unification of India however thus achieved was not as a result of negotiations across the table nor was it accomplished overnight in the way ordinary contracts and engagements are entered into after some deliberation. Full credit for the same goes not only to the Ministry of States led by Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel but also to the Rulers of the hundreds of Indian States who realised that in the interest of the people of their States as also their personal interest it was necessary for them to come to terms with the Government of India. They agreed to part with their States and the territories so far governed by them on the basis of the assurances and guarantees given by the Dominion of India before the commencement of the Constitution by the Government of India as contained in the Constitution itself. It will not be out of place to set out what Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel said in the Constituent Assembly on 12th October, 1949 in regard to the settlements with the Rulers. A portion of his speech is quoted as below:

"In the past, in most of the States there was no distinction between the expenditure on the administration and the Ruler's Privy Purse. Even where the Ruler's Privy Purse had been fixed no effective steps were taken to ensure that the expenditure expected to be covered by the Privy Purse was not, directly or indirectly charged on the revenues of the State. Large amounts, therefore, were spent on the Rulers, on the members of the ruling families.... the Privy Purse settlements made by us will reduce the burden of the expenditure on the Rulers to at least one-fourth of the previous figure. Besides, the States have benefited very considerably from the process of integration in the form of cash balances inherited by them from the Rulers..... I shall now come to the political and moral aspect of the settlements. In order to view the payments guaranteed by us in their correct perspective, we have to remember that they are linked with the momentous developments affecting the most vital interests of this country. These guarantees form part of the historic settlements which enshrine in them the consummation of the great ideal of geographical, political and economic unification of India, an ideal which for centuries remained a distant dream and which appeared as remote and as difficult of attainment as ever even after the advent of Indian independence..... Human memory is proverbially short. Meeting in October, 1949, we are apt to forget the magnitude of the problem which confronted us in August 1947..... the so-called lapse of paramountcy was a part of the plan announced on June 3, 1947 which was accepted by the Congress. We agreed to this arrangement in the same manner as we agreed to the partition of India. We accepted it because we had no option to act otherwise. While there was recognition in the various announcements of the British Government of the fundamental fact that each State should link up its future with that Dominion with which it was geographically contiguous, the Indian Independence Act released the States from all their obligations to the British Crown..... They (the British Crown) even conceded that theoretically the States were free to link their future with whichever Dominion they liked, although, in saying so, they referred to certain geographical compulsions which could not be evaded. The situation was indeed fraught with immeasurable potentialities of disruption, which some of the Rulers did wish to exercise their technical right to declare independence and others to join the neighbouring Dominion. If the Rulers had exercised their right in such an unpatriotic manner, they would have found considerable support from influential elements hostile to the interests of this country.. It was in this unpropitious background that the Government of India invited the Rulers of the States to accede on three subjects of Defence, External Affairs and Communications. At the time the proposal was put forward to the Rulers, an assurance was given to them that they would retain the status quo except for accession on these subjects..... There was nothing to compel or induce the Rulers to merge the identity of their States. Any use of force would have not only been against our professed principles but would have also caused serious repercussions. If the Rulers had elected to stay out, they would have continued to draw the heavy Civil Lists which they were drawing before and in a large number of cases they could have continued to enjoy unrestricted use of the State revenues. The minimum which we could offer to them as quid pro quo for parting with their ruling powers was to guarantee to them privy purses and certain privileges on a reasonable and defined basis. The Privy Purse settlements are therefore in the nature of consideration for the surrender by the Rulers of all their ruling powers and also for the dissolution of the States as separate units..... The capacity for mischief and trouble on the part of the Rulers if the settlement with them would not have been reached on a negotiated basis was far greater than could be imagined at this stage. Let us do justice to them; let us place ourselves in their position and then assess the value of their sacrifice. The Rulers have now discharged their part of the obligations by transferring all ruling powers and by agreeing to the integration of their States. The main part of our obligation under these Agreements is to ensure that the guarantees given by us in respect of privy purses are fully implemented. Our failure to do so would be a breach of faith and seriously prejudice the stabilisation of the new order."

195. It may not be out of place to quote from the debates in the Constituent Assembly which bear upon the interpretation of Article 363. Before the Constitution finally took shape in the draft, this article was numbered as 302-AA and Article 143 was numbered as 119. Shri T. T. Krishnamachari who moved for the insertion of Art. 302-AA said in the course of his speech:

"..... it is self-explanatory. The idea is to bar the jurisdiction of the courts including the Supreme Court in regard to adjudicating in respect of any disputes that might arise out of any treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instruments that might have been entered into by the Government of the Dominion of India or by any predecessor Government...."

196. Questioned by a member as to who would decide, T. T. Krishnamachari replied:

"The idea is that the court shall not decide in this particular matter. It is subject only to the provisions of Art. 119 by which the President may refer the matter to the Supreme Court and ask for its opinion and the Supreme Court would be bound to communicate its opinion to the President on any matter so referred by him. The House will also remember that there are a few Articles in the Constitution, specifically 302-A (the present Article 291) and 267-A (the present Article 362) where there are references to these agreements, covenants, sanads etc. and even these are precluded from adjudication by any court. The House will recognise that it is very necessary that matters like these should not be made a matter of dispute that goes before a court and one which would well might probably upset certain arrangements that have been recommended and agreed to by the Government of India in determining the relation between the rulers of States and the Government of India in the transitory period. After the Constitution is passed, the position will be clear. Practically all the States have come within the scope of Part VI-A and they will be governed by the provisions of this Constitution and, excepting so far as certain commitments are positively mentioned in the Constitution, and as I said the two Articles 267-A and 302-A the covenants will by and large not affect the working of the Constitution; and it is therefore necessary in view of the vast powers that have been conceded in this Constitution to the judiciary that anything that has occurred before the passing of this Constitution and which might incidentally be operatable after the passing of the Constitution must not be a subject-matter of a dispute in a court of law. I think that Members of this House will understand that it is a very necessary provision so as to save unnecessary disputes by people which might feel that they have been affected or injured and who would rush to a court to make the court recognise such rights and other similar matters which have been practically extinguished by the provisions of this Constitution excepting in so far as certain articles of the Constitution preserved them."

197. There was also some discussion with regard to the definition of "Ruler" and "Rajpramukh" which figured in Article 303 of the draft Constitution. According to Dr. B. R. Ambedkar the definition of 'Ruler' was intended only for the limited purpose of making payments out of the privy purse. It had no other reference at all. He also said that the expression was deliberately used in order to give the power of recognition to the President.

198. After referring to the historical background of the settlement W. P. No. 376 of 1970 takes note of the attempt made to amend the Constitution by the Constitution (Twenty Fourth Amendment) Bill 1970 passed by the Lok Sabha on 2nd September, 1970. It was however rejected by the Rajya Sabha on the 5th September, 1970. The same night the President signed an instrument withdrawing recognition of all the Rulers and orders were issued for and on his behalf to each and every Ruler in the country. According to the petition the order of the 6th September violated Articles 14, 19 (1) (f), 21 (as per amendment allowed) and 31 (1) and (2) of the Constitution. The order was dubbed as unconstitutional, ultra vires, void and inoperative, arbitrary, mala fide and a fraud on the Constitution on various grounds formulated in paragraph 20, the notable ones being as follows:—

(i) Art. 291 embodied the Constitutional acceptance and recognition of the guarantees or assurances regarding tax-free privy purses.

(ii) The privy purses guaranteed by the Government under the Merger agreements or Covenants were further assured and guaranteed by the Constitution and charged on the Consolidated Fund of India. Articles 291 and 362 themselves created new and independent rights. The pledge to pay privy purses and the guarantee regarding privileges etc. are inseverable from these accessions and mergers. The obligation to pay privy purses and the said guarantee regarding privileges etc. which are inseverable from the accession and merger cannot be abolished by any law, much less by any executive action.

(iii) The President of India passed the order withdrawing the recognition of the petitioner and the other Rulers without applying his mind to the question of legality or propriety of the Order. The whole and only object of the Order was to deprive the petitioner and the other Rulers of their privy purses and their personal rights and privileges. The de-recognition of all the Rulers en masse is itself the clearest possible proof that the whole object is to abolish the institution of Rulership altogether and all the rights and privileges attached thereto.

(iv) Under the agreement executed between the Dominion of India and the Rulers and the covenants concurred in and guaranteed by the Dominion of India a Ruler is entitled to privy purse of a stipulated amount and to rights and privileges which he enjoyed before the 15th August, 1947 and succession to his 'gaddi' in accordance with the law and custom of the family was guaranteed. Once the President has recognised a person as entitled to receive privy purse and to be accorded rights and privileges due to him as a Ruler, there can be no interference with his right to receive the privy purse or with his other rights and privileges. The Constitution contains no substantive provision conferring on the President a right to recognise or not to recognise a Ruler or to withdraw recognition. All that the Constitution requires is an indication of the Indian States which are recognised as such under Article 366 (15) and a Ruler with reference to such a State under Article 366 (22), Articles 366 (22) and 366 (15) cast upon him not a power or authority but a constitutional duty to recognise an existing fact and continue to do so in accordance with the provisions of the covenants and agreements. The Order being in clear contravention of Articles 291, 362 and 366 (22) was also in contravention of Article 53 (1) which required that the executive powers of the Union vesting in the President be exercised by him in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution.

(v) The right to receive privy purse and other rights of Rulers constitute property within the meaning of Arts. 19 (1) (f) and 31. Deprivation of privy purses and other rights without authority of law contravenes Article 31 (1) as the petitioner was to be expropriated of his moneys and his right to receive money periodically by way of privy purse without any compensation.

(vi) The privy purse was in substance and in reality compensation for the transfer by Rulers of inter alia their properties.

(vii) There was a duty cast upon the Government of India to respect and implement the provisions of the Merger agreements and the Covenants.

199. The petitioner's further contentions were that the order left the Merger agreements and covenants untouched and did not in any way abrogate or affect any of the assurances, guarantees and obligations under the agreements and covenants. According to the petition Article 363 covered cases of a dispute arising out of a settlement with a Ruler or a dispute in respect of a right or obligation founded on a provision of the Constitution relating to such a settlement but it did not cover the case of policy embodied in legislative or administrative action to abolish altogether the institution of Rulership and its rights and privileges and of privy purses.

200. The prayers formulated in the petition were as follows:—

(a) A writ, direction or order under Article 32 of the Constitution declaring the Order dated 6th September, 1970 to be unconstitutional, ultra vires and void and further to quash the Order;

(b) a writ, direction or order declaring that the petitioner continues to be the Ruler and continues to be entitled to the privy purse and to his personal rights and privileges as a Ruler;

(c) a writ, direction or order directing the Union of India to continue to pay the privy purse to the petitioner and to continue to recognise the Rulership and the personal rights and privileges of the petitioner and to implement and observe the provisions of the covenant/Merger agreement entered into with the petitioner.

201. In the forefront of the counter affidavit of the Joint Secretary to the Government of India in the Ministry of Home Affairs is the contention that "by reason of the provisions of Article 363 of the Constitution this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the petition." The main propositions put forward in the said counter affidavit are as follows:

(a) By the petition disputes had been raised which arose directly out of the provisions of the relevant covenant as also his alleged rights accruing under the provisions of the Constitution.

(b) The covenant was a political agreement among High Contracting Parties and an act of the State and as such could not form the subject-matter of any proceeding in any municipal Court. The guarantee given by the Dominion of India was only a political act and not a legal one.

(c) Neither the covenants nor the Merger agreements nor any provision of the Constitution relating to the covenants or the Merger agreements confer any legal right on the petitioner or on any erstwhile Ruler.

(d) The covenant being a political agreement, the alleged rights and obligations thereunder could not be and were not perennial and were inherently temporary in character and liable to be varied or repudiated in accordance with State policy in the interests of the people.

(g) The power of the President to recognise or not to recognise a person as a Ruler was political in character and an incident of sovereignty. The power included the power to recognise and the power to cease to recognise any person as a Ruler.

(k) The relevant covenant being a political agreement among High Contracting Parties and an act of State, the petitioner has no legal right to the gaddi or the Privy Purse or any of the said privileges and as such neither the gaddi nor the Privy Purse or any of the said privileges is property within the meaning of Article 19 (1) (f) or Article 31 (1) or Article 31 (2) of the Constitution.

(l) If the State policy changed and the States decided not to pay such political pension in future, a dispute arising from such decision was not justiciable in a municipal Court.

(m) Rulership or the succession thereto, the Privy Purse and the said privileges were inter alia the subject-matter of an agreement and an agreement could not confer on the petitioner any fundamental right under the Constitution.

(n) Article 291 of the Constitution did not create any legal right in a person. It only laid down the source and method of payment of the Privy Purse. The article in laying down that the Privy Purse shall be charged on and paid out of the Consolidated Fund of India meant no more than that these sums would be sums within the meaning of Articles 112 (2) (a) and 113 (1) of the Constitution and would not be submitted to the vote of Parliament. And secondly that such sums would be exempt from all taxes on income. Even if the article created a legal right in a person recognised by the President as a Ruler to receive payment of Privy Purse Article 363 barred the enforcement of such right.

(o) Article 362 of the Constitution did not create or impose any legal obligation on Parliament or the Legislature of a State or the Union executive or the State executive in respect of the said privileges and even with respect thereto Article 363 barred jurisdiction of all Courts in India.

(p) The concept of Rulership, the Privy Purse and the said privileges unrelated to any current functions and social purposes have become incompatible with democracy, equality and social justice in the context of India to-day. Since the commencement of the Constitution many things have changed, many hereditary rights and unearned incomes have been restricted and many privileges and vested interests have been done away with. The question of continuance of covenants and Merger agreements had been exercising the minds of the Congress Party for many years past and the Constitution (Twenty-Fourth Amendment) Bill was introduced with that object.

202. All the grounds set forth in paragraph 20 of the petition were controverted. In particular it was said:—

(a) Article 291 did not cast an obligation on the Government to pay the Privy Purse and the obligation, if any, was not a legal obligation.

(b) The Order of 8th September, 1970 did not violate Article 291 or Article 362. To recognise or not to recognise any person as a Ruler was exercise of a political power which was not dependent on any provision of the Constitution.

(c) The covenants and Merger agreements were and continued to be political agreements and acts of State which could not be enforced in a Court of Law by reason of Article 363.

(d) Article 366 (22) impliedly conferred a power on the President to recognise or not to recognise a person as a Ruler and such a power was a political power. There was no provision in the Constitution which conferred on the petitioner or any of the erstwhile rulers any rights to be recognised as Ruler and continued to be recognised as such or to Privy Purse or any of the privileges.

(e) As neither the petitioner nor any erstwhile Ruler had or now has any legal right to the Privy Purse or to any of the privileges or to any of the alleged other rights enforceable in a Court of law, there could be no question of the impugned order infringing Article 19 (1) (f), Article 31 (1) or Article 31 (2) and that in any event Article 363 barred the enforcement of any such alleged right.

(f) The Rulers entered into the covenants and Merger agreements by reason of political compulsion and in their own interests and not on the faith of any undertaking or guarantee on the part of the then Dominion of India. Neither the petitioner nor any erstwhile Ruler acted upon any assurance or guarantee on the part of the Government of India. On the other hand a fiduciary duty was cast upon the respondent Government not to continue Feudal institutions and anachronistic systems against the interests of the people.

(g) The petitioner has no fundamental right as claimed and Article 363 barred adjudication by a Court of Law with respect to the rights claimed.

203. The crucial question in the petition is whether the petitioner is entitled to a declaration that the order withdrawing his recognition as a Ruler is beyond the scope of any executive action of the President. The only provision in the Constitution in which the recognition of a person as a Ruler appears is Article 366 (22). The article being a Code to the meaning of the words used in the Constitution we have to see exactly what it proposes to do and what it achieves. Unless a ruler can be identified for the purposes of the Constitution Article 291, Art. 362 and Article 363 cannot be applied. Clause (22) fixes the identity of the Ruler for the purposes of the Constitution as a Prince, Chief or other person by whom any covenant or agreement as is referred to in Clause (1) of Article 291 was entered into. Obviously before a person can be a Ruler under this limb of the article he must be a person who had entered into the kind of agreement just now mentioned. But in order to be a Ruler for the purpose of the Constitution he is also to be recognised by the President as a Ruler of a State. This means that at the commencement of the Constitution claims of the former Rulers to be recognised as the Rulers of the respective States had to be considered. Clearly the Constitution did not contemplate the eventuality of the President not choosing to recognise anybody as a Ruler or choosing only those whom he liked. In the setting in which the Rulers accepted the Constitution as binding on them and their States it must have been in their contemplation as also of the Constitution-makers that all of them who were alive at the commencement of the Constitution would get such recognition. So much for the time when the Constitution became effective to start with. But as Rulers are human beings and are not immortal, the Constitution had to provide for the continuity of the line of Rulers and to lay down who would be a Ruler after the first set of Rulers was no more. This was done by providing that the President would recognise someone as a successor of the Ruler who had departed from this life. The expression "for the time being" was not inserted for the purpose of giving power to the President to recognise a person or withdraw recognition from him as his fancy dictated. It was put in for the purpose of fixing the identity of the Ruler at a given point of time and to emphasise the fact that there could be only one Ruler for a State at any point of time. Read as a whole the clause proceeds on the assumption that the President had the right, power or duty or obligation to recognise some person as a Ruler both at the commencement of the Constitution and ever afterwards so long as the line of Rulers lasted and so long as these provisions were in the Constitution. A duty or power or right or obligation to recognise someone as successor to the Ruler is also imbedded in the clause. If there were no covenants or agreements to guide him or bind him, the President could probably recognise and derecognise or withdraw recognition at his will and pleasure. Clearly however the grant of such a power was not in the minds of the Constitution-makers. At the time when they entered into covenants and agreements, a solemn assurance or guarantee was given by the Dominion of India that succession to the gaddi of each Ruler would be according to law and custom of the State. It would appear that invariably the rule of lienal male primogeniture coupled with the custom of adopting a son prevailed in the case of Hindu Rulers who composed of the bulk of the body. When on the eve of the Constitution being finally adopted the Rulers with the exception of two or three accepted the same as binding upon them and their States, it must follow that they accepted and adopted the Constitution of India because they thought and were assured that the provisions in it regarding themselves and their successors were to their satisfaction and were binding in nature. They certainly never imagined that they would be the play-things of the executive Government of the Union of India to be thrown out like pawns off the chequer board of politics at any moment when the Government felt that their presence was irksome or that they were anachronistic in the democratic set up of India. This democratic set up was what the Constitution ushered in albeit with a shadow of the past in the Rulers with attenuated pomp and pelf. The choice of a person as a Ruler to succeed another on his death was certainly not left to the mere caprice of the President. He had to find out the successor and this he could do not by applying the ordinary rules of Hindu Law or Mohamedan Law but by the law and custom attaching to the gaddi of a particular State. That the Government of India had no doubts about it is exemplified by several instances where on a question of disputed succession a reference was made to a very high judicial officer to find out the rightful successor with the help of other Rulers. I may mention only two such instances, namely, the appointment of Shri H. V. Divatia, Chief Justice of the Saurashtra High Court and a retired Judge of the Bombay High Court and their Highnesses the Maharaja of Jaipur and the Maharao of Kotah as members, to enquire into and report on the rights of the various claimants to the gaddi of Sirohi and the validity of the succession of His Highness Maharao Shri Tejsinghji Bahadur who was recognised as the Maharao of Sirohi by the Crown Representative in May, 1946, on the death of His Highness Shri Sarupringsinghji who left no male heir of the body or adopted son. The insertion in the Gazette of India Extraordinary under date 7th October, 1950, refers to this as also to the activities of the Committee and its conclusion that there was no such valid adoption of Shri Tejsinghji into the Bajawat family as deprived him of his legal status as a member of the ruling family. The notification ends with the following:—

"Having carefully considered the report, the President accepts the finding of the Committee of Enquiry in their entirety. Accordingly in exercise of the powers vesting in him under Article 366 (22) of the Constitution, the President is pleased to recognise Shri Abhaisinghji as the Ruler of Sirohi in place of the present minor Maharao Shri Tejsinghji Bahadur who shall cease to be recognised as such with effect from the date of this Order."

This clearly shows that the President did not act in any arbitrary manner. The claims were investigated into with the help of one of the highest judicial officers of the land and reported on to the President. The President thereupon withdrew recognition from Shri Tejsinghji Bahadur and recognised Shri Abhaisinghji as the Ruler of Sirohi. To my mind Article 366 (22) read with the rules of succession, the Merger agreements and the covenants was given full effect. Recognition was given to the person lawfully entitled to be declared the successor to the gaddi and the same was withdrawn from a person who was held not entitled to it. The act was certainly executive in nature; but it was based on a judicial scrutiny and not on any political consideration or in an arbitrary fashion.

204. Another instance of applying the law and custom of succession is afforded by the case of Dholpur which was enquired into by Shri K. N. Wanchoo, Chief Justice of Rajasthan High Court (as he then was) forming a Committee with two Rulers.

205. To my mind the Merger agreements and covenants did not become waste paper on the commencement of the Constitution to be consigned to the record room or any museum. So long as the above provisions enure in the Constitution a Ruler will have to be found for a State and such finding must be on the basis of the law and custom of the State. That is the assurance which was given to the Rulers when they accepted the Constitution and I see no reason why the Constitution should be interpreted in a way to set that at naught.

206. In the light of the above, my view is that Article 366 (22) implied not merely a right or power but a duty or obligation to recognise a person as a Ruler i. e., a duty or obligation to do so and the power or duty to withdraw recognition must be confined to cases when the first recognition was not proper as in the case of the Sirchi succession.

207. But the learned Attorney-General would interpret the same differently. He put forward his contention in the following propositions:—

(a) Recognition was only for the purpose of fixing the identity of a person for payment of privy purse and grant of privileges pursuant to the Constitutional provisions in Articles 291 and 362.

208. In support of this he relied on the Debates in the Constituent Assembly to which reference has already been made. He relied on a decision of this Court in Maharaja Pravir Chandra Bhanj Deo Kakatiya v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (1961) 2 SCR 501 = (AIR 1961 SC 775). There the appellant was the Ruler of the State of Bastar and had entered into an agreement with the Government of India whereby he had ceded the State of Bastar to the Government of India to be integrated with the Central Provinces and Berar. He challenged the applicability to him of Madhya Pradesh Abolition of Proprietary Rights (Estates, Mahals, Alienated Lands) Act, 1950 (Madhya Pradesh Act 1 of 1951) meant to provide for the acquisition of the rights of proprietors in estates, mahals, alienated villages and alienated lands in Madhya Pradesh which was applicable to a person described as an ex-Ruler of an Indian State merged with Madhya Pradesh. The appellant's contention was that he was still a sovereign Ruler and absolute owner of the villages to which the Act was sought to be applied.

In the course of the judgment of this Court there is an observation at p. 506 (of SCR) = (at p. 778 of AIR) reading:—

"The effect of the Merger Agreement is clearly one by which factually a Ruler of an Indian State ceases to be a Ruler but for the purpose of the Constitution and for the purposes of the privy purse guaranteed, he is a Ruler as defined in Article 366 (22) of the Constitution. There is nothing in the provisions of Article 366 (22) which requires a court to recognise such a person as a Ruler for the purposes outside the Constitution."

Earlier in the judgment at page 504 (of SCR) = (at p. 777 of AIR) it was said:—

"The expression 'Ruler' as defined in Article 366 (22) of the Constitution applied only for interpreting the provisions of the Constitution."

In my view these observations do not advance contention of the Respondent as the Court was not there concerned with the question of the power to recognise or withdraw recognition from a Ruler. The only question before the Court was whether the appellant was an ex-Ruler for the purposes of the Act.

209. Reference may be usefully made to paragraph 241 (3) at page 129 of the White Paper on Indian States under the heading "Recognition of Rulers" reading:—

"The Rulers of the merged and integrated States have been guaranteed succession according to law and custom. In the Covenants and some of the Agreements of Merger, provision has been made for the procedure to be observed for the settlement of the cases of disputed succession. In the case of Rulers of States forming Unions, every question of disputed succession is to be decided by the Council of Rulers after referring to the High Court of the Union and in accordance with the opinion of that Court." The above is followed by the quotation of Article 366 (22) and according to the White Paper

"it is expected that in according recognition to Rulers, the President will show due regard to the provisions of the Covenants and Agreements of Merger in respect of the cases to which these provisions apply."

210. (b) The learned Attorney-General then submitted that power of recognition was a political power in the paramountcy field to which the Dominion Government and thereafter the Union Government under the Constitution succeeded and for this he referred to White Paper, paragraph 266 at p. 143 reading:

"In spite of the declaration regarding the lapse of paramountcy, the fundamentals on which it rested remained. The essential defence and security requirements of the country and the compulsions of geography did not cease to be operative with the end of British Rule in India. If anything, in the context of world events, they have become more imperative. The Central Government in India which succeeded the British was unquestionably the paramount power in India both de facto and de jure and that Government alone was the only completely independent sovereign in India." To my mind the British Crown was the paramount power in India because of the might of its power. Its power was so great compared to that of the Rulers of the Indian States that it could annex any territory at any time and bring under subjugation all the Rulers by compulsion or subsidiary alliances. There was no sanction of International Law behind it. Paramountcy after the British had come to be the foremost power in the country was one of their own creation. In strict legal theory whatever paramountcy there was before the 15th August, 1947, in the British Government lapsed with the passing of the Indian Independence Act. Thereafter the Dominion of India was free to do what it liked subject to world opinion and their own conscience. Paramountcy de facto there undoubtedly was but speaking for myself I cannot ascribe any legal sanction to such paramountcy. The Rulers of Indian States submitted or agreed to the cession of their territory and the government of their people by the Government of the States with which they merged and ultimately the Government of the Union of India because they felt that it was in the best interests of their people and also of themselves.

211. (c) The learned Attorney-General argued that paramountcy continued and the advent of the Constitution did not put an end to it and the debates of the Constituent Assembly with regard to Article 302-AA (present Article 363) that the disputes covered by the said article were beyond the pale of adjudication of Courts of Law only recognised the same. According to him the old concept of paramountcy was virtually inherited by the Dominion of India before January 1950, by reason of the Instruments of Accession, covenants and Merger agreements: the recognition of a Ruler which was the gift of a paramount power was not the matter of a legal right and was exercised as an act of paramountcy and retained the same character. He cited various decisions of this Court to show that covenants and Merger agreements have always been so interpreted, e.g., Virendra Singh v. State of U. P., 1955-1 SCR 415 at p. 429 = (AIR 1954 SC 447 at p. 452), Dalmia Dadri Cement Co. Ltd. v. Commr. of Income-tax, 1959 SCR 729 at p. 744 = (AIR 1958 SC 816 at p. 825) and a number of other cases. He argued further that a plea which was available to the Dominion of India can now be put forward by its successor government and in support of his contention relied on the cases of (1859) 7 Moo Ind App 476 (PC), (1875) 19 Eq 509, 1906-1 KB 613 and several others. In the first case the British Government acting as a sovereign power had seized the whole of the Raj of Tanjore as an escheat on the ground that the dignity of Rajah was extinct for want of male heir and this being an act of State the Supreme Court of Madras had no jurisdiction. In Doss's case (1875) 19 Eq 509 (supra) what was sought to be enforced was the liability of an ex-Ruler of Oudh which was annexed by the Government of India in 1856 on inter alia the ground that the claim was a charge upon the revenues of Oudh. The plaintiffs who filed the Bill in the English Court of Chancery sought to rely upon a statement of Lord Stanley, President of the Board of Control in the House of Commons that "the transfer of the revenues of the Kingdom of Oudh carried with it a liability for such debts on the former government as were justly contracted". The plea in demurer that the seizure of the property was an act of State and that it was not liable to any review by a Court of Law or equity was upheld. The above and cases of the type to my mind are easily distinguishable. Once the Rulers ceded their territory and accepted the Constitution of India as the Constitution of their States they became citizens of India on the commencement of the Constitution and the plea of continuance of an act of State as against them cannot be accepted. The Rulers became citizens of India like millions of others but in recognition of the past the Constitution gave them certain special rights like Privy Purses and assured them of continuance of personal privileges in terms of Articles 291 and 362.

212. (d) The learned Attorney-General submitted that the recognition of Rulership was an exercise of political power vested in the President on the strength of certain observations in 1973-2 SCR 631 = (AIR 1970 SC 1946). In that case the petitioner claimed to be entitled to the private properties left by Maharaja Rana Udaibhan Singh of Dholpur on the basis that it was an impartible estate and he was entitled thereto according to the law and custom of lineal primogeniture. There was a writ petition to this Court as also an appeal from a judgment of the High Court which were dealt with by a common judgment of this Court. The last Ruler of Dholpur died in 1954 leaving him surviving no direct male heir but he had left his daughter who was married to the Maharaja of Nabha. His widow adopted a grandson, viz., one of the sons of the daughter and thus arose a controversy as to who was entitled to the Rulership of Dholpur and the Government of India by notification dated December 22, 1954 constituted a Committee, as already mentioned to examine the contentions of various claimants and on the basis of the report of that Committee, the President recognised His Highness Maharaja Rana Shri Hemant Singh as the Ruler of Dholpur from 22nd October, 1954. The contentions put forward on behalf of the petitioner, the appellant to this Court were:

(1) The handing over or authorising the taking over of private properties was by executive fiat and was ex facie bad as infringing Article 19 (1) (f) and Article 31 of the Constitution; (2) That the recognition of a Ruler even if it was an instance of exercise of political power was itself an insignia of property and therefore it could only be by authority of law and would have to yield to fundamental rights; (3) After the commencement of the Constitution recognition of the Ruler was not an exercise of political power and that such recognition under clause (22) meant recognising a fact that a person was a Ruler and the clause did not empower the President to create a fact of bringing into effect a Ruler by recognising a person as a Ruler; (4) If there was any power to recognise the Ruler it was an arbitrary and unguided power and infringing the fundamental right to property; and (5) As there was no dispute regarding the covenant inasmuch as succession did not arise out of the covenant Article 363 of the Constitution was not affected. The right to succession to private property was said to be independent of any covenant. The above contentions were turned down by this Court. Referring to the notification published in the Gazette of India on 22nd December 1956 the Court said that it did not state that the Ruler thereby became entitled to private properties of the late Ruler. It was observed:

"The recognition of the Ruler is a right to succeed to the gaddi of the Ruler. This recognition of Rulership by the President is an exercise of political power vested in the President and is thus an instance of purely executive jurisdiction of the President. The act of recognition of Rulership is not, as far as the President is concerned, associated with any act of recognition of right to private properties." It was also said:

"The words 'is recognised by the President' indicate beyond any doubt that the power of the President to recognise a Ruler is embedded and inherent in the clause itself. Again, the words 'for the time being' indicate that the President has power not only to recognise but also to withdraw recognition whenever occasion arises...."

The recognition of Rulership is one of personal status. It cannot be said that claim to recognition of Rulership is either purely a matter of inheritance or a matter of descent by devolution. Nor can claim to recognition of Rulership be based only on covenants and treaties. That is why Article 363 of the Constitution constitutes a bar to interference by Courts in a dispute arising out of treaties and agreements. No claim to recognition of Rulership by virtue of a Covenant is justiciable in a Court of law. The Constitution, therefore, provided for the act of recognition of the Rulership by the President as a political power".

Some of the above observations undoubtedly sustain the contention of the learned Attorney-General but they must be limited to the facts of the case. The petitioner-cum-appellant before this Court did not claim any right to the gaddi. He only claimed to be entitled to the private properties of the deceased Ruler according to law and custom of lineal primogeniture. His complaint against the notification under clause (22) of Art. 366 was not accepted mainly because the notification made no reference to the private properties of the late Ruler. The Court held that the petitioner had not been able to establish any claim to any private property belonging to the last Ruler.

213. There have however been instances where the President did not act strictly in accordance with what I conceive to be his power, duty or obligation to recognise or to withdraw recognition to a Ruler. A notable instance of this occurred soon after the commencement of the Constitution when recognition was withdrawn from Sir Pratap Singh, the Ruler of Baroda and his eldest son Yuvaraj Fatehsingh was purported to be recognised as the Ruler of Baroda under the powers conferred by Art. 366 (22). The order was served on Sir Pratap Singh on April 12, 1951. The trouble in this case originated with Sir Pratap Singh's attempt to foment trouble against the Union of India and his design to challenge the merger of Baroda. Full details of this episode are given in Mr. Menon's book from page 403 onwards. Some instances where there was no recognition of any successor to an erstwhile ruler occurred in the case of Baudhraj of Orissa, Nandgaon of Madhya Pradesh and Delath of Himachal Pradesh. In the first case the widow of the Raja was informed in May 1958 that "after consideration of the report submitted by Shri B. C. Das the President has decided not to recognise any successor to the late Raja Narayan Prasad Roy". There was no statement that the Rulership had lapsed. In the other two cases Rulership was said to have lapsed.

214. (e) The learned Attorney-General also argued that the rights given by Art. 291 and Art. 362 at best were imperfect obligations not enforceable in a Court of Law. In view of my conclusion on Article 363 I do not think it necessary to examine the decisions cited by him or make any pronouncement on his contention.

215. (f) The learned Attorney-General next submitted that assuming Article 366 (22) gave a right to be recognised as a Ruler and obligation to recognise, the enforcement of such right or obligation was barred by Article 363. According to him, claim to recognition arose from the covenant and not from Art. 366 (22). The covenant was signed by the Ruler as a Ruler and it was guaranteed by the Government of India. I have already dealt with the scope and content of Article 366 (22) and held that it is inextricably linked with the covenants, Merger agreements etc.

216. On the basis of the above contentions it cannot be said that the Government of India has not raised a dispute with regard to the right, power, obligation or duty to recognise and a correlated power or duty etc., to withdraw recognition.

217. However, in the light of historical facts i.e., the events preceding the Constitution, the covenants and the Merger agreements entered into by the Rulers uniformly providing for succession to the gaddi by the law and custom of the particular State, the guarantee thereof by the Government of the Dominion of India and the provisions of the Constitution perpetuating the payment of privy purses and mandate of due regard to the personal rights and privileges of the Rulers, the contention of the learned Attorney-General cannot find favour in a court of law. The covenants and Merger Agreements were undoubtedly political acts entered into by High Contracting Parties and as such they could not be enforced in a court of law. But once the Constitution of India took the field and the Rulers became citizens of India there could be no acts of States as against such citizens living in India.

218. The question however remains as to whether these are matters which can be adjudicated upon by the municipal courts in India.

219. This point would fall to be considered under Article 363 but before that one must refer to Article 291 which is the prop and pillar to the claim of privy purse. This article places the payment of privy purse on a constitutional foundation. It expressly refers to the covenants or agreements entered into by a Ruler of an Indian State before the commencement of the Constitution and provides for the disbursement thereof by directing that the sums shall be charged on and paid out of the Consolidated Fund of India. In effect it means that the guarantee given by the Government of India for the payment of sums free of taxes by way of Privy Purse under covenants or agreements etc., is to be worked out and discharged by ensuring that the said sums shall be charged on and paid out of the Consolidated Fund.

220. According to Mr. Palkhivala.

(1) Article 291 is mandatory. It creates new and independent rights and obligations by being engraved in the Constitution and as such beyond the reach of the Legislature and the Executive. This new and independent right makes the article a self-ordaining and self-sustaining one. In cases where there is no dispute about the amount of the Privy Purse no question of any reference to the covenant arises.

(2) The amounts of Privy Purse guaranteed by Article 291 are the same as mentioned in the covenants but in other vital respects the provisions of Article 291 constitute a marked departure from the provisions of the covenants.

(3) First, whereas the liability under the covenant was that of the relevant State or the United State, it is made a liability of the Central Government under Article 291; secondly, the amounts of privy purses are charged on the Consolidated Fund of India for the first time; thirdly, the amounts are guaranteed to be exempt from all taxes on income whereas under the covenants the amount were to be free of all taxes whether imposed by the Government of the United State or Government of India.

(4) The covenants are referred to in the article only for the limited purpose of identifying the privy purses which are the subject matter of Article 291. The article cannot be said to relate to covenants merely because it refers to them for the limited purpose of identifying the privy purses.

(5) Once Article 291 is held to be mandatory there can be no dispute as to whether the privy purse will or will not be paid. In other words Article 363 only refers to bona fide disputes and not disputes which would merely amount to a mockery of the Constitution.

(6) The principle of harmonious construction would have to be applied. Article 363 cannot be so construed as to violate the effect and mandate of Articles 112, 113, 114, 291 and 366 (22). Article 366 (22) would be violated because one of the main legal effects of recognition under that article is to entitle the recognised Ruler to the privy purse and denial of the Privy Purse would stultify one of the main objects of recognition.

(7) The second limb of Article 363 read along with the first makes it clear that the whole object is to prevent disputes arising from covenants being raised in the garb of enforcing a right conferred by a provision of the Constitution. In the present series of cases Article 363 does not apply since there is no dispute as to rights arising from the covenant and the constitutional provisions merely guarantee that right.

(8) In any view of the matter any decision to repudiate the obligations under Article 291 would be mala fide and ultra vires. The power or jurisdiction cannot avail an authority to make an order or decision which is mala fide and ultra vires because such an order or decision is a nullity and the bar of jurisdiction under Article 363 cannot be pleaded to protect a nullity.

221. The submissions of the learned Attorney-General were:

(a) The right to privy purse which accrues under Article 291 clearly relates to a covenant: hence Article 363 bars any dispute in respect of such a right or recognition. The Constituent Assembly Debates go to show that this article was meant to give constitutional recognition to guarantees given by the Government of India and provided for the expenditure being charged on the Central revenues subject to such recoveries as might be made from time to time from the Provinces and States in respect of these payments. It did not create any new and independent right unrelated to the covenant.

(b) The second limb of Article 363 bars any dispute under Article 291 as would be apparent from the correspondence between Shri V. P. Menon, the Secretary to the Ministry of States and S. N. Mukherjee.

(c) Article 291 which gave constitutional guarantee to those demands embodied constitutional sanction for the due fulfilment of the Government of India's guarantees and assurances in respect of privy purses.

(d) The covenant was an act of State and any violation of its terms cannot form the subject of any action in any municipal courts. The guarantee given by the Government of India was in the nature of a treaty obligation contracted with the sovereign Rulers of independent States and cannot be enforced by action in municipal courts; its sanction is political and not legal; on the coming into force of the Constitution of India the guarantee for payment of periodical sums as privy purse is continued by Art. 291 of the Constitution but its essential political character is preserved by Art. 363 of the Constitution. Article 363 in effect recreated paramountcy and barred the adjudication of any dispute which had its seed in acts of State by any court of law.

(e) A charge on the Consolidated Fund of India only means that it shall not be submitted to the vote of Parliament as provided in Article 113 (1). It does not by itself create an independent right in the recipient.

(f) Article 291 arose out of an act of State to give constitutional recognition to a right which was previously unenforceable.

(g) Assuming that Article 291 by itself created a new right and a new obligation the article related to a covenant on the face of it and as such is barred by Article 363.

222. In my view, it is not necessary to examine all the contentions raised for and against the petitioner for the final conclusion to be arrived at. There can be no doubt that the provision of Article 291 was not a mere declaration of pious intention which the executive could disregard at its whim or pleasure. So long as it finds a place in the Constitution it was meant to be acted upon. It was meant to assure the Rulers that the privy purses which were contained in the covenants and agreements guaranteed by the Government of the Dominion of India were to be fully honoured and not cast away on a false morass of public opinion or buried under acts of State. No doubt the covenants or Merger agreements were acts of State but when the framers of the Constitution came to provide for the Rulers by giving them assurance of continuance of the payment of privy purse and regard to their personal rights and privileges by enshrining them in the Constitution, in my view they never contemplated that the same was to be the play-thing of the executive. It was by the incorporation of Articles 291 and 362 that the Constitution-makers were able to get the willing consent and co-operation of the Rulers to be brought within the fold of the Constitution. As observed by Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel the settlements with the Rulers were overall settlements taking all the pros and cons of the situation into consideration—the aspirations and ambitions of the people of the States, their wish and desire to get independence of the same type which their brethren in the erstwhile British India had obtained, their right and determination to have a voice in the administration of the country through their elected representatives, their zeal for getting out of the arbitrariness of some of the Rulers, no less than the wish and desire of the Rulers to honour and accept the desires and ambitions of their people coupled with a desire to live in peace at least with a part of their denuded status, their decimated right to property and a fraction of the personal privileges to which they were previously entitled. As Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel put it:

“The privy purses and the guarantee as to personal rights and privileges was the quid pro quo for the parting of their powers and their huge States by the Rulers and was the minimum which could be afforded to them.”

Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel speaking in 1949 said that human memory was proverbially short and that in October 1949 people might not remember what had taken place in the years preceding, namely, the tremendous upheaval in the country since 1946 and the possibility of the Rulers taking sides with States or peoples not favourably disposed towards India. Only twenty years have passed since then.....too short a period to sweep overboard all that took place during the memorable years preceding the commencement of the Constitution. The old order must change yielding place to new but the change should not be cataclysmic at the sacrifice of the interests of fairly large number of persons who had helped to consolidate India in a manner far different from anything that had taken place in the past. However that may be, we are only concerned with the legal aspect, the morals being for the country at large through their elected representatives to decide.

223. Article 291 was undoubtedly meant to put the guarantee as to payment of privy purses contained in the covenants and agreements on a firm and sure footing. But it was not completely dissociated from the covenants. It has a link with the covenants which were partially projected into the Constitution. This article has its base in the covenants. Its object was to give a lasting and permanent setting to the term in the covenants as to payment of privy purses. I find myself unable to hold that the article does not relate to a covenant. In my view it deals with a portion.....the main portion of the entire stream of the covenant and makes it flow along a particular and well-defined channel.....a channel which is not only well-defined but with a solid foundation and sides.

224. Counsel on both sides were at pains to show what the effect of the expression 'charged on and paid out of the Consolidated Fund of India' meant. According to the learned Attorney-General and Mr. Mohan Kumarmangalam who followed him, the expression "charged on" was only a form of expression used for the purpose of financial estimates and Appropriation Bills. It was meant to distinguish certain items in the Appropriation Bills from grants which were votable at the will of Parliament and the further direction for paying out thereafter did not advance matters. According to Mr. Palkhivala who referred to some of the financial provisions in the Constitution, a security was created thereby on the Consolidated Fund, that there was something akin to a pledge of it for the payment of the privy purse giving rise to a new right. In my view whatever the nature of their right it is related to the covenants and as such within the fold of Article 363.

225. Before referring to any decision on the point it may be useful to make an attempt to define the scope of Article 363 as if it was a case of first impression. The article purports to override all other provisions of the Constitution excepting Article 143 in respect of recourse to any court of law for settlement of any disputes covered by it. Article 143 is a provision enabling the President of India to obtain the opinion of this Court by a reference on any question of law or fact of such public importance as merits a scrutiny by the highest court of the land. Article 143 is only an enabling provision but its scope is so wide that on any question of public importance—be it one of law or fact—the President may refer to this Court for its opinion. Save for the power of the President to refer a matter to this Court for its opinion under Article 143, Article 363 imposes an absolute bar on the jurisdiction of all courts to adjudicate upon disputes covered by it. Of necessity, the bar must apply to Article 32 also. Under the last mentioned article the Constitution reserves to everybody entitled to any right covered by Part III i. e. the fundamental rights, to move this Court. The amplitude of the right and the kind of directions which may be issued to enforce that right are contained in various clauses of the article. None of these clauses override the all embracing provision of Article 363. Rights, be they fundamental or otherwise which form the subject of any dispute covered by this article must alike come under its bar.

226. The disputes which fall within this bar may be of two kinds. Under the first limb of the article any dispute arising out of any provision of a treaty, engagement, covenant, sanad or other similar instrument which was entered into or executed before the 26th January 1950 by any Ruler of an Indian State and to which the Dominion of the Government of India or any of its predecessor Governments was a party and which is or has been continued in operation after the said date, are not to be the subject matter of any judicial proceedings.

227. Clearly, therefore, any one seeking to have his rights adjudicated upon on the basis of a covenant or agreement or Merger agreement or Instrument of Accession would be debarred from coming to court and ventilate his grievance about any violation of his right.

228. Under the second limb of the article fall disputes in respect of any right accruing under or any liability or obligation arising out of any provisions of the Constitution relating to any treaty, agreement etc. To see whether any dispute falls within this limb one must examine the content of the right or the limit of the liability or obligation arising out of any constitutional provision which provision in its turn must relate to any treaty, agreement etc. Dispute means any contradiction or controversy. When a person asserts or claims a right in respect of a subject matter and another person contradicts it or denies it, there is a dispute. Disputes may be many and of various kinds. It may relate to a question of fact or a question of law which again may be a very simple or a complicated one. A question of law may arise about the interpretation of a contract; equally it may arise about the interpretation of the provisions of the Constitution. But whatever be the quality or the nature of the controversy it would be a dispute short of somebody trying to raise a contention which was absurd on the face of it e. g., that 'black means white'.

229. The right, liability or obligation in dispute must arise out of the provisions of the Constitution which has any bearing on any treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement etc. The expression "relating to" means inter alia "stand in some relation, to have bearing or concern, to pertain, to refer, to bring into association with or connection with".

230. In my view Article 291 is undoubtedly a provision of the Constitution relating to covenant, agreement etc. As I have already indicated Article 291 is not merely a provision for finding out the amount of the liability of the Dominion of India by way of privy purse to a Ruler. It expressly refers to covenants or agreements entered into by the Ruler under which payment of sums free of tax had been guaranteed or assured by the Government of the Dominion of India as privy purse and gives the term as to privy purse a new shape and form. Article 291 not only refers to the covenant, engagement etc. but certainly has a bearing on or concern with the same and is brought into association or connection with the same.

231. As already indicated, the article seeks to instil life and vigour into the term for payment of privy purse in the covenant by creating a new channel leading out of the guarantee of the Government of the Dominion of India which was no longer in existence and making it flow along a constitutional course by putting the liability of the Union of India for payment of the sums beyond any controversy. The article places the payment beyond the reach of voting by Parliament and expressly directs that the moneys shall be paid out of the Consolidated Fund of India and that the sums so paid shall be exempt from all taxes of income. I find myself unable to accept the argument of Mr. Palkhivala that for the purpose of Article 291 a reference to the covenants is only called for to find out the amount of privy purse. If that was the sole object of the article it might well have been achieved by using the following words or words to the like effect:

"all sums of money mentioned as privy purse of Rulers of Indian States in any engagements entered into by them and to which the Government of the Dominion of India was a party, shall be charged on and paid out of the Consolidated Fund of India."

If one was asked whether and if so, how the Constitution had dealt with the rights of the Rulers to Privy purses contained in the covenants and Merger agreements guaranteed by the Government of India, the answer would have to be that the same has been recognised and perpetuated in Article 291 making assurance doubly sure by directing the charging of the Consolidated Fund with the amounts thereof and payment thereof without deduction of income-tax. So considered Article 291 must be held to be an article of the Constitution relating to covenants or Merger agreements and any dispute as to payment of privy purse would come under the bar of Article 363.

232. Article 363 has come up for consideration before this Court in a number of cases and reference has been made to this article quite frequently in several decisions. In one of the earliest decisions of this Court in State of Seraikella v. Union of India, 1951 SCR 174 = (AIR 1951 SC 253) the Court had to consider whether a suit filed on the 15th January, 1950 (before the commencement of the Constitution) under the Original Jurisdiction of the Federal Court for a declaration that the various orders under which the State of Seraikella came to be administered as a part of Bihar and the laws under which those orders were made were ultra vires and the Province of Bihar had no authority to carry on the administration of the State, was dismissed by a majority of the Judges of this Court as being barred by Art. 363. Among the contentions urged there was one that the suit which was filed before the 26th January, 1950 stood transferred to Supreme Court under Article 374 (2) of the Constitution and that the Bar of Article 363 was only prospective and not retrospective. Kania, C. J. observed that the all-embracing opening words of Article 363 overrode the operation of Article 374 (2). The learned Chief Justice also said:

"If the plaintiff contends that that agreement (agreement of 15th December, 1947) is not binding on it, it cannot enforce its rights under the original jurisdiction of the Court. If the plaintiff has a grievance and a right to a relief which the defendants contend it has not, the forum to seek redress is not the Supreme Court exercising its original jurisdiction on the transfer of the suit from the Federal Court."

In Sudhansu Shekhar Singh Deo v. The

State of Orissa, 1961-1 SCR 779 = (AIR 1961 SC 196) the Ruler of the erstwhile State of Sonapur in Orissa which had merged with Orissa complained of a violation of his rights and privileges by the inclusive definition of a "person" in Section 2 (1) of the Orissa Agricultural Income Tax Act, 1947 (Orissa Act 24 of 1947). His case in substance was that as a Ruler of a State he had been immune from payment of agricultural income-tax when it was imposed in 1947 and by articles IV and V of the Merger agreement executed by him, the Dominion of India had guaranteed to him all his personal rights, privileges etc. and so the attempt to tax his private property violated that guarantee. In dismissing his appeal this Court referred to Article 362 and observed:

"If, despite the recommendation that due regard shall be had to the guarantee or assurance given under the covenant or agreement, the Parliament or the Legislature of a State makes laws inconsistent with the personal rights, privileges and dignities of the Ruler of an Indian State, the exercise of the legislative authority cannot, relying upon the agreement or covenant, be questioned in any court, and that is so expressly provided by Article 363 of the Constitution."

1965-3 SCR 201 = (AIR 1965 SC 1798) was a case where the respondent had taken execution proceedings in enforcement of an award and a prohibitory order under Order 21, Rule 46, Civil Procedure Code was passed in respect of the sums payable to the appellant by the Central Government on account of privy purse. One of the contentions urged on behalf of the appellant was that the privy purse was a political pension within the meaning of Section 60 (1) (g) of the Civil Procedure Code and as such protected from the execution proceedings. Relying upon the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Bishambar Nath v. Nawab Imdad Ali Khan, (1890) 17 Ind App 181 and Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Karnani Industrial Bank Ltd., 58 Ind App 215 = (AIR 1931 PC 160) the Court came to the conclusion that privy purses were political pensions. The Court also referred to Articles 291 and 363 of the Constitution and observed that "the covenant entered into by the Rulers of Madhya Bharat State was a treaty entered into by the Rulers of independent States by which they gave up their sovereignty over their respective territories and vested it in the new United State of Madhya Bharat. The covenant was an act of State, and any violation of its terms cannot form the subject of any action in any municipal courts. The guarantee given by the Government of India was in the nature of a treaty obligation contracted with the sovereign Rulers of Indian States and cannot be enforced by action in municipal courts. Its sanction is political and not legal. On the coming into force of the Constitution of India, the guarantee for payment of periodical sums as privy purse is continued by Article 291 of the Constitution, but its essential political character is preserved by Article 363 of the Constitution and the obligation under this guarantee cannot be enforced in any municipal court." With all respect, it appears to me that all the above was not strictly necessary for the decision of the case and it would have been enough to say that privy purse was a pension — a word which according to the Oxford Dictionary means, "a periodical payment made specially by a Government, company, employer etc." — which was political in nature because it was based on a political settlement. However, it was not the expression of opinion of only one learned Judge but the unanimous view of three learned Judges of this Court. In 1970-2 SCR 631 = (AIR 1970 SC 1946) (supra) a Bench of another five learned Judges of this Court have pronounced on the non-enforceability of the provision for payment of privy purse under Art. 291 by resort to legal proceedings. In my view, on the reasoning already given by me it must be held that the payment of privy purse although placed on a pedestal which defies annihilation or fragmentation as long as the abovementioned constitutional provisions enure is still subject to the constitutional bar of non-justiciability and cannot be upheld or secured by adjudication in a court of law including this Court.

233. Mr. Palkhivala however tried to cut across the argument of the learned Attorney-General that a dispute which fell under either limb of Article 363 of the Constitution was not justiciable by urging that if the act complained of was ultra vires or a nullity, the jurisdiction of the courts of law would not be excluded and this would apply with greater force to denial of a petitioner's right to the property of privy purse i. e. a fundamental right and the solemn duty of this Court to uphold the same. To support this plea under this head he referred to a fairly large number of decisions of this Court where it had been held that an order which was a nullity or which was mala fide or ultra vires would not stand in the way of the exercise of jurisdiction of a court of law to strike it down. The notable decisions of this Court are the following:

Pratap Singh v. The State of Punjab, 1964-4 SCR 733 at p. 773 = (AIR 1964 SC 72 at p. 97), Makhan Singh v. State of Punjab, 1964-4 SCR 797 = (AIR 1964 SC 381), R. M. Lohia v. State, 1966-1 SCR 709 = (AIR 1966 SC 740), Ram Swarup v. Shikar Chand, 1966-2 SCR 553 = (AIR 1966 SC 893), Sadanandan v. Kerala State, 1966-3 SCR 590 = (AIR 1966 SC 1925), Jaichand Lal v. West Bengal, 1966 Supp SCR 464 = (AIR 1967 SC 483), Raja. Anand v. U. P. State, 1967-1 SCR 373 = (AIR 1967 SC 1081), Dhulabhai v. Madhya Pradesh, 1968-3 SCR 662 = (AIR 1969 SC 78). He also relied on several English decisions, namely, The General Assembly of Free Church of Scotland v. Lord Over Town, 1904 AC 515, R. v. Bryant, 1956-1 All ER 341 and Anismimic Ltd. v. Foreign Compensation Commission, 1969-1 All ER 208.

234-235. The first case 1964-4 SCR 733 = (AIR 1964 SC 72) (supra) was one where the appellant who was civil surgeon in the employment of the State of Punjab challenged the legality of the orders of suspension, revocation of leave, retention in service after the date of superannuation and institution of the departmental inquiry against him inter alia on the ground that the same were mala fide passed at the instance of the Chief Minister who was personally hostile to him in order to wreak vengeance on him. The power exercised by the Government in that case rested on service rules the proper application of which is always subject to scrutiny by courts of law. Examining the content of the power vested in the Government to pass the impugned orders the Court observed that "the use of that power for achieving an alien purpose — wreaking the minister's vengeance on the officer would be mala fide and a colourable exercise of that power, and would therefore be struck down by the Courts". The second case 1964-4 SCR 797 = (AIR 1964 SC 381) (supra) was one where the appellants contended that Sections 3 (2) (15) (i) and 40 of the Defence of India Act, 1962 and

Rule 30 (1) (b) of the Defence of India Rules were unconstitutional and invalid as they contravened the fundamental rights of the appellant inter alia under Articles 14, 21 and 22. The petitions had been dismissed by the High Court on the ground that the Presidential Order which had been issued under Art. 359 of the Constitution created a bar which precluded them from moving the High Court under Section 491 (1) (b) of the Cr. P. C. This Court held (p. 827 of SCR) = (at p. 399 of AIR):

"If in challenging the validity of this detention order, the detenu is pleading any right outside the rights specified in the Order, his right to move any court in that behalf is not suspended because it is outside Article 359 (1) and consequently outside the Presidential Order itself."

236. The observation amounts to saying that the Presidential Order suspending the right to move a court of law can only apply within the proper ambit of the President's power and the same cannot be used by the executive as a cloak to shield any misuse of that power.

237. With regard to the allegation of mala fides it was observed that:

"It is hardly necessary to emphasise that the exercise of a power mala fide is wholly outside the scope of the Act conferring the power and can always be successfully challenged."

The third case (1966) 1 SCR 709 = (AIR 1966 SC 740) (supra) was one in which the petitioner moved this Court under Article 32 of the Constitution challenging the order of a District Magistrate and asking for his release on various grounds, inter alia that though an order of detention could be made to prevent acts prejudicial to the maintenance of public order it could not be made to prevent acts which were only prejudicial to law and order as distinct from public order. It was there observed by our present Chief Justice that:

"where statutory powers are conferred to take drastic action against the life and liberty of a citizen those who exercise it may not depart from the purpose. Vast powers in the public interest are granted but under strict conditions. If a person, under colour of exercising the statutory power, acts from some improper or ulterior motive, he acts in bad faith. The action of the authority is capable of being viewed in two ways. Where power is misused but there is good faith the act is only ultra vires but where the misuse of power is in bad faith there is added to the ultra vires character of the act, another vitiating circumstance. Courts have always acted to restrain a misuse of statutory power and the more readily when improper motives underlie it."

The provision of law which came up for consideration there was the Defence of India Rules and his Lordship laid down that powers given by such rules could be used only within the limits prescribed. (1966) 2 SCR 553 = (AIR 1966 SC 893) (supra) was a case in which the appellants complained of refusal of permission to sue their tenants by the District Magistrate under Section 3 (1) of the U. P. Act 3 of 1947. The said section provided that

"Subject to any order passed under sub-section (3) no suit shall, without the permission of the District Magistrate, be filed in any Civil Court against a tenant for his eviction from any accommodation except on one or more of the following grounds."

Sub-section (2) enabled the party aggrieved by the order of the District Magistrate to go up in revision to the Commissioner and Section 7-E provided for revisional powers to the State Government in very wide terms. Section 16 of the Act in terms provided that the order made under the Act to which Sec. 3 (4) applied was not to be called in question in any court. There it was observed:

"... but the exclusion of the jurisdiction of the civil courts must be made by a statutory provision which expressly provides for it, or which necessarily and invariably leads to that inference. In other words, the jurisdiction of the civil courts can be excluded by a statutory provision which is either express in that behalf or which inevitably leads to that inference."

The bar of jurisdiction of the court of law came up for consideration in two notable cases decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Secretary of the State v. Mask and Co., 67 Ind App 222 = (AIR 1940 PC 105) was a case in which a suit was filed by the respondent to recover the excess amount collected from them, under protest, by levying duty upon a tariff and not on ad valorem basis. The main question for determination in the appeal was whether the order passed by the Collector of Customs under the provisions of Section 183 of the Sea Customs Act, 1878 against the assessment of duty by the officer of Customs and which was subsequently affirmed on revision under the provisions of Section 191 of the Act, constituted a final adjudication or whether the civil courts had jurisdiction to entertain the suit of the respondents. Section 188 provided that

"every order passed in appeal under this section shall, subject to the power of revision conferred by Section 191, be final".

While rejecting the respondents' contentions including inter alia that an exclusion of the subject's right of resort to the civil courts would be ultra vires of the Indian Legislature in view of the provisions of Section 32 of the Government of India Act, 1915 the Board referred to the well known principle of law laid down in Wolverhampton New Waterworks Co. v. Hawkesford, (1859) 6 CB (NS) 336 approved by the House of Lords in Neville v. London "Express" Newspaper, Ltd., 1919 AC 368 and adopted on the basis of these decisions the dictum that:

"Where a liability not existing at common law is created by a statute which at the same time gives a special and particular remedy for enforcing it" the party must adopt the form of remedy given by the statute. It was also observed:

"It is settled law that the exclusion of the jurisdiction of the civil courts is not to be readily inferred, but that such exclusion must be either explicitly expressed or clearly implied. It is also well settled that even if jurisdiction is so excluded, the civil courts have jurisdiction to examine into cases where the provisions of the Act have not been complied with, or the statutory tribunal has not acted in conformity with the fundamental principles of judicial procedure."

In Raleigh Investment Co. Ltd. v. Governor-General in Council, (1947) 74 Ind App 50 the bar of jurisdiction of civil courts in regard to income-tax proceedings was contained in S. 67 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 providing:

"no suit shall be brought in any civil court to set aside or modify any assessment made under this Act, and no prosecution, suit or other proceeding shall lie against any officer of the Crown for anything in good faith done or intended to be done under this Act."

The argument for the appellant was that an assessment was not "made under the Act" if it gave effect to a provision which was ultra vires the Indian Legislature and that in law such a provision was a nullity and non-existent. The Board held that there was ample provision in the Income-tax Act by which an assessee could question the validity of any taxing provision in the statute which provided effective and proper machinery for review on grounds of law of any assessment. Further according to the Board: "...assessment made under this Act" is an assessment finding its origin in an activity of the assessing officer acting as such. The circumstance that the assessing officer has taken into account an ultra vires provision of the Act is in this view immaterial in determining whether the assessment is "made under this Act".....

Jurisdiction to question the assessment otherwise than by the use of the machinery expressly provided by the Act would appear to be inconsistent with the statutory obligation to pay arising by virtue of the assessment."

238. It may be noted that this authority has not found favour with this Court.

239. Most of the other decisions which were cited by Mr. Palkhivala were cases where liability under various Sales Tax Acts was questioned. I do not find it necessary to examine these cases in any detail because of the lucid exposition of the law on the subject in (1968) 3 SCR 662 = (AIR 1969 SC 78) (supra), a case arising out of the Madhya Pradesh Sales Tax Act 30 of 1950 which by S. 17 provided that:

"Save as is provided in Section 13, no assessment made and no order passed under this Act, or the rules made hereunder by the assessing authority, appellate authority or the Commissioner shall be called in question in any Court and save as is provided in Sections 11 and 12 no appeal or application for revision shall lie against any such assessment or order." In the unanimous judgment of this Court it was observed:

".....jurisdiction of the civil court is all-embracing except to the extent it is excluded expressly by clear intent arising from such law."

Referring to Mask and Co.'s case, 67 Ind App 222 = (AIR 1940 PC 105) (supra) and Raleigh Investment Co.'s case, 74

Ind App 50 = (AIR 1947 PC 78) (supra) it was said that:

"Both these cases thus appear to be decided on the basis of provisions in the relevant Acts for the correction, modification and setting aside of assessments and the express bar of the jurisdiction of the civil courts. The presence of a section barring the jurisdiction was the main reason and the existence of an adequate machinery for the same relief was the supplementary reason."

Referring to the dicta in Circo's Coffee Co. v. State of Mysore, (1967) 19 STC 66 (SC) and C. T. Santhulanathan Chettiar v. State of Madras, Civil A. No. 1045 of 1966, D/- 20-7-1967 (SC) the learned Chief Justice observed:

".....the question of validity of the taxing laws is always open to the civil courts for it cannot be the implication of any provision to make such a decision final or that even void or invalid laws must be enforced without any remedy."

240. The result of the enquiry into the views expressed by this Court in a large number of cases was summed up at pages 682-683 (of SCR) = (at pp. 89, 90 of AIR) in seven propositions. It is not necessary to set out the propositions as they all relate to exclusion of jurisdiction of the civil court by express provisions of law or clear implications therefrom.

241. But a constitutional provision of the kind of Art. 363 transcends this kind of consideration. All that the Court has to see is whether the dispute falls within either limb of the article. If the dispute is so covered the court is precluded from examining whether the contention of the party asserting a right was genuine or of real substance. Equally the bar will apply where a party denying the right asserted or contesting the claim put forward is guilty of action which on the face of things appears to be arbitrary if there be some scope for raising the plea in denial or contradiction. I have taken the view that the President's power or right or duty or obligation to recognise a person as a Ruler arises not merely out of the provisions in Article 366 (22) but also the covenants, Merger agreements or Instruments of Accession the dispute is one which arises out of a provision of the Constitution relating to a treaty, agreement, covenant etc. in terms of Article 363 of the Constitution. A dispute as to right to privy purse, as already examined, attracts the same bar.

242. With regard to Art. 366 (22) read with Article 363 it may be safely asserted that it could have never crossed the minds of the makers of the Constitution that in devising a key for the recognition of the Rulers and at the same time protecting them and the Government of India from disputes based on or about pre-Constitution covenants, agreements etc. they were forging a weapon with which the Government of the day could destroy them all and seek shelter behind a total embargo on litigation to vindicate their rights. The debates of the Constituent Assembly to which reference has already been made show that Article 363 was inserted for the purpose of giving a quietus to any dispute which anyone might seek to raise on the basis of covenants and Merger agreements or rights flowing therefrom. In my opinion, the object was as much to save the Rulers who had entered into covenants or agreements etc. from their rivals or kinsmen coming to court to upset the covenants, agreements etc. as to shield the Government of India from attempts on the part of rulers to rip open the covenants, agreements or to seek recourse to law for establishing their rights.

243. I also take the opportunity of remarking that if ever there was an occasion for the President to make a reference to this Court the present was eminently suited to the purpose. Notwithstanding the wide sweep of the provision for ousting the jurisdiction of courts as regards disputes covered by it Article 363 gave express power to the President to have the opinion of this Court to guide himself by and when disputes of such public importance were agitating the minds of members of Parliament and of the Cabinet it was not only his right but his duty to consult this Court.

244. I do not think it necessary to express any opinion on the rights or privileges covered by Article 362 of the Constitution because prima facie they are relatable to the guarantees or assurances given under the covenants or agreements referred to in Article 291. How much regard Parliament or Legislature of States are to pay to such guarantees or assurances is for the appropriate Legislatures to consider. I may only add that the Constitution-makers could not have contemplated exemption from the im-sitions such as those under the Wealth Tax Act and the Gift Tax Act inasmuch as such taxing provisions probably were not contemplated at the time. The Government of India in its graciousness saw fit to exempt the Rulers from the operation of these and many other statutes which are still on the statute book. The occasion for considering such statutes has not arisen yet and they may be left for future consideration.

245. Mr. Palkhivala's plea that the act of the President resulted in the destruction of the institution of Rulers and as such was invalid does not bear scrutiny. The orders if valid would operate in the case of each Ruler and have been challenged by the petitioning Rulers in their individual capacity. No body of persons known to law can be called an institution of Rulers. According to the figures given by Mr. Palkhivala himself Rulership of over one hundred States has lapsed during the last twenty years and the process may go on till no Rulers are left. In this case we are concerned with the rights of individual Rulers and not of them as a class.

246. In the result I have to hold that this series of petitions is not maintainable remarking, at the same time, that the action of the President appears to be unjustified. The President may, if he chooses, guide himself by the exposition of the law as made above. What a stroke of the pen has done may be undone by another stroke of it. "Because right is right", the President it is hoped, would "follow right" as "wisdom in the scorn of consequence". I would leave the parties to bear their own costs.

HEGDE, J.:— 247. These petitions under Article 32 of the Constitution present for decision common questions of law. In each of these petitions the petitioner therein prays for the following reliefs:—

(1) a writ, direction or order declaring the order of the President dated the 6th September, 1970 to be unconstitutional, ultra vires and void and further to quash the same;

(2) a writ, direction or order declaring that the petitioner continues to be the Ruler and as such continues to be entitled to the Privy Purse and to his personal rights and privileges as a Ruler;

(3) a writ, direction or order directing the Union of India to continue to pay to the petitioner the Privy Purse to which the petitioner is entitled and to continue to recognize his Rulership and the personal rights and privileges and to implement and observe the provisions of the Covenant/Merger Agreement entered into between the Ruler of Gwalior and the Government of India; and

(4) such other further orders as the nature and circumstances of the case may require.

248. For pronouncing on the questions arising for decision it is sufficient if I refer to the facts pleaded in any one of the cases. Hence I shall deal with the facts and pleas put forward in Writ Petition No. 376 of 1970. Therein the petitioner's case is as follows:

249. His father was the Ruler of Gwalior prior to August, 15, 1947. He signed the Instrument of Accession on August 15, 1947. The same was accepted by the Governor General of India on August 16, 1947. Under the Instrument of Accession, he made over to the Dominion of India three subjects viz., Defence, External Affairs and Communications. On April 24, 1948, he signed a Covenant with several other Rulers as a result of which the State of Madhya Bharat came to be formed on June 15, 1948. Thereafter Madhya Bharat merged with the Union of India. After the Constitution of India came into force, the President recognised the father of the petitioner under Article 366 (22) of the Constitution as the Ruler of Gwalior. After the death of the petitioner's father, the petitioner succeeded to the Gaddi on July 16, 1961 and thereafter he was duly recognised by the President under Article 366 (22). Ever since the merger of the State with the Union of India, the petitioner's father and later on the petitioner was being paid the Privy Purse guaranteed under Art. 291 of the Constitution. The petitioner is entitled to Privy Purse of Rs. 10 lacs per year. He is also entitled to other rights and privileges arising from the Covenants.

250. Prior to August 15, 1947, the Ruler of Gwalior was a Sovereign though his sovereignty was subject to the paramountcy of the British Crown; but that paramountcy lapsed on August 15, 1947 as a result of the Indian Independence Act, 1947. Consequently the Ruler of Gwalior as well as other Rulers became absolute Sovereigns. In law they were free to accede to either of the two Dominions of India and Pakistan or to remain independent. But by stages the Indian States adjoining the Dominion of India merged in the Dominion of India. After their merger the Rulers of those States had no ruling powers. They had only such rights and privileges as were recognized or created under the Covenants entered into by them with the Government of India and those embodied in the Constitution. On the coming into force of the Constitution all the former Rulers of the Indian States that had merged with the Dominion of India as well as their quondam subjects became citizens of India having all the rights and duties of citizens of this country. From about 1967, there was a move in the ruling party to abolish the privy purses guaranteed to the Rulers under the Constitution as well as the privileges guaranteed to them under the Covenants and agreements recognised in Article 362. Consequently the Government moved in the Lok Sabha on September 2, 1970, the Constitution (Twenty-fourth) Amendment Bill, 1970 to delete certain provisions of the Constitution relating to the guarantees given to the Rulers about their privy purses as well as privileges. That bill was passed in the Lok Sabha but it failed to get the requisite majority in the Rajya Sabha. The motion for consideration of the bill was rejected at about 4-30 p.m. on September 5, 1970. The same evening the Union Cabinet met and decided to advise the President to withdraw the recognition of the Rulers so that the privy purses and privileges guaranteed to the Rulers may be abolished. On the same night, the President purporting to act under Cl. (22) of Article 366 of the Constitution signed in his Camp at Hyderabad an Instrument or Instruments withdrawing recognition of all the Rulers. After obtaining his signatures, the concerned document or documents were flown back to Delhi the same night and the impugned orders issued on September 6, 1970. On the strength of these orders, the Government of India asserts that all the Rulers in India had been de-recognized and consequently none of them is entitled to the rights and privileges to which they were entitled as Rulers.

251. It is contended on behalf of the petitioners that in exercise of his powers under Article 366 (22) of the Constitution, the President is not competent to abolish Rulers as a class and therefore the impugned orders are nullity. The further contention of the petitioners is that the rights conferred on them under Articles 291 and 362 of the Constitution as well as under various statutory provisions or rules having the force of law are fundamental rights and as such they cannot be abolished by an executive order. It is said the impugned orders contravene Articles 19 (1) (f), 21, 31 (1), 31 (2), 51 (3) and 73 (1) of the Constitution. According to the petitioners Article 291 is a mandatory provision and it is not open to the Government to refuse to obey the mandate of the Constitution. The petitioners also complain that in making the impugned orders, the President not only acted outside the scope of Article 366 (22) of the Constitution but he also thereby violated Articles 53 (1) 60, 73 (1), 362, 291, 112 to 114 of the Constitution. The petitioners' further grievance is that under various statutes as well as under the Merger Covenants they are entitled to certain privileges; the President by purporting to take away those privileges has contravened Arts. 14 and 21 of the Constitution. It is also said that the Council of Ministers were guilty of mala fides in advising the President for making the impugned orders for collateral reasons and for the sake of political exigencies. According to the petitioners, Article 363 of the Constitution does not bar the jurisdiction of the Court in granting the reliefs prayed for by them.

252. The respondent in its reply does not deny that the object of the impugned orders was to abolish the Rulers as a class. It contends that the present policy of the Government is not to have any Rulers in this country or to allow them any rights or privileges as Rulers. It is contended that the respondent has right to abolish Rulership in exercise of its power under Art. 366 (22) which power according to it is a sovereign power; the decision of the Government to abolish Rulership is a political decision and as such the same is not open to be questioned in municipal courts; the rights conferred under the relevant Covenants are not perennial and are inherently temporary in character and are liable to be varied or repudiated in accordance with the State Policy in the interests of the people. It is further pleaded that a fiduciary duty is cast upon the Government not to continue feudal institutions and anachronistic systems against the interests of the people; to respect and give effect to the needs and wishes of the people and to the will of the representatives of the people, the impugned orders have been passed. According to the respondent this Court is precluded from going into the validity of the impugned orders in view of Article 363. As regards Article 291, the plea taken by the respondent is that it confers no legal right on the Rulers. That Article merely lays down the source and method of payment of the Privy Purses. The respondent takes the stand that this Court cannot go into the scope or effect of Article 291, in view of Article 363. So far as the Covenants and Agreements are concerned it is urged on its behalf that the rights, liabilities or obligations arising therefrom are outside the jurisdiction of this Court firstly because they arise from political agreements between High Contracting Parties and secondly because of the bar under Article 363. It is next contended on behalf of the respondent that neither under the Covenants nor under any of the provisions of the Constitution any fundamental right was conferred on any Ruler and hence the petition under Article 32 is not maintainable. It is also urged on behalf of the respondent that Article 362 of the Constitution does not confer any right on the Rulers and any failure to obey the direction given in that Article, does not lead to any violation of the provisions of the Constitution.

253. From the pleadings, the following issues arise for decision:

(1) What is the scope of Clause (22) of Article 366? Does it confer on the President power to abolish Rulership? Are the impugned orders invalid for any of the reasons mentioned in the Writ Petitions?

(2) Does Article 291 impose any mandatory duty on the Government and confer corresponding rights on the Rulers?

(3) What is the scope of Article 362?

(4) Does Article 363 exclude the jurisdiction of this Court from considering whether the impugned orders are ultra vires the powers of the President and whether there has been any violation of Articles 291 and 362 of the Constitution?

(5) Are these petitions under Art. 32 of the Constitution maintainable? What fundamental rights of the petitioners, if any, have been infringed and

(6) What relief, if any, the petitioners are entitled to in these petitions?

254. Before proceeding to consider and pronounce on the issues formulated above it would be useful to briefly refer to the historical background leading to the merger of the Indian States in the Indian Union as both the petitioners and the respondent have laid great stress on the same. During the time of the British rule, there were over 500 Indian States possessing varying degrees of sovereignty. In the matter of internal administration, most of the Rulers had complete freedom. But their sovereignty was subject to the treaties, engagements and sanads entered into by them with the British Crown and also the paramountcy of the British Crown. Paramountcy was an undefined concept. It was an all pervading power. The Butler Committee declined to define its scope but said that "paramountcy was paramount". Paramountcy meant just what the British Government chose it to mean. It was a convenient fiction devised by the imperial power to further its imperial interest. Paramountcy did not flow from treaties or international law. The sanction behind it was the British military strength. Subject to the Imperial needs the Rulers of Indian States were left free to govern their States as they thought best though in few cases, when the Rulers were guilty of gross atrocities the paramount power intervened even in their internal administration. Government of India Act, 1935 visualised a Federation consisting of provinces as well as Indian States. The States were expected to accede to the Federation on limited number of subjects retaining their sovereignty in respect of other subjects. But the States were so jealous of their rights that it was not possible to persuade them to join the Federation. Hence the Federal part of the Constitution visualised by the Government of India Act, 1935 did not come into being. After World War II when it became inevitable for the British Government to grant freedom to this country, the question as to the future relationship of the Indian States with the Dominion of India assumed importance. As there was no agreement between the concerned parties, the British Government under the Independence Act, 1947 divided the then British India into two parts, India and Pakistan. So far as the Indian States were concerned, it allowed its paramountcy to lapse and those States were asked, if they so chose, to enter into new relationship with one or the other of the Dominions or remain independent. The paramountcy of the British Crown was not inherited either by India or by Pakistan. It was allowed to lapse. This situation created a crisis. There was an imminent threat to the unity of India, politically as well as economically. The situation called for the highest degree of statesmanship on the part of our leaders. Naturally the Rulers of the Indian States were anxious to remain as independent sovereigns but they could not have been oblivious of the internal and external dangers to their authority. It was a highly explosive situation. Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel with his political sagacity and pragmatic approach, availing himself of the co-operation of Lord Mountbatten and the assistance of his energetic and tactful Secretary, V. P. Menon first persuaded practically all the Rulers to accede to India on three subjects viz. Defence, External Affairs and Communications and thereafter stage by stage drew them closer to the Dominion of India and finally persuaded them to merge with the Dominion of India. All this was done in the course of about two years, a feat unparalleled in history. The saga of the integration of the Indian States into the Dominion of India will remain the most exciting and most glorious chapter in the history of our country. This mighty achievement could not have been had peacefully but for the patriotism and far-sightedness of many of the Rulers of the Indian States. Sardar Patel told the Constituent Assembly that the Rulers of the Indian States were the co-architects of India's unity.

255. But it was said on behalf of the respondent that the Rulers merged their States in the Dominion out of sheer necessity and not out of any patriotism, they were not in a position to resist the compulsion of geography and pressure of their subjects in favour of self-Government and therefore they merely made a virtue of necessity. It may be that they acted in self-interest. But there can be no doubt that it was enlightened self-interest. Sardar Patel told the Constituent Assembly on October 12, 1949:

"There was nothing to compel or induce the Rulers to merge the identity of their States. Any use of force would have not only been against our professed principle but would have also caused serious repercussions. If the Rulers had elected to stay out, they would have continued to draw the heavy civil list which they were drawing before and in large number of cases they could have continued to enjoy unrestricted use of the State revenues. The minimum which we could offer to them as quid pro quo for parting with their ruling powers was to guarantee to them Privy purses and certain privileges on a reasonable and defined basis." Proceeding further the Sardar exhorted the Constituent Assembly.

"The capacity for mischief and trouble on the part of the Rulers if the settlement with them would not have been reached on a negotiated basis was far greater than could be imagined at this stage. Let us do justice to them, let us place ourselves in their position and then assess the value of their sacrifice. The Rulers have now discharged their part of the obligations by transferring all the ruling powers and by agreeing to the integration of their States. The main part of our obligation under these Agreements is to ensure that the guarantees given by us in respect of Privy Purses are fully implemented. Our failure to do so would be a breach of faith and seriously prejudice the stabilisation of the new order."

Even quite recently both our President and the Home Minister acknowledged with gratitude the sacrifice made by the Indian Rulers. But it was argued on behalf of the respondent that we should not take those utterances at their face value. It was indirectly suggested that those expressions were platitudes intended to achieve some political purposes. If that be so, all that one can say is, mysterious are the ways of politics.

256. The respondent in its counter-affidavit has taken the stand that the people of this country having become conscious of their social and economic rights would not tolerate any longer the concept of Rulership or the Privy Purse or any of the privileges incorporated in the Covenants and Merger Agreements. Therefore it was the duty of the Government to give effect to the will of the people. It has also taken the stand that the concept of Rulership, Privy Purse and the privileges guaranteed to the Rulers without any relatable function and responsibility have become incompatible with democracy, equity and social justice in the context of India of today. These contentions raise political issues. This Court is not the forum for going into these issues nor is it concerned with the political passions surrounding the issues for decision in this case. Our primary function in this case is to interpret the relevant provisions of the Constitution and to see whether the complaint of the petitioners that some of their fundamental rights have been infringed is correct.

257. It is also not for this Court, except to the extent it bears on the question of interpretation of the Constitution to go into the historical background of any constitutional provision. If the meaning of a provision is plain and unambiguous, its historical background becomes irrelevant. But if there is any ambiguity, in interpreting the same, it is permissible for the Court to take into consideration the object intended to be achieved by that provision as well as the surrounding circumstances which may bring out the intention of the Constituent Assembly.

258. The respondent, though in a somewhat vague way, has raised the plea of State policy. That plea appears to me to be irrelevant in the context of this case. If the Constitution has laid down a policy, as is contended on behalf of the petitioners, with respect to matters with which we are concerned, that policy cannot be departed from either by the legislature or by the executive. Neither the legislature nor the executive can have a policy which runs counter to the policy laid down by the Constitution. In this country the voice of the Constitution is paramount. On matters on which the Constitution speaks, no one else can speak. Every organ of the State in this country has to function within the limits prescribed by the Constitution. It has no power de-hors that conferred on it by the Constitution. Its powers are only those derived from the Constitution.

259. The learned Attorney General in the course of his arguments, time and again, tried to impress on us that the will of the people has to be respected and as it is the desire of the people that Rulership should be abolished, it had become imperative for the Government to advise the President to make the impugned orders. The petitioners deny that there is any such public opinion. We are not in a position to go into this controversy. Our duty is to obey the Constitution. The question of public opinion is not relevant for our purpose. Many of the safeguards provided in the Constitution are for the benefit of the minorities.

The Government might have acted with the best of intentions. But the real question is whether it has acted within the powers conferred on it by the Constitution. In this connection it would be worthwhile to borrow and adapt some of the observations of Chief Justice Patanjali Sastri in State of Madras v. V. G. Row, 1952 SCR 597 at p. 605 = (AIR 1952 SC 196 at p. 199). If the Court in this country face up to important and none too easy task of declaring void any of the important policy decisions taken by the Government it is not out of any desire to tilt at executive authority in a crusader's spirit, but in the discharge of a duty plainly laid upon them by the Constitution. This is especially true as regards the fundamental rights, as to which this Court has been assigned the role of a sentinel on the qui vive. In these cases as in other cases we do not seek to sit in judgment on Government's policies. They are the concern of the legislative and the executive organs of the State. But the Constitution has imposed a special duty on this Court to preserve and protect the Constitution — we only seek to discharge that duty.

260. Now coming to the scope of Clause (22) of Article 366; it is necessary to notice that Article 366 is an article which defines 30 expressions appearing in one or more of the articles in the Constitution. That article starts by saying that

"In this Constitution, unless the context otherwise requires, the following expressions have the meanings hereby respectively assigned to them."

261. From this it is clear that the meanings given to the expressions mentioned in that article are only for the purpose of the Constitution and not for any other purpose as held by this Court in Pravir Chandra Bhanj Deo v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (1961) 2 SCR 501 = (AIR 1961 SC 775). Clause (15) of Article 366 defines an "Indian State" as meaning "any territory which the Government of the Dominion of India recognised as such a State". It may be noted that no "Indian State" as such exists after the Constitution came into force. But yet as that expression has been used in the Constitution in some places for certain purposes, it became necessary to define that expression and not because that there is an Indian State now. Similarly Rulers of Indian States disappeared as soon as their territories were merged in India and all those quondam Rulers became citizens of India — see Bhanj Deo's case, (1961) 2 SCR 501 = (AIR 1961 SC 775) (supra) and H. H. Maharaja of Udaipur v. State of Rajasthan (1964) 5 SCR 1 = (AIR 1964 SC 444). The Rulers referred to in Article 366 (22) have no kingdom or subjects to rule. They have no ruling power. They do not have dual capacity firstly as citizens of India and secondly as Rulers. Their rulership is merely a status entitling them to privy purse and certain privileges. As Articles 291, 362, 366 (21) (a) and (b) (before its deletion) as well as Entry 34 of List I of Sch. VII refer to Rulers, it became necessary to define that expression.

262. Article 366 (22) defines "Ruler" thus:

" "Ruler" in relation to an Indian State means the Prince, Chief or other person by whom any such covenant or agreement as is referred to in clause (I) of Article 291 was entered into and who for the time being is recognised by the President as the Ruler of the State and includes any person who for the time being is recognised by the President as the successor of such Ruler."

262A. This clause has two parts namely:

(1) the Prince, Chief or other person of an Indian State who had entered into any Covenant or Agreement as is referred to in Clause (I) of Article 291 and who is for the time being recognised by the President as the Ruler of the State; and

(2) any person who for the time being is recognised by the President as the successor of such a Ruler namely the Ruler who entered into the Covenant or Agreement referred to earlier and recognised by the President.

263. The words "other person" in the first part of Article 366 (22) means someone analogous to a Prince or Chief of a former Indian State who had entered into the Covenant or Agreement referred to in that clause. It cannot be some third person because no person other than a Ruler of an Indian State had entered into any Covenant or Agreement with the Dominion of India. The words "other persons" should be read eiusdem generis with the words "Prince, Chief" preceding the words "other person". Indian Rulers were known by various names such as Maharana, Maharao. Maharaja, Nizam etc. To avoid listing all those names in Article 366 (22), the draftsman has used the words "other person" but the meaning of those words has been made clear by the words accompanying the words "other person" viz., by whom any such agreement as is referred to in Cl. (1) of Article 291 was entered into and who for the time being is recognised by the President as Ruler. Now coming to the second part of that clause, here again the words "any person" refers to the person who at the relevant time is the successor of the person who entered into the Covenant or Agreement. This is made clear by the expression "for the time being is recognised by the President as the successor of such Ruler", such Ruler being the Ruler referred to in the first limb of the Clause. Article 366 (22) contemplates two classes of persons who are to be recognised by the President as Rulers. The first group consists of those persons who entered into the Covenant or Agreement with the Dominion of India and the second group their successors. Coming to the first group, the President has no power to recognise any one other than who had entered into the Covenant or Agreement and so far as the second group is concerned, he can only recognise the successor of the person who had entered into the Covenant or the Agreement. "Successor" is a term of law. Succession is regulated by law or custom. It is no doubt true that it is for the President to decide as to who is the successor for the time being of the person who had entered into the Covenant or Agreement. The President cannot create a successor. He can only recognise the successor. His power is only to find out who is the successor at the relevant time of the Ruler who entered into the Covenant or Agreement. Recognition is not the same thing as appointment. Recognition means the power to locate and not a power to create. Hence the power conferred on the President under the second part of Article 366 (22) is a very limited power. That power is no doubt an executive power but the same has to be exercised in accordance with law. In other words it has to be exercised as a quasi-judicial power. So far as the first part is concerned, the President has no power to recognise any person other than the Ruler who entered into the Covenant or Agreement with the Dominion of India. We shall presently see that he has a constitutional duty to recognise the Ruler of an Indian State. Hence the words "for the time being" in the first part of Article 366 can only come into play if there was any error in locating the person who entered into the Covenant or Agreement, the condition for the recognition being that the person recognised must be the person who entered into the Covenant or Agreement. So far as the second part is concerned the expression "for the time being" is relevant as the question of recognition of a new Ruler arises on the death of each Ruler. On each of those occasions, the President has to find out as to who is the successor according to law and in the absence of law, according to custom, of the Ruler who entered into the Covenant or Agreement. The procedure of recognition of Rulers appears to have been intended as a status symbol and also to avoid the necessity of hunting up Covenants and Agreements at the time of payment of privy purses and while affording other privileges and rights.

264. Article 366 (22) contemplates that for each Indian State there shall be a Ruler at any given point of time. That Article does not say that the President may recognise a Ruler. On the other hand it speaks of the Ruler who "for the time being is recognised by the President", an expression which contemplates the continuity of Rulership and not merely of its possible existence. A Rulership of an Indian State can only disappear if both the original Ruler who entered into the Covenant or Agreement as well as his successors cease to exist as in that case President cannot recognise any one as the Ruler of that State. From the above discussion it follows that the power of the President under Article 366 (22) is fully regulated.

265. In this context we may refer to the definition of the "Ruler" in Section 311 (1) of the Government of India Act, 1935 which says "Ruler" in relation to an Indian State means the Prince, Chief or other person recognised by His Majesty as the Ruler of the State". The power to recognise given to His Majesty under this section is blanket power. It is subject to no limitation. Under that section any one could have been recognised as the Ruler of an Indian State. No such power is conferred on the President under Article 366 (22).

266. I shall now, proceed to consider whether the President has power to say that he will not recognise a Ruler for an Indian State. It was urged on behalf of the respondent that a power to recognise includes a power not to recognise. Evidently this contention is based on Section 21 of the General Clauses Act which says:

"Where, by any Central Act or Regulation, a power to issue notifications, orders, rules or bye-laws is conferred, then that power includes a power, exercisable in the like manner and subject to the like sanction and conditions if any, to add to, amend, vary or rescind any notifications, orders, rules or bye-laws so issued".

267. In view of Article 367 of the Constitution unless the context otherwise requires, the General Clauses Act, subject to any adaptations and modifications made therein under Article 372 applies for the interpretation of the Constitution as it applies for the interpretation of an Act of the legislature of the Dominion of India. I have not thought it necessary to go into the question whether the recognition referred to in Article 366 (22) can be considered as a power to issue notifications or orders as in my opinion that clause imposes a Constitutional duty on the President. No discretion is left to the President to recognise or not to recognise the Ruler of an Indian State. In that view, Section 21 of the General Clauses Act, 1897 is irrelevant. We have already seen that Article 366 (22) contemplates that each Indian State must have a Ruler at all times so long as the Ruler who entered into the Covenant or Agreement or a successor of his is in existence otherwise Articles 291 and 362 will become meaningless. They will be empty shells. "Ruler" referred to in Article 291 (b), Article 362 and Entry 34 of List I of the Seventh Schedule must necessarily be that person who is recognised as Ruler by the President under Article 366 (22). If the President fails to or declines to discharge his function under Article 366 (22), Arts. 291 and 362 would become inoperative. In effect the benefit conferred by those Articles will be denied to the person entitled to be recognised as a Ruler of a particular Indian State. Further the legislative power given under Entry 34 of List I of the Seventh Schedule would disappear. It is to give meaning to Articles 291, 362 and Entry 34 of List I of the Seventh Schedule, a duty is imposed on the President to recognise the Ruler of each Indian State. In my opinion Article 366 (22) imposes a constitutional duty on the President. To enable him to discharge that duty, certain limited powers are conferred on him. While discharging his duty under the first part of Article 366 (22), he has to locate the person who according to law can be said to have entered into the Covenants or Agreements and under the second limb his duty is to find out the successor of the Ruler coming within the scope of the first limb. As mentioned earlier the recognition of the Ruler who executed the Covenant or Agreement is a mere formality. So far as the recognition of the successor of that Ruler is concerned, in case of dispute, it becomes the duty of the President to decide as to who is the successor of the Ruler who executed the Covenant or Agreement at the relevant time. Evidently the Constitution-makers were of the opinion that any dispute as to who is the "Ruler" for the purpose of the Constitution should not be left to be decided by Courts of law because such a procedure would involve years of delay in determining the person who is entitled to the benefit of the privy purse and the privileges. Hence that question was left to the exclusive decision of the President. Despite the fact that exclusive power was given to the President to recognise the successor of the original Ruler, the procedure that invariably adopted in case of disputed succession was to act on the basis of the recommendation of either of a High Court Judge who had enquired into the matter or of a committee presided over by a High Court Judge, set up for that purpose. That is what happened when disputes arose as to the succession to the Rulers of the States of Sirohi and Dholpur. In my opinion Article 366 (22) imposes a duty on the President and for that purpose has conferred on him certain powers. In other words the power conferred on the President under that provision is one coupled with duty. There are similar powers conferred on the President under the Constitution. Under Chap. XVI of the Constitution certain special provisions were made for the benefit of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes. Seats were reserved for them both in the Parliament as well as in the State Assemblies. Certain other benefits were also secured to them in the matter of appointments to services and posts in connection with the affairs of the Union or of a State. But the Constitution did not specify which castes were Scheduled Castes and which Tribes were Scheduled Tribes. Under Articles 341 (1) and 342 (1) of the Constitution, the President was given power to specify the castes which he considered to be Scheduled Castes and the Tribes which he considered to be Scheduled Tribes. Though both the Arts. say the President "may" specify the Castes which he considers as Scheduled and Tribes which he considers Scheduled, it is clear that a constitutional duty was imposed on him to specify which castes were Scheduled Castes and which Tribes were Scheduled Tribes for the purpose of the Constitution. The word "may" in those clauses must be read as "must" because if he had failed or declined to specify the Castes and Tribes, Articles 330, 332, 334, 335, 338 and 340 would have become inoperative and the constitutional guarantees given to the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes would have become meaningless. At this stage it may be noted that under Article 366 (24) and (25) Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes are defined as such Castes, races, tribes, tribal communities or their parts or groups within them as are deemed under Articles 341 and 342 respectively. Again under Clause (7) of Article 366, the President is given power to determine for the purpose of the Constitution the "corresponding Provinces", "corresponding Indian State" or "corresponding State" in case of doubt. This again is a duty imposed on the President. He cannot refuse to discharge that duty.

268. Now coming to the contention that power to recognise the Rulers includes power not to recognise we shall test the correctness of that contention with reference to some other Arts. in the Constitution which deal with certain constitutional duties of the President. The power to appoint the Election Commissioner is that of the President. The Election Commission alone can hold the elections of the President, Vice-President, members of the Parliament and the State legislatures. The President cannot decline to appoint the Election Commissioners. It is not in the power of the cabinet to advise the President not to appoint one or more of Election Commissioners even if some future cabinet should think that the elections are trappings of feudalism. Similarly the cabinet cannot advise the President not to appoint a Governor and thus destroy the federal structure of our Constitution or not to appoint the Chief Justice of Supreme Court or of the High Courts and thereby remove those Courts and thus make a mockery of the fundamental rights.

269. The President cannot do indirectly, what the legislature cannot do directly. It is wrong to mistake a duty for a right. Ruler as referred to in some of the provisions of the Constitution is an entity created by the Constitution to further certain purposes recognised by the Constitution. That entity cannot be abolished either by the executive or by the legislature. Therefore the argument advanced on behalf of the respondent that the power to recognise the Ruler includes within itself the power not to recognise is clearly a fallacious one. It is not necessary for our present purpose to go into the question whether a Ruler once recognised can be de-recognised by the President and if so under what circumstances. We were told that there was one instance of de-recognition of a recognised Ruler namely that of the former Ruler of Baroda. That de-recognition was not challenged before any Court. Hence, its validity remains undecided. In this case we are concerned not with de-recognition of one or more Rulers for some reason or other but of the abolition of Rulership. For the reasons mentioned earlier, it is not possible to spell out a power to abolish the Rulership under Article 366 (22).

270. It was strenuously argued by the learned Attorney General that the power of recognition of the Rulers found in Article 366 (22) is a fact of the paramountcy enjoyed by the British Crown before the 15th August.

1947. No such plea was taken in the counter-affidavit. The argument of the learned Attorney General on this point was somewhat indefinite. He was hesitant to call the power embodied in Article 366 (22) as a paramount power but yet he was repeatedly asserting that it contains certain aspects of paramountcy. It is strange that the learned Attorney General representing the Union of India should have claimed that the Government of India inherited any aspects of the paramountcy exercised by the British Crown. Paramountcy as claimed by the British Rulers was one of the manifestations of imperialism. It is surprising that the Government of this country whose people had fought imperialism for years and who are even today supporting both morally as well as materially the countries which are fighting imperialism should claim to have inherited even a fraction of imperialism. Rule of law is the bedrock of our Constitution. Paramountcy is the very antithesis of rule of law. It was a power exercised by a superior sovereign over the subordinate sovereigns. I fail to see how the Government of India can consider itself as a superior power in its relationship with the citizens of this country. The doctrine of paramountcy, even during the days of the Imperial rule had nothing to do with the British Government's relationship with its subjects. Herein we are concerned with the power exercisable by the President under a provision of the Constitution. Nature and scope of that power must be spelled out from the language of the provision and from the purpose intended to be served by that provision. It is an insult to our Constitution to say that any facet of imperialism has crept into it. One should have thought that paramountcy so far as this country was concerned was dead and was deeply buried as far back as on the 15th August, 1947. Its resurrection in any form is repugnant to our Constitution. It is true that even after August, 1947, on some occasions some of our leaders referred to the existence of paramountcy. But that reference is not to the paramountcy which was the insignia of imperialism but the paramountcy of geographical compulsions, economic compulsions, the compulsion of public opinion and need for common defence, all operating in favour of the unity of India. The effect of these forces was pithily described as a sort of paramountcy. But that paramountcy has nothing to do with paramountcy claimed by the British.

271. The impugned orders are also unconstitutional for the reason that the power conferred under Article 366 (22) is exercised for a collateral purpose. As seen earlier, power to recognise Rulers was conferred for the purpose of implementing some of the provisions of the Constitution and not for denuding the contents of those provisions. We have earlier seen how the impugned orders came to be made. The Government of India sought to amend the Constitution by deleting Articles 291, 362 and Clause 22 of Article 366. But as the bill seeking the amendment of the Constitution failed to get the required majority in the Rajya Sabha, that attempt failed. Within hours after the said bill was rejected, the cabinet met and advised the President to pass the impugned orders. This is clearly an attempt to do indirectly what the Government could not do directly. Such an exercise of power is impermissible under Article 366 (22). Exercise of a Constitutional power for collateral reasons has been considered by this Court in several decisions as a fraud on that power—see Balaji v. State of Mysore, (1963) Supp 1 SCR 439 = (AIR 1963 SC 649). Breach of any of the constitutional provisions even if made to further a popular cause is bound to be a dangerous precedent. Disrespect to the Constitution is bound to be broadened from precedent to precedent and before long the entire Constitution may be treated with contempt and held up to ridicule. That is what happened to the Weimar Constitution. If the Constitution or any of its provisions have ceased to serve the needs of the people, ways must be found to change them but it is impermissible to bypass the Constitution or its provisions. Every contravention of the letter or the spirit of the Constitution is bound to have chain reaction. For that reason also the impugned orders must be held to be ultra vires Art. 366 (22).

272. The impugned orders also violate Arts. 53 (1) of the Constitution which directs the President that the executive power of the Union shall be exercised by him either directly or through the officers subordinate to him "in accordance with the Constitution." Further Art. 73 (1) prescribes that the executive power of the Union must be exercised subject to the provisions of the Constitution. The executive is bound to obey this mandate. It has no competence to exercise the executive power in violation of the mandates given by the Constitution. Art. 291 gives a mandate to the executive to pay the Privy Purses guaranteed to the Rulers exempt from all taxes on income. Article 366 (22) imposes a constitutional duty on the President to recognise the Rulers of the Indian States. Article 362 requires the executive that due regard should be given to the guarantees and assurances given under the Agreements or Covenants entered into with the former Rulers of the Indian States. The President on the advice of the cabinet has disregarded the mandate of Articles 53 (1), 73 (1), 291, 362 and 366 (22). That being so his order must be held to be ultra vires the Constitution, hence a nullity.

273. It was urged on behalf of the petitioners that the members of the cabinet who advised the President to issue the impugned orders were bound by their oath to bear true faith and allegiance to the Constitution; but they have shown scant respect for their oath, treating the same as a mere formality; they have thereby not only broken their oath but have damaged the Constitution as well. It is not necessary to pronounce on this contention.

274. In my opinion it is not open to the executive or for that matter to any of the organs of the State to disregard the provisions of the Constitution merely because those provisions do not accord with its views. The mandate of every provision of the Constitution is a binding mandate. No one has power to depart from that mandate or circumvent it, whatever his views about the appropriateness of the mandates may be. If the Constitution or any part of it has now become out of tune with the present day society of ours, appropriate steps may be taken to alter the Constitution. It is no virtue to uphold the Constitution when it suits us. What is important, may necessary, is to uphold it even when it is inconvenient to do so.

275. It was contended on behalf of the respondent that the impugned orders were made in exercise of the political power of the State which according to it, is an incident of the sovereignty. In support of that contention reliance was placed on the decision of this Court in (1970) 2 SCR 631 = (AIR 1970 SC 1946). The facts of that case are:

After the death of the previous Ruler of Dholpur who had been recognised by the President under Art. 366 (22), there was dispute as regards his successor. That dispute was enquired into by a committee presided over by the Chief Justice of the Rajasthan High Court. On the recommendation of that committee, the President was pleased to recognise Maharaja Rana Shri Hemant Singh as the successor of the previous Ruler. Kr. Shri Vir Rajendra Singh challenged that decision by means of a writ petition under Art. 226 of the Constitution. That petition was dismissed by the High Court. In appeal this Court affirmed the decision of the High Court. I was a party to that decision. In that decision, it was held that the recognition granted by the President under Article 366 (22) could not be challenged in court of law. The only point in dispute in that case was as to who was the successor to the deceased Ruler. This Court came to the conclusion that under the circumstances of that case the decision of the President was not open to challenge. In the course of the judgment it was observed:

"The recognition of the Ruler is a right to succeed to the gaddi of the Ruler. This recognition of Rulership by the President is an exercise of political power vested in the President and is thus an instance of purely executive jurisdiction of the President."

276. What is said in that case is that the President while acting under Art. 366 (22) is exercising his executive jurisdiction and that jurisdiction was described as "political power". That expression may be inappropriate but that is not the ratio of the decision. It was a casual observation. There is nothing like a political power under our Constitution in the matter of relationship between the executive and the citizens. Our Constitution recognises only three powers viz. the legislative power, the judicial power and the executive power. It does not recognise any other power. In our country the executive cannot exercise any sovereignty over the citizens. The legal sovereignty in this country vests with the Constitution and the political sovereignty is with the people of this country. The executive possesses no sovereignty. There is no analogy between our President and the British Crown. The President is a creature of the Constitution. He can only act in accordance with the Constitution. It is true that some aspect of the executive power of the Government is for the sake of convenience called political power but it is none-the-less an executive power derived from the Constitution.

277. It was next urged that we cannot go into the validity of the impugned orders or even as to the scope of Art. 366 (22) in view of Article 363. We shall, while examining the ambit of Art. 363 see the hollowness of this contention.

278. Earlier, I have in a general way, referred to some of the political events that took place in the years 1947 to 1949. In order to consider some of the contentions raised by the Counsel for the parties, relating to the scope and effect of Art. 291, it is now necessary to refer in some detail to some aspects of those events. I have earlier referred to the Instruments of Accession, executed by various Rulers of Indian States. By means of those Instruments the concerned Indian States became federating units of the Dominion of India though under those Instruments, powers were conferred on the Dominion legislature, executive and judiciary only in respect of three subjects viz. Defence, External Affairs and Communications. But none-the-less as a result of the accession, the concerned Indian States became parts of the Dominion of India. At the time those Instruments were executed, no question of either guaranteeing the Privy Purses to Rulers or preserving their privileges arose. Hence those Instruments did not refer to any rights and privileges of the Rulers. Very soon after the execution of the Instruments of Accession, other developments took place in quick succession. Most of the small Indian States fully merged in the Dominion of India. Under the Merger Agreement the privileges then enjoyed by the Rulers, their right to get the Privy Purses fixed under the agreement as well as some of the rights of the third parties referred to in the agreements were guaranteed. Excepting in the case of Bhopal, the Privy Purses to be paid to the Rulers were to be paid from out of the revenues of their former States. Under the Merger Agreement entered into between the Governor-General and the Nawab of Bhopal, the Nawab was entitled to receive the privy purse stipulated therein from the Government of India. It is not stated in the agreement that the same has to come out from the revenues of Bhopal State. The Privy Purses payable to all those Rulers were free of all taxes. In some of the Merger Agreements rights were also created in favour of the third parties such as guaranteeing the continuity of the services of the permanent members of the Public Service of those States as well as the payment of pensions due to the retired civil servants. In several of the Merger Agreements it is provided that if there was any dispute as to whether a particular item of property is the private property of the Ruler or the property of the States, that dispute was to be decided by an authority to be appointed as provided in those agreements. In most of those agreements, it is provided that the succession to the Rulership should be according to law and custom. That provision was a redundant provision as succession means succession according to law or custom. No one can succeed to a deceased person excepting according to law or custom. Those agreements also provide that no enquiry should be made by or under the authority of the Government of India and no proceedings should be taken in any court in their former States in respect of anything done or omitted to be done by the Rulers or under their authority, whether in a personal capacity or otherwise during the period of their administration of their States. In those agreements, it is further provided that no suit should be brought against the Rulers of the merged States in any of the Courts in the Dominion except with the previous sanction of the Government of India.

279. Under the Merger Agreement executed by the Ruler of Bilaspur, the Ruler was entitled to a Privy

Purse of Rs. 70,000 per year but that included a sum of Rs. 10,000 as allowance to the Yuvraj. Under the Merger Agreement executed by the Nawab of Bhopal, the State of Bhopal was merged into the Dominion of India for a period of five years only. Art. IV of the Merger Agreement provided that the income derived annually from the share of the Nawab in the original investment by Qudsia Begum in the Bhopal State Railway, which share was agreed to be Rupees five lakhs and fifty-five thousand, shall be treated as the personal income of the Nawab and shall be paid by the Government of India to the Nawab, and his successors. Article VII of the Agreement provided that the succession to the Throne of Bhopal State shall be governed by and regulated in accordance with the provisions of the Act known as 'the Succession to the Throne of Bhopal Act of 1947' which was in force in the State at the time of the agreement. Under the Merger Agreement entered into by the Maharaja of Manipur, he was given a right to the use of the Residences known as 'Redlands' and 'Les Chatalettes' in Shillong and the property in the town of Gauhati known as 'Manipuri Basti' though all those properties were considered as the State's properties. Then came the States Merger (Governors' Provinces) Order 1949, an order made under Section 290-A of the Government of India Act, 1935. Under this Order, several of the States that had merged in the Dominion of India were added on to one or the other of the Provinces. Thereafter those States became a part of those Provinces. Section 7 (1) of that Order provides:

'All liabilities in respect of such loans, guarantees and other financial obligations of the Dominion Government as arise out of the governance of a merged State, including in particular the liability for the payment of any sums to the Ruler of the merged State on account of his Privy Purse or to other persons in the merged State on account of political pensions and the like, shall as from the appointed day, be liabilities of the absorbing province, unless the loan, guarantee or other financial obligation is relatable to central purposes.'

280. This Order was made on July 27, 1949. Under this Order fifty-five Indian States merged in the Bombay Province, three in Madras, two in Bihar, fifteen in Central Provinces and Berar, three in East Punjab and twenty-four in Orissa. It was not disputed that the Merger Order is a legislative measure. Its validity was not challenged before us. In view of that Order, the liability to pay the Privy Purses of the Rulers whose former States had been added to any particular Province, became the liability of that Province, — a liability imposed by law. Whatever might have been the nature of the liability undertaken by the Government of the Dominion of India under the various Merger Agreements those liabilities came to be recognised by law and made a part of the Municipal law and thereafter they became enforceable as against the concerned Province. It may be noted that this Order was made long before the Constitution came into force. This Order was subsequently amended and a few more Indian States were included in one or the other of the Provinces. From the foregoing, it is seen that before the Constitution came into force, the liability to pay the Privy Purses to several of the Rulers whose States had directly merged with the Dominion of India became that of some of the Provinces and ceased to be that of the Dominion of India. Under the Merger Agreements excepting in the case of Bhopal, the Privy Purses to the former Rulers were payable from the revenues of their former States. But after the Merger Order they became payable from the revenues of the concerned provinces. At this stage we may also note that under the Merger Agreements, the Privy Purses payable to the Rulers were free of all taxes. We may further note that under the Merger Agreements, there were several other rights created either in favour of the concerned Rulers or in favour of the third parties. The Merger Order is silent about those rights.

281. Now we come to those States which formed unions. There were five such unions namely:

1. United States of Kathiawar;
2. United States of Gwalior, Indore and Malwa (Madhya Bharat).
3. Patiala and East Punjab States Union.
4. United States of Rajasthan and

5. United States of Travancore and Cochin.

282. Those unions were formed on regional basis. Various Indian States in a particular region merged together and formed a union. The concerned States entered into a Covenant under which the union was formed. To those Covenants, the Dominion of India was not a party. Under those covenants, the covenanting States agreed to entrust to the Constituent Assembly to be formed in accordance with the provisions of the covenant the work of framing a Constitution for the union. Each of those unions were to have a Rajpramukh, who was to be the head of the union. There were provisions in those covenants for the formation of a Council of Ministers to aid and advise the Rajpramukh in the exercise of some of his functions. Under those covenants, the Ruler of each of the covenanting State was entitled to receive a fixed Privy Purse annually from the revenues of the concerned union. That amount was to be free of all taxes, whether imposed by the Government of the concerned union or by the Government of India. In the matter of raising, maintaining and administering the military force of the concerned union, the Rajpramukh was to act subject to any directions and instructions that may from time to time be given by the Government of India. The covenants provided that the Rulers of the covenanting States as also the members of their families should continue to be entitled to all their personal privileges, dignities and titles enjoyed by them. The succession to the Gaddis was to take place according to law and custom. Questions of disputed succession in regard to covenanting Salute State were to be decided by the Council of Rulers on the recommendation of a Judicial Tribunal to be constituted in accordance with the provisions of the covenants. The Secretary Ministry of States on behalf of the Government of India concurred to the covenants and guaranteed to all its provisions. The concurrence of the Government of India to the covenants was necessary as the covenanting States had earlier acceded to the Dominion of India. In view of the formation of unions, in the place of old Indian States new units were to come into existence and therefore it was necessary for them to execute fresh Instruments of Accession and that could be done only with consent of the Dominion of India. So far as the guaranteeing of these covenants is concerned it could only mean a political guarantee and not a guarantee in the sense of undertaking any financial obligations. What the Dominion of India guaranteed was the provisions of the covenant which included provisions relating to the formation of the Constituent Assembly, the appointment of Council of Ministers, etc. Under the covenants the liability to pay the Privy Purses of the covenanting Rulers was that of the concerned union and not that of the Dominion of India. Further the privy purses to be paid to the Rulers were to be paid free of all taxes. From these it is seen that before Arts. 291, 362, 363 and 366 (22) came into force, the Dominion Government had no liability in the matter of payment of Privy Purses to Rulers of the covenanting States. Even in the matter of deciding any dispute as regards succession, the Dominion of India had no responsibility. That had to be decided by the agencies created under the covenants. Under some of the covenants, some of the covenanting Rulers were given special rights e.g. under Article XVIII of the covenant under which Madhya Bharat union was formed, it was provided:

"Notwithstanding anything in the preceding provisions of this covenant, the Rulers of Gwalior and Indore shall continue to have and exercise their present powers of suspension, remission or commutation of death sentences in respect of any person who may have been or is hereinafter, sentenced to death for a capital offence committed within the territories of Gwalior or of Indore, as the case may be."

283. Under Art. VIII of the covenant entered into by the Rulers of Travancore and Cochin forming the United State of Travancore and Cochin it was provided that the obligation of the covenanting State of Travancore to contribute from its general revenue a sum of Rs. 50 lakhs every year to the Devaswom fund shall from the appointed day be the obligation of the United State and the said amounts shall be payable therefrom and the Raj Pramukh shall cause the said amount to be paid every year to the Travancore Devaswom Board and the Executive Officer referred to in sub-clause (b) of that article respectively.

284. In respect of the administration of Padamanabhaswamy Temple the right of the Ruler of Travancore was preserved under Article VIII (b) of the covenant. Similarly the existing rights of the Rulers of Travancore and Cochin as regards the management of certain temples and funds were preserved. They were also given a right to nominate some members to some of the statutory Boards. From the foregoing it is seen that under the various covenants, several rights in addition to the right of receiving privy purses had been created in favour of the Rulers of some of the covenanting States.

285. In the draft Constitution, there were no articles similar to Articles 291, 362, 363 and 366 (22). Some time before October 14, 1949 the Ministry of States, which was instrumental in bringing about the merger of the States with the Union of India wrote to the drafting committee that the guarantees given to the Rulers in regard to Privy Purses should be given constitutional sanction. Further it desired that so far as the privileges and other rights of the Rulers are concerned, the same must find recognition in the Constitution though it may not be possible to give any constitutional guarantee in respect of them. It is in pursuance of this request the drafting committee introduced Article 267 (A) (present Article 291), Article 302-A (present Article 362) on October 13, 1949 Article 303 (1) (present Article 366 (22)) on October 14, 1949 and Article 302 (AA) (present Article 363) on October 16, 1949 into the draft Constitution.

286. Article 291 of the Constitution as it now stands after its amendment by the 7th Amendment Act reads:

"Where under any covenant or agreement entered into by the Ruler of any Indian State before the commencement of this Constitution, the payment of any sums, free of tax, has been guaranteed or assured by the Government of the Dominion of India to any Ruler of such State as privy purse—

(a) such sums shall be charged on, and paid out of the Consolidated Fund of India; and

(b) the sums so paid to any Ruler shall be exempt from all taxes on income."

287. Dealing with Art. 291, this is what the White Paper says in paragraph 238:

"Article 291, thus, embodies constitutional sanction for the due fulfilment of the Government of India's guarantees and assurances in respect of privy purses and provides for the necessary adjustments in respect of Privy Purse payments necessitated by changed conditions."

Art. 291, has four principal ingredients namely:

(1) the conditions giving rise to the liability to pay the Privy Purses;

(2) charging of the Privy Purses payable on the Consolidated Fund of India;

(3) the payment of the same from out of the Consolidated Fund and

(4) the sums so paid to any Ruler to be exempt from all taxes on income.

288. According to Mr. Palkhiwala, learned Counsel for some of the petitioners, Art. 291 guarantees the payment of Privy Purses referred to in various Merger Agreements and Covenants to the concerned Rulers, charges the same on the Consolidated Fund of India and makes them payable out of that fund to the Rulers, exempt from all taxes on income. He contended that Article 291 confers a legal right on a Ruler to claim the Privy Purse to which he is entitled to, from the Dominion of India. He asserts that the right created in favour of the Rulers is enforceable in court of law. But according to the learned Attorney-General, Art. 291 does not create any legal right in favour of the Rulers. That Art. merely gives a moral assurance to the Rulers that the Privy Purses guaranteed under the Covenants and Agreements will be paid by the Union of India. He further contended that Art. 291 merely recognises the obligation undertaken by the Dominion of India either under the Merger Agreements or under the Covenants and it does not create any new right or obligation. According to him the expression that "such fund shall be charged on the Consolidated Fund of India" does not mean that a lien on the Consolidated Fund is created for the payment of Privy Purses; it only means that the amount payable as Privy Purses is not votable. He asserted that the expression "paid out of" in cl. (b) of Art. 291 merely refers to the Fund out of which the payment is to be made and not that it should be paid to any person. Clause (b) of Article 291 does not according to him give any direction to the Union Government to pay to the Rulers the agreed Privy Purse but it merely says that the Privy Purse, if and when paid to any Ruler will be exempt from all taxes on income.

289. In my opinion the contentions advanced by the learned Attorney General are fallacious. The liability undertaken under Art. 291 is a new liability and not an affirmation of an existing liability. As seen earlier, the liability to pay the Privy Purses of most of the Rulers who merged their States with the Dominion of India had been transferred to one or the other provinces. The liability to pay Privy Purses to the Rulers who entered into Covenants for forming unions was that of the concerned union and not that of the Dominion of India. In the case of most of the Rulers of States which merged in the Dominion of India until Art. 291 came into force, the Dominion of India had no liability to pay the Privy Purses.

290. For the first time after Art. 291 came into force, the Privy Purses were made payable from out of the Consolidated Fund of India. Till then they were payable firstly out of the revenues of the concerned State which merged into the Dominion of India and later on by one or the other provinces from out of its revenues and in the case of the covenanting States, the Privy Purses payable to the covenanting Rulers were payable from out of the revenues of the concerned union. As seen earlier, the Privy Purses payable either to the Rulers of the merged States or to those of the covenanting States, were free of all taxes. But the Privy Purses payable under Art. 291 are only exempt from all taxes on income and not all taxes. To summarize, under Article 291, the Union of India for the first time undertook the liability to pay the Privy Purses in respect of most of the Rulers of the Indian States. The fund from which the Privy Purses are made payable under Article 291 is different from those from which they were payable earlier. The terms of payment, to some extent are also different inasmuch as the Privy Purses provided under the Merger Agreements and Covenants were free of all taxes but the Privy Purses guaranteed under Art. 291 are exempt only from tax on income.

291. In support of his contention that the liability undertaken under Art. 291, is merely a continuation of the earlier liability, the learned Attorney General strongly relied on the first part of Art. 291 which says:

"Where under any covenant or agreement entered into by the Ruler of any Indian State before the commencement of this Constitution, the payment of any sums, free of tax, has been guaranteed or assured by the Government of the Dominion of India to any Ruler of such State as Privy Purse. . ."

292. From this he wants us to conclude that the liability undertaken under Art. 291 is nothing but a continuation of the liability arising under the Covenants and Agreements. Here again the learned Attorney-General is not correct. That part of Article 291 does not create any liability. It is only a legislation by incorporation. That part of the Art. points out the person who is entitled to the Privy Purse and the amount payable to him. It was a legislative device adopted for the convenience of drafting. It would have been a cumbersome process to list all the names of the Rulers who are entitled to Privy Purses and the amount payable to each of them. To avoid that difficulty, relevant portions of Agreements and Covenants were bodily lifted from those documents and incorporated into Art. 291. This is a well-known drafting device. Article 291. is in no way linked with the Agreements and Covenants. The Covenants and Agreements only continue as evidence as to matters mentioned in the first part of Art. 291. After Art. 291 came into force, there is no legal relationship between the Covenants and Agreements and that Art. That Art. read with Art. 366 (22) constitutes a self-contained code in the matter of payment of Privy Purses. Those Arts. operate on their own force. In several provisions of the Constitution, the device of legislating by incorporation has been adopted — see Art. 105 (3), Art. 106, cls. 2, 3, 7, 8, 9 (5) and 12 (3) of the second Schedule.

293. I am also unable to accept the contention of the learned Attorney-General that the expression "charged on... the Consolidated Fund of India" in Art. 291 merely means that the amounts payable as Privy purse are not votable and that expression neither creates a right in favour of the person in whose benefit the charge is created nor is the Consolidated Fund pledged for the payment of the Privy Purse. The Constitution does not define the word "charge". Therefore we must understand that word as it is understood in law. According to law the creation of a charge over a fund in respect of an item of payment to a person means a conferment of a legal right on that person to get the amount in question on the pledge of the fund. If an item of expenditure charged on the consolidated fund merely means that that expenditure is non-votable then there was no need to provide in Art. 113 that "so much of the estimate as relates to expenditure charged upon the Consolidated Fund of India shall not be submitted to the vote of Parliament." That part of Art. 113 (1) was evidently enacted to make effective the statutory lien over the Consolidated Fund created in favour of the person to whom the payment has to be made. It emphasises the fact that the pledge created in favour of the person for whose benefit the charge is created by the Constitution cannot be taken away even by the Parliament.

294. The learned Attorney-General and Mr. Mohan Kumaramangalam read to us passages from May's Parliamentary Practice and other treatises on Parliamentary Practice and Procedure to show how the practice of charging certain items of expenditure on the Consolidated Fund of England came into being. They also invited our attention to some of the statutes passed by the British Parliament. Neither the treatises on which they relied nor any of the statutes to which they referred show that the charging of an item of expenditure on the Consolidated Fund in favour of a person does not create a legal right in him to get that amount or that the same does not pledge the Consolidated Fund for the payment of that amount. In fact some of the statutes referred to by them do show that some of the items of expenditure charged on the Consolidated Fund were required to be paid in preference to the other items. On the other hand Mr. Palkhiwala referred to us to the Dictionary of English law by Earl Jowitt (1959 Ed.) Vol. 1, page 459, wherein the meaning of the expression 'charged on the consolidated fund' is explained thus:

"Consolidated Fund, a repository of public money which now comprises the produce of custom, excise stamps and several other taxes, and some small receipts from the royal hereditary revenue, surrendered to the public use. It constitutes almost the whole of the public income of the United Kingdom (Consolidated Fund Act, 1816). This fund is pledged for the payment of the whole of the interest of the national debt of Great Britain and Northern Ireland (National Debt Act, 1870 — Section 6); and besides this, is liable to several other specific charges imposed upon it at various periods by Act of Parliament, such as the civil list, and the salaries of the Judges and ambassadors and other high official persons; after payment of which the surplus is to be indiscriminately applied to the service of the United Kingdom under the direction of Parliament".

Section 6 of the National Debt Act, 1870 reads:

"6. Stock charged on consolidated fund. — The annuities and dividends aforesaid shall continue to be charged on and payable out of the consolidated fund".

295. The language of this section is similar to that of Article 291 so far as the creation of "charge" is concerned. Section 6 of the National Debt Act, 1870 according to Earl Jowitt pledges the consolidated fund of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the payment of the whole of the interest of the national debt of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. If that is the true effect of Section 6 of the National Debt Act, 1870, the same must be the position under Article 291. From the passage quoted above from the Dictionary of English law by Earl Jowitt, it is seen that as soon as an item of expenditure is charged on the consolidated fund, the said act creates a legal obligation to pay out of the consolidated fund that item of expenditure to the person for whose benefit the charge is created. Secondly that item has to be paid before paying the non-charged item of expenditure, and lastly the charge created, pledges the consolidated fund for the payment of that item of expenditure. The practice of creating charges on the consolidated fund was started for the first time in this country under the Government of India Act, 1935 which Act was passed by the British Parliament evidently following the British practice. Articles 112 to 115 of the Constitution are similar to the corresponding Sections in the Government of India Act, 1935.

296. The contention of the learned Attorney General that the expression "paid out of" in Clause (a) of Article 291 refers to the fund out of which it is to be paid out and not to the person to whom it is payable is also not correct. Under Article 291 as it now stands, there is only one fund and that is the Consolidated Fund of India. Therefore there is no question of pointing out the fund from out of which the payment is to be made. If some amount is required to be paid out of the Consolidated Fund of India, it must be paid out to somebody. There cannot be any paying out in abstract. To whom that payment is to be made is made clear by Clause (b) of Article 291. It is to be paid to the Ruler as defined in Article 366 (22).

297. Even before Article 291 (2) was deleted the privy purses were to be paid out of the Consolidated Fund of India though some of the States had a liability to reimburse the Union to a certain extent. According to the learned Attorney General on the date when Article 291 came into force, no Ruler had been recognised under Article 366 (22). Therefore we cannot spell out any commitment under Article 291. We have earlier seen while discussing the scope of Article 366 (22) that the President has a constitutional duty to recognise a Ruler. Article 291 proceeds on the basis that the President has to recognise a Ruler to each one of the Indian States contemplated by Article 366 (15). By recognising the President merely locates the Ruler. He does not appoint or create a Ruler. No sooner the President recognises the Ruler of an Indian State, he becomes entitled to the privy purse guaranteed under Article 291 from the date the Constitution came into force. We are told that as a fact most of the Rulers who entered into the Covenants and Agreements were recognised only in the year 1952 but yet they were being paid the amounts agreed to be paid as privy purses ever since the Constitution came into force and the privileges guaranteed to them were also extended to them even before they were recognised. Similarly, we were told that in the case of successors of the Rulers when there was no dispute as to succession, they were treated as Rulers for all purposes though they were recognised several months after they succeeded to the Gaddi. This shows that the recognition under Article 366 (22) was considered as a mere formality except in the case of disputed succession.

298. To my mind Article 291 is plain and unambiguous. It says in the clearest possible language that the privy purses payable to the Rulers under the Merger Agreements as well as under the Covenants are charged on the Consolidated Fund of India and that they shall be paid out to the Rulers exempt from all taxes on income. No provision of a Statute much less a provision of a constitutional statute should be read in a pedantic way. Nor is it justifiable to hair-split the clauses in a provision and quibble about their words. A constitutional provision is not to be interpreted by taking the words of the provisions in the one hand and the dictionary in the other or by taking the meaning given in a decision to a word in different setting. Each provision must be read as a whole and its meaning understood.

299. We have earlier seen that under the Merger Agreements and Covenants, various rights, liabilities and obligations were created. What the Constituent Assembly did was to separate two obligations out of them and give those obligations constitutional sanction or guarantee. As seen earlier, under the Covenants entered into by the Rulers of Travancore and Cochin certain contribution was to be made every year to the Devaswom Fund. This payment is guaranteed under Article 290-A. Under Article 291 the payment of the privy purses is similarly guaranteed, Articles 290-A and 291 are more or less similarly worded.

300. If the mandate contained in Article 291 is an unenforceable mandate, similar would be the position so far as Article 290-A is concerned. If the mandates contained in these Articles are unenforceable these Arts. can only have ornamental value. It is difficult to believe that the Constituent Assembly would have indulged in an exercise in futility. We repeatedly asked the learned Attorney General that if Article 291 did not create a legal right, what purpose that article was intended to serve and why did the Constituent Assembly put that article in the Constitution. His answer was that under Article 291 while the payment of privy purse received a constitutional sanction, it received no constitutional guarantee. This distinction to my mind appears to be a distinction without difference. Every constitutional sanction for payment is necessarily a mandate to pay if that sanction relates to the discharge of an obligation. It is an enforceable mandate. As seen earlier that a fair reading of Article 291 shows that there is a direction to pay the privy purses to the Rulers. The contention of learned Attorney General was that by Article 291 the Constituent Assembly merely wanted to give some sort of assurance to the Rulers about the payment of privy purses to them in future so as to allay their apprehensions that they may not be paid privy purses in future but in reality, no legal rights were created in favour of the Rulers nor any binding obligation imposed on the Union of India. It is difficult to understand this argument. It will be an uncharitable insinuation to make against the founding fathers that all that they wanted was to create an illusion in the mind of the Rulers while in reality giving them no guarantee as regards the future payment of the privy purses. If all that the Constituent Assembly desired was to give some assurance about the payment of privy purses in the future then Article 362 would have served that purpose. In a general sense the words "personal rights" include privy purse. Even if the Constituent Assembly wanted to make things clear they could have easily said in Article 362 "personal rights including privy purse" instead of wasting a whole article. Further there was no purpose in charging the privy purses on the Consolidated Fund or giving a constitutional exemption from payment of all taxes on income in respect of privy purse. No word in the Constitution can be considered as superfluous.

301. During the hearing some of the members of the Bench felt that it may not be necessary to go into the scope and effect of Article 291 in the present proceedings. It was felt that if the Court came to the conclusion that the impugned orders are valid orders then there is an end of the matter. If on the other hand, the Court came to the conclusion that those orders are violative of the Constitution then status quo ante would be restored. But both the learned Attorney General and Mr. Palkhiwala insisted that we should pronounce on the scope and effect of Article 291, each one for his own reason. The learned Attorney General repeatedly made it plain to us that even if we come to the conclusion that the impugned orders are invalid, the privy purses will not be paid by the Government unless we hold that the right given to the Rulers under Article 291 is an enforceable one. This is a strange stand particularly in view of the fact that even according to him the Constitution has recognised the liability to pay the privy purses to the Rulers and the obligation in question has received constitutional sanction. It is clear from the stand taken by him that the Government will not respect the mandate of the Constitution if that mandate is not enforceable by law.

302. We have to proceed on the basis that the learned Attorney General made that submission on the strength of the instructions received by him from the respondent. But yet, it is difficult to believe that the executive which is a creature of the Constitution, whose head (the President) and the members of the cabinet had taken the oath of allegiance to the Constitution would take the stand that they will not respect a mandate of the Constitution unless that mandate is enforceable in a Court of law. The enforceability of a constitutional mandate is one thing, the existence of such a mandate is another. Whether a particular constitutional mandate is enforceable or not, it is all the same binding on all the organs of the State. No organ of the State can choose to disregard any of the mandates of the Constitution. There are many mandates in the Constitution which are not enforceable through Courts of law. If the executive or the legislature or the judiciary refuse to comply with those mandates they will be not only breaking the oath taken by them but they will be breaking the Constitution itself. I doubt whether the grave implications of the stand taken on behalf of the Government have been realised.

303. I shall now proceed to Article 362. That Art. reads:

"In the exercise of the power of Parliament or of the legislature of a State to make laws or in the exercise of the executive power of the Union or of a State, due regard shall be had to the guarantee or assurance given under any such covenant or agreement as is referred to in Article 291 with respect to the personal rights, privileges and dignities of the Ruler of an Indian State".

304. This article clearly links itself with the Agreements and Covenants. It has no independent existence apart from the Agreements and Covenants. Mr. Palkhiwala conceded that Article 362 is a provision of the Constitution relating to the Agreements and Covenants. Therefore, it follows that if any dispute arises in respect of any right accruing under or any liability or obligation arising out of Article 362 then the same would be covered by the second part of Article 363. But Mr. Palkhiwala sought to place his own interpretation on the word "dispute" found in Article 363. It is not necessary for us in this case to decide what controversy relating to Article 362 can be considered as a "dispute" under Article 363. At present we have no concrete complaint before us relating to the contravention of Article 362. It is not proper to decide the scope of an article in the Constitution in abstract. The scope of Article 362 as well as the meaning of the expression "dispute" in Article 363 can be best considered when a proper case comes up for decision. In this view, I have not thought it necessary to go into the scope of Article 362.

305. This takes me to Article 363 (1). That Article reads:

"Notwithstanding anything in this Constitution but subject to the provisions of Article 143, neither the Supreme Court nor any other court shall have jurisdiction in any dispute arising out of any provision of a treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instrument which was entered into or executed before the commencement of this Constitution by any Ruler of an Indian State and to which the Government of the Dominion of India or any of its predecessor Governments was a party and which has or has been continued in operation after such commencement, or in any dispute in respect of any right accruing under or any liability or obligation arising out of any of the provisions of this Constitution relating to any such treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instrument".

306. Under Clause (2) of that article "Indian State" is defined for the purpose of that article as meaning any territory recognised before the commencement of the Constitution by His Majesty or the Government of the Dominion of India as being such a State, and the "Ruler" for the purpose of that article is defined thus:

"Ruler" includes the Prince, Chief or other person recognised before such commencement by His Majesty or the Government of the Dominion of India as the Ruler of any Indian State".

307. Article 363 has two parts: the first part deals with disputes arising out of any provisions of a treaty, agreement or covenant etc., and the second part with dispute in respect of any right accruing under or any liability or obligation arising out of any of the provisions of the Constitution, relating to any such treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instrument.

308. Dealing with Articles 362 and 363 this is what the White Paper says in paragraph 240 (at p. 125):

"Guarantees regarding rights and privileges.—

Guarantees have been given to the Rulers under the various Agreements and Covenants for the continuation of their rights, dignities and privileges. The rights enjoyed by the Rulers vary from State to State and are exercisable both within and without the States. They cover a variety of matters ranging from the use of the red plates on cars to immunity from Civil and Criminal jurisdiction and exemptions from customs duties etc. Even in the past it was neither considered desirable nor practicable to draw up an exhaustive list of all these rights. During the negotiations following the introduction of the scheme embodied in the Government of India Act, 1935, the Crown Department had taken the position that no more could be done in respect of the rights and privileges enjoyed by the Rulers than a general assurance of the intention of the Government of India to continue them. Obviously, it would have been a source of perpetual regret if all these matters had been made as justiciable. Article 363 has, therefore, been embodied in the Constitution which excludes specifically the Agreements of Merger and the Covenants from the jurisdiction of Courts except in cases which may be referred to the Supreme Court by the President. At the same time, the Government of India considered it necessary that constitutional recognition should be given to the guarantees and assurances which the Government of India have given in respect of the rights and privileges of Rulers. This is contained in Article 362, which provides that in the exercise of their legislative and executive authority, the legislative and executive organs of the Union and States will have due regard to the guarantees given to the Rulers with respect to their personal rights, privileges and dignities".

309. From the above passage, it is clear that according to the Government's understanding of Article 363, that article merely deals with matters coming under Article 362. That is also the contention of the petitioners. But according to the learned Attorney General that article excludes from the jurisdiction of all Courts including this Court not merely those matters that fall within the scope of Article 362 but also the right arising from Article 291. It was urged by him that Article 291 also protects only a personal right. Therefore it is a matter that falls within the scope of Article 362. Consequently any dispute relating thereto is excluded from the jurisdiction of this Court under Article 363. Privy purse was taken out for special treatment by the Constitution under Article 291. Therefore it is excluded from the general provision in Article 362. Articles 291 and 362 have to be construed harmoniously. It is a well-known rule of construction that a special provision excludes the general provision. Hence I have to reject the contention that Article 363 includes the right to get privy purses because it also comes within the scope of Article 362. If it is otherwise, there was no need to enact Article 291. Further there was no purpose in guaranteeing the payment of privy purses under Article 291 and then taking away the right to recover them under Article 363. We have earlier seen that in the case of most of the Rulers, the right to receive privy purse was an enforceable right even before Article 291 came into force. It is not easy to accept the contention that what was an enforceable right was made unenforceable under the Constitution. If the contention advanced on behalf of the respondent is correct the purpose of Article 291 was to take away an existing enforceable right, at any rate in the case of several Rulers and substitute the same by a recognition, devoid of all legal contents. To say that is to be cynical about the august body i. e., the Constituent Assembly. The Constituent Assembly could not have enacted Article 291 to show its contempt for the Rulers of Indian States as well as for the recommendation of the States Ministry headed by Sardar Patel, the maker of modern India. If two or more provisions in the Constitution deal with one group of topics, those provisions have to be read together and interpreted harmoniously. It is not proper to say that the Constitution is speaking in two voices, as the learned Attorney General wants us to do or that it takes away by the right hand what it gave by the left hand. Therefore we have to read Article 363 harmoniously with Article 291. That is equally true of Articles 363 and 366 (22). The rule of harmonious construction is a well known rule. If the aforementioned articles are harmoniously interpreted then the position becomes clear. The purpose of Article 363 is made clear in the White Paper. Under the Merger Agreements as well as under the Covenants, various rights were conferred and privileges assured to the Rulers. Some of the agreements entered into between the former Rulers and his Majesty's Government or the Dominion of India are undoubtedly acts of State. So far as the Covenants are concerned, the question whether they were acts of State or constitutional documents is a highly debatable question. Rights accruing as well as liabilities and obligations arising under acts of State were not enforceable in the municipal Courts unless they were recognised by the new sovereign. For the purpose of giving necessary direction to the Union and State executives as well as to the State and Union legislatures, the Constitution recognised the rights accruing and liabilities and obligations arising under various Agreements and Covenants which recognition made those rights, liabilities and obligations enforceable. But the Constituent Assembly did not want to open up the Pandora's box. Without Article 363, Article 362 would have opened the floodgates of litigation. The Constituent Assembly evidently wanted to avoid that situation. That appears to have been the main reason for enacting Article 363. Evidently there were other reasons also for enacting Article 363. Some of the Rulers who had entered into Merger Agreements were challenging the validity of those agreements, even before the draft of the Constitution was finalised. Some of them were contending that the agreements were taken from them by intimidation; some others were contending that there were blanks in the agreements signed by them and those blanks had been filled in without their knowledge and to their prejudice. The merger process went on hurriedly. The Constitution makers could not have ignored the possibility of future challenge to the validity of the Merger Agreements. Naturally they would have been anxious to avoid challenge to various provisions in the Constitution which are directly linked with the Merger Agreements.

310. As seen earlier Article 363 has two parts. The first part relates to disputes arising out of the Agreements and Covenants etc. The jurisdiction of this Court as well as of other Courts is clearly barred in respect of disputes falling within that part. Then comes the second part of Article 363 which refers to disputes in respect of any right accruing under or any liability or obligation arising out of any of the provisions of the Constitution relating to any agreement, covenant etc. We are concerned with this part of Article 363. Before a dispute can be held to come within the scope of that part, that dispute must be in respect of a right accruing under or liability or obligation arising out of a provision of the Constitution and that provision of the Constitution must relate to agreements, covenants, etc.

311. The principal dispute with which we are concerned in these cases is whether the President has the power to abolish all Rulers under Article 366 (22). Quite plainly this dispute cannot be held to be dispute in respect of a right accruing or a liability or obligation arising under any provision of the Constitution. Herein we are (Sic—not?) concerned with any right, liability or obligation. We are concerned with powers of the President under Article 366 (22). What is in dispute is the true scope of the power of the President under Article 366 (22). That dispute does not fall within Article 363. Power is not the same thing as right. Power is an authority whereas a right in the context in which it is used in Article 363, signifies property. The fact that the Court's decision about the scope of the power of the President under Article 366 (22) may incidentally bear on certain rights does not make the dispute, a dispute relating to any right accruing under any provision of the Constitution. A dispute as regards the interpretation of a provision of the Constitution is not a dispute within the contemplation of the second part of Article 363 as it is not a dispute in respect of any right, liability or obligation. The contention of the petitioners is that the impugned orders are ultra vires the powers of the President, hence null and void. Such a dispute does not come within Article 363.

312. It cannot be said that Article 366 (22) is a provision relating to Merger Agreements and Covenants. The word "relating to" is a word of wide import but in the context in which it is used in Article 363 it must receive a narrower meaning; otherwise all rights accruing or liabilities and obligations arising under one or other of the provisions of the Constitution to the former Rulers of Indian States as well as to their subjects have to be held to come within the mischief of Article 363 because they became Indian citizens as a result of the merger of the Indian States in the Dominion of India in pursuance of Merger Agreements. Nothing so startling could have been intended by the Constituent Assembly. If it is otherwise, the life, liberty and property of that section of our citizens would be under the mercy of our Government because if they complain against any high-handedness on the part of the Government, the Government can seek shelter under Article 363. The word 'relating' in Article 363, in my judgment means "to bring into relation" or "establish relation between". In other words the provision of the Constitution in question must be linked with the Merger Agreements or Covenants directly and immediately. It must have no independent existence. That is not the position under Article 366 (22). It is an independent provision. It has nothing to do with the Agreements and Covenants. It does not take any strength from the Covenants and Agreements. The power to recognise the Rulers is a new power conferred on the President by the Constitution. There was no such power under the Agreements and Covenants. Between 1947 and 25th of January, 1950 there was no question of recognising the Rulers of Indian States. In respect of several of the Indian States, the Dominion of India had no right to decide the question of successorship. The provision in the Merger Agreements that succession will be according to law and custom is merely a statement of the legal position. The same cannot be considered as a part of the Agreement. The reference to Agreements and Covenants through Art. 291 is a convenient drafting device. Even if all the Agreements and the Covenants are abrogated the provision will stand intact.

313. Mr. Mohan Kumaramanglam, appearing on behalf of the respondent contended that Articles 291, 362 and 363 should be considered as one group of Articles which group together relates to Agreements and Covenants; Article 366 (22) was enacted to effectuate Articles 291 and 362. Articles 291 and 362 are related to Agreements and Covenants; therefore Article 366 (22) must also be held to be related to Agreements and Covenants. I have earlier considered the meaning of the word 'relating' in Article 363. Further I have held that Article 291 is not related to Article 363 as it is not linked with the Agreements and Covenants; it is an independent provision. I have also held that the definition of "Ruler" in Article 366 (22) is not merely for the purpose of Article 291 and Article 362 but also for the purpose of supplying contents for the legislative entry 34 of List VI of Sch. VII of the Constitution. Hence the group relation theory ingenuously advanced by Mr. Mohan Kumaramanglam cannot be accepted. Article 363 speaks of "any provision of the Constitution relating" to Agreements and Covenants. If the contention of Mr. Mohan Kumaramanglam is analysed, it means that Article 366 (22) is related to the Agreements and Covenants through Articles 291 and 362. In other words that Art. is a relation of the relations of the Agreements and Covenants. That is not the type of relationship contemplated by Article 363. That article contemplates direct relationship between the concerned articles and the Agreements and Covenants. The further contention of Mr. Mohan Kumaramanglam that in finding out whether an article is related to Agreements and Covenants, we should look to its origin or genesis, is not correct. If it is otherwise it must be held that all the articles of the Constitution in so far as they deal with the former Rulers of Indian States and their subjects are concerned are related to Agreements and Covenants as they had their origin or genesis in the Agreements and Covenants. If that is so Article 363 becomes all pervasive. We have earlier noticed the far reaching implications of such a conclusion.

314. The petitioners contend that the plea of the respondent that Article 291 does not confer a legal right on the Rulers to get privy purses cannot be considered as raising a genuine dispute and that contention is a mere manoeuvre to oust the jurisdiction of this Court and hence the same cannot be considered as dispute within Article 363. According to the petitioners the said plea of the respondent is a mere pretence and not a dispute because dispute in law means a triable issue and not an assertion which is ex-facie untenable. It is not necessary to examine these contentions.

315. The basic issue arising for decision in these cases is of far greater significance than it appears at first sight. The question whether the Rulers can be derecognised by the President is of secondary importance. What is of utmost importance for the future of our democracy is whether the executive in this country can flout the mandates of the Constitution and set at naught legislative enactments at its discretion. If it is held that it can then our hitherto held assumption that in this country we are ruled by laws and not by men and women must be given up as erroneous.

316. Before proceeding to consider the decisions relied on by the learned Attorney General and Mr. Kumaramangalam in support of their contention that the disputes with which we are concerned in these cases are disputes falling within the ambit of Article 363, it is necessary to mention at the very outset that the question whether the orders similar to the impugned orders are within the powers of the President under Article 366 (22) did never come before this Court for decision. No such orders had been passed by the President in the past. There was just one derecognition in the past i. e., that of the former Ruler of Baroda. That matter did not come before Courts. Hence there was no occasion for this Court or for that matter any Court in this country to consider the scope of Article 366 (22). The observations made by this Court in Rajendra Singh's case, (1970) 2 SCR 631 = (AIR 1970 SC 1946) (supra) had been considered by me earlier. Even the scope of Article 291 had not directly arisen for consideration in any of the decisions of this Court. It is true that there are a few observations in some of the decisions to which I shall presently refer about the nature of the right guaranteed under that Article 291 and the impact of Article 363 on that right.

317. Let me now consider the decisions relied on by the learned

Attorney General. The first decision relied on by him is, (1951) SCR 474 = (AIR 1951 SC 253). Therein certain States which had acceded to the Dominion of India and which had merged in the Province of Bihar and were administered as part of that Province instituted suits in the Federal Court of India before the 26th January 1950, for a declaration that various orders under which States came to be administered as part of Bihar and the laws under which those orders were made were ultra vires and void and the Province of Bihar had accordingly no authority to carry on the administration of the States. Those suits stood transferred to the Supreme Court of India under Article 374 (2) of the Constitution after the Constitution came into force. In those suits the principal question that fell for decision was whether the dispute as regards the validity of the merger could be gone into by this Court in view of Article 363 of the Constitution. This Court held that as the suits were really to enforce the plaintiffs' right under the instruments of accession and the dispute between the parties really arose out of those instruments, in view of Article 363 (1) this Court had no jurisdiction to hear the suits. The principal controversy in that case came squarely within the ambit of the first part of Article 363 (1). Hence that decision is not relevant for our present purpose.

318. The next case referred to is Viswashwar Rao v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (1952) SCR 1020 = (AIR 1952 SC 252). Therein the dispute was about the validity of some of the provisions of the Madhya Pradesh Abolition of Proprietary Rights (Estates Mahals, Alienated lands) Act (1 of 1951). One of the contentions advanced on behalf of the petitioner in that case was that by the terms of the Merger Agreement the properties concerned in that case were declared as the petitioner's private properties and were protected from State legislation by the guarantee given under Article 363 of the Constitution and hence the impugned Act was bad as that contravened the provisions of that Article. The Court rejected that contention with these observations:

"It is true that by the covenant of merger the properties of the petitioner became his private properties as distinguished from properties of the State but in respect of them he is in no better position than any other owner possessing private property. Article 362 does not prohibit the acquisition of properties declared as private properties by the covenant of merger and does not guarantee their perpetual existence. The guarantee contained in the article is of a limited extent only. It assures that the Rulers' properties declared as their private properties will not be claimed as State properties. The guarantee has no greater scope than this. That guarantee has been fully respected by the impugned statute, as it treats those properties as their private properties and seeks to acquire them on that assumption; moreover it seems to me that in view of the comprehensive language of Article 363 this issue is not justifiable".

319. From this it is clear that the decision in question does not bear on the points in controversy in these cases. The learned Attorney-General next relied on the decision in Sri Sudhansu Shekher Singh Deo v. The State of Orissa, (1961) 1 SCR 779 = (AIR 1961 SC 196). Therein a former Ruler of an Indian State challenged the levy of agricultural income-tax on his agricultural properties under the Orissa Agricultural Income-tax Act, 1947 (Orissa Act 24 of 1947). He contended that in view of the guarantees given to him under Clauses (4) and (5) of the merger agreement entered into between him and the Dominion of India, no agricultural income-tax can be levied on the income from his private agricultural properties. That contention was repelled by this Court holding that the privileges granted under Clauses (4) and (5) of the Agreement of Merger were his personal privileges as an ex-Ruler and those privileges did not extend to his private properties and that the claim made by him of immunity from taxation relying upon the Agreement of Merger was not justiciable. The ratio of that decision is of no assistance in these cases. But the learned Attorney-General relied on the observations found at pp. 785 and 786 (of SCR) = (at p. 199 of AIR) of the Report. Those observations are:

"Even though Article 362 is not restricted in its recommendation to agreements relating to the privy purse and covers all agreements and covenants entered into by the Rulers of Indian States before the commencement of the Constitution whereby the personal rights, privileges and dignities of the Ruler of an Indian State were guaranteed, it does not import any legal obligation enforceable at the instance of the erstwhile Ruler of a former Indian State. If, despite the recommendation that due regard shall be had to the guarantee or assurance given under the covenant or agreement, the Parliament or the Legislature of a State makes laws inconsistent with the personal rights, privileges and dignities of the Ruler of an Indian State, the exercise of the legislative authority cannot, relying upon the agreement or covenant, be questioned in any Court and that is so expressly provided by Article 363 of the Constitution".

320. The only remark in the above observation relevant for the purpose of the present cases is: "Even though Article 362 is not restricted in its recommendation to agreements relating to the privy purse" thereby meaning that guarantee as regards the privy purse also comes within the scope of Article 362. This is a casual remark. In that case the Court had no occasion to consider the scope of Article 291 or Article 362.

321. The decision of this Court in (1964) 5 SCR 1 = (AIR 1964 SC 444) referred to by the learned Attorney General during the course of his arguments does not in the least bear on the point under consideration. Therein Shah J. speaking for the Court merely set out the arguments of the parties as to the scope of Articles 291, 362 and 363 but declined to go into them as those Articles had not been relied on in the High Court.

322. The next decision relied on by the learned Attorney General is the decision of this Court in State of Gujarat v. Vora Fiddali Badruddin Mithibarwala, (1964) 6 SCR 461 = (AIR 1964 SC 1043). The material facts of that case were that the Ruler of the State of Sant had issued a Tharao dated 12th March, 1948 granting full right and authority to the jagirdars over the forest in their respective villages. Pursuant to the agreement dated March 19, 1948 the State of Sant merged with the Dominion of India. At the time of the merger, it was expressly agreed that no order passed or action taken by the Maharana before the day of April 1, 1948 would be questioned but after the merger the Government of Bombay in which province the former State of Sant had merged in consultation with the Government of India cancelled the Tharao in question holding that it was not a bona fide grant. The jagirdars challenged the validity of that order and in support of their case they relied on the relevant clauses in the Merger Agreement. This Court held that the guarantees given under the Merger Agreements cannot be relied on by the Municipal Courts in view of Article 363.

323. The last case relied on by the learned Attorney General is (1965) 3 SCR 201 = (AIR 1965 SC 1798). In that case a creditor of a former Ruler sought to attach the Privy Purse payable to the Ruler under Art. 291. The Ruler objected to the same on the ground that attachment is invalid in view of cl. (g) to the Proviso of S. 60 (1). C. P. C. which provision says that political pensions are not liable to be attached. The word "pension" in Section 60 (1) (g) implies periodical payment of money by the Government to the pensioners — see Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Karanani Industrial Bank Ltd. 58 Ind App 215 = (AIR 1931 PC 160). In Bishambhar Nath v. Nawab Imdad Ali Khan, (1890) 17 Ind App 181 (PC) Lord Watson observed:

"A Pension which the Government of India has given a guarantee that it will pay, by a treaty obligation contracted with another sovereign power, appears to their Lordships to be, in the strictest sense a political pension. The obligation to pay as well as the actual payment of the pension, must in such circumstances, be ascribed to reasons of State policy."

324. Relying on these decisions and taking into consideration the nature of the liability in relation to the payment of Privy Purse, this Court held that Privy Purse is a political pension and as such, the same is not liable to be attached. This, in short is the ratio of the decision. If the decision had said nothing more it would not have advanced the case of the respondent. But in the course of the judgment Bacha-

wat J. who spoke for the Court after summarising Arts. 291, 362 and 363 observed as follows:

"On the coming into force of the Constitution of India the guarantee for the payment of periodical sums as Privy Purse is continued by Art. 291 of the Constitution but its essential political character is preserved by Article 363 of the Constitution, and the obligation under this guarantee cannot be enforced in any municipal court. Moreover, if the President refuse to recognise the person by whom the covenant was entered into as the Ruler of the State, he would not be entitled to the amount payable as Privy Purse under Art. 291. Now, the periodical payment of money by the Government to a Ruler of a former Indian State as Privy Purse on political considerations and under political sanctions and not under a right legally enforceable in any municipal court is strictly a political pension within the meaning of S. 60 (1) (g) of the Code of Civil Procedure."

325. But these observations are obiter. The learned judges in that case had no occasion to consider nor did they go into the scope of Art. 291 or Art. 363. Every observation of this Court is no doubt entitled to weight but an obiter cannot take the place of the ratio. Judges are not oracles. In the very nature of things, it is not possible to give the same attention to incidental matters as is given to the actual issues arising for decision. Further much depends on the way the case is presented to them.

326. In the State of Orissa v. Sudhansu Sekhar Misra, (1968) 2 SCR 154 = (AIR 1968 SC 647) dealing with the question as to the importance to be attached to the observations found in the judgments of this Court, this is what this Court observed:

"A decision is only an authority for what it actually decides. What is of the essence in a decision is its ratio and not every observation found therein nor what logically follows from the various observations made in it. On this topic this is what Earl of Halsbury LC said in Quinn v. Leathem (1901) AC 495:

'Now before discussing the case of Allen v. Flood (1898) AC 1 and what was decided therein, there are two observations of a general character which I wish to make, and one is to repeat what I have very often said before, that every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved or assumed to be proved, since the generality of the expressions which may be found there are not intended to be expositions of the whole law, but governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are to be found. The other is that a case is only an authority for what it actually decides. I entirely deny that it can be quoted for a proposition that may seem to follow logically from it. Such a mode of reasoning assumes that the law is necessarily a logical code, whereas every lawyer must acknowledge that the law is not always logical at all'. It is not a portable task to extract a sentence here and there from a judgment and to build upon it."

327. In my opinion none of the questions of law arising for decision excepting that relating to the petitioners' right to move this Court under Art. 32 is res integra.

328. The only question remaining for consideration is whether the petitioners have been able to establish any contravention of their fundamental rights in order to entitle them to move this Court under Art. 32. This question need not detain us for long. The petitioners have complained that the rights under Arts. 14, 19, 21 and 31 have been contravened. As I am satisfied that the rights under Articles 31 and 19 (1) (f) have been contravened it is not necessary to examine the alleged contravention of other rights.

329. I have earlier come to the conclusion that the right to get the Privy Purse under Art. 291 is a legal right. From that it follows that it is a right enforceable through the courts of law. That right is undoubtedly a property. A right to receive cash grants annually has been considered by this Court to be a property—see (1968) 3 SCR 489 = (AIR 1968 SC 1053). Even if it is considered as a pension as the same is payable under law namely Art. 291, the same is property—see (1961) 1 SCR 957 = (AIR 1961 SC 298).

330. We have also earlier seen that certain benefits have been conferred on the Rulers under the Wealth Tax Act. As a result of the impugned orders, all those benefits are purported to have been taken away. The denial of those benefits which had been afforded to the Rulers under law is again a contravention of the petitioners' fundamental right to property. It was conceded by the learned Attorney General that an illegal deprivation of any pecuniary benefit to which a person is entitled under any law is a deprivation of his fundamental right. In view of this concession it is not necessary to refer to decided cases.

331. For the reasons mentioned above, I allow these petitions with costs, quash the impugned orders which means that the status quo ante is restored. The declaration asked for in relief No. 2 is unnecessary. There is no need at present to go into the other reliefs asked for.

RAY, J.: 332. These are eight petitions. The petitioners are described as Rulers of Gwalior, Udaipur, Nabha, Nalagarh, Kutch, Dhrangadhra, Patna and Banaras.

333. On 6 September, 1970 in exercise of the powers vested in the President under Article 366 (22) of the Constitution, the President directed that with effect from the date of the said order His Highness Maharajadhiraja Madhav Rao Jiawaji Rao Scindia Bahadur do cease to be recognised as a Ruler of Gwalior.

334. Similar orders were made by the President in regard to the other seven petitioners.

335. All the petitions are in substance the same. It will not, therefore, be necessary to refer to all the petitions separately. The case of the petitioner in Writ Petition No. 376 of 1970 can be treated as typical of the others.

336. The petitioner challenges the aforementioned order (hereinafter referred to as the order) as violative of Articles 14, 19 (1) (f) and 31 (1) and (2) of the Constitution. The order is also challenged to be unconstitutional, ultra vires, void, inoperative, arbitrary mala fide and a fraud on the Constitution.

337. The grounds for challenge alleged in the petition are these:

338. First, the Privy Purses have been guaranteed under Merger Agreements and Covenants. Merger

Agreements and Covenants are inextricably linked up with Instrument of Accession. The pledge to pay Privy Purses and the guarantee regarding privileges are inseparable from accession and merger. The obligation to pay Privy Purse and the guarantee regarding privileges cannot be abolished by an executive order. The whole purpose of the order is to deprive the petitioner of Privy Purse and privileges guaranteed under the Covenants and Merger Agreements and also guaranteed and assured by Articles 291 and 362 of the Constitution. The whole object of the order is to override and overrule the Constitution on the point of Rulers' rights, privileges and Privy Purses after the rejection of the Constitution (24th Amendment) Bill by the Rajya Sabha.

339. Secondly, derecognition of all Rulers en masse is itself the clearest possible proof that the whole object is to abolish the institution of Rulership altogether and the rights and privileges attached thereto including the right to Privy Purse. Under the Merger Agreements and Covenants a Ruler is entitled to Privy Purse, rights and privileges enjoyed before 15th August 1947 and succession to the gaddi in accordance with the law and custom of the family. The Government of India in discharge of the obligation to ensure the fulfilment of these rights has been recognising successors to Rulers and paying Privy Purses to the Rulers and to their successors. The procedure of recognition of the persons, so entitled, by the President for the purpose of Articles 291 and 362 has to be read with the contractual obligation which still survived between the Union of India and the Ruler. Once the President has recognised a person who is entitled to receive Privy Purse and to be accorded rights and privileges as a Ruler, there can be no interference with the right to receive Privy Purse.

340. Thirdly, there is no substantive provision in the Constitution conferring on the President a right to recognise or not to recognise a Ruler or to withdraw recognition. Once the procedure of recognition has been exhausted the President becomes functus officio and has no further authority to withdraw the recognition which he has accorded. In recognising a Ruler the President has to conform to the fact of a certain person being Ruler or to the fact of succession in accordance with the position under the Covenants and Merger Agreements and in accordance with law and custom of the family. Article 366 (22) imposes a constitutional duty on the President to recognise an existing fact in accordance with the provisions of the Covenants and Merger Agreements and the President has no independent power or authority independent of such facts. The President is bound by contractual obligations in the Covenants and Merger Agreements and by the Constitutional duty imposed upon him to recognise a person entitled to receive Privy Purse. The order derecognising Rulers en masse brings the institution of Rulership to an end. The order is in contravention of Articles 291, 362, 366 (22) and 53 (1).

341. Fourthly, the order violates Article 14, because it singles out the Rulers for hostile discrimination and deprives them of their valuable rights to property without compensation and violates solemn agreements and the express provisions of the Constitution. There is deliberate defiance of the Constitution by wilful repudiation of contractual obligations against a class of citizens.

342. Fifthly, the right to receive Privy Purse and other rights constitutes property within Arts. 19 (1) (f) and 31 and the order seeks to deprive the petitioner of his right to Privy Purse and other rights in violation of Article 19 (1) (f). The right to tax free Privy Purse and other rights are properties of the petitioner and the petitioner is deprived of the same without authority of law in violation of Article 31 (1). The Privy Purse is in substance and in reality compensation for the transfer by Rulers of inter alia their properties and it is not competent to the Government to abolish the right without compensation in the form of Privy Purse.

343. Sixthly, the Rulers, it is alleged, acted on the faith of the undertaking and guarantee given by the Government of India regarding Privy Purses and preservation of Rulership and of personal rights and privileges. The Rulers acted to their detriment by giving away vast properties. The Government is, therefore, estopped by the doctrine of promissory estoppel from refusing to pay the Privy Purse. A fiduciary duty is cast on the Government of India to respect and implement the provisions of the Merger Agreements and the Covenants. The Government is bound by its pledged words to pay Privy Purse and to recognise Rulership. Alternatively, the order leaves the Merger Agreements and Covenants untouched and the Union is bound to pay Privy Purse and to recognise the personal rights and privileges and to discharge all obligations under the Covenants and Merger Agreements and the Constitution.

344. Finally, the petitioner alleged that Article 363 does not cover the case of a policy to abolish the institution of Rulership and rights and privileges and Privy Purse of Rulers. The questions whether en masse derecognition of Rulers is ultra vires Article 366 (22) and whether the Government by executive action can abolish the institution of Rulership and wipe out Articles 291 and 362 by policy decisions are said to be outside Article 362.

345. On these allegations in the petition the petitioner seeks three declarations; First that the order is ultra vires; secondly, that the petitioner continues to be a Ruler and continues to be entitled to Privy Purse and privileges, and thirdly, a writ under Article 32 directing the Government to pay Privy purse, recognise Rulership and pay compensation.

346. The respondent denies that the petitioner is legally entitled to Privy Purse and privileges or that the Government is bound to pay Privy Purse and accord the privileges by reason of the Covenants or Merger Agreements. The Government denies that the petitioner is entitled to Privy Purse or to privileges or that the Government is bound to pay Privy Purse or accord privileges under Articles 291 and 362 respectively. The Government denies that the alleged obligation to pay Privy Purse or the alleged guarantee regarding privileges cannot be abolished by executive order. The Government denies that independently of Article 366 (22) the petitioner is entitled to Privy Purse or to privileges. The Government denies that the President is bound by contractual obligations or constitutional duty to recognise a person to be entitled to Privy Purse. The Government denies that the Government has no right to refuse to pay Privy Purse or to derecognise Rulers. The Government denies that the order violates Articles 19 and 31 or that the petitioner has been deprived of Privy Purse or privileges because of the grounds alleged. The Government denies that Article 366 (22) imposes any duty on the President to recognise any existing fact in accordance with the Covenants or that any existing Ruler is an existing fact for recognition. The Government denies that the order is ultra vires or there is any institution of Rulership. Finally, the Government denies that derecognition is outside Article 363 or that questions of abolition of Rulership or wiping out Articles 291 and 362 are outside Article 363.

347. The Attorney General raised the plea of the bar of jurisdiction of this Court under Article 363 at the threshold. Article 363 is as follows:

"363 (1) Notwithstanding anything in this Constitution but subject to the provisions of Article 143, neither the Supreme Court nor any other court shall have jurisdiction in any dispute arising out of any provision of a treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instrument which was entered into or executed before the commencement of this Constitution by any Ruler of an Indian State and to which the Government of the Dominion of India or any of its predecessor Governments was a party and which has or has been continued in operation after such commencement or in any dispute in respect of any right accruing under or any liability or obligation arising out of any of the provisions of this Constitution relating to any such treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instrument.

(2) In this Article—

(a) "Indian State" means any territory recognised before the commencement of this Constitution by His Majesty or the Government of the Dominion of India as being such a State; and

348. The first bar is in respect of any dispute arising out of any provision of a treaty, agreement, covenant entered into before the commencement of the Constitution and which has continued in operation after such commencement. The second bar is in any dispute in respect of any right accruing under or any liability or obligation arising out of any provision of the Constitution relating to any treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad and other similar instruments.

349. It is, therefore vitally necessary to ascertain first whether there are disputes; secondly, as to what those disputes are; and, thirdly, whether the disputes fall within Article 363.

350. The reason why I referred to the rival allegations is to indicate the nature and character of disputes. Mr. Palkhivala on behalf of the petitioner contended that there was no dispute as to Privy Purse or to recognition of a Ruler and the only contention was that the order of the President was a nullity. It is indisputable that no one comes to a Court of law unless disputes have arisen. When the petitioner alleges that the order is a nullity and the Government alleges that the order is valid a dispute arises at once.

351. Mr. Palkhivala contended that the first limb of Article 363 was clearly not applicable because there is no dispute arising out of any Covenant or Merger Agreement and the bar under the second limb was not attracted for four reasons. First rights, liabilities and obligations are not to be confused with powers or jurisdiction or limits of legislative or executive powers or jurisdiction. Any executive or legislative action which goes beyond the scope of Article 366 (22) or violates Article 291 or Article 362 would raise a question as to the limits of executive or legislative competence and it cannot be said to raise a dispute as to any right, liability or obligation. It was emphasised that the only dispute is whether the President's order is a nullity and it is a dispute as to the limits of the President's jurisdiction and not a dispute in respect of any right, liability or obligation. Secondly, it was said that Articles 291 and 362 are mandatory Articles and if the Government chose to raise disputes about those Articles it would amount to saying that the Government was disputing the very obligation enacted by those Articles in the Constitution. Dispute in Article 363 was said not to cover a dispute the raising of which was expressly prohibited by the other provisions of the Constitution. Thirdly, any executive action in violation of Articles 291 and 362 or beyond the ambit of Article 366 (22) would be a violation of Articles 53 and 73 of the Constitution and the latter Articles did not at all relate to Covenants or Merger Agreements. The refusal to pay Privy Purse was said to be in violation of Articles 112, 113 and 114. Again it was said that if a law was passed in violation of Art. 291 or Article 362 it would be a breach of Articles 245 and 246 which Articles were not related to Covenants or Merger Agreements at all. Fourthly an executive action which is ultra vires or mala fide is a nullity and the bar of jurisdiction under Article 363 would apply only where the action is bona fide and cannot apply where the order is ultra vires and nullity.

352. Article 363 bars the jurisdiction of all courts in respect of any dispute covered by the Article. It is seriously challenged and controverted by the Government that Articles 291 and 362 have any mandatory character as alleged by the petitioner. It is disputed that the order is a nullity. It is equally disputed that there cannot be any dispute as to rights or liabilities or obligations under the Articles aforesaid. If both parties say that an order is bona fide there can be no dispute. It is only when one party alleged the order to be a nullity and the other party affirms the order to be valid that parties will have a dispute. The petitioner's contentions bristle with disputes which in the ultimate analysis resolve into keenly debated disputes as to rights of Rulership and Privy Purse. The dispute as to jurisdiction of the President under Article 366 (22) is not in vacuo but is a dispute as to rights of recognition of Ruler for the purposes of payment of Privy Purse and enjoyment of rights and privileges. Mr. Palkhivala submitted that he did not want any relief as to Privy Purse now and if the petitioner succeeded in getting a declaration that the order is nullity and if the Government thereafter did not pay Privy Purse the petitioner would then apply for that relief. This position indicates beyond any doubt that the heart of the matter is dispute as to Privy Purse which is stopped by the order of the President. The order is for purposes of payment of Privy Purse and that is what the petitioner is seeking to enforce.

353. In order to appreciate the true scope and content of Article 363 it is necessary to find out as to why this Article and Articles 291, 362, 366 (22) (hereinafter referred to collectively as the allied Articles) found place in the Constitution. These allied Articles deal with Privy Purses, princely privileges guaranteed under the Covenants and Merger Agreements entered into by Rulers of Indian States and recognition of Rulers by the President under Article 366 (22). The roots of these Articles lie deep in the past. Therefore, the history and chronicle of events will have to be told. The transition from the British Rule to the Indian Independence and the establishment of the Republic of our country is a great constitutional development. The Constitution which was evolved represented the national ethos forged by the aims and aspirations of the people throughout the length and breadth of our country. A great problem which awaited solution on the eve of our independence was the relation between our country and the Indian States. The British Cabinet Mission came to India in the month of March, 1946. The Mission came to bring about a change in the British policy towards India. Imperialism was crumbling after the Second World War. The Cabinet Mission in no uncertain terms said that when India was going to be an independent country it was not only necessary but also desirable that the Indian States should combine with free India for security, stability and solidarity. The Rulers of Indian States also realised the importance of such a measure in an advanced age when the leaders of our country impressed upon the Rulers the wisdom of such a course of action to avert the upheaval and upsurge of the people in the Indian States which were also tottering with the decline of British imperialism. It is in this background that the Cabinet Mission declared in May, 1946 that paramountcy of the British Crown which provided the basis of relations between British India and the Rulers of Indian States could neither be retained by the British Crown nor transferred to the new Government of India. The paramount power in British India was derived from the Royal Prerogative. The rights which the paramount power claimed in exercise of the functions of the Crown in relation to the State covered both external and internal matters in the States. The Indian States had no international status. The paramount power under the British Regime recognised succession to the gaddi and settled disputes as to succession and imposed the duty of loyalty to the Crown. The Indian States Committee in 1927 had expressed the view that "paramountcy must remain paramount, it must fulfil its obligations, defining or adapting itself according to the shifting necessities of the time and the progressive development of the States". This was the essence of the doctrine of paramountcy in British India. Paramountcy could not be defined. It was an imperialist imposition on the Rulers of Indian States.

354. The Cabinet Mission issued a Memorandum dated 12 May, 1946 and announced a plan on 16 May, 1946 later on known as the Cabinet Mission Plan. In the memorandum the Cabinet Mission affirmed that the rights of the Indian States which flowed from their relations with the British Crown would no longer exist when the British would leave India and that the rights surrendered by the States to the paramount power would revert to these States. The Cabinet Mission Plan was a statement embodying suggestions and recommendations towards the speedy setting up of a new Constitution for India. Referring to the States, the Cabinet Mission Plan said that with the attainment of the Independence of our country, the relationship which had existed between the States and the British Crown would no longer be possible and paramountcy could neither be retained by the British nor transferred to the new Government. The Plan further said that the Rulers had given assurances that they were ready and willing to co-operate in the new development of India. On 3 June, 1947 the British Government superseded the Cabinet Mission Plan in so far as it referred to the States and made it clear that the decisions announced related only to British India and the British policy towards Indian

355. As a prelude to the transfer of power from the British Crown to our country the Government of India decided to set up a Department called the States Department to conduct their relations with the States in matters of common concern. On 5 July, 1947 Sardar Patel defined the policy of the Government of India by stating that "the people of India were knit together by bonds of blood and feeling no less than of self-interest" and "no impassable barriers could be set up between us" and he said that the alternative to co-operation was anarchy and chaos. There was a special meeting of the Rulers on 25 July, 1947. The then Crown representative Lord Mountbatten in the course of his address to the Rulers advised them to accede to the appropriate Dominion in regard to three subjects of Defence, External Affairs and Communications and assured them that their accession on these subjects would involve no financial liability and in other matters there would be no encroachment on their internal sovereignty. Barring three States the other Indian States acceded to the Dominion of India by 15 August, 1947.

356. The Indian Independence Act was to come into existence on 15 August, 1947. Section 7 of the Indian Independence Act, 1947 provided that with the lapse of suzerainty of the Crown over Indian States all treaties and agreements between the Crown and the Rulers of Indian States, all functions exercisable by the Crown with respect to Indian States, all obligations of the Crown towards Indian States or Rulers thereof and all powers rights authority or jurisdiction exercisable by the Crown on that date in or in relation to Indian States by treaty, grant, usage, suzerainty or otherwise would also lapse. The proviso to section 7 of the Indian Independence Act, 1947 was that notwithstanding the lapse of suzerainty and lapse of treaties, effect shall, as nearly as might be, continue to be given to the provisions of any such agreement referred to in section 7 (b) of the Act which related to customs, transit, communications, posts and telegraphs or other like matters until the provisions in question were denounced by the Ruler of the Indian State or by the Dominion or Province or were superseded by subsequent agreements.

357. The Instruments of Accession executed by the Rulers of Indian States declared accession to the Dominion of India on three subjects, viz., Defence, External Affairs and Communications. In the Instruments of Accession the Rulers provided that nothing in the instrument was to be deemed to commit the Ruler in any way to acceptance of any future Constitution of India or to fetter a Ruler's discretion to enter into arrangements with the Government of India under any such future Constitution. The Instrument concluded by stating that nothing in the Instrument would affect the continuance of the Ruler's sovereignty in and over the State or save as provided by or under the Instrument, the exercise of any powers, authority and rights then enjoyed by him as a Ruler of the State or the validity of any law then in force in his State.

358. The Instrument of Accession was followed by Stand-still Agreement. The Stand Still Agreement between the Ruler and the Dominion of India provided that until new agreements were made all agreements and administrative arrangements as to matters of common concern then existing between the Crown and the Indian States should, in so far as might be appropriate, continue as between the Dominion of India or as the case might be, the part thereof, and the State. In a Schedule were enumerated the various matters of common concern. The important matters were, inter alia, Air Communications, Arms and Equipment, Currency and Coinage, Customs, Indian States Forces, External Affairs, Extradition, Import and Export Control, Irrigation and Electric Power, Motor Vehicles, National Highways, Posts, Telegraphs and Telephones, Railways, Salt, Central Excises and Wireless.

359. The pattern of integration of Indian States was not uniform in all cases. There were 562 Indian States whereof 216 merged in Provinces, 61 were taken over as centrally administered areas and 275 integrated in different Unions of States. The Merger Agreements were entered into by the Rulers with the Dominion of India. The two important clauses in the Merger Agreements were one whereby the Ruler was to be entitled to receive from the revenues of the State annually for his Privy Purse the sum mentioned therein free of taxes and the other whereby the Dominion Government guaranteed succession according to law and custom to the gaddi of the State and to the Ruler's personal rights, privileges, dignities and titles. These two principal clauses are to be found in all Merger Agreements. There were differences in the Merger Agreements as to the amount of Privy Purse and in some cases as to the rights of successors to Rulers with regard to Privy Purses. The Rulers of Centrally merged States also entered into similar agreements with the Dominion of India. Those agreements also had two similar principal clauses for Privy Purse the sum mentioned free of taxes and guaranteed succession according to law and custom to the gaddi of the State and to the Ruler's personal rights, privileges, dignities and titles. The third type of integration was the formation of a Union of States whereby certain States described as the Covenanting States entered into a Union of States with a common executive, legislature and judiciary. These Covenants provided for a Council of Rulers with the Rajpramukh as the President of the Council. These Covenants also had similar provisions with regard to Privy Purses and succession. The Ruler of each Covenanting State was to be entitled to receive annually from the revenues of the United State for his Privy Purse, the amount mentioned free of all taxes. The succession according to law and custom to the gaddi of each Covenanting State and to the personal rights, privileges, dignities and titles to the Rulers was guaranteed. The Government of India concurred in the Covenants and guaranteed all the provisions. The Covenant for the United State of Madhya Bharat came into existence in the month of April, 1948. The other Union also came into existence near about the same time. The Merger Agreements came into existence near about the months of April and May, 1948

360. In the month of September, 1948 the Rulers of Covenanting States executed Revised Instruments of Accession, and these were signed by the Rajpramukhs of the different Unions of States. These Unions accepted all matters enumerated in List

I and List III of the Seventh Schedule of the Government of India Act, 1935 as matters in respect of which the Dominion Legislature might make laws for the Union of States other than items relating to any tax or duty in the territories of the United State. These Revised Instruments of Accession were accepted by the Governor-General on behalf of the Dominion of India. In the month of November, 1948 the Unions of States by their Rajpramukhs issued proclamations accepting the Constitution of India.

361. The Government of India Act, 1935 was amended in the year 1947 to effect necessary changes on the passing of the Indian Independence Act, 1947. Sections 5 and 6 of the Government of India Act, 1935 as amended in 1947 provided first for the accession of Indian States to the Dominion and secondly that an Indian State was to be deemed to have acceded to the Dominion if the Governor-General signified his acceptance of an instrument of accession making a declaration in terms of section 6 thereof. Accession was to be subject to the terms of the instrument. It has already been noticed earlier that all Rulers of Indian States executed Instruments of Accession but some Indian States thereafter merged with the Governors' Provinces and some were centrally administered areas after merger and some formed Unions of States.

362. It should be noticed that the Government of India Act, 1935 did not provide for any Merger Agreement. These Merger Agreements in the case of Provincially merged and Centrally merged States did not have any legal basis and sanction under the Government of India Act, 1935. The Extra Provincial Jurisdiction Act was therefore passed in the year 1947 giving power to the Central Government to exercise extra provincial jurisdiction over a Provincially merged or a Centrally merged State only if the Centre had by treaty, agreement, acquired full and exclusive authority and jurisdiction and power for and in relation to the governance of the State. The administration of the merged Indian States could not be done either under the Government of India Act, 1935 or the Instrument of Accession. The Extra Provincial Jurisdiction Act, 1947 was passed for exercising powers of administration and legislation in regard to provincially merged and centrally merged States. The Extra Provincial Jurisdiction Act was really a half way house between complete separateness and full integration. A law passed by the Dominion Parliament did not automatically apply to the merged States but had to be made applicable by a notification under the Extra Provincial Jurisdiction Act, 1947. That is why sections 290A and 290B were inserted by the Government of India Act Amendment Act, 1949 into the Government of India Act, 1935 for effecting integration of merged States.

363. Section 290A of the Government of India Act, 1935 provided for administration of certain Acceding States as Chief Commissioners' Provinces or as part of a Governor's or Chief Commissioner's Province. Section 290B provided for administration of areas included within a Governor's Province or a Chief Commissioner's Province by an Acceding State. Under the said section 290A there came into existence the States Merger (Governors' Provinces) Order, 1949 issued on 27th July, 1949. This order was applied to the provincially merged States with effect from 1 August, 1949. Under the States Merger (Governors' Provinces) Order, 1949 the provincially merged States were to be administered in all respects as if they formed part of the absorbing Provinces and all laws including orders made under the Extra Provincial Jurisdiction Act, 1947 were to continue in force until repealed or modified. Under the States Merger Order, 1949 provision was made for representation of the merged States in the Legislature of the absorbing Province, the apportionment of assets and liabilities as between the Centre and the Provinces and the institution of suits and other proceedings against the Government and the continuance of pending proceedings. A similar order known as the States' Merger (Chief Commissioners' Provinces) Order 1949 was made applicable to the centrally merged States with effect from 1 August, 1949. The provisions of the States' Merger (Chief Commissioners' Provinces) Order, 1949 were similar to the States Merger (Governors' Provinces) Order, 1949. With the issue of the States Merger (Governors' Provinces) and States Merger (Chief Commissioners' Provinces) Orders, 1949 the position of the provincially merged States became to all intents and purposes, the same as that of the provinces. Similar progress was also made in the direction of improving the administrative machinery of the Chief Commissioners' Provinces which assimilated the centrally merged States.

364. Mr. Palkhivala on behalf of the petitioner contended that the developments and integration of Indian States on the basis of the Instruments of Accession and the Covenants and Merger Agreements were constitutional developments and provided constitutional obligations. The Attorney General on the other hand rightly contended that the entire relationship of the Dominion of India vis-a-vis the Indian States was in the domain of Acts of States and the Instruments, Merger Agreements and Covenants did not have any constitutional sanction and obligation and were totally unenforceable in Municipal Courts. The British Crown as Sovereign State dealt with the Indian States and either conquered or annexed their territories or Rulers of the States ceded their territories or some Rulers entered into alliances with the British Crown. Such action of the British Crown was held by long series of decisions to be an Act of State and treaties and stipulations arising out of Acts of State could not be enforced in Municipal Courts. This Court has in several decisions held that Covenants and Merger Agreements with the Indian States are Acts of State and not enforceable under Municipal law. (See 1951 SCR 474 = (AIR 1951 SC 253); (1955) 1 SCR 415 = (AIR 1954 SC 447); 1959 SCR 729 = (AIR 1958 SC 816); (1960) 1 SCR 537 = (AIR 1959 SC 1383); (1964) 6 SCR 461 = (AIR 1964 SC 1043) and (1965) 3 SCR 201 = (AIR 1965 SC 1798)).

365. Mr. Palkhivala contended that on the accession of Indian States there could be no Act of State between the Dominion of India and the Rulers who acceded to the Dominion and thereafter between the Republic of India and the Rulers who were citizens. This argument is also fallacious. This Court in the same case, (1964) 6 SCR 461 = (AIR 1964 SC

"interpreted the integration of Indian States with the Dominion of India as an Act of State and has applied the law relating to an Act of State as laid down by the Privy Council in a long series of cases The Act of State comes to an end only when the new sovereign recognises either expressly or impliedly the right of the aliens"

This Court further said:

"we are not concerned with succession of India from the British Crown but with State succession between Sant State and India and there was no second succession in 1950. Whatever had happened had already happened in 1948, when Sant State merged with the Dominion of India. The Act of State which began in 1948 could continue uninterrupted even beyond 1950 and it did not lapse or get replaced by another Act of State". In (1964) 6 SCR 461 = (AIR 1964 SC 1043) (supra) the citizen claimed right on the basis of a Tharao granted by the Ruler before the merger. Apart from the fact that the Government of Bombay cancelled the right this Court held that the right granted by the Ruler was not recognised before 1950 and the Constitution gave support to those rights which were extant on 26th January, 1950. Fiddali failed on both the grounds of recognition and existing law. The Act of State is illustrated by the making of peace and war, the annexation or cession of territory, the recognition of a new State or new Government of an old State. Such acts have been held not to form the basis of action because they form the subject of political action in an Act of State. The sanction of an Act of State is political to all sovereign powers and that is why Municipal Courts accepted that position.

366. It is in this background that the Attorney General described Article 363 as embodying the concept of paramountcy being recreated in the form of a constitutional provision excluding interference by Courts in disputes relating to Instruments of Accession, Covenants and Merger Agreements. The Attorney General did not submit that there was any paramountcy between the Republic and its citizens nor that there was any doctrine of paramountcy subsisting in our country after 1950 or that it survived as a constitutional provision.

Article 363 and the other allied Articles really reflect what the Makers of the Constitution picked up from the historical past and inserted in the Constitution. The Constitution provided for recognition of Rulers by the President. This recognition was necessary because without it the Rulers could not be paid privy purses or enjoy their rights and privileges.

367. These four Articles in the Constitution appear to be slightly unrealistic or anachronistic in a Republican Constitution as it deals with citizens and the sovereignty of the people being reposed in the Republic. The founding fathers inserted these four allied Articles as rich hangings in a homely house. The real basis for Article 363 was that when the Constitution recognised the guarantee of privy purses and succession to the gaddi in the Merger Agreements and Covenants it was appreciated that if any dispute in regard to such agreements or covenants or any dispute as to any right accruing under or any obligation arising out of any provision of the Constitution relating to such covenants or agreements were allowed to be brought in a Court of law, the entire political relationship of the Dominion of India with the Indian States in an aegis of Act of State might be upset and upturned by such litigation in Municipal Courts and there would be room for regret on many counts. If Article 363 were not inserted litigations would have gone on endlessly as some of the Orissa Rulers commenced in the State of Seraikella case, 1951 SCR 174 = (AIR 1951 SC 253) to undo the Orissa merger agreements.

368. The Constitution contemplated political power of the President to recognise Rulers. If people or disgruntled contenders for Rulership were allowed to litigate by challenging either the recognition or by preferring a claim of recognition, the Courts would not be capable of adjudicating these disputes because the character and content of the President's power of recognition of Rulers is political and is not limited by the personal law of succession. Again, if the President withdrew recognition of a Ruler and the latter came to a Court of law it would be equally impossible for Courts to decide in an area which was consigned to the President as an inheritance of political power from the domain of Acts of State and privilege of Paramountcy. That is why Article 363 really embodied the principles of Acts of State which regulated and guided the rights and obligations under the covenants or merger agreements by incorporating the doctrine of unenforceability of covenants or merger agreements coming into existence as Acts of State.

369. The other reason for insertion of Article 363 was that the rights accruing under or obligations arising out of provisions of the Constitution relating to covenants or merger agreements were imperfect rights. A question was posed that if there were rights as to succession, privy purse and privileges there should be a remedy. In the first place, there are no legal rights as to recognition of Rulership, payment of privy purse and enjoyment of rights and privileges. Prior to the Constitution, the Rulers of Indian States could not start proceedings in Municipal Courts to enforce agreements or obligations arising out of covenants or merger agreements because such rights and obligations were unenforceable on the ground of dealings under Acts of State. The Constitution gave recognition to guarantees under covenants and agreements by the allied Articles 291, 363 and 366 (22). The Attorney General characterised the payment of privy purse, enjoyment of rights and privileges and the recognition of Rulership as imperfect rights and obligations. Whatever rights and obligations are to be found in the merger agreements and covenants were recognised by the Constitution in relation to those covenants and agreements. But the Constitution made such rights unenforceable in a Court of law. That is why these rights and obligations are called imperfect rights and imperfect obligations. Examples can be found of such imperfect legal rights when claims are barred by lapse of time or claims are unenforceable because of lack of registration. These imperfect rights and obligations are described in Salmond on Jurisprudence, 12th Ed. at pages 233-234 to be exceptions to the maxim ubi jus ubi remedium because "the customary union between the rights and the rights of action has been for some special reasons severed". Salmond warns against confusing obligatoriness with enforceability. It is "because of unenforceability" that "these rights are sometimes termed imperfect". Take for instance an ordinary contract of a merchant with the Government. If the contract is not in compliance with Article 299 it is unenforceable. The merchant has a mere imperfect right.

"The ordinary imperfect right is unenforceable because some rule of law declares it to be so. One's rights against the State are unenforceable, not in this legal sense, but in the sense that the strength of the law is none other than the strength of the State and cannot be turned or used against the State whose strength it is". Imperfect rights are not based on morality. Many rights are wrecked on the rock of unenforceability. Act of indemnity is one illustration. Duty is legal, when sanction is attached to its breach. Sanction means the appointed consequences of disobedience. Sanctionless duties are imperfect obligations. Really speaking imperfect rights and obligations are what authors of Jurisprudence describe as no claim in the jural opposites of claim and no claim". A statute barred debt cannot be recovered in a Court of law but if for some reason the debtor pays it he cannot later sue to recover it. The creditor (sic) had no liability but only liberty to pay. Liberty or privilege begins where duty ends and no right exists. These imperfect rights are thus in the category of "no claim" because of lack of legal sanction for enforcement by the bar of unenforceability laid down in the Constitution.

370. In our Constitution Article 363 is a positive Rule of unenforceability of certain rights and obligations. The Constitution is supreme and the provisions cannot be circumvented. This Court held in the Seraikella case, 1951 SCR 174 = (AIR 1951 SC 253) (supra) that Article 363 is a bar in any dispute relating to covenants and merger agreement. In (1964) 6 SCR 461 = (AIR 1964 SC 1043) (supra) this Court held that Article 363 precluded the Municipal Courts from considering and adjudicating upon any right under the Merger Agreement and guarantees were matters for the political department of the State and were thus outside the jurisdiction of this Court.

371. Again, in Usman Ali Khan's case, (1965) 3 SCR 201 = (AIR 1965 SC 1798) (supra) this Court held that the privy purse was a political pension and the payment was in relation to covenants and Merger Agreements, and, therefore, Art. 363 was a bar. In a recent decision of this Court in (1970) 2 SCR 631 = (AIR 1970 SC 1946), it has been held that the recognition of rulership by the President is not an indicia of property but it entitles the Rulers to the enjoyment of Privy Purse contemplated in Article 291 and the personal rights, privileges and dignities mentioned in Article 362 of the Constitution. It was also held that the recognition of rulership by the President was an executive and political power and Article 363 constitutes a bar to interference by Courts in a dispute arising by reason of recognition of rulership.

372. Mr. Palkhivala submitted that there was no political power of the President who had only executive power. The words "political power" denote power belonging to the State, its Government and policy. The Executive power has the political facet in many cases. To illustrate, the exercise of rights, authority and jurisdiction by virtue of any treaty or agreement (Article 73); Foreign Affairs (Entry 10 in List I of the Seventh Schedule); Entering into treaties and agreements with foreign countries and implementing of treaties, agreements and conventions in foreign countries (Entry 14 in List I of the Seventh Schedule); War and Peace (Entry 15 in List I of the Seventh Schedule) and Foreign jurisdiction. (Entry 16 in List I of the Seventh Schedule). The power of recognition of Rulership is political because it is exercised by the President in relation to Prince or Chief by whom any Covenant or Merger Agreement was entered into and the necessity for recognition arises from the Covenants and Merger Agreements. It is a political power because it is not limited only to the law of succession or custom. The reasons of State policy will enter the field. It is also a political power because it is not a compulsive power. If the scope of the power permits the President to recognise some one who is not entitled by law and custom then law and custom does not control it. By political power is meant that the consideration which moves the President is a matter on which the Court will find no standard for resolving it judicially. "There is no judicial process to adjudicate upon such political consideration".

373. Article 363 is a non obstante clause. It is a constitutional mandate. The prefatory words in Art. 363 "notwithstanding anything in the Constitution" exclude all other provisions of the Constitution from being attracted in disputes which fall within Article 363. There have been decisions of this Court on the meaning of the words "notwithstanding anything in this Constitution" occurring in Article 363 and in Article 329. In the State of Seraikella case, 1951 SCR 174 = (AIR 1951 SC 253) (supra) this Court held that Article 363 overrides all provisions of the Constitution. In N. P. Ponnuswami v. Returning Officer, Namakkal Constituency, 1952 SCR 218 = (AIR 1952 SC 64), Article 329 was construed to mean that the jurisdiction of the High Court under Article 226 to interfere in regard to rejection of a nomination paper could not be challenged by a writ of certiorari to quash the proceedings. This Court observed the difference between the words "subject to the provisions of this Constitution" occurring in Article 328 and "notwithstanding anything in this Constitution" occurring in Article 329 and held that the words in Article 328 could not exclude the jurisdiction of the High Court. The effect of a non obstante clause was also considered by this Court in Aswini Kumar Ghosh v. Arbind Bose, 1953 SCR 1 = (AIR 1952 SC 369). In that case Section 2 of the Supreme Court Advocates Act, 1951 provided that notwithstanding anything contained in the Bar Councils Act, 1926 or in any other law regulating the conditions subject to which a person not entered in the roll of Advocates of a High Court might be permitted to practise in that High Court every Advocate of the High Court shall be entitled as of right to practise in any High Court whether or not he is an Advocate of that High Court. The petitioner in that case insisted on the right to practise as an Advocate in the High Court at Calcutta by virtue of his being an Advocate of the Supreme Court. He made an application under Article 226.

The High Court of Calcutta rejected the application. There was an appeal as well as a writ petition under Article 32. This Court observed that the High Court had not correctly approached the construction of Section 2 by enquiring what the provisions were which that section sought to supersede and then place upon the section such a construction as would make the rights conferred by it co-extensive with the disability imposed by the superseded provisions. This Court observed that first it would be ascertained as to what the enacting part of the section provides on a fair construction of the words used according to the natural and ordinary meaning and the non obstante clause was to be understood as operating to set aside as no longer valid anything contained in relevant existing laws which were inconsistent with the new enactment.

374. The non obstante clause must be allowed to operate with full vigour in its own field. In Dominion of India v. Shrinbai A. Irani, (1955) 1 SCR 206 = (AIR 1954 SC 596) Section 3 of Ordinance No. 19 of 1946 contained a non obstante clause with the words:

"notwithstanding the expiration of the Defence of India Act, 1939, and the rules made thereunder, all requisitioned lands shall continue to be subject to requisition until the expiry of this Ordinance and the appropriate Government may use or deal with any requisitioned land in such manner as may appear to it to be expedient".

The non obstante clause was invoked in support of the submission that only those orders which would have ceased to be operative and come to an end on the expiration of the Defence of India Act and the Rules were the orders which were intended to be continued under Section 3 of the Ordinance. This Court held that although ordinarily there should be a close approximation between the non obstante clause and the operative part of the section, the non obstante clause need not necessarily and always be co-extensive with the operative part, so as to have the effect of cutting down the clear terms of an enactment. The non obstante clause was held not to cut down the construction and restrict the scope of the operation of the enactment, but was to be understood to have been incorporated in the enactment by way of abundant caution and not by way of limiting the ambit and scope of the operative part of the enactment. The result was that all immovable properties which when the Defence of India Act expired were subject to any requisition effected under the Defence of India Act and Rules thereunder were to continue to be subject to requisition until the expiry of the Ordinance.

375. Mr. Palkhivala submitted that the petitioner's contention that the order of the President was a nullity was not a dispute within Article 363. The ordinary meaning of dispute is a contention, a controversy, a difference of opinion, a conflict of claims, and assertion of right on one side and the denial of it by the other. In Stroud Judicial Dictionary it will appear that a dispute as to whether a thing is ultra vires is nonetheless as dispute within an arbitration clause. In United Provinces v. Governor-General in Council, 1939 FCR 124 = (AIR 1939 FC 58) the plaintiff asked for a declaration that certain provisions of the Cantonments Act, 1924 were ultra vires. The Governor-General in Council denied that the provisions were invalid and further contended that the dispute was not justiciable before the Court. It was held that Section 204 (1) of the Government of India Act, 1935 conferred exclusive jurisdiction on the Federal Court in any dispute between the Governor-General in Council and any province if and in so far as the dispute involves any question (whether of law or fact) on which the existence or extent of a legal right depends. The law in that case was challenged to be ultra vires. The plaintiff denied the validity of the law and the respondent asserted its validity. It was, therefore, a dispute on which the existence of a legal right depended. In the present case the dispute is whether the President has or has not the power to make the order impugned in these proceedings.

376. The next question which falls for consideration is the meaning of the words "right accruing under", "any liability or obligation arising out of", "any of the provisions of the Constitution". It is obvious that if any right is said to accrue under or liability is said to arise out of any provision of the Constitution, the matter ends, there as far as those words are concerned. The contention of the petitioner that the President has no power under Article 366 (22) to make an order for derecognition is a right asserted by the petitioner under the provisions of the Constitution and it is also the petitioner's contention that the President has no right arising out of Article 366 (22) not to make an order of derecognition. It is necessary to have recourse to Article 366 (22) and Article 291 to find out the nature of the petitioner's claim, the extent of the petitioner's right on the one hand and the nature of the order of the President and the extent of the right of the President on the other.

377. The most crucial words in Article 363 are "the provisions of the Constitution relating to any such treaty, agreement, covenant, engagement, sanad or other similar instruments". Mr. Palkhivala's contention was that the order of the President under Article 366 (22) did not give rise to a dispute in respect of a right accruing under the provisions of the Constitution relating to any agreement or covenant. Ordinarily, the word "relate" means to bring a thing or person in relation to another, to connect, establish a relation between, to have reference to, to be related, having relation to and to stand in some relation to another thing. This is the dictionary meaning. Mr. Palkhivala submitted that the provisions of the Constitution, viz., Articles 366 (22), 291 and 362 might have reference to the Covenant but were not related to the Covenant. That is a mere verbal subterfuge because the word 'relate' is synonymous with the word refer.

378. When Article 366 (22) was introduced in the Constituent Assembly as will appear from the Constituent Assembly Debates, Vol. 10 it was said that "the form in which the Rulers find recognition in the new Constitution in no way impairs the democratic set up of the States." Recognition of a Ruler was necessary for the limited purpose of payment out of privy purse and it had no other reference. In Maharaja Pravir Chandra Bhanj Deo Kakatiya v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (1961) 2 SCR 501 = (AIR 1961 SC 775) the Ruler of the State Bastar contended that he was still a sovereign Ruler and an absolute owner of certain villages and that the provisions of the Madhya Pradesh Abolition of Proprietary Rights (Estates, Mahals, Alienated Lands) Act did not apply to him. The Ruler of Bastar ceded to the Government of India full and exclusive authority in relation to the governance of the State and this Court held that the effect of the merger agreement was that a Ruler ceased to be a Ruler of an Indian State and under Article 366 (22) of the Constitution a Ruler was recognised for the purpose of privy purse guaranteed under Article 291. In the Dholpur case, (1970) 2 SCR 631 = (AIR 1970 SC 1946) (supra) the claim to recognition of Rulership is said to be neither a matter of inheritance nor a matter of descent by devolution. This power of recognition of Rulership is not traceable to any statutory authority and it is not a power vested in the executive by virtue of a statute. This power is political power in the field of paramountcy to which the Dominion Government, thereafter the Union Government succeeded. Between the execution of the covenants and the commencement of the Constitution the Rajpramukh exercised the power of recognition upon political consideration. (See Umrao Singh Ajit Singh Ji v. Bhagwati Singh Balbir Singh, AIR 1956 SC 15). The Constitution does not mention any right to be recognised nor any obligation to recognise Ruler. In Article 366 (22) which is a definition clause is embedded only the political power to recognise a Ruler.

379. Succession to Rulership is not automatic in the sense that one who claims succession by law or custom is bound to be recognised. If it were so, the Constitution would have provided. Again, the words "for the time being" indicate that the recognition is neither for any fixed duration nor even for the lifetime of any person nor is a line of succession perpetuated.

380. The power of recognition of Rulers existed during the British days. Between the Indian Independence Act, 1947 and the coming into effect of the Constitution Rulers were so described in covenants and agreements which were unenforceable in municipal courts on the ground of those being Acts of State. It cannot be said that there is any right to Rulership because the Constitution does not enact that there shall be Rulers or that the President shall recognise Rulers. Therefore there is no constitutional mandate of what was contended by the petitioner to be an institution of Rulership. There cannot be said to be a legal right to recognition because the power of the President to recognise for the time being repels any concept of a legal right to Rulership. The claim to recognition can only arise from the covenant or the Constitution. The claim to recognition arises from the covenants and merger agreements and not from Art. 366 (22), because the covenants and merger agreements were signed by the Rulers and guaranteed by the Government. Under Article 366 (22) it was that Ruler or his successor who could be recognised. The guarantee regarding succession to the gaddi according to law and custom is in the covenants and agreements. Such succession can only mean succession to the Ruler who signed the covenant. When the covenant guaranteed the succession, it was guarantee of succession to the Ruler who signed the covenant. Therefore, the obligation to recognise a Ruler arises only from the covenants and agreements. There is no legal enforceable right to recognition under the covenant. No legal right to Rulership arises under Article 366 (22) either. If there were legal right, Article 366 (22) would have said that a Ruler means the Prince by whom any covenant was entered into and who shall be recognised by the President as a Ruler.

381. The recognition of Rulership does not exist in splendid isolation. The recognition of Rulership is intended only for the purpose of Article 291 and Article 362 in relation to covenants and merger agreements and for no other purpose. Therefore, Article 366 (22) is a necessary and ancillary provision relating to Articles 291 and 362. Without recognition of a Ruler under Article 366 (22) no effect can be given to payment of privy purse, guaranteed in the covenants and agreements.

382. When counsel for the petitioner submitted that the order of the President was intended to abolish the concept of Rulership, he was reading into the Constitution, a permanent constitutional mandate for continuance of Rulers under the rubric of recognition of Rulers. Analogies between the President, Vice-President, the Chief Justice and the Judges of this Court, the Judges of the High Court, the Public Service Commission and the Election Commission and the Rulers were drawn to support the theory that Rulership was an institution like the offices mentioned by way of illustration. These are constitutional offices recognised by the Constitution. The sanction of these offices is the Constitution. It is sophistry to speak of Rulership as an institution. When institutions are recognised the Constitution has specifically designated and recognised them by names, like Devaswom in Article 290-A, the National Library, the Indian Museum in List I Entry 62 of the Seventh Schedule, the Banaras Hindu University, the Aligarh Muslim University, the Delhi University in List I Entry 63 of the Seventh Schedule. Article 366 (22) has no significance apart from Articles 291 and 362. Inasmuch as there is no legal right to recognition it makes no difference whether there is derecognition of one Ruler or derecognition of all the Rulers. It was said that there is no power of derecognition. This Court has held in the Dholpur case, (1970) 2 SCR 631 = (AIR 1970 SC 1946) (supra) that there is power to derecognise. The Constitution does not say that the President is bound to recognise a Ruler. It follows therefore that after derecognition he is not equally bound to recognise another person as Ruler.

383. The second limb of Article 363 speaks of rights accruing under or liability or obligation arising out of the provision of the Constitution relating to covenants or agreements. It is, therefore, to be seen whether Article 366 (22) relates to covenants or agreements. No person can be recognised as a Ruler under Article 366 (22) until first he entered into a covenant referred to in Article 291 or secondly he is recognised by the President as the successor of the Ruler recognised under the first part of Article 366 (22). Therefore, the claim to be recognised as a Ruler can only arise if he or his predecessor signed the covenant. There is express and direct relation to covenants. Counsel for the petitioner submitted that if the dominant and immediate purpose was not the enforcement of the covenant neither Article 291 nor Article 366 (22) could be said to be related to the covenants or merger agreements. These words "dominant and immediate purpose of enforcement of the covenant" are new words and therefore these words can neither be read into the Constitution nor the meaning of the words "relate to" be allowed to have such a constricted meaning by the introduction of alien words.

384. It was said that the covenants and merger agreements were meant only for the purpose of identifying the Rulers. Article 366 (22) has been put in relation to Article 291 and Article 362 and one cannot abstract Article 366 (22) from the collocation of those Articles. All these three Articles 291, 362 and 366 (22) stem from the covenants and merger agreements and but for the covenants and merger agreements these Articles would have not been there in the Constitution. The entire concept of recognition comes from the covenants and merger agreements, and cannot be divorced from Articles 291 and 362. The object of Article 366 (22) was to subserve Articles 291 and 362 for understanding and giving effect to them. Ruler in Article 366 (22) is description of the person referred to in Articles 291 and 362. If the petitioner challenges the power of the President to derecognise him he claims that he has a right to continue as a Ruler which is a right related to covenants.

385. It was said that if the President derecognises one the President was bound to recognise another person as his successor. In 1956 the Ruler of Baudh in Orissa died. The President decided not to recognise any successor to the Ruler. The widow was granted an allowance and a suitable residence was allotted to her use for her lifetime. Again in 1958 when Mahant Digvijay Das of Nandgaon died the Rulership of Nandgaon was allowed to lapse. The widow was granted allowance. No successor to the Ruler was recognised. In the year 1968 when the Ruler of Delath died no successor to the Ruler was recognised. In the month of August, 1970 the Rulership of Malpur was also allowed to lapse. In the case of Baroda the Ruler was derecognised and during his lifetime his successor was recognised as a Ruler. That was on grounds of misconduct. These cases indicate that no legal right to Rulership was asserted. The President in recognising a Ruler need not follow law of succession and above all there is no legal obligation on the President to appoint a Ruler. The Attorney General and Mr. Mohan Kumarmangalam rightly said that the character and quality of recognition by the President was such that no duty was cast on the President to recognise any person as Ruler after he derecognised one since Article 366 (22) did not contain words of compulsion that a Ruler must be recognised for each State and there must always be a Ruler for each State.

386. It was said that the power of the President was used after the Constitution Amendment Bill was rejected by the Rajya Sabha. That is a totally irrelevant consideration and cannot prejudice or alter the Constitution. If the President has the power to derecognise, the power will speak and hold good.

387. Mr. Palkhivala relied on the decisions of this Court as also the recent decision of the House of Lords in support of the proposition that if the order was a nullity there was no bar of jurisdiction. The decisions are Smt. Ujjam Bai v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (1963) 1 SCR 778 = (AIR 1962 SC 1621); (1964) 4 SCR 733 = (AIR 1964 SC 72); (1964) 4 SCR 797 = (AIR 1964 SC 381); 1966-2 SCR 553 = (AIR 1966 SC 893) and Anisminie Ltd. v. Foreign Compensation Commission, 1969-2 AC 147. It is a general rule that where Parliament has created new rights and duties and has appointed a specific Tribunal for their enforcement recourse must be had to that Tribunal alone. The jurisdiction of the Courts of law in those cases is ousted until statutory process has been completed except in so far as the Courts may prohibit the Tribunal from proceeding on the ground that it had no jurisdiction to determine a particular matter. In situations, where the Courts have no jurisdiction to intervene, they nevertheless review the validity of the final determination by the chosen Tribunal either on the ground that the autho-urity was not the one designated by the Act or where it was empowered to determine an issue it did not address itself to the matter committed to it or where it violated the rule of natural justice. All the decisions relied on by Mr. Palkhivala dealt with the power of the Court to interfere where a statute is impeached as ultra vires or action under the statute is said to be without jurisdiction or where action is said to be procedurally ultra vires as in the case of Ujjam Bai, (1963) 1 SCR 778 = (AIR 1962 SC 1621) (supra) or where the executive act was mala fide and for alien purpose as in Pratap Singh's case, (1964) 4 SCR 797 = (AIR 1964 SC 72) (supra) or where an order of detention under the Defence of India Act was challenged in violation of the Act and also on the ground that it was mala fide as in Makhan Singh's case, (1964) 4 SCR 797 = (AIR 1964 SC 381) (supra). The decision of this Court in (1969) 3 SCR 662 = (AIR 1969 SC 78) on which Counsel for the petitioner relied is again illustrative of the type of cases where Courts have interfered on the ground that the appointed Tribunal did not comply with provisions of the statute or exceeded jurisdiction or failed to observe principles of natural justice.

388. The decision of the House of Lords in the Foreign Compensation Commission case, 1969-2 AC 147 (Supra) on which the petitioner relied contained a clause in a statute called the Foreign Compensation (Determination and Registration of Claims) Order which provided for determination of compensation by the Commission and contained a section that the determination by the Commission of any application made to them under the Act was not to be called in question in any court of law. It was held that a finality clause of the nature in that statute protected determination which was not a nullity. The English Company owned property in Egypt. The property was sequestrated under the provisions of a proclamation by the Egyptian Authorities. The plaintiff company sold the sequestrated property to an Egyptian organisation. The English Company made an application to the Foreign Compensation Commission and claimed that they were entitled in the Egyptian Compensation Fund in respect of their sequestrated property. The Commission made a determination that the plaintiff company failed to establish a claim. The plaintiff company then brought an action for a declaration that the determination was a nullity by contending that the Commission had misconstrued the order in finding that the Egyptian organisation to whom the plaintiff had sold the property was the plaintiff's successors in title. The House of Lords held that the word "determination" was not to be construed as including everything which purported to be a determination but was not in fact a determination because the Commission had misconstrued the provisions of the order defining their jurisdiction. The ratio of the decision of the House of Lords was not whether the Foreign Compensation Commission made a wrong decision but whether the Commission enquired into and decided a matter which they had no right to consider. The Foreign Compensation Commission in that case held that the Egyptian organisation to whom the plaintiff company had sold the property was the successor-in-title and as the Egyptian organisation was not a British National, the Commission rejected the claim of the English Company. These decisions deal with the jurisdiction of the appointed Tribunal, viz., whether the Tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction or has failed to exercise its jurisdiction.

389. In the present case, the question for consideration is the provision of the Constitution which under some Articles confer jurisdiction on this Court and in another Article excludes the jurisdiction of the Court. A private clause of this nature in the Constitution stands on an entirely different footing from a clause of that nature in other statutes. In ordinary statutes, statutory authorities are entrusted with powers and duties. When a finality clause appears in such statutes, the courts interfere with acts or decisions of such statutory bodies or authorities, by issuing writs of mandamus, prohibition or certiorari, on the grounds of commanding them to exercise their jurisdiction or not to exceed their jurisdiction or not to usurp any jurisdiction they do not possess or to observe the principles of natural justice or where the courts find that the acts or decisions are tainted by extraneous consideration or collateral reasons or mala fide or fraud.

390. In the present case, the petitioners have invoked the jurisdiction of this Court under Article 32. Article 32, is excluded by the opening words in Article 363. It was said by counsel for the petitioner that the order of the President was a nullity the petitioner's property rights were invaded, and, therefore, the jurisdiction of this Court was attracted. The fallacy of the petitioner's submission is in totally overlooking the provisions of Article 363 which exclude in express and unambiguous terms the jurisdiction of this Court notwithstanding any provision of the Constitution. The Courts normally lean in favour of stretching the jurisdiction but when the Constitution which invests this Court with jurisdiction with one hand divests it of jurisdiction with another in specifically designated disputes the attempt to overreach the Article which bars jurisdiction of courts will be totally impermissible. It is at this stage that the words of Holmes C. J. in Communications Assns. v. Douds, (1949) 339 US 382 will throw light. "The provisions of the Constitution are not mathematical formulae having their essence in their form; they are organic living institutions transplanted from English soil. Their significance is vital, not formal, it is to be gathered not simply by taking the words and a dictionary, but by considering their origin and the line of growth".

Therefore, if the Constitution has placed a restriction on the jurisdiction of this Court, it will be trifling and tinkering with the Constitution if this Court interfered in matters which were excluded from jurisdiction. It is well settled that what is forbidden directly cannot be achieved indirectly.

391. In interpreting these four allied Articles when this Court finds that it has no jurisdiction it will say so and in saying so, the jurisdiction of this Court is not whittled down in any manner. The jurisdiction of this Court is all pervasive and all embracing in regard to fundamental rights of citizens. The petitioners are citizens but the rights they claim are recognition of rulership, payment of Privy Purse and enjoyment of princely privileges which are not fundamental rights on account of unenforceability. These special rights belong to a world of their own and that is why the makers of the Constitution intertwined Article 363 with the allied Articles 291, 363, 366 (22) as the forbidden frontiers of Courts.

392. It is now to be found out whether there are disputes with regard to payment of Privy Purses and whether such disputes can be said to arise out of the provisions of this Constitution, and thirdly whether the provisions of the Constitution in Article 291 relate to covenants and merger agreements. Mr. Palkhivala contended that there were no disputes as to payment of privy purses. This submission is unacceptable. The petitioner's claim in the petition to continue to be recognised a Ruler is for the purpose of payment of Privy Purse. It is not suggested that a recognition of Ruler is in the abstract. A recognition of a Ruler is not by itself property. When there has been an order of recognition of a Ruler the Ruler then becomes entitled to payment of Privy Purse and enjoyment of other rights and privileges mentioned in Arts. 291 and 362 respectively. For days there were discussions, debates and disputes at the Bar as to whether there were disputes as to Privy Purses. The pleading and the affidavit evidence point with unerring accuracy that the petitioners claim Privy Purse, assert title to Privy Purse and insist on payment of Privy Purse guaranteed in covenants and merger agreements and recognised in Article 291 and by reason of provisions contained in Article 366 (22) which speaks of recognition of Rulers they ask for relief with regard to continuance of recognition of Rulers and payment of Privy Purses. It is indisputable that the merger agreements and covenants not only speak of payment of Privy Purse but also mention guarantee of the Government in that behalf. These covenants and merger agreements were totally unenforceable prior to the Constitution. Article 291 is a constitutional recognition of the guarantee regarding Privy Purse mentioned in the covenants and agreements. Article 291 does not create any new and independent right of payment of Privy Purse. Article 291 is related to the covenant and is not unrelated to the covenants and merger agreements.

393. When Article 291 was introduced in the Constituent Assembly as Article 267 it was said to give constitutional recognition to those guarantees and to provide for the expenses being charged on the central revenues subject to such recoveries as might be made from time to time from the States in respect of these payments. Article 291 (2) as it stood at the time of the commencement of the Constitution indicated that where territories of any Indian State are comprised within a State specified in Part A or Part B of the First Schedule, there shall be charged on and paid out of the consolidated fund of that State such contribution, if any, in respect of the payments made by the Government of India under clause (1) and for such period as may, subject to any agreement entered into in that behalf under clause (1) of Article 278 be determined by order of the President. Article 278 of the Constitution as it stood in 1950 provided that the Government of India might, subject to the provisions of clause (2) of Art. 278, enter into an agreement with the Government of the State specified in Part B of the First Schedule with respect to inter alia the contribution by such State in respect of any payment by the Government of India under cl. (1) of Article 291 and when an agreement was so entered into the provisions of Chapter I of Part XII of the Constitution (Articles 264 to 291 under the title Finance) shall in relation to such States have effect subject to the terms of such agreement. Article 278 and Article 291 (2) were omitted by the Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956 in the year 1956. By the same Constitution (Seventh Amendment) Act, 1956 the First Schedule to the Constitution as it originally stood consisting of Parts A, B and C in regard to the States and the territories of India was repealed and substituted by the First Schedule containing the States and the Union territories. These provisions in the Constitution as they stood in 1950 indicated that Article 291 embodied the constitutional recognition for the fulfilment of the guarantees and assurances given by the Government of India in respect of Privy Purses and provided for necessary adjustments in respect of Privy Purse entailed by changed circumstances and conditions.

394. This Court has held in (1964) 5 SCR 1 = (AIR 1964 SC 444) that in order to give constitutional recognition to the guarantees and assurances under the Covenants and Merger Agreements Articles 362, 363, 131 proviso and 291 were incorporated in the Constitution. The Covenants and Merger Agreements did not have any legal sanction inasmuch as neither the Government of India Act, 1935 provided for the same nor were these enforceable in municipal courts. The sanction of the Covenants and Merger Agreements was purely political. The treaties in the United States are enforced as law. It is not so in our Constitution nor is it so under the British law. During the British Rule in India political pensions were given to persons in Indian States. They were given because of reasons of State policy. When the Constitution came into force the guarantee for the payment of the sums of money as Privy Purse contained in the Covenants and Agreements was continued by Article 291 but the essential political character of the Privy Purse was preserved by Article 363 by enacting that the guarantee could not be enforced in municipal courts.

395. It might be asked here as to whether any Ruler of an Indian State without being recognised a Ruler by the President could prefer any claim to Privy Purse under Article 291. The answer would be in the negative, because the words of Article 291 in the Constitution predicate that where under any agreement or covenant entered into by the Ruler of an Indian State before the commencement of the Constitution the payment of any sum free of tax has been guaranteed or assured to any Ruler of such State as Privy Purse (a) such sums shall be charged on and paid out of the consolidated fund of India and (b) the sums so paid to any Ruler shall be exempt from all taxes on income. The Ruler of an Indian State mentioned in the first part of Article 291 is different to the Ruler mentioned in Article 291 (b). The latter refers to the Ruler defined under Article 366 (22) and recognised by the President. At once the provisions of Article 366 (22) are attracted to find out as to who that Ruler is. It is a Ruler who is recognised by the President as the Ruler of the State. It is because of the combined effect of Articles 291, 366 (22) and 363 that this Court in 1965-3 SCR 201 = (AIR 1965 SC 1798) (supra) held that Privy Purse was paid for political consideration and was not a right legally enforceable in any municipal court and the political character was preserved by Article 363 by taking Privy Purse beyond the reach of courts of law. In 1961-1 SCR 779 = (AIR 1961 SC 196) this Court said on a consideration of Articles 291 and 362 that if in disregard of the guarantee or assurance given under the covenant or agreement any legislation were made it could not be questioned in Court because of Article 363. It is true that Article 362 speaks of guarantee of rights other than that of Privy Purse.

396. It was said on behalf of the petitioner that the words "Charged on and paid out of the Consolidated Fund" in Article 291 meant that a security was created in favour of the petitioner in respect of privy purse, and, therefore, a new and independent right was created. It was said that Article 291 was a self-sustaining or self-ordaining provision. Article 291 draws its sustenance and vitality from covenants and merger agreements. If payment has not been guaranteed under the covenants or merger agreements, Article 291 does not come into operation at all. Under Article 291 effect is to be given to the covenants and merger agreements where payment of any sum has been guaranteed. Each covenant has to be examined and construed to give effect to the guarantee mentioned in the covenant and recognised in the Article. It will be utterly wrong to equate the words "charged on the Consolidated Fund" with "a charge by way of security", because Art. 291 only gives effect to guarantees in the covenants and agreements by charging the payment on the Consolidated Fund. Article 291 cannot be said to create a new right or a new obligation by charging the sum on the Consolidated Fund because the charge is only in respect of the right and obligation under the covenant and it is therefore neither a new nor an independent right. It was said that the covenants and merger agreements were merely to be referred to for the purpose of identifying the Rulers and the privy purse. The identification is a verbal subterfuge. Assuming Article 291 were a right enforceable a Ruler would have to prove first that he was a Ruler who was recognised by the President and thus entitled to privy purse the payment whereof was guaranteed by the covenant or the merger agreement. Secondly, he would have to prove the covenant whereby he claimed a privy purse. For that again he would have to prove on the strength of the covenant or the merger agreement. Proof is in aid of title. Proof is not dissociated from claim. Claim will fail without proof. Therefore, covenants and merger agreements are indissolubly bound up with Article 291.

397. Again, there were different merger agreements with different Rulers providing for different sums for payment to the Rulers and also in some cases for payment of different sums to successors. The Orissa and Chattisgarh Merger Agreement did not mention about payment of privy purse to the successors to Rulers. The Tehri Garhwal Merger Agreement mentioned also the heirs and successors of the Maharaja for payment of privy purse. The Rampur Merger Agreement mentioned certain amount as privy purse for the Nawab and a different sum for payment to the successors. The Bhopal Merger Agreement mentioned a certain sum for the Nawab and a different sum for his successor. The Agreement of Himachal Pradesh Rulers mentioned a certain sum for the Ruler but did not mention about successors. The Bilaspur Merger Agreement mentioned a certain sum as privy purse of the Raja which was to include the allowances of the Yuvraja but did not mention anything about successors. These differences illustrate that Article 291 is vitally related to the covenants and merger agreements and draw sustenance from them.

398. The words "charged on and paid out of the Consolidated Fund" in Article 291 mean that the sum shall not be submitted to the vote of Parliament, and Article 113 (1) makes a provision to that effect. Article 291 does not by itself create any independent right of any Ruler to be paid any sum out of any charged fund. If it were a charge, it would be a debt which would be assignable. If a Ruler were to assign or mortgage or create a charge in respect of his privy purse in favour of another person there would have been no legal validity for such assignment and mortgage or charge. The reason is that there is no vested legal right in praesenti in favour of a Ruler. Again, a privy purse is a payment of a political character and is legally unenforceable. There is no right either in rem or in personam in favour of a Ruler in regard to payment of privy purse. Supposing the privy purse were reduced would it be competent to a Ruler to maintain an action for payment of the entire sum. Article 363 would be an impediment and no court would be able to adjudicate the question. The words "charged on and paid out of the Consolidated Fund" are technical Parliamentary expression for payment out of public revenues. These words have been borrowed from English Parliamentary Practice. These words have a specific legal history since 1816 when Consolidated Fund Act was passed in England and in 1854 the English Act provided in 2 Schedules as charges payable out of the Consolidated Fund and other charges upon which vote would lie.

399. Prior to 1935 the system of presenting accounts before the legislature was under four heads, i.e. transferred subjects, reserved subjects voted and non-voted items. In 1935 the Government of India Act, 1935 used the expression "charged" in replacement of the expression "voted". After the Constitution came into existence the same system continued for presentation of the Annual Financial Statement under Article 112 (2) and Appropriation Bill under Article 114 (1). The Estimates under Article 113 (1) were (a) sums required to meet the expenses as expenditure charged upon the Consolidated Fund and (b) the sum required to meet the other expenditure proposed to be met from the Consolidated Fund. The Appropriation Bill means (a) the grants made by the House of the People; and (b) the expenditure charged on the consolidated fund but not exceeding in any case the amount shown in the statement previously laid before Parliament. Article 113 says that so much of the estimates as relates to expenditure charged upon the consolidated fund shall not be submitted to the vote of Parliament but there is nothing to prevent discussion in either House of Parliament of any of these estimates. The expenditure is charged and removed from the vote of Parliament.

400. In the English Parliamentary Practice what is charged is the expenditure that is to be made without vote of Parliament. These are first, a sum appropriated to a particular service which cannot be spent on another service, secondly, the sum appropriated is the maximum sum, and thirdly, it is available only in respect of charges which have arisen during one of the years to which the relevant Appropriation Act applies (See May Parliamentary Practice, 17th Ed. 713). The tests used to determine whether the expenditure involves a charge on the consolidated fund are that a charge must be new and distinct, that it must be payable out of the exchequer and it is to be effectively imposed. In England it will appear that the Ministers of the Crown Act, 1937 in Section 4 enacts that a pension under that section is payable as of right. Section 7 of that English Act of 1937 used the expression "shall be charged and payable out of the Consolidated Fund." These provisions in the English Act show first that the right to be paid is under S. 4 and the creation of a charge on the consolidated fund is under Section 7.

401. The words "charged on the consolidated fund" in Article 291 mean that the expenditure is non-votable and these are terms of public finance. Charge on the Consolidated Fund is an accounting arrangement before Parliament. Certain expenditure is authorised out of public revenue as independent of Parliamentary control. Charge is meant for expenditure. The words "paid out of the consolidated fund" denote the source from which the expenditure will be met. The words "charged and paid out of the consolidated fund" do not create any legal right in a party. The right to payment arises de hors the charge on the consolidated fund. The charge on the Consolidated Fund is for purposes of payment in accordance with the guarantee and assurance of payment under the covenants and merger agreements. The right to payment of privy purse arises from recognition by Art. 291 of guarantee payment of privy purse under a covenant. The scheme of Article 291 is similar to Article 290 where the expenses of any court or commission or pension payable to any person who served before or after the commencement of the Constitution in connection with the affairs of the Union or the State are charged on the Consolidated Fund. Article 290-A which speaks of a sum of Rs. 46,50,000 to be charged on and paid out of the Consolidated Fund of the State of Kerala every year to the Travancore Devaswom Fund is a different provision because it speaks of payment to a designated person as a part of the Constitution. No such comparable words are to be found in Article 291, namely, that the sums shall be paid to the Rulers. The reasons are twofold. First, payment of Privy Purses is under covenants or merger agreements and secondly these payments were charged on the Consolidated Fund of India because the payment was not out of the Consolidated Fund of any State.

402. Originally, Article 291 contained the expression "paid out of" in both sub-clause (a) of clause (1) and Clause (2) of Article 291 for the purpose of integration of finances, assets, and liabilities of the new Constitution as between Federal Government at the Centre and the Indian States which guaranteed payment of Privy Purse under covenants and merger agreements. The original Article 291 was the result of the decision of the Constituent Assembly regarding sharing between the Consolidated Fund of India and the Consolidated Fund of Part A and Part B States regarding Privy Purse.

403. Counsel on behalf of the petitioner submitted that unless the words "charged on and paid out of the consolidated fund" mean security and right to be paid neither the President nor the Chairman or Deputy Chairman, nor the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker, nor the Judges of the Supreme Court, nor the Comptroller and Auditor-General would have security as to payments. But, these persons do not derive their right to be paid from any covenant or merger agreement. Secondly, these persons hold offices under the Constitution whereas the Rulers do not. Thirdly, Articles 59 (3), 97, 125, 148 (3) indicate in no uncertain terms that they shall be entitled to such emoluments and allowances and privileges as may be determined by Parliament by law. In the case of the President, the Chairman, the Deputy Chairman of the Council of States, the Speaker and the Deputy Speaker of the House of the People Articles 59 (3) and 97 provide that there shall be paid to them such allowances and salaries as may be fixed by Parliament, by law and until the provision in that behalf is so made such salaries and allowances as are specified in the Second Schedule. As for the Judges of this Court Article 125 (1) enacts that there shall be paid to the Judges of this Court such salaries as are specified in the Second Schedule. Article 148 (3) enacts that the salaries and other conditions of the Comptroller and Auditor General shall be such as may be determined by Parliament and until they are so determined, shall be as specified in the Second Schedule. Therefore, it was an unfortunate comparison made by Mr. Palkhivala between these persons and the Rulers. To illustrate, some of these persons become entitled to salaries by virtue of provisions in the Constitution, e.g. Article 125 directing payment of their salaries and therefore the charge on the Consolidated Fund in respect of such salaries e. g. in Article 112 (d) (i) cannot be intended again as a direction for payment.

404. It was said on behalf of the petitioner that in the covenants and merger agreements, the payment of Privy Purse was to be from all taxes whereas under the Constitution Privy Purse was to be exempt free of all taxes on income and therefore there was a new right. This is totally misreading Article 291 (b) where it is said that "the sums so paid to any Ruler shall be exempted from all taxes on income." The words "so paid" relate to the sum guaranteed under the covenants and the agreements and to the same sum charged on the Consolidated Fund. It is only when payment is made to a Ruler that it shall be exempt from taxes on income. That is why the words "so paid to any Ruler" in Article 291 (b) indicate that when the sums are paid to a Ruler out of the Consolidated Fund the sums shall be exempt from all taxes. The Constitution does not mention payment of Privy Purse to any particular person. One has to turn to the covenant and the merger agreement to have all the particulars of persons, sums guaranteed and assured. Article 291 does not create any new and independent right but it merely gives constitutional recognition to guarantees under covenants and merger agreements which were and are unenforceable as those arise out of Acts of State. (See 1964-6 SCR 461 = (AIR 1964 SC 1043), (supra).) Article 291 is strung with the covenants because such sums in Article 291 (a) mean the sums guaranteed under covenants and merger agreements. The fons et origo is the guarantee contained in the Covenants and Agreements.

405. Another argument was advanced on behalf of the petitioner that there was a substitution of rights under covenants and merger agreements by

Article 291. The rights guaranteed under the covenants and merger agreements are matters to which Article 291 relates. The guarantee of payment under the covenants and merger agreements is recognised under Article 291. This Article gives effect to the covenants and agreements and it is related to these.

406. There were some arguments that if the amount charged on the consolidated fund on account of Privy Purse were not paid, the same would be carried over in the Consolidated Fund from year to year. That is not so because any sum charged on the consolidated fund is not carried to the next year but it lapses.

407. Article 362 has been held by this Court in Udaipur case, 1964-5 SCR 1 = (AIR 1964 SC 444) (supra) to fall within Article 363. Article 291 has also been held by this Court to fall within the bar of Article 363 in Nawab Usman Ali Khan's case 1965-3 SCR 201 = (AIR 1965 SC 1798) (supra). It was suggested that the only Article which could fall within Article 363 was Article 362 which was in closest proximity. That would be an erroneous approach to interpret the Constitution. Article 363 uses the words "provisions of the Constitution". The word "provisions" indicates more than one Article. Even at the risk of repetition it has to be stated that Articles 291, 362 and 366 (2) have a most direct and visible relation to Article 363.

408. Mr. Palkhivala contended that the petitioner had existing rights to Privy Purse and privileges prior to the Constitution and that such existing rights were incorporated in the Constitution by Articles 294 (b) and 295 (1) (b) of the Constitution. It has been consistently held by this Court that till recognition, either express or implied, is granted by the new sovereign, the Act of State continues [See 1964-6 SCR 461 = (AIR 1964 SC 1043) (supra)]. Therefore, the covenants and merger agreements were outside the jurisdiction of municipal Courts. The administration of the provincially merged and centrally merged States was by reason of the Extra Provincial Jurisdiction Act, 1947 which applied the laws of the Dominion of India to those merged States. It was only by reason of the merger agreement that the Dominion of India exercised such extra provincial jurisdiction. The Instruments of Accession did not confer such authority. Even when Sections 290A and 290B were introduced in the Government of India Act, 1935 administration in the provincially merged States was still carried on on the strength of the merger agreement. [See Seraikella case 1951 SCR 174 = (AIR 1951 SC 253) (supra)]. The merged States were not yet completely integrated with India.

409. The States Merger (Governor's Provinces) Order, 1949 stated that as from the appointed day, i.e., the date of the commencement of the order 1 August, 1949, the States specified in the Schedule "shall be administered in all respects as if they form part of the provinces specified in the heading of the Schedule." Again in Section 7 of the States Merger (Governor's Provinces) Order, 1949 it is stated that all liabilities in respect of loans, guarantees and other financial obligations of the Dominion Government as arise out of covenants of a merged State, including in particular the liability for the payment of any sums to the Ruler of the merged State on account of his Privy Purse or to persons in the merged State on account of political pensions and the like shall as from the appointed day be liabilities of the absorbing Provinces unless the loan, guarantee or other financial obligation is relatable to central purpose. The Privy Purse is mentioned separately to and independently of loans, guarantees and other financial obligations. The character of the liability regarding Privy Purse is not changed by the States Merger (Governor's Provinces) Order, 1949. The Act of State which commenced with the Instruments of Accession continued even after the merger agreements as has been held by this Court in Vohra Fiddali's case 1964-6 SCR 461 = (AIR 1964 SC 1043) (supra).

410. The liabilities in Arts. 294 (b) and 295 (1) (b) of the Constitution refer to other legal rights which were enforceable in court of law. Privy Purse under the covenants and merger agreements were no such legal rights enforceable in a court of law for the obvious reason that if prior to be enforced in a municipal court the Government would have demurred on the plea of act of State that plea in bar would be available to the Government of India as a defence to any claim under Articles 294 (b) and 295 (1) (b). (See Union of India v. Gwalior Rayon Silk Mfg. (Wvg.) Co. Ltd., 1964-7 SCR 892 at p. 908 = (AIR 1964 SC 1903 at p. 1913). Furthermore, Article 295 (1) (b) cannot apply because neither Privy Purse nor privileges are matters enumerated in the Union List. Articles 291 and 362 are special provisions dealing with Privy Purse and privileges. Articles 294 (b) and 295 (1) (b) deal with devolution of liabilities of the Dominion and Part B States respectively. The Constitution has dealt with Privy Purse and privileges in separate Articles. Therefore, Articles 294 (b) and 295 (1) (b) can have no application to Privy Purse and privileges. (See the South India Corpn. P) Ltd. v. The Secretary, Board of Revenue, Trivandrum, 1964-4 SCR 280 at p. 297 = (AIR 1964 SC 207 at p. 215) where this Court held that Article 372 was a general provision and Art. 277 was a special provision and a special provision was to be given effect to the extent of its scope, leaving the general provision to control cases where the special provision does not apply.) The petitioner's contention on existing rights prior to the Constitution as well as continuance thereof fails.

411. Agreement to pay privy purses and to continue privileges of the Princes which were guaranteed by the Government of India before the Constitution were all political agreements born out of political bargains to achieve integration of Indian States with the Dominion of India. This political bargain was carried into the Constitution by the insertion of Article 291 for payment of Privy Purse, Article 362 for continuance of privileges and Article 366 (22) for recognition of Princes, and the political character was preserved by inserting Article 363 which bars the jurisdiction of the court in respect of disputes arising out of covenants and agreements and these Articles which are related to the covenants and agreements.

412. Mr. Palkhivala contended that the order affected the rights of the petitioner under the Wealth Tax Act, the Income-tax Act, the Gift Tax Act, the Hindu Succession Act, the Estates Duty Act, Customs Regulation, Code of Civil Procedure, Code of Criminal Procedure and Madhya Bharat Gangajali Trust Fund Act, 1954. The Wealth Tax Act, 1957 defines a Ruler as defined in clause (22) of Article 366 of the Constitution and enacts certain exemptions in respect of certain assets, namely the official residence in the occupation of the Ruler. The right of the petitioner under the Wealth Tax Act is dependent on being recognised as a Ruler by the President under Article 366 (22). If the order cannot be challenged for the reasons given above, the petitioner can have no right under the Wealth Tax Act, because the right under the Wealth Tax Act is derived only from his recognition as a Ruler under Article 366 (22). Under the Income-tax Act, 1922 (Section 4 (3) (x)) and the Income-tax Act, 1961, S. 10 (19), amount received by a Ruler as Privy Purse is not included as income. Under Income Tax Part B States Taxation Concessions Order, 1950 the bona fide annual value of the palaces declared by the Central Government as official residence of the Ruler is exempted from taxation. Therefore, if the rights are derived from recognition of Rulership by the President under Article 366 (22) and if the recognition cannot be impeached no right arises. Under the Gift Tax Act, tax is not leviable on gifts out of Privy Purse for maintenance of relatives or for performance of official ceremonies. If no Privy Purse is paid no question of any gift out of Privy Purse arises. Under the Hindu Succession Act the Act shall not apply to any estate which descends to a single heir by the terms of any covenant or agreement. Succession is a right which can be claimed by heirs of the petitioners. The petitioners cannot have any fundamental right of any such right under the Hindu Succession Act. Under the Estates Duty Act, exemption is given in respect of any one building in the occupation of a Ruler declared by the Central Government as his official residence. If the petitioner disposes of his property he will not be affected. The duty will have to be paid by someone who will inherit or succeed. As for the Customs Regulations exemption is available only to Rulers recognised by the President. When he ceases to be recognised no exemption applies. The trust properties arise only in the case of Madhya Bharat Gangajali Fund Trust Act, 1954. The Ruler of Gwalior is one of the trustees and is the President. The trust will not fail. The trustees will continue and the Act may have to be amended in a suitable manner. The Civil Procedure Code grants exemption to Rulers from being sued. Exemption from being sued is not personal liberty within the meaning of Art. 21. Exemption from being sued is procedural advantage which will no longer be available. Again, section 197 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is a procedural advantage. In all these cases the petitioner cannot complain in this Court because the position is derived from the recognition of Rulership and Article 363 is an insurmountable and impenetrable bar.

413. Recognition of Rulership is not a legal right. It is not a right to property. Privy Purse is not a legal right to property. There is no fundamental right to Privy Purse. There is no fundamental right to Rulership.

414. A series of decisions of this Court have held that Article 363 is a bar to rights to Privy Purse, personal rights and privileges, recognition of Rulership from being agitated in courts. These decisions have spoken the words of the Constitution.

415. The petitions, therefore, fail and are dismissed. Each party will pay and bear its own costs.

ORDER

416. In accordance with the opinion of the majority the Petitions are allowed and writs will issue declaring that the orders made by the President on September 6, 1970, challenged here, were illegal and on that account inoperative and the petitioners will be entitled to all their pre-existing rights and privileges including the right to privy purses, as if the orders have not been made. The petitioners will get their costs of the petitions. One hearing fee in those petitions in which the petitioners have appeared through the same counsel.

Petitions allowed.

Mr. K. Jayaram, Advocate, for Appellant.

SHELAT, J.: — The 1st respondent is the wife of the appellant and the mother of the 2nd respondent.

2. The two respondents obtained a decree for maintenance against the appellant. On the appellant's failure to pay the maintenance provided under the decree, the respondents took out execution proceedings which ended in an order for sale of the appellant's property at which the 1st respondent, who also acted as the guardian of the 2nd respondent, then a minor, became the auction purchaser. The 1st respondent had been previously granted leave by the Court to bid at the said auction sale. The amount of maintenance due till then to the respondents was set off against the purchase price.

3. Two applications were then filed by the appellant for setting aside the sale. The reasons urged in the applications were that the decree for maintenance provided separate maintenance for the two respondents, that it was accordingly not a joint decree, that the 1st respondent, therefore, could not set off the whole of the arrears of maintenance due to her and respondent 2, and consequently, was bound to deposit in the Court the balance of auction price after deducting therefrom arrears due to her. The applications were dismissed by the execution Court. The appellant thereupon filed appeals in the High Court against the said orders of dismissal. A learned Single Judge of the High Court upheld the appellant's contentions and allowed the appeals. In letters patent appeals filed by the respondents, a Division Bench of the High Court reversed the order passed by the learned Single Judge and allowed the appeals filed by the respondents. The appellant thereupon applied for a certificate to file an appeal to this Court under Art. 133 (1) of the Constitution urging that he was entitled to a certificate as the judgment of the Letters Patent Bench was one of reversal and the matter satisfied the test of pecuniary value, namely, Rs. 10,000/-, which was the relevant value for the purposes of the instant matter.

4. The Division Bench which heard the application for certificate dismissed it holding that a Single Judge of the High Court exercising its appellate jurisdiction was not "a Court immediately below" the Division Bench of the same High Court which heard the letters patent appeals, and that the judgment of the letters patent Bench against which leave to appeal to the Supreme Court was sought for "was in effect so far as this High Court is concerned one of affirmance" because as the only effective judgment of the High Court, it restored the order of the Court of the first instance upholding the execution sale.

5. The appellant then obtained special leave from this Court, which, however, was confined to the question whether a single Judge of a High Court is a Court immediately below a Division Bench of the same High Court which hears and disposes of a letters patent appeal provided under the Letters Patent of such a High Court.

6. The question whether a Single Judge of a High Court trying a matter, either in exercise of the original jurisdiction of the High Court or its appellate jurisdiction, is a Court immediately below a Division Bench of that same High Court as provided in Article 133 (1) is now covered by two decisions of this Court, and therefore, it is no longer necessary for us to go into any enquiry about such a question. In Ladli Prasad Jaiswal v. Karnal Distillery Co. Ltd., (1964) 1

SCR 270 = (AIR 1963 SC 1279), a bench of five Judges disapproving the decisions relied on by the High Court in this case held that the expressions "a Court immediately below" and "a Court subordinate to the High Court" had different meanings, and were, therefore, not one and the same. This Court held that the test for determining whether an aggrieved party has a right to appeal, other conditions being fulfilled, is not whether the judgment is of a Court subordinate to the High Court but whether the judgment is of a Court immediately below and that a single Judge of the High Court hearing a proceeding either as a Court of original jurisdiction or in exercise of appellate jurisdiction is a Court immediately below the Division Bench which hears an appeal against his judgment under the relevant clause of the Letters Patent. (See also Shri Durga Prasad v. The Banaras Bank Ltd., (1964) 1 SCR 475 = (AIR 1963 SC 1322)).

7. Accordingly, the High Court was not right in refusing the certificate, if other conditions of Article 133 (1) (a) or (b) were satisfied, on the ground that the judgment of the Division Bench was not one of reversal as the learned Single Judge of the High Court was not a Court immediately below the Division Bench of that High Court. The appeals, therefore, have to be allowed which we do, but in the circumstances, there will not be any order as to costs. The cases will go back to the High Court and will be dealt with by the High Court in accordance with law and the observations made hereinabove.

AO/BO/A116/71/CWM/C

(A) Houses and Rents — Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), Section 12 (2) — Demand notice is not invalid merely because it does not give break-up of the sum which was claimed as due per month. (Paras 13, 14, 16)

Thus where the tenant is in doubt or requires clarification in respect of the sum which is claimed per month in the notice as due it was held that he should have called for information on those points from the landlord especially when he was sending replies through a lawyer to the notices issued by the landlord. The mere statement by the tenant in his reply to the notice that the claim was excessive was not enough. It was clear from his conduct that he was fully aware that the amount represented the standard rent with the permitted increases under the Act. Under such circumstances it cannot be held that there was dispute between the landlord and tenant regarding the amount of standard rent or permitted increases so as to attract Section 12 (3) (b).

(B) Houses and Rents — Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (57 of 1947), Section 12 (2) — Demand notice by landlord for permitted increases as due under the Act is not effective only from date of notice. (Para 15)

There is nothing in the Act necessitating landlord to give first a notice under Section 10 or Section 10-C for permitted increases and then a further notice under Section 12. It is enough that the landlord charges the tenant at a higher rate and makes a demand at that rate. The date from which the demand would be effective would not be the date of intimation.

Thus it could not be said that the question of tenant's being in default should have been considered only for the period subsequent to that date.

Mr. V. S. Desai, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. S. S. Shukla, Advocate, with him), for Appellant; Mr. V. M. Tarkunde and Dr. W. S. Barlingay, Sr. Advocates (M/s. Ramesh Malik and Ganpat Rai Advocates, with them), for Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

of a residential building, is directed against the order of the Bombay High Court dated January 9/10, 1967 in Civil Revision Application No. 888 of 1965.

2. The short question that arises for consideration is whether the High Court was justified in holding that the respondent landlord was entitled to seek eviction of the appellant on the ground that the latter had failed to pay the standard rent including the permitted increases for over a period of six months. Incidentally the question also arises whether the notice issued by the respondent on June 15, 1955 is a valid one under Section 12 (2) of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act, 1947 (Bombay Act 57 of 1947), (hereinafter to be referred as the Rent Act). The facts in so far as they are material are as follows:

A building known as Lal Bungalow situate in Kurla Road, Andheri, originally belonged to the respondent and one Ratanbai. The appellant had taken on rent two rooms in the ground-floor in the said building in or about 1940, agreeing to pay monthly rent of Rs. 25.50. In 1943 the entire ground-floor including the two rooms, already occupied by the appellant were taken on a fresh lease by him on a monthly rent of Rs. 45/-. As disputes arose between the co-owners of the building, resulting in the institution of a suit, a Receiver was appointed to take possession of the suit premises. The Receiver went on collecting rent from the appellant at Rs. 45/- per month till March 1954 and subsequently at Rs. 48/2/9. In or about November, 1964 the co-owners settled their disputes and the suit house was allotted to the share of the respondent. The respondent sent a notice through her lawyer on December 21, 1954 to the appellant demanding a sum of Rs. 240/7/6, being the increments in the Municipal Tax in respect of the building from March 1, 1950 to November 30, 1954 at -/1/6 per rupee per month. It was mentioned by the respondent that the said increments were made by the Parle-Andheri Municipality in the years 1945 to 1947. Certain further claims were also made in respect of water charges, but we are now not concerned with that claim in these proceedings. By the said notice the respondent landlord also called upon the appellant to vacate and deliver peaceful possession of the premises by the end of January, 1955. The appellant replied through his lawyer on January 27, 1955. He called upon the respondent to prove her title to the property in respect of which the claim was being made. He pleaded that he had paid to the Receiver all his dues till November, 1954, as also all legitimate increments payable by him. He declined to comply with the request for surrender of possession of the premises on the ground that the said demand was illegal. The respondent by letter of March 24, 1955 sent through her counsel, again reiterated her demand for payment of the increments in the municipal tax. She also gave notice to the appellant terminating his tenancy and called upon him to deliver peaceful vacant possession by the end of April, 1955. There was some further correspondence between the parties and ultimately on June 15, 1955 the respondent sent a lawyer's notice calling upon the appellant to pay a sum of Rs. 315/9/- within the period mentioned therein. The appellant was informed that the said amount represented: (a) Rs. 262/15/6 'being the arrears of rent, including the amount of the increment in Municipal taxes due by you for five months from 1st December, 1954 to 30th April, 1955 at Rs. 52.9.6 per month', and (b) Rs. 52/9/6 'as compensation for use and occupation of the suit premises for the month of May, 1955.

3. It will be noted that in this notice the respondent claimed arrears of rent including the amount of increment in municipal taxes and that the total amount per month was at Rs. 52/9/6. Claim by way of arrears of rent including the increments in municipal taxes was for a period of five months from December 1, 1954 to April 30, 1955 and compensation was further claimed for one month. The appellant again sent a reply through his counsel on July 1, 1955. In this reply he had stated that the claim contained in the notice, dated June 15, 1955 was very much in excess of what was actually due by him. It was further stated that the monthly rent of the premises was only Rs. 45/- and that the municipal tax recoverable was also only Rs. 2/13/- per month. He, however, admitted that from April

1, 1954 there was an addition to the rent according to law, but he stated that he has paid rent at Rs. 48/2/9 including all taxes from April 1, 1954. Admitting that he was in arrears of rent with all charges from December 1, 1954, he stated that he was prepared to remit the dues till June, 1955 though the demand was only for the period ending May, 1955. It was further stated that a cheque for Rs. 337/3/3 representing the arrears at Rs. 48/2/9 for seven months from December 1, 1954 to June 30, 1955 was also being enclosed along with the reply. It is seen from the further letter sent by the respondent on July 12, 1955 that the cheque, received along with the reply, was dishonoured. In consequence the appellant was again called upon to remit the amount as per the notice of June 15, 1955 together with an additional sum of Rs. 52/9/6 as compensation for the month of June, 1955. The appellant again replied on July 21, 1955 requesting the respondent to return the cheque and promising to send the amount in cash. The appellant has further stated in his reply that the amount claimed as due till the end of June, 1955 was excessive and illegal.

4. The respondent instituted on October 9, 1955 in the Court of Small Causes, Bombay, the suit, out of which the present proceedings arise, for evicting the appellant from the suit premises. The respondent averred that the appellant's tenancy had been terminated by the notice of March 24, 1955. One of the grounds for ejectment was stated to be that the appellant had failed to pay the full and due amount of rent in respect of the suit premises at Rs. 52/9/6 per month from April 1, 1954. The break up of this amount has been given as: (a) monthly rent Rs. 45/-; (b) Rs. 3/6/- on account of increase in rent at 7½% from April 1, 1954 plus Rs. 4/3/6 per month on account of permitted increases due to increase in municipal taxes. The respondent also relied on certain additional grounds for seeking ejectment, such as non-payment of water charges and converting an open verandah into a room without the consent of the landlord. However, in view of the findings of the Courts below, these additional grounds no longer survive.

5. The appellant contested the suit pleading that there has been no termination of the tenancy and that no valid and legal demand has been made regarding arrears of rent and permitted increases. In fact he pleaded that the demand made was in excess of the actual amount payable by him. He further pleaded that the respondent was not entitled to ask for his eviction from the premises.

6. The Court of Small Causes by its judgment of February 26, 1959 dismissed the suit holding that the demand of rent made in the notice of June 15, 1955 was not a proper demand and as such the landlord was not entitled to ask for eviction on the ground of non-payment of rent. The Court, however, recorded a concession made on behalf of the appellant that the notice dated June 15, 1955 should be treated as a notice under Section 12 (2) of the Act and the rate at which the arrears were claimed, namely, Rs. 52/9/6 per month for the period from December 1, 1954 to May 31, 1955 was correct as per the break up of figures given in the claim made in the suit. The further concession that the rent, according to the demand, was not paid till the filing of the suit, was also noted by the Court. However, the Small Causes Court took the view that before a tenant could be made liable to pay the permitted increases and in consequence to treat him as a defaulter for non-payment of such amount, it was obligatory on the part of the landlord to have made a demand for the payment of the permitted increases. In this case, the demand having been made only on June 15, 1955, the tenant was bound to pay the permitted increases only from that date and not for any period anterior thereto and hence the tenant cannot be considered to be a defaulter so as to give a right to the landlord to ask for eviction. The appeal filed by the respondent before the Appellate Bench of the Small Cause Court was summarily rejected on November 27, 1964. However, on revision, the High Court set aside the order of dismissal passed by the Appellate Bench and remanded the appeal for disposal after giving reasons. After remand, the Appellate Bench by its judgment dated April 6, 1965 differed from the view of the Trial Judge and decreed the respondent's suit. The Appellate Bench held that there has been a proper notice to quit issued by the respondent. It further held that the notice dated June 15, 1955 was a valid one and as the appellant was in arrears for six months, and not having paid the amount demanded within one month, the landlord was entitled to an order for evicting the appellant. In fact the Appellate Bench was of the view that in view of the concessions made by the counsel for the appellant and noted by the Small Cause Court, it was not open to the appellant to contend that the rate at which the rent was claimed, namely, Rs. 52/9/6 per month was not the correct amount payable by him.

7. The appellant carried the matter before the High Court in Civil Revision Application No. 888 of 1965 which was dismissed by the order dated January 9/10, 1967, holding that the demand made by the respondent was legal and that the notice dated June 15, 1955 was a valid notice under Section 12 (2) of the Act. The High Court has held that the claim of the respondent comes under Section 12 (3) (a) of the Act and as such he was entitled to have a decree in his favour for eviction of the appellant.

8. Mr. V. S. Desai, learned counsel for the appellant, has raised two contentions: (i) the respondent having issued the notice on June 15, 1955 demanding the permitted increases, the question of appellant's being in default should have been considered only for the period subsequent to that date and as no such default has been established, the order for eviction is not legal; (ii) in any event the appellant having contested the demand of the respondent, the position in law is that there is a dispute regarding the standard rent and permitted increases between the landlord and the tenant and, therefore, Section 12 (3) (a) does not apply so as to entitle the respondent to have an order for eviction. A minor contention was also raised by Mr. Desai that the notice dated June 15, 1955 does not satisfy the requirement of Section 12 (2) and hence the suit for eviction was not maintainable.

9. In our opinion, none of these contentions has any substance and all of them can be disposed of together.

10. It is now necessary to advert to certain provisions of the Act.

Section 5 cl. (7) defines "permitted increase" as meaning an increase in rent permitted under the provisions of the Act. Clause (10) defines "standard rent" in relation to a premises. Section 7 puts an embargo against a landlord receiving any rent higher than the standard rent except in the circumstances mentioned therein. One such circumstance is when the landlord is entitled to recover such increase under the provisions of the Act. Section 10 permits the landlord to make an increase in rent by an amount not exceeding the increase paid by him to a local authority, any rate, cess or tax imposed or levied.

11. Section 10-C again permits the landlord to make an increase in the rent of the premises referred to in column (1) which were let on or before September 1, 1940 by an addition to the rent at the rates specified in column (2). In this case the finding of the Courts is that the premises in question is covered by item No. 2, in Column (1) "dealing with residential premises, rent of which exceeds Rs. 20/- per month, but does not exceed Rs. 80/- per month". Therefore, it follows that the respondent was entitled to claim an increase in the rent by an amount not exceeding $7\frac{1}{2}\%$ of the standard rent. It may be mentioned that Section 10-C was added by the Bombay Act 61 of 1953. Section 11 enables the Court to fix standard rent and permitted increases in the circumstances mentioned therein. Sub-sections (1), (2), (3) (a) and (3) (b) of Section 12, which are material for the present purpose are as follows:

"Section 12 (1): A landlord shall not be entitled to the recovery of possession of any premises so long as the tenant pays, or is ready and willing to pay, the amount of the standard rent and permitted increases, if any, and observes and performs the other conditions of the tenancy, in so far as they are consistent with the provisions of this Act.

(2) No suit for recovery of possession shall be instituted by a landlord against a tenant on the ground of non-payment of the standard rent or permitted increases due, until the expiration of one month next after notice in writing of the demand of the standard rent or permitted increases has been served upon the tenant in the manner provided in Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

(3) (a) where the rent is payable by the month and there is no dispute regarding the amount of standard rent or permitted increases, if such rent or increases are in arrears for a period of six months or more and the tenant neglects to make payment thereof until the expiration of the period of one month after notice referred to in sub-section (2), the Court shall pass a decree for eviction in any such suit for recovery of possession.

(b) In any other case, no decree for eviction shall be passed in any such suit if, on the first day of hearing of the suit or on or before such other date as the Court may fix, the tenant pays or tenders in Court the standard rent and permitted increases then due and thereafter continues to pay or tender in Court regularly such rent and permitted increase till the suit is finally decided and also pays costs of the suit as directed by the Court".

12. The contention raised by Mr. Desai is that in this case the notice dated June 15, 1955 is not valid and in accordance with Section 12 (2) of the Act as no particulars have been given so as to make the appellant know how the amount of a sum of Rs. 52/9/6 has been arrived at. The counsel further contended that when the appellant replied stating that the claim is excessive it follows that there is a dispute regarding the permitted increases and therefore, the matter should have been dealt with under Section 12 (3) (b) and not under Section 12 (3) (a) of the Act. We are not inclined to accept this contention.

13. No doubt the notice dated June 15, 1955 does not give the break up for the sum of Rs. 52/9/6, which was being claimed per month. We have already referred to the concession made by the counsel for the appellant before the Small Cause Court that the break up given in the claim made by the respondent is correct and that the sum demanded under the notice is the proper amount that the landlord was entitled to claim. Normally, this concession is enough to come to a conclusion that the appellant was perfectly aware about the nature and quantum of the permitted increases that were being demanded by the notice dated June 15, 1955.

14. Even otherwise if the appellant was in any manner of doubt on this point or required any clarification from the respondent, normally, he should have called for information on those points especially when he was sending replies through a lawyer to the notices issued by the respondent. Excepting baldly saying that the claim was excessive, he never cared to ask for any particulars. The appellant must have been well aware that the standard rent in this case is Rs. 45/- per month and that the respondent was entitled to an increase not exceeding $7\frac{1}{2}\%$ under Section 10-C. Further he must also be well aware that the respondent was further entitled to claim increases on account of payment of municipal taxes to a local authority under Section 10 of the Act. That the appellant was well aware of this is clear from his reply dated July 1, 1955 wherein he has stated that the municipal tax is only Rs. 2/13/- and that he has been paying the same to the Receiver; That the increases that the respondent was entitled to get under Sections 10 and 10C were Rs. 4/3/6 and Rs. 3/6/- respectively, is not challenged. Adding these two items to the standard rent of Rs. 45/- it follows that the total monthly amount claimed in the sum of Rs. 52/9/6 was perfectly correct.

15. We are not inclined to accept the contention of Mr. Desai that the permitted increases demanded by the landlord will take effect only from June 15, 1955. We are of the opinion that it is sufficient if the landlord charges the tenant at a higher rate and makes a demand at that rate and that the date from which the demand would be effective would not be the date of intimation. So far as we could see there is nothing in law to prevent the landlord making the increase at the time of giving the notice. Section 12 (3) (a) itself gives the tenant a period of one month for complying with the demand for arrears of rent for a period of six months or more and it is only if the amount is not paid within that period, the landlord is entitled to file a suit. There is nothing in the Act which requires a landlord to give first a notice under Section 10 or 10C and then a further notice under Section 12. In this case the landlord has given a notice on June 15, 1955 calling upon the appellant to pay the arrears due from December 1, 1954. There is no controversy that the amount was not paid till the institution of the suit. When that is so, it follows that the appellant was in arrears for a period of six months or more and that he had further neglected to make the payment until the expiration of one month after the notice dated June 15, 1955. That this notice was one under Section 12 (2) of the Act, has been admitted before the Small Cause Court on behalf of the appellant. The mere fact that the said notice does not give the break up for the claim of Rs. 52/9/6 does not make it also invalid notice under Section 12 (2).

16. We have already referred to the correspondence between the parties and pointed out that the appellant at no stage asked for any clarification or further particulars from the respondent. Except making an allegation that the claim of the respondent is excessive, the appellant was not prepared to squarely face the issue, if he had any doubt, by calling upon the respondent to give particulars as to how the sum of Rs. 52/9/6 was made up. This conduct clearly shows that the appellant full well knew that the said amount represents the standard rent with the permitted increases under the Act. Under these circumstances, it cannot be considered that in this case there was a dispute between the landlord and the tenant either regarding the amount of the standard rent or permitted increases. We are in agreement with the reasoning of the High Court on this aspect.

17. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

for want of jurisdiction does not operate as res judicata in subsequent suit. (Case law discussed).

The test of res judicata is the identity of title in the two litigations and not the identity of the actual property involved in the two cases but the previous decision must be one on a title in respect of which a dispute has been raised and which dispute was heard and finally decided by the Court. Once the decision on question of title becomes final it operates as res judicata even if the value of the subject-matter on which the former decision was pronounced was comparatively very trifling. When the decision was given by trial Court after contest it operates as res judicata even if appeal therefrom might have been dismissed on some preliminary grounds like limitation. Mr. D. N. Mukherjee, Advocate, for Appellants, (In all the Appeals).

VAIDIALINGAM J.: — These two appeals on certificate are directed against the judgment of the Calcutta High Court dated March 27, 1962 in First Appeals from the Original Decree Nos. 311 and 312 of 1956.

2. Two plots of land bearing No. 936 of Mouza Asansol and plot No. 9202 of Mouza Asansol Municipality were acquired under the Land Acquisition Act. The notification under Section 4 of the Land Acquisition Act dated December 13, 1947 was published in the Calcutta Gazette of 25th December, 1947. The declaration under Section 6 dated December 30, 1947 was published in the Calcutta Gazette on 8th January, 1948. For plot No. 936 of Mouza Asansol measuring about 31 acres, the Land Acquisition Collector awarded a total compensation of Rs. 1707/- including

Rs. 13/1/6 on account of the landlord's interest. The entire compensation in respect of this plot was directed to be paid to Bhaktbala Dasi, the sole respondent in Civil Appeal No. 436 of 1967. In respect of plot No. 9202 of Mouza Asansol Municipality, the Land Acquisition Officer awarded as compensation a sum of Rs. 825/15/6 including Rs. 6/5/6 on account of the landlord's interest. This entire amount of compensation was directed to be paid to Bhaktbala Dasi and her sister Subasini Dasi.

3. It may be mentioned that Bhaktbala Dasi is the first respondent and on the death of Subasini Dasi, her son Sunil Kumar Roy, who has been impleaded in the proceedings is the second respondent in Civil Appeal No. 437 of 1967. Before the Land Acquisition Collector, in respect of both these plots, one Kashi Nath Dawn claimed title to the land and as such to the entire compensation amount. The appellants in these two appeals are the legal representatives of Kashi Nath Dawn.

4. The case of Kashi Nath Dawn was that both the plots of land belonged to Panchanan Roy, husband of Subasini Dasi, against whom a money decree had been obtained by one Jatin Kumar Roy. In execution of the money decree (Execution Case No. 120 of 1929, Subordinate Judge's Court, Asansol), the decree-holder brought these two items and certain other properties to sale. Kashi Nath Dawn claimed to have purchased these items in the Court sale and obtained the sale certificate Ex. 2. The sale was confirmed on November 27, 1930 and delivery of possession was also taken on December 10, 1930. It was on the strength of this purchase in Court auction that Kashi Nath Dawn claimed title to the two plots.

5. The case of Bhaktabala Dasi, who alone contested the claim of Kashi Nath Dawn was briefly as follows: Panchanan Roy had no title to the properties and that on the other hand they belonged to Ramanugraha Roy, who died leaving his widow Manmohini and three daughters, Santabala, Subasini and Bhaktabala. On the death of Ramanugraha Roy, his widow Manmohini succeeded to the property as life estate holder. As Santabala died shortly after her father's death, the properties devolved on the other two sisters namely, Subasini and Bhaktabala, on the death of Manmohini, Panchanan Roy had married Santabala and on her death he married her sister Subasini, Panchanan Roy during the lifetime of his mother-in-law Manmohini was allowed to manage the properties. In the settlement proceedings of 1918-21 he surreptitiously got his name recorded as owner of one-half share in the estate of his father-in-law in Mouza Asansol and of the entire interest in Mouza Asansol Municipality. Panchanan Roy was never in possession and enjoyment of the properties whereas Manmohini Dasi during her lifetime and on her death her daughters Subasini and Bhaktabala were in possession and enjoyment. There was a partition between the two sisters of Mouza Asansol property and in consequence plot No. 936 of Mouza Asansol was obtained as her share by Bhaktabala Dasi. It was on this basis that Bhaktabala Dasi claimed exclusive title to plot No. 936 and the right to receive the entire compensation amount for that land. She claimed that in respect of plot No. 9202 of Mouza Asansol Municipality, she and her sister Subasini Dasi, had a title to half share each and asserted, the right to receive compensation on that basis.

6. In view of the dispute regarding right to receive the compensation amount, the Land Acquisition Collector referred the matter to the Additional District Judge, Burdwan for determination of the said dispute. The stand taken before the Land Acquisition Collector was reiterated before the learned Additional District Judge. With reference to plot No. 936 of Mouza Asansol, the learned Additional District Judge held that Panchanan Roy had wrongfully and fraudulently got recorded his name as owner of the half share when he was managing the property on behalf of his mother-in-law Manmohini widow of Ramanugraha Roy. The Court further held that Panchanan Roy was never in possession and enjoyment of both the plots in question. Regarding plot No. 9202 of Mouza Asansol Municipality, it was held that long before the sale in Execution Case No. 120 of 1929, the Katiyans and the maps had been published and they conclusively show that Mouza Asansol Municipality was a Mouza different from Mouza Asansol with different J. L. number. The sale certificate Ex. 2 under which Kashi Nath Dawn claimed title was scrutinized by the Court which held that the description of the various items clearly showed that no land of Mouza Asansol Municipality was included therein. The Court did not also accept the claim of Kashi Nath Dawn that for the purpose of C. S. operation only the lands within Mouza Asansol Municipality were separately recorded and that they were also included within Mouza Asansol. In this view the learned Additional District Judge held that Kashi Nath Dawn did not purchase in the Court sale any plot of land within Mouza Asansol Municipality and as such he had no title to plot No. 9202. The Court accepted the plea of Bhaktabala Dasi that she and her sister Subasini Dasi were entitled to the compensation amount in equal shares. Finally the Additional District Judge held that Kashi Nath Dawn was not entitled to claim any portion of the compensation amount in respect of the two plots.

7. Kashi Nath Dawn filed two appeals before the Calcutta High Court, being First Appeals Nos. 311 and 312 of 1956. As the Land Acquisition Collector had made separate references in respect of each of the plots and as the two references were disposed of separately, though by a common judgment, two appeals were filed in the High Court. The First Appeal No. 311 of 1956 related to plot No. 936 and First Appeal No. 312 of 1956 related to plot No. 9202. At this stage it may be mentioned that Civil Appeals Nos. 436 and 437 of 1967 are against the decision of the High Court in First Appeals Nos. 311 and 312 of 1956 respectively. The High Court did not agree with the learned Additional District Judge that Panchanan Roy had fraudulently got his name entered in the settlement register as owner of half share in plot No. 936. It is the view of the High Court that the plea set up by Bhaktabala Dasi that she was absolutely entitled to the said item has not been substantiated. The High Court held that the settlement register established that Panchanan Roy's name has been recorded as owner of half share and Manmohini as the owner of another half share in the properties owned by Ramanugraha Roy in Mouza Asansol and that there was no fraud on the part of Panchanan Roy in having his name so entered. The High Court further held that in the Court sale, Kashi Nath Dawn had purchased the half share owned by Panchanan Roy in Mouza Asansol and as such he had title to half share in plot No. 936 notwithstanding the fact that Kashi Nath Dawn was not able to establish that Panchanan Roy was in possession and actual enjoyment of his half share. In this view the High Court modified the decree of the learned Additional District Judge and held that in respect of plot No. 936 both Kashi Nath Dawn and Bhaktabala Dasi were entitled to half share each and in that proportion were also entitled to the compensation amount. As the full right of Kashi Nath Dawn in Plot No. 936 was not recognised by the High Court, Civil Appeal No. 436 of 1967 has been filed.

8. Regarding plot No. 9202 the High Court agreed with the Land Acquisition Court and held that in the Court sale, Kashi Nath Dawn had not purchased any property in Mouza Asansol Municipality and therefore he had no title thereto. The claim that Panchanan Roy was in possession of this plot was also rejected. A plea of res judicata raised by Kashi Nath Dawn based upon Ex. 7, the decree of the Land Acquisition Case No. 242 of 1938, with reference to plot No. 9202, was also rejected by the High Court. The request for adducing additional evidence made on behalf of Kashi Nath Dawn was also rejected by the High Court. In consequence First Appeal No. 312 of 1956 was dismissed against which Civil Appeal No. 457 of 1967 has been filed.

9. We will first take up the claim of full ownership made by Kashi Nath Dawn in respect of plot No. 936 of Mouza Asansol, which is the subject of Civil Appeal No. 436 of 1967.

10. Mr. D. N. Mukherjee, learned counsel for the appellants, who, as we have stated earlier, are the legal representatives of deceased Kashi Nath Dawn, urged that the High Court should have accepted the plea made by Kashi Nath Dawn that he was entitled to the full ownership of this plot. The counsel urged that the relevant entries in the settlement registers have not been properly construed by the High Court. According to him all the rights which Ramanugraha Roy had in plot No. 936 of Mouza Asansol had accrued to Panchanan Roy, whose rights had been purchased by Kashi Nath Dawn in Court sale. The High Court having held that there was no fraud perpetrated by Panchanan Roy in having his name entered in the settlement registers, the full rights of Panchanan Roy in plot No. 936 as the original owner and of Kashi Nath Dawn as purchaser in Court sale should have been upheld.

11. We are not inclined to accept this contention of the learned counsel. No doubt, the learned District Judge held that Panchanan Roy fraudulently got his name entered in the settlement registers when he was in management of the properties during the lifetime of Manmohini, widow of Ramanugraha Roy. This finding was not accepted by the High Court. The High Court has considered the recitals in Ex. A, the Settlement Khatian No. 16 of Mouza Asansol which is also a khatian in respect of the permanent tenure Jagir Nakari Ramkrishna Roy. The High Court has adverted to the fact that in Ex. A the holders are divided into 17 groups but the holders of 'ka' group were described as Manmohini wife of Ramanugraha Roy and Panchanan Roy s/o Umesh Chandra Roy. These two persons were also described as being entitled to 8 g. 1 k. 15 tils each. Plot No. 936 has also been found to be one of the plots recorded as in khas possession of 'ka' group in Ex. A. It is on this basis that the High Court differing from the learned District Judge held that Panchanan Roy had been the owner of half share in this plot and Kashi Nath Dawn as purchaser of this half share of Panchanan Roy was entitled to half of the compensation amount. Mr. Mukherjee was not able to satisfy as to how Kashi Nath Dawn was entitled to full ownership of plot No. 936. We are in agreement with the decision of the High Court on this point; and as such hold that there is no merit in Civil Appeal No. 436 of 1967.

12. Coming to plot No. 9202 of Mouza Asansol Municipality Mr. D. N. Mukherjee raised two contentions: (i) the High Court was in error in holding that Ex. 2, the sale certificate does not take in this item and (ii) the claim of the respondent was barred by res judicata, by the decree of the Land Acquisition Court Ex. 7 and the High Court was again in error in holding that there is no bar of res judicata.

13. So far as the first contention is concerned, it is an attack on a finding of fact recorded by the High Court. We have already pointed out that even the Land Acquisition Court held that Kashi Nath Dawn did not purchase in the Court sale any property of Panchanan Roy in Mouza Asansol Municipality. The High Court has agreed with this finding. The entire claim of title in respect of both the items was based on the sale certificate Ex. 2. Both the District Judge and the High Court have held that what was sold in Court sale was only the interest of Panchanan Roy in the permanent tenure in respect of Mouza Asansol and not in respect of any other Mouza. The High Court has further held that Mouza Asansol Municipality and Mouza Asansol were different entities even from about 1896 and the Court sale which took place in or about 1930 related only to the properties in Mouza Asansol. The description of the properties given in the sale certificate Ex. 2, according to the High Court, clearly establishes that what was sold in Court auction and purchased by Kashi Nath Dawn was only the property that was situated in Mouza Asansol as defined by the District Settlement Operations and not a different Mouza Asansol as it might have existed prior to 1896. The High Court has gone more elaborately into this aspect than the District Court and held that Kashi Nath Dawn did not purchase in the Court auction any property of Panchanan Roy in Mouza Asansol Municipality. We find no flaw in the finding of the High Court. Therefore, on this finding it follows that Kashi Nath Dawn, through whom the appellants claimed, had no right, title or interest in plot No. 9202.

14. Faced with this situation Mr. Mukherjee raised his second contention that the claims of Bhaktabala Dasi and her sister Subasini Dasi were barred by res judicata.

15. The bar of res judicata is pleaded as follows: Certain other plots in Mouza Asansol Municipality were acquired under the Land Acquisition Act and there was a dispute regarding the persons entitled to compensation amount. Kashi Nath Dawn made a claim for payment of the full compensation as the owner of those plots. That claim was resisted by Subasini Dasi and her sons and they claimed in turn to be entitled to the compensation amount. But the Land Acquisition Court upheld the claim of Kashi Nath Dawn and that decree has become final. Under Ex. 7 the title of Kashi Nath Dawn in the properties of Mouza Asansol Municipality having been recognised, it was no longer open to the respondents herein to urge that Kashi Nath Dawn had no title to plot No. 9202, which is situated in Mouza Asansol Municipality. The High Court had rejected this plea on the ground that the claims of Subasini Dasi in the prior land acquisition proceedings having been dismissed for default, would not prevent her from claiming title to other plots pertaining to the same interest inasmuch as the question of ownership of the interest as a whole was not heard and decided.

16. Mr. Mukherjee, learned counsel for the appellants attacks this reasoning of the High Court as fallacious. He urged that Subasini Dasi and her sons having made a claim before the Land Acquisition Court for payment of compensation on the basis of their title, which was rejected are not entitled to put forward any further claim to this item. This plea of res judicata raised by Mr. Mukherjee has to be approached from two points of view: (i) as a bar against Bhaktabala Dasi and (ii) as a bar against Subasini Dasi. We have already referred to the case set up by Bhaktabala Dasi regarding the interest of herself and her sister Subasini Dasi in plot No. 9202. This case has been accepted by both the Courts. From the nature of the claim it is clear that Bhaktabala Dasi was not claiming any title through Subasini Dasi, on the other hand she was claiming half share in her own right as the daughter of Ramanugraha Roy and according to her, her sister Subasini Dasi was also entitled to an equal share. Bhaktabala Dasi, it is admitted, was not a party to the decree Ex. 7. If that is so, there is no question of any bar of res judicata so far as half share of Bhaktabala Dasi is concerned. Then the question is whether the claim of Subasini Dasi to half share in this item is barred by Ex. 7. If the appellants' contention in this regard is accepted, they will be entitled to at least claim the half share of Subasini Dasi in Plot No. 9202. Now it is necessary to refer to the nature of the proceedings covered by Ex. 7. Nine plots of land referred to therein and situate in Mouza Asansol Municipality, appear to have been acquired under the Land Acquisition Act for the expansion of a road level crossing. There appear to have been disputes amongst various parties with regard to right to receive compensation and therefore the matter was referred to the Court of the District Judge, Burdwan in Land Acquisition Case No. 242 of 1938. Neither the actual pleadings in order to ascertain the nature of the claim that was made by the parties nor the judgment in the land acquisition case have been filed in these proceedings. The only document that has been filed is the decree Ex. 7. From the decree it is seen that Kashi Nath Dawn was party No. 7 and Subasini Dasi and her sons were parties Nos. 9 to 12. Parties Nos. 9 to 12 claimed compensation amount as against party No. 7, and the claim of Subasini Dasi was dismissed for default by the learned District Judge under Ex. 7 dated March 3, 1939 and the result of the decision was that the claim of Kashi Nath Dawn was upheld and that of Subasini Dasi and her sons was rejected, though on default.

17. Mr. Mukherjee, learned counsel for the appellants has urged that the same title to the property which was in dispute and decided in Ex. 7 in favour of Kashi Nath Dawn again arises for consideration in these proceedings. The title of Subasini Dasi having been once rejected by the Court cannot again be the subject-matter of a fresh adjudication. We are not inclined to accept the contention of Mr. Mukherjee that Ex. 7 operates as res judicata in respect of the claim even of Subasini Dasi and her sons in respect of half share claimed in plot No. 9202. Though it is true that Subasini Dasi appears to have contested the claim of Kashi Nath Dawn in the proceedings leading upto Ex. 7, in our opinion, it cannot be said that in those proceedings the issue as to title was heard and finally decided. We have already pointed out that the claim of Subasini Dasi was dismissed for default.

18. Mr. Mukherjee drew our attention to certain decisions and urged that the decision of the Land Acquisition Court operates as res judicata. He further urged that even though the property in the previous land acquisition proceedings may have been of a very small extent, when once the title to the compensation amount which really relates to the nature of the title to the property has been raised and decided, that decision will operate as res judicata. The proposition enunciated by Mr. Mukherjee and set out above as such are beyond controversy but we are of the opinion that the facts before us are totally different.

19. We will now advert to the decisions cited by Mr. Mukherjee. In Raj Lakshmi Dasi v. Eanamali Sen, (1953) SCR 154 = (AIR 1953 SC 33), this Court had to consider the question whether a previous decision on title in land acquisition proceedings operated as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the same parties when the question of title was again raised. The facts in that case were briefly as follows: Certain properties were acquired in land acquisition proceedings and there was a triangular contest about the right to receive compensation between A and B, the rival claimants and C, a mortgagee from B. All the parties required the question of apportionment to be referred to the Land Acquisition Court. The court decided the question of title in favour of B after contest. This decision was confirmed by the High Court on appeal. That means that the title of B and his mortgagee C to receive compensation amount was upheld by the Land Acquisition Court and the High Court. A took the matter to the Privy Council, which reversed the decision of the High Court and the Land Acquisition Court and the titles of B and C were negatived. In a subsequent suit between the same parties the question of title was again raised and this Court held that the decision of the Privy Council operated as res judicata in respect of the subsequent proceedings notwithstanding the fact that B and his mortgagee C did not appear before the Privy Council and their claim was rejected in default. Considerable reliance has been placed by Mr. Mukherjee on this decision in support of his contention that Ex. 7, though a decision given against Subasini Dasi and her sons in default of their appearance, operates as res judicata.

20. In our opinion, the decision of this Court referred to above does not assist the appellants. It is now well established that where a dispute as to title to receive compensation amount has been referred to a Court, a decree thereon not appealed from renders the question of title res judicata in a suit between the same parties to the dispute. A party in such circumstances cannot be heard to say that the value of the subject-matter on which the former decision was pronounced was comparatively so trifling that it was not worth their while to appeal from it. It is true that the test of res judicata is the identity of title in the two litigations and not the identity of the actual property involved in the two cases but the previous decision must be one on a title in respect of which a dispute has been raised and which dispute was heard and finally decided by the Court.

21. It is interesting to note that though it was urged that the decision of the Privy Council was given in default of appearance of B and his mortgagee C and therefore the said decision will not operate as res judicata, this Court did not hold that a decision given even in the first instance in default of appearance of a party will operate as res judicata. On the other hand, this Court categorically held that C, the mortgagee had fought out the title of mortgagor B, both before the Land Acquisition Court and the High Court and had obtained a judgment in his favour after a full contest.

22. It is the view of this Court that the mere fact that the mortgagee did not choose to appear before the Privy Council and the decision of the Privy Council was given in the absence of the mortgagee, is of no consequence as the decisions of the High Court and the District Court have been given after contest. Therefore it will be seen that the decision of this Court relied on by Mr. Mukherjee is no authority for the wide proposition that even if there has been no hearing and final decision by any Court, at any stage, after contest, the decision will operate as res judicata.

23. For an earlier decision to operate as res judicata it has been held by this Court in Pulavarthi Venkata Subba Rao v. Valluri Jagannadha Rao, (1964) 2 SCR 310 = (AIR 1967 SC 591) that the same must have been on a matter which was 'heard and finally decided'.

24. In Sheodan Singh v. Smt. Daryao Kumar, (1966) 3 SCR 300 = (AIR 1966 SC 1332) the question whether a decision given by the High Court dismissing certain appeal on the ground of limitation or on the ground that the party had not taken steps to prosecute the appeal operates as res judicata, was considered by this Court. In that case A had instituted against B two suits asserting title to a certain property. B contested those claims and also instituted two other suits to establish his title to the same property as against A. A's suits were decreed and B's suits were dismissed. B filed four appeals, two appeals against the decision given in A's suits and two appeals against the dismissal of his two suits. It is seen that all the appeals were taken on the file of the High Court but the two appeals filed by B against the decision in the suits instituted by him were dismissed by the High Court on the grounds that one was filed beyond the period of limitation and the other for non-prosecution. At the final hearing the High Court took the view that the dismissal of B's two appeals, referred to above, operated as res judicata in the two appeals filed by B against the decision in A's suits on the question of title to the property. It was urged before this Court on behalf of B that the dismissal of his appeals on the grounds of limitation and non-prosecution by the High Court does not operate as res judicata as the High Court cannot be considered to have 'heard and finally decided' the question of title. This contention was not accepted. This Court referred to instances where a former suit was dismissed by a trial Court for want of jurisdiction or for default of plaintiff's appearance etc., and pointed out that in respect of such class of cases, the decision not being on merits, would not be res judicata in a subsequent suit. It was further pointed out that none of those considerations apply to a case where a decision is given on the merits by the trial Court and the matter is taken in appeal and the appeal is dismissed on some preliminary ground, like limitation or default in printing. It was held that such dismissal by an appellate Court has the effect of confirming the decision of the trial Court on merits, and that it "amounts to the appeal being heard and finally decided on the merits whatever may be the ground for dismissal of the appeal".

25. It will be seen from the above reasoning that in order to operate as res judicata, the previous decision must have been given after the matter was heard and finally decided on merits. This Court has further held that the High Court, in that case, when it dismissed the two appeals in question, though on a preliminary ground of limitation or default in printing, must be considered to have heard and finally decided on merits. Far from supporting Mr. Mukherjee's contention that a decision given in default of appearance under any circumstance, operates as res judicata, the above decision lays down clearly that a previous decision to operate as res judicata must be one in a case heard and finally decided on merits.

26. To conclude Ex. 7, in our opinion, does not operate as res judicata even against the claim of Subasini Dasi and her sons inasmuch as the matter was not heard and finally decided on merits after contest by the Land Acquisition Court. We have already pointed out that if the plea of res judicata is not accepted the decision of the two Courts regarding Subasini Dasi's having in plot No. 9202 half share will have also to be sustained.

27. In the result the appeals fail and are dismissed. As there is no appearance for the respondents, there will be no order as to costs.

Appeals dismissed.

GROVER, J.: — These appeals have been brought by certificate from a common judgment of the Orissa High Court.

2. Five different suits were filed against certain defendants on the foot of five different pronotes. All the five suits were heard together and were decreed by the trial Judge. In respect of two suits the valuation being low the appeals were preferred before the District Judge and in three suits the appeals were filed in the High Court. The High Court dismissed the appeals. It is altogether unnecessary to refer to the points in controversy between the parties because the sole question which has been agitated before us relates to the admissibility of certain assessment orders on which reliance has been placed for deciding whether the contesting defendants were the partners of firm Surajmal Manilal on whose behalf the pronotes had been executed. The learned subordinate Judge had found that the suit transactions were genuine and execution on behalf of the firm as well as the passing of consideration had been proved. He had further found that the contesting defendants were joint with their uncle Manilal in 1949 and that they were the partners of the firm Surajmal Manilal — being members of a trading family, and therefore they were liable to the extent of the assets of the joint family in their hands. It appears that the assessment orders were produced not by the contesting defendants but by the son of Manilal who was the assessee. After examining Section 54 of the Income-tax Act, 1922 and the various decisions of the High Courts the learned Judges of the High Court came to the conclusion that the general consensus was that if a copy of the assessment order or a certified copy thereof was produced by the assessee waiving his privilege it would be admissible in evidence.

3. Section 54 (1) of the Act was in the following terms:

S. 54 (1) "All particulars contained in any statement made, return furnished or accounts or documents produced under the provisions of this Act, or in any evidence given, or affidavit or deposition made, in the course of any proceedings under this Act other than proceedings under this Chapter, or in any record of any assessment proceeding, or any proceeding relating to the recovery of a demand, prepared for the purposes of this Act, shall be treated as confidential, and notwithstanding anything contained in the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 (I of 1872), no Court shall, save as provided in this Act, be entitled to require any public servant to produce before it any such return, accounts, documents or record or any part of any such record, or to give evidence before it in respect thereof."

Under sub-section (2) if a public servant disclosed any particulars contained in a statement, return etc. mentioned in sub-section (1) he was liable to punishment with imprisonment as well as fine. The prohibition against disclosure was not applicable to the facts and particulars in such cases and circumstances as were set out in sub-section (3).

4. Now it is quite clear that Section 54 created a complete bar to the production by officials and other servants of the Income-tax Department of any such documents which were mentioned in Sub-ss. (1) and (2). It also made it obligatory on them to treat as confidential the records and documents mentioned in the sub-sections. They were further prohibited from giving any evidence relating to them. The question which came up for consideration before the Courts was if the documents could be given without requiring a public servant to produce them could the Court allow them to be tendered and admitted into evidence?

5. The Madras High Court held in Mythili Ammal v. Janaki Ammal, 7 ITR 657 = (AIR 1940 Mad 161) that statements made in income-tax returns could not be brought up in Court against the person making them or against any one else nor could the income returns be proved by secondary evidence under Section 64 of the Indian Evidence Act. The Calcutta High Court in Promatha Nath Pramanick v. Nirode Chandra Ghose, 7 ITR 570 = (AIR 1940 Cal 187) considered it startling that when an assessment order was to be treated as confidential under Section 54 of the Act a joint assessee could be permitted the use of the copy of such an order to the detriment of his co-assessee in contentious proceedings between them. A Full Bench of the Madras High Court, however, held in Rama Rao v. Venkataramayya, 8 ITR 450 = (AIR 1940 Mad 768 (FB)) that a return was confidential and could not be disclosed to a third party but there could be no objection to the maker of a return having a copy for his own purposes if he so desired and he was not bound to treat the document as confidential. In other words he could produce that document as evidence in Court.

6. It is unnecessary for the purposes of this case to go into the larger question of production of the documents covered by Section 54 (1) by third parties as it was the son of Manilal the assessee who had produced the assessment orders which are in dispute. There is an overwhelming weight of authority in favour of the view that assessment orders could be produced by the assessee or his representative-in-interest; see Emperor v. Osman Chotatni, 10 ITR 429 = (AIR 1942 Bom 289), Suraj Narain v. Seth Jhabhu Lal, 13 ITR 13 = (AIR 1944 All 114) and Buchibai v. Nagpur University, 15 ITR 150 = (AIR 1946 Nag 377). In our opinion the law laid down by these cases on the admissibility of evidence of assessment orders produced by an assessee or his representative-in-interest is unexceptionable. We may refer to a decision of this Court in Charu Chandra Kundu v. Gurupada Ghosh, (1962) 2 SCR 833 = (AIR 1962 SC 1119) on which reliance was placed on behalf of the appellants. There the appellant had applied to the trial Court praying that the Commissioner of Income-tax be directed to arrange for the production before the Court of the record of the statement made by the respondent therein. In that situation it was held that the prohibition imposed under Section 54 of the Act was absolute and the operation of the section was not obliterated by any waiver by the assessee in whose assessment the evidence was tendered, documents produced or record prepared. It is apparent that in that case the question of production of an assessment order by the assessee himself did not come up for consideration.

7. These appeals fail and are dismissed with costs. One hearing fee. Appeal dismissed.

M/s. A. P. Singh Chauhan and A. D. Mathur, Advocates, for Appellants; Mr. S. K. Bagga and Mrs. S. Bagga, Advocates, for Respondents Nos. 4 to 10.

GROVER, J.: — This is an appeal from a judgment of the Allahabad High Court dismissing a writ petition which had been filed by the appellants. The facts lie in a narrow compass. The appellants were recorded as Sir Khudkasht holders of the plots in dispute. Respondents 4 to 6 were entered as sub-tenants in respect of those plots in the year 1356 Fasli. The appellants filed a suit for a declaration that the respondents were adhivasis. The suit was decreed ex parte. The ex parte order, however was set aside upon the application of the respondents. The suit was subsequently withdrawn with liberty to file a fresh suit. It appears that in 1960 three suits were filed. The principal allegation in the suits was that the entry in the revenue records on the basis of which the respondents claimed adhivasi rights was fictitious. The parties then entered into a compromise in which it was admitted by the respondents that the appellants were Bhoomidars and that the respondents had no interest in the disputed property. It was also admitted that the entry in the revenue records in favour of the respondents was fictitious. The suits were consequently decreed. Subsequently the respondents applied for setting aside the decrees on the ground that they had been obtained fraudulently. These applications were pending when proceedings commenced for the consolidation of holdings under the U. P. Consolidation of Holdings Act, 1953, hereinafter called the "Act". The consolidation authorities held that the suits under Section 229 (c) of the U. P. Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act, 1951, hereinafter called the "Zamindari Act" were not maintainable because on the date on which the suits were filed the respondents had become Sirdars. In the alternative it was held that the admission of the respondents that they were not adhivasis could not operate against the statute inasmuch as Section 20 (b) of the aforesaid Act provided that a person recorded as an occupant in the year 1356 Fasli would become an adhivasi. The appellants filed a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution challenging the orders made by the consolidation authorities. A learned single judge of the High Court following a Bench decision of Desai and Baig JJ. in Hukam Singh v. Board of Revenue, U. P., (1957) W. P. No. 508 of 1956, D/- 1-5-1957 (All), held that even if an entry was fictitious it would be ignored for the purpose of applying Section 20 (b) of the Zamindari Act. The only conclusion possible, therefore, was that the respondents, who were recorded as occupants in khasras and khataunis of 1356 Fasli, became adhivasis of the disputed land. If they were adhivasis then the land was held in that capacity and on October 30, 1954 the appellants ceased to be Bhoomidars by reason of Section 240 (a) of the Zamindari Act. The appeal against the judgment of the learned single Judge to a division bench was dismissed in limine.

2. This appeal must succeed on the short ground that the view of the Allahabad High Court mentioned above is no longer good law. In Sonavati v. Sri Ram, (1968) 1 SCR 617 = (AIR 1968 SC 466), this Court had occasion to deal with the scope and ambit of Section 20 (b) of the Act. According to this decision the entry in the record alone is relevant for the purpose of the aforesaid statutory provision but an exception appears to have been made in a case where the name has been entered surreptitiously or fraudulently. In other words if there was evidence which showed that the entry was fictitious the person whose name was entered on the record on the material date could not claim the right of an adhivasi. Following that decision the judgment of the High Court must be set aside.

3. An objection was raised on behalf of the contesting respondents that all the legal representatives of Sheo Tahal, who had been impleaded as a respondent but who had died, had not been impleaded. A Civil Miscellaneous Petition dated April 20, 1970 was filed by the appellants saying that two of the daughters of Sheo Tahal, namely, Smt. Biafi and Smt. Maini who were living in the village where he died had already been impleaded as the legal representatives of the deceased but that Smt. Parmeshwari the third daughter was living elsewhere and information was not available in time about her and therefore she could not be impleaded earlier. It was prayed that she might be added as a party. When two of the legal representatives of the deceased were already on the record the name of the third legal representative could certainly be brought on the record. In our opinion the appeal could not be dismissed as having abated for Smt. Parmeshwari not having been impleaded in time.

4. In the result the appeal is allowed and the judgment of the High Court is hereby reversed. The matter shall go back to the High Court for a fresh decision in accordance with law. Costs shall abide the event.

Order accordingly.

Tenancy Laws — Assam Land Revenue Regulations (1 of 1886) — Rules framed under Rule 40 — The State Government can fix the rate of premium to be paid in respect of an individual tea garden having regard to its commercial value even without first fixing a general rate for a region larger than the tea garden — Civil Rule No. 296/1964, D/- 28-6-1966 (Assam and Nagaland), Reversed. (Paras 4, 5)

Mr. Naunit Lal, Advocate, for Appellants; Mr. Sarjoo Prasad, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. S. N. Prasad, Advocate, with him), for Respondents.

SHAH, C. J.: — On October 24, 1957 Rameshwar Agarwala — hereinafter called 'the respondent' — applied to the Deputy Commissioner, Lakhimpur, for settlement of a tea garden for "special cultivation of tea". By order dated March 11, 1964 the Government of Assam permitted settlement of the tea garden for special tea cultivation on payment of Rs. 3,86,008 as premium. The respondent failed to pay the amount demanded. The State of Assam then put up the tea garden for auction. The respondent moved a petition in the High Court of Assam for an order declaring that in fixing the amount of the premium at Rs. 3,86,008/- the State acted illegally, and that the order was void and unenforceable at law because in fixing the amount of the premium the State acted without jurisdiction and the order directing auction of the tea garden for not depositing the amount demanded was also illegal. The High Court upheld the contention and ordered the State of Assam not to give effect to the order dated March 31, 1964 calling upon the respondent to pay the amount due within two months of the order and the order dated November 26, 1964 directing that the tea garden be put up for auction. With certificate granted by the High Court, the State of Assam has appealed to this Court.

2. The tea garden belonged to the State of Assam. The Government of Assam in the absence of any binding statutory provision, could settle the tea garden on such commercial terms it could reasonably obtain. The respondent applied to the Deputy Commissioner for settlement of the tea garden and requesting the State Government for early fixation of the amount of premium. When the premium was fixed by the Government the respondent protested, contending that the action of the State was illegal. Before the High Court it was contended by the respondent that the power of the State Government to fix the premium for which it could lease the tea garden was restricted by Rule 40 framed under the Assam Land Revenue Regulations. The Rule reads:

"In addition to the land-revenue payable under Rule 17 and value of the timber assessed under Rule 37, an applicant to whom a lease for special cultivation is granted shall be liable to pay premium. The rate of premium shall be fixed by the State Government from time to time for each locality. x x x x"

3. The reasons which persuaded the High Court to uphold the plea raised by the respondent may be set out in their own words:

"The only power which the Government has got, is to fix the rate of premium under Rule 40 of the Rules under the Land Revenue Regulation and the question for us to consider is whether the order of the Government fixing the premium for settlement of this land for special cultivation is an order in conformity with Rule 40, x x x x. In our opinion, what Rule 40 provides is to confer upon the Government power to fix the rate of premium in every case which shall be payable for the settlement and it is only the Deputy Commissioner that is authorised to settle the land. The whole purpose of Rule 40 is to confer power on the Government to fix the rate of premium which will be valid for a particular locality and that the Deputy Commissioner has to make the settlement. He is given the power to realise the premium fixed by the Government from time to time and that no document of lease is to be issued before the premium has been paid by the intending holder. But Rule 40 does empower, in our opinion, the State Government to fix the amount of premium in the case of a particular settlement in a particular locality. x x x x x x"

.....The power under Rule 40 is a general power for fixing the rate of premium for a particular locality and the Legislature when framing the rules never intended that the Government should be empowered to fix the total amount of premium payable by the intending holder. In our opinion, therefore, the order passed by the Government directing the authorities to offer the land for settlement in case the petitioners pay Rs. 3,86,000 is not in conformity with Rule 40 and this order cannot be given effect to".

4. The expression "locality" is not defined in the Act or in the Rules. We see no warrant for the assumption made by the High Court that in settling the premium to be fixed in respect of its own property, the Government is bound to fix the premium generally in respect of a region. The Government is by the Act or the Rules not disqualified from fixing the premium to be paid in respect of an individual tea garden. In the absence of any indication to the contrary a tea garden may in our judgment be appropriately regarded as a locality within the meaning of Rule 40. The power to settle a tea garden on payment of land revenue, value of the timber and premium is to be exercised according to the Rules. The rate of premium may be fixed by the State Government according to its commercial value. In the absence of any restriction imposed upon the State Government requiring that a general rate shall be fixed covering a specified area larger than a tea garden there is nothing which prohibits the State Government from fixing the rate of premium having regard to the commercial value of the tea garden. In the present case the Sub-Divisional Officer reported that the price of the land of the Dirpai tea garden be valued at Rs. 500/- per bigha and on that basis the State Government computed the premium to be paid in respect of the entire Jokai Tea Garden.

5. Fixation of a rate of Rs. 500 per bigha in respect of the entire area of the tea garden may be regarded as a premium fixed for the locality of the tea garden. The matter rested entirely in contract between the Respondent and the State Government. There was an offer by the respondent for settlement of the tea garden. He agreed to pay the land revenue payable under Rule 17. He also agreed to pay the value of the timber assessed under Rule 37. For settlement of the tea garden for special cultivation the respondent was also liable to pay premium. The quantum of liability to pay land revenue was governed by Rule 17 and value of the timber was governed by Rule 37. The liability to pay premium had to be fixed by the State Government. In the absence of any restriction placed by the Rules upon the power of the State Government, we do not think that the High Court had any jurisdiction to compel the State to enter into a contract to settle the tea garden upon the respondent on payment of premium after determining a general rate for a region larger than the tea garden.

6. The High Court was in error in setting aside the order passed by the Government of Assam and in declaring that the offer to settle the land of the Dirpai Tea Garden on payment of Rs. 3,86,008/- was not in conformity with Rule 40. The High Court also erred in directing that auction of the land for non-payment of the premium shall be set aside.

7. The appeal is allowed and the petition filed by the respondent will be dismissed. The respondent will pay the costs in this Court and in the High Court.

Appeal allowed.
Petition dismissed.

Representation of the People Act (1951), Section 123 (6) — Conclusion regarding corrupt practice drawn on unreliable fabricated and manipulated evidence is not sustainable. (X-Ref. Section 77 (3).) — Election Petition No. 32 of 1969, D/- 8-12-1969 (All), Reversed. (Para 9)

*(Election Petition No. 32 of 1969, D/- 8-12-1969 — All.)

AO/BO/A111/71/GKC/M

Mr. A. K. Sen, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. S. S. Shukla and Miss. Krishna Sen, Advocates, with him), for Appellant; Mr. S. V. Gupte, Sr Advocate, (M/s. K. K. Jain, Narain Kishore and Bishamber Lal, Advocates, with him), for Respondent No. 1.

GROVER, J.: — This appeal from a judgment of the Allahabad High Court arises out of an election petition filed by the defeated candidate Satyavir challenging the election of Rampal Singh to the Uttar Pradesh Legislative Assembly from the Bijnor constituency. The High Court has set aside the election of Rampal Singh on the ground that the total expenditure incurred by him on his election exceeded the maximum limit of Rs. 9,000/- prescribed under Rule 90 (2) of the Conduct of Election Rules and he had committed a corrupt practice as defined in Section 123 (6) read with Section 77 (3) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, hereinafter called the 'Act'.

2. The appellant, who belongs to the Bhartiya Karanti Dal party, contested the seat to the legislative assembly from No. 22 Bijnor General constituency. Respondent No. 1 also contested the election from the same constituency as a candidate of the Congress Party. Respondent No. 2 was put up by the Muslim Majlis. Five others contested the same seat. The poll was held on February 9, 1969 and the counting of votes took place on the following day. The appellant secured 28,766 votes, respondent No. 1 20,569 and respondent No. 2 15,896 votes. The remaining candidates secured a negligible number of votes. The appellant was declared duly elected.

3. Although in the election petition corrupt practices of bribery and intimidation of voters had also been alleged, the learned counsel for respondent No. 1 abandoned any attempt to press them. He confined his case to the ground of excessive and unauthorised expenditure. The only item which was pressed before the High Court related to the expenditure on motor fuel purchased by the appellant for his election campaign from the Vijay Engineering Corporation of Bijnor. The allegation in para 9A (i) of the petition was that the appellant had shown an expenditure for the period from January 1, 1969 to January 22, 1969 under the head "fuel for vehicles-petrol, diesel, of a sum of Rs. 1760 only". (The High Court found that the correct amount was Rs. 1700.60), the payment having been made to Vijay Engineering Corporation. But in fact the amount of fuel purchased by the appellant between the said date from the said Corporation was worth Rs. 8,233.91. Vouchers and entries in the credit sale register in respect of these purchases were entered into the account of the aforesaid Corporation in the name of the appellant but later on purchases for a sum of Rs. 4,000/- out of the total amount mentioned above, were shown in conspiracy with the said Corporation and by tampering with the credit vouchers and credit sale register entries in the name of Mahipal Singh who was an agent, worker and friend of the appellant. This had been done by scoring out the name of the appellant from the said documents and substituting the name of Mahipal Singh by his name. In this way the appellant had concealed an expenditure to the tune of Rs. 6473.91. Adding this amount to the election expenses included in the return filed by the appellant they exceeded the prescribed limit by Rs. 4157.67. In paragraphs 13 to 20 of the written statement all the allegations made in paragraph 9-A (i) of the petition were specifically denied by reference to each allegation.

4. The learned Judge considered the evidence relating to the accounts of the Vijay Engineering Corporation. A large number of ledger sale registers, credit memos and bill books had been summoned from that firm and these were duly produced in Court on September 29, 1969 by Budhmal Gupta P.W. 1 in-charge sales. After he had been examined only one ledger (1968-69), one bill book from February 1, 1969 to April 1, 1969 and seven credit memo books (December 29, 1968 to March 4, 1969) were retained and the rest were given back for being taken away. Subsequently learned counsel for the election petitioner applied for the production of firm's bill books, credit memo books, credit sales register and many receipt books covering the period from September 1, 1968 to October 1, 1969 for November 3, 1969. On that date Bu-dhmal Gupta stated that all these books and documents had been stolen away from the railway compartment while he was travelling from Bijnor to Allahabad. The learned Judge did not believe the story of theft and the loss of the account books and documents and was of the opinion that they had been purposely withheld because they were damaging to the appellant's case. He was largely influenced by the extensive forgeries which had been committed with regard to the accounts shown in the names of Mohinderpal Singh (from January 24, 1969 to February 5, 1969) and Mahipal Singh (from February 6, 1969 onwards) which, according to respondent No. 1, related to the purchases made by the appellant. The learned Judge went into details about the credit memos of Mohinderpal Singh and Mahipal Singh which were 13 and 10 respectively in number and considered that it was apparent that none of them were the original memos belonging to the books in which they were found. According to the learned Judge the credit memos of Mohinderpal Singh and Mahipal Singh were not the original ones that existed in the memo books in the first instance; but were forgeries which had been prepared and inserted in the books subsequently. He found similar indications of the forgeries in the bill books. He referred to certain bills and found that they had been fabricated. The learned Judge went to the extent of even finding the bill submitted on March 11, 1969 by Rampal Singh along with his return of election expenses for Rs. 1700.60 as a forged one. This is what he observed:

"It is a bill of the same type as those in the bill book containing bills Nos. 0201 to 0300. But its perforation line is intact and it has none of the holes that must be produced by stitching the bills together in the form of a book. Obviously this bill was never torn out of a bill book in the normal way but must have been obtained from the press in the form of a single sheet".

5. The learned Judge proceeded to hold that the ledger which had been filed appeared to have been forged in its entirety. Mahipal Singh R. W. 2 had been produced by the appellant for showing that purchases totalling Rs. 2183.04 stated to have been made between February 6, 1969 and February 19, 1969 according to the accounts of Vijay Engineering Corporation that had gone on the record were genuinely made by him. The learned Judge was of the view that the explanations tendered by this witness for buying so much fuel on the crucial date from February 6, 1969 upto and including the polling day February 9, 1969 were hopelessly unconvincing and inadequate. The learned Judge was struck by the strange coincidence that the appellant purchased motor fuel from the Vijay Engineering Corporation on every day without fail from January 1, 1969 upto January 23, 1969 and then he abruptly stopped purchasing motor fuel from that concern. The very next day, namely, January 24, 1969 an account was opened in the name of Mohinderpal Singh who also made purchases every day upto February 5, 1969 when his account too was closed and on the next day i. e., February 6, 1969 Mahipal's account was opened and he purchased fuel every day without a break upto February 12, 1969. The obvious inference, according to the learned Judge, from these three successive khatahs was that they were in reality all part of one single account, namely, of the appellant.

6. The case of the appellant was that he had closed the account with Vijay Engineering Corporation on January 23, 1969 and that he made subsequent purchase of fuel from the Hitesh Automobiles Corporation only. The learned Judge compared the figures of the purchases made from that firm with the purchases made during the early period from the Vijay Engineering Corporation and found the figures of purchases from the Hitesh Automobiles incredibly low. He was further influenced by the improbability or falsity of the version of the appellant that he had made part payment of the bill of Vijay Engineering Corporation to the extent of Rs. 810.20 on February 21, 1969. This was towards the satisfaction of the bill Exhibit A-4 for Rs. 1700.60 dated February 1, 1969, the balance having been alleged to have made on March 10, 1969. The learned Judge proceeded to say:—

"I have already pointed out the clear signs of forgery in the bill (Exh. A-4) for Rs. 1700.60, which was submitted by Rampal Singh along with his return of election expenses and this forged bill, coming from the custody of Rampal Singh and passed off by him as genuine, provides convincing proof that he was a party to the falsification of the Vijay Engineering Corporation's accounts."

So he was of the opinion that even without considering the oral testimony there was ample material to warrant the finding that the figures which were present in the accounts of the firm were made for the benefit of no one else but the appellant and that the motor fuel shown in the khata of Mohinderpal Singh from January 24, 1969 to February 5, 1969 and Mahipal Singh from February 6, 1969 onwards had been actually purchased by him. There were certain other pieces of evidence on which the learned Judge also relied. One of these was Exhibit 3 which was a copy of the relevant khatas which Vimal Sarup Sharma P. W. 6 the secretary of respondent No. 1 had made in March (probably on 13th or 14th) after Budhmal Gupta of the Vijay Engineering Corporation had allowed him to inspect the ledger. According to Vimal Sarup Sharma, Budhmal Gupta had shown him some chits signed by the appellant or his helpers for the purchase of petrol between February 4, 1969 and February 8, 1969 and allowed him to make notes of these which were filed in Court as Exhibit-4. The learned Judge was satisfied that Budhmal Gupta had played "an ambiguous role" in the case siding first with the one party and then with the other and that he was a thoroughly unreliable witness. The learned Judge believed Vimal Sarup Sharma that he had inspected the books of Vijay Engineering Corporation and made out copies Exhibits P-3 and P-4 as deposed to by him. He accepted P-3 as a true copy of the khata of the appellant and Mahipal as they existed in the firm's account in March 1969. We shall presently refer to the evidence relating to the original chits which, in our judgment, formed an essential link in the entire chain of the circumstantial and other evidence produced by respondent No. 1. The learned Judge has relied on the evidence of Bal Krishan Khanna P. W. 10 — a lawyer, who admittedly was a friend of respondent No. 1 and according to whom Budhmal Gupta had brought these chits relating to the purchase of petrol between 4th and 10th February which according to him had been signed by the appellant. These chits had also been shown to Vishwa Mitter P. W. 11 — a lawyer of Allahabad, who was related to respondent No. 1 when he visited Bijnor in May 1969. Strangely enough the original chits were stated to have disappeared from the office of Bal Krishan Khanna in July 1969. Even though the learned Judge was satisfied that the original chits existed he found it difficult to exclude the possibility that they might not have been signed by the appellant.

7. Now indisputably the facts and circumstances which have been found by the learned Judge create a good deal of suspicion that it was at the instance of or in complicity with the appellant that the various books etc., of the Vijay Engineering Corporation were manipulated for his benefit. But the most decisive piece of evidence would have been the original chits which are stated to have disappeared from the office of Khanna — the lawyer and friend of respondent No. 1. We shall presently consider his statement of the circumstances in which the chits were brought to him and how they disappeared. We find it extremely difficult to accept the testimony of Khanna relating to the disappearance of the chits. Admittedly Gupta had been won over for consideration or otherwise by respondent's secretary Vimal Sarup Sharma. It is impossible to believe that Gupta would have otherwise placed all the books of account of the Vijay Engineering Corporation relating to the account of the appellant, of Mohinderpal Singh and Mahipal Singh at the disposal of Sharma who was even allowed to make out verbatim copies. This was allowed in a most secretive and surreptitious manner as Sharma went to him at night, Gupta having told him to come at 10 or 11 p. m. to the place where the accounts were kept. Sharma's story was that Gupta gave original parchas or chits signed by Rampal Singh of which he made a note. He showed that note to Khanna and respondent No. 1. Khanna directed him to get the original chits. He approached Gupta who expressed his inability to give the original to him. However, Gupta said that he would take them to Khanna and show them to him. This was done by him and the chits were shown to Khanna in Sharma's presence. Khanna then asked Gupta to leave the documents with him and he would return them after seeing them. Gupta left the original chits with Khanna which were forty in number. Khanna put them in a drawer and later after studying them told respondent No. 1 that he had a strong case because most of the chits had been signed by the appellant. Sharma could not say where those chits were when he gave evidence in Court. When asked about the date on which Gupta gave Khanna those original chits Sharma stated that they were shown to him on April 15 or 16, 1969 after the petition had been prepared. Khanna who appeared as P. W. 10 stated that Gupta was his class fellow. He gave those original chits to him some of which were signed by the appellant, some by Parveen Singh Pradhan and some by Mangal Singh. According to him the chits had been lost and although he made a search for them he could not find them. It was in the month of July that he discovered the loss. He had put them in his table drawer in his chamber, in Gupta's presence, which was not locked. He had separated the chits bearing the signatures of the appellant and the rest. The following part of his statement may be reproduced:—

"In July Satya Vir came and told me the parchis would be summoned in the High Court. Then I found them missing. I told him I could not find them. I told him to summon them from Budhmal, as I might be able to trace them after searching. I did not tell Budhmal that the parchis had disappeared. After that Satya Vir kept coming to ask if I had found them, I did not lodge any report with the police, as I could not be sure what had happened to them".

Gupta, as stated before, maintained that it was false to say that he had showed Sharma any original chits or that he went with him to Khanna. The learned Judge even allowed him to be cross-examined by counsel for respondent No. 1 for whom he was appearing as a witness for reasons which are not mentioned at all.

8. The above evidence relating to the disappearance of the original chits for the material period which, it is alleged, bore the signatures of the appellant in the manner deposed to by Khanna creates a good deal of doubt in our mind about the soundness of the conclusion of the learned Judge which was based mainly on the falsity of the books of account of the Vijay Engineering Corporation and the other facts and circumstances which have been detailed before. It is difficult to accept the version of Khanna that the original chits had disappeared in the manner stated by him. It seems to us that the original chits were deliberately withheld after having been secreted away or taken from Gupta who was prepared to help respondent No. 1 in every way. The various persons concerned in this matter are also intimately connected. Gupta is an old class-fellow of Khanna who is not only a friend of respondent No. 1 but also his legal advisor in the matter of institution of the election petition. It seems to us that there has been a lot of manipulation of evidence which was not entirely for the benefit of the appellant. The very fact that the original chits disappeared or were withheld by the legal advisor of respondent No. 1 or other persons who were concerned with the conduct of his case showed that their disappearance could not have been for the benefit of the appellant. It is not shown that he had anything to gain by the disappearance of the original chits. On the contrary their production might have told a different story and completely demolished the whole case of respondent No. 1.

9. In the above view of the matter we consider it wholly unnecessary to examine the question whether Mahipal Singh was closely associated with the appellant or not and the effect of non-production of Mohinderpal Singh. We may, however, point out that the observations of the learned Judge with regard to the bill for Rs. 1700.60 which was produced along with the return of election expenses by the appellant and about the part payment of the bill made on February 21, 1969 which was not in round figures, are prompted mostly by the whole atmosphere of suspicion which was quite naturally generated owing to the forgeries which were found in the books of account, credit memos, bill books etc., of the Vijay Engineering Corporation. But the point which is of real consequence is that the Court cannot be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the manipulation of various accounts and documents was done by Gupta or some other employee of the said firm solely for the appellant's benefit. The only piece of evidence which would have concluded the matter, namely, the original chits was deliberately withheld or done away with not at the instance of the appellant but by those who were acting in the interest of respondent No. 1. In such a state of affairs it would not be safe to base the conclusion on a matter involving a corrupt practice which has serious consequences on such an unreliable, fabricated and manipulated evidence. The learned Judges unfortunately did not consider all these matters in their proper perspective.

10. We would accordingly allow the appeal and set aside the order of the High Court. The election petition shall stand dismissed. In view of the entire circumstances parties are left to bear their own costs throughout.

(Paras 14, 15)

In determining a single heir according to rule of lineal primogeniture governing an impartible estate the class of heirs who will be entitled to succeed to the property if it were partible must be first ascertained and then the single heir applying the aforesaid special rule must be selected.

(Paras 15, 19)

(C) Deed — Construction — Wazib-ul-arz for Zamindari in Chanda District did not make Zamindar a mere life-tenant.

(Para 17)

Where the Governor under terms of the Wazib-ul-arz governing zamindari in Chanda District had power to take extraordinary steps to protect the zamindari by removal of the holder on breach of conditions of loyalty or of good police administration or of improvement of cultivation, the incidents of tenure were restrictions on estate of the Zamindar but these restrictions did not make him a mere life-tenant.

(Para 17)

(D) Natural Justice — Order by Governor exercising powers under Wazib-ul-arz incorporating conditions of Chanda Patent proprietary rights contemplates quasi-judicial inquiry and must be consistent with rules of natural justice and in accord with custom of family.

(E) Evidence Act (1872), Sec. 35 — Order of Revenue Officer in mutation proceeding based on untrue piece of evidence has no evidentiary value in civil suit.

(Para 21)

(F) Civil P. C. (1908), Section 9 — Illegal order of Governor on question of succession of certain zamindari and that of revenue authorities in mutation proceedings do not exclude jurisdiction of Civil Court to decide question of kinship between parties to suit in respect of zamindari properties.

(Para 22)

(G) Tenancy Laws — M. P. Abolition of Proprietary Rights (Estates, Mahals, Alienated Lands) Act (1 of 1951), Section 14 — Civil Court and not the Compensation Officer has jurisdiction to determine competing claims of persons to proprietary rights to property vesting in Government under Section 3.

(Para 23)

Section 14 is intended to determine only proprietary rights in land qua State. In summary enquiry under that section, the Revenue Officer does not determine the complicated questions of title. Thus where a suit is filed by rightful claimant raising disputed questions of title to compensation, the Civil Court is competent to entertain the suit even though the suit is filed beyond the period of two months from order of compensation officer under Section 14. (Contd. on Col. 2)

SHAH, C. J.: — Dawalatshah and Ranwirshah — sons of Pratapshah — instituted an action in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Chanda, for a decree for possession of property immovable (including the Zamindari of Dhanora) and movable specified in the Schedules annexed to the plaint, and for an order for payment of mesne profits and also for recovery of the amount of compensation in respect of certain lands received by the defendants from the Government of Madhya Pradesh and for an order declaring their right to receive the balance of compensation remaining to be paid. The plaintiffs relied upon the following genealogy:

2. The plaintiffs claimed that the property in suit originally belonged to Gangashah. Gangashah had five sons: Hiru, Bhakta, Sakru, Kajur and Raju. The branches of Sakru and Kajur became extinct a long time ago.

The branch of Hiru (who was the eldest among the five sons of Gangashah) became extinct with the death of Amarshah on December 9, 1950. The plaintiffs—sons of Pratapshah claimed the Zamindari held by Amarshah relying upon the rule of primogeniture, and the other estate of Amarshah as devisees under the will of Amarshah executed on December 3, 1950. They submitted that the Dhanora Zamindari was granted to Sitaram ancestor of Amarshah as an impartible estate, devolving by the rule of primogeniture; that the Zamindari on that account devolved on the death of Amarshah upon Pratapshah and that on the death of Pratapshah the Zamindari devolved upon the first plaintiff. The plaintiffs also claimed that the other property including Malguzari lands devolved upon them under a will executed on December 3, 1950 whereby Amarshah devised his estate in their favour. Accordingly the first plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to the Zamindari on the death of Pratapshah on January 27, 1951 and the plaintiffs claimed the other estate of Amarshah as devisees under his will. The plaintiffs submitted that Dayaram the first defendant took wrongful possession of the Zamindari and other property, movable and immovable of Amarshah.

3. The defendants by their written statement maintained that the genealogical table set up by the plaintiffs was incorrect, that by the order of the Governor of Madhya Pradesh dated November 9, 1951, the Zamindari was conferred upon the 1st defendant Dayaram as he was found suitable to hold the Zamindari and the decision of the Governor was binding upon the plaintiffs; that the decision of the Compensation Officer regarding Malguzari lands which vested in consequence of the enactment of the Madhya Pradesh Abolition of Proprietary Rights (Estates, Mahals, Alienated Lands) Act 1 of 1951, had become binding and conclusive against the plaintiffs because no suit challenging the decision was instituted within two months from the date thereof and the plaintiffs were on that account not entitled to claim the compensation paid or payable in respect of the Malguzari lands; that Amarshah did not execute the will set up by the plaintiffs; and that Amarshah had made a will dated December 8, 1950 under which his estate was devised in favour of the defendants.

4. The Trial Court held that the Dhanora Zamindari was impartible and was governed by the rule of primogeniture and Pratapshah father of the plaintiffs being the eldest member of the senior-most branch from among the descendants of the common ancestor Gangashah was entitled to the Zamindari; that the plaintiffs were entitled to receive compensation in respect of the Malguzari lands and the decision of the Compensation Officer did not operate to deprive the plaintiff of the right to those lands or compensation payable in respect thereof; that the will set up by the plaintiffs dated December 3, 1950 was genuine and the plaintiffs were under the will entitled to the estate devised in their favour by Amarshah; that the will dated December 8, 1950, set up by the defendants was 'a fabricated will' and conferred no right or title upon the defendants; and that the genealogical table set up by the plaintiffs represented the true relationship between the descendants of Gangashah.

5. In appeal by the defendants, the High Court of Bombay confirmed the decree of the Trial Court with a slight modification. The High Court held that the genealogical table set up by the plaintiffs was correct, that according to the custom governing succession Dhanora Zamindari devolved upon Pratapshah on the death of Amarshah, and on the death of Pratapshah the first plaintiff became entitled to the Zamindari, that the order of the Governor recognising Dayaram as Zamindar was not binding and conclusive, for it was not shown that in making the order the Governor had acted in exercise of the power conferred by the Chanda Patent; that the order was contrary to the customs and the law governing the Zamindari; that the decision of the Governor did not oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court; that the will dated December 8, 1950 set up by the defendants was not genuine and the will set up by the plaintiffs dated December 3, 1950, was genuine; and that the plaintiffs' suit with regard to Malguzari lands was not barred by the decision of the Compensation Officer. The High Court accordingly confirmed the decree passed by the Trial Court in respect of the Zamindari relying upon the rule of inheritance incorporated in the Wazib-ul-Arz of the Chanda District and by succession under the will dated December 3, 1950 in respect of the other property except as to certain occupancy lands held by Amarshah.

6. With certificate granted by the High Court the defendants have appealed to this Court.

7. Certain concurrent findings on which not much argument was advanced at the Bar may first be set out. The High Court agreeing with the trial Court on appreciation of evidence held that the genealogy set up by the plaintiffs represented the true relationship between the parties. Again the High Court agreeing with the Trial Court held that the will dated December 3, 1950 set up by the plaintiffs was genuine while the will dated December 8, 1950 set up by the defendants was not genuine. The argument that the High Court did not give due weight to certain important circumstances in reaching their conclusion relating to the will set up by the plaintiffs is without substance. The circumstances relied upon are that the writing instrument with which the body of the will was written and the writing instrument with which Amarshah, it was claimed, signed or executed the will were different, that the will was not registered, that the appearance of the will was suspicious, that the will was unnatural because it devised the estate in favour of the plaintiffs after giving a life interest in favour of the testator's widow Ratnabai, that the will had not been produced before the revenue authorities and before the Compensation Officer when disputes in relation to the estate of Amarshah were pending before those authorities, and that it was produced for the first time nearly seven years after the death of Amarshah, and that the scribe who wrote the will did not belong to the village to which Amarshah belonged. The Trial Court and the High Court have reached the conclusion that on the circumstances no suspicion as to the genuineness of the will dated December, 1950 arose. It may be noticed that the plaintiffs were, at the date of their father's (Pratapshah's) death minors, and soon after Pratapshah's death, their mother abandoned them and re-married. Thereafter no one attended to the pending litigation. Failure to produce the will before the revenue authorities was therefore not a circumstance, in the view of the High Court, which militated against the genuineness of the will. In the view of the Courts, absence of registration, appearance of the will, the contents thereof, the dispositions thereunder, and the fact that the writer of the will belonged to another village did not in the circumstances of the case give rise to any suspicion. We do not think that sitting in appeal we would be justified in interfering with the conclusion recorded by the Trial Court and confirmed by the High Court on what is essentially a conclusion on a question of fact.

8. The will set up by the defendants is not proved to be a genuine will executed by Amarshah. This again is a concurrent finding of the two Courts and must be accepted in this Court. No argument has been advanced to persuade us to take a different view. The rights of the parties must be adjudged in the light of these findings.

9. The dispute between the parties relates to three set of properties —

- (a) Dhanora Zamindari
- (b) Malguzari lands;
- (c) Occupancy lands and Movables.

10. The ancestors of the parties held an extensive Zamindari in the Chanda District. After the advent of the British rule, in that region, the revenue authorities commenced settlement operations. An inquiry was held by the Settlement Officer in connection with the lands held by the family of the parties and statements of some members were recorded. Chattarshah s/o. Kajur stated that the Zamindari of Dhanora was standing in the name of his cousin Sitaram and that all the members of the family were joint and maintained themselves out of the income from the Zamindari. In his statement Sakru admitted that the rule of primogeniture prevailed in the family. He stated that Hiru was his eldest brother and Sitaram was the son of Hiru and the Zamindari was recorded in the name of Sitaram according to Awwal Haqq i.e. rule of primogeniture from ancient times, even though he was senior in age, and that there was no quarrel between him and Sitaram and that he and Sitaram were living jointly and were taking the income from the Zamindari.

11. The Settlement Officer made an order on November 2, 1867 that the "Zamindari is of ancient tenure and the present Zamindar Sitaram Thakur has proved his right to be Zamindar. Subject to the conditions to be embodied in patent of proprietary right, I confer proprietary right in the Zamindari of Dhanora on Sitaram Thakur". The Settlement Officer observed that conferment of proprietary rights was subject to conditions to be embodied in a patent of proprietary rights. It may reasonably be inferred that a formal grant was made in favour of Sitaram. The form of the grant which is known as "Chanda Patent" is reproduced in Aitchison's "Collection of Treaties, Engagements and Sanads" Vol. II, pp. 573-574. Under the Chanda Patent it was declared that the tenure shall be indivisible, and non-transferable save to the nearest male heir the transfer in such case being subject to the approval of the Chief Commissioner) the land shall be held by one person, the Zamindar or Zamindarin for the time being and shall be held on conditions of (i) loyalty (ii) good police administration and (iii) improvement and cultivation of the estate. Clauses V, VI, VII of the grant relating to succession to the Zamindari held under the Patent:

"V. Subject to the provisions contained in Clause VI, the order of succession shall be as under:—

On the death of the Zamindar, the estate shall devolve upon his eldest son. In default of a son, and when adoption has not taken place, the succession should preferably devolve on the nearest male kinsman, the widow receiving a suitable maintenance.

VI. In the event of the first in order of succession being, in the opinion of the local Government, unfit to carry out the conditions of Clause IV, the Zamindaree shall devolve upon the nearest heir who possesses the required qualification.

VII. The Zamindar, in the case of gross misconduct, shall be liable to removal by the local Government and if such removal be ordered, the succession shall take place as if the Zamindar removed had died".

12. Tenure of the grant is entered in the Wajib-ul-arz. The relevant recitals in the Wajib-ul-arz are as follows:

PART I

Rights and liabilities of Zamindar in relation to Government.

(1) Watan: Zamindar's Watan is not partible and it cannot be given to anyone other than quite close (the nearest) male heir. Changes taking place in this way should have sanction of the Governor-in-Council. The Zamindari shall be in the name of only one person and the Zamindari has been granted to the Zamindar in possession at present on the conditions of his remaining loyal to the Government, managing his estate properly and improving the cultivation.

(2) Heirs: On the death of the Zamindar the estate shall devolve upon his eldest son. If there is no legitimate or adopted son, it shall devolve upon a very close (the nearest) male relative. If there arises a dispute regarding right of inheritance, the Governor-in-Council will decide it in accordance, with the custom in that family. If the Governor-in-Council finds that the first heir is unable to abide by the conditions stated in BAB (clause), the Zamindari shall be granted to a quite close (the nearest) male heir possessing the necessary qualifications.

(3) Dispossessing the Zamindar and forfeiting his rights: Governor-in-Council may dispossess the Zamindar on account of his behaviour and bad administration. Such dispossession may be for a few days or permanent. If it is for a few days, the Deputy Commissioner will manage the Zamindari on behalf of the Zamindar and if the order of dispossession is permanent, the Zamindar shall so to say be deemed to have died and the heir will get the right. The entries in the Wajib-ul-Arz substantially reproduce the terms of the Chanda Patent as set out in Vol. II of Aitchison's "Collection of Treaties, Engagements and Sanads".

13. One Major C. B. Lucie Smith made a report relating to the Land Revenue Settlement of the Chanda District, Central Provinces, 1869. At pages 179 to 180, Major Lucie Smith has referred to the Zamindarees of the Chanda District. He has stated under the head "Zamindarees".

"The Zamindarees were settled by me; and in order to explain the principles of settlement adopted it will be necessary to touch first upon the questions of tenure and history.

The weight of testimony goes to show that the Zamindars are the descendants of men on whom were conferred tracts of country, more or less wild with the object of their being brought under cultivation and order maintained. Naturally, x x while the law was weak and its administrators distant, the Zamindar, as the lord on the spot, exercised large powers but powers apparently never recognised by either the Gond or the Maratta Government. He was undoubtedly regarded as a noble, bound to furnish a small contingent when required by his sovereign; but there is nothing to warrant the supposition that he possessed an absolute right in the soil; indeed, as far as my experience goes, such a right is foreign to the ideas of the races of this part of India.

The rulers of the day evidently made and unmade Zamindars at their pleasure;

x x x x
 "Under these circumstances it appeared that the Chanda Chiefs, though the Nobles of the Country, possessed no absolute right in the soil, and that it rested with Government to confer it; and in conferring it, to prescribe such conditions as might be deemed fitting. A scheme of conditions to be embodied in the patent of proprietary right, and in the administration paper of the Zamindarees, was therefore drawn up, based upon the usages actually existing from ancient times; and, with one exception, the proposed arrangements were sanctioned in their entirety by the Government of India, who directed that they were to be taken as a general model for those to be applied to the Zamindarees of the Balaghat district and to the non-feudatory Zamindarees of Chutteesgurh.

The provision not approved was that on the death of a Zamindar, the estate should in default of a son, devolve upon his widow. This mode of succession has obtained among the Chanda Chiefs from time immemorial, and is the rule not only among them but among all classes of landholders in the district. It suits especially the character of the Gond Women x x x. Government, however, after weighing the arguments urged, decided that it was conducive to the interests of the Zamindarees that the succession should devolve only upon a male member of the family, and the clause was altered accordingly."

14. It is common ground that Pratapshah and the 1st defendant Dayaram were descendants of Gangashah and they were related to Ganga-shah in the same degree. But Pratapshah was the descendant of Bhakta, and Dayaram was the descendant of Raju. Bhakta was the elder of the two brothers. It is recited in the Wajib-ul-arz that the Dhanora Zamindari is impartible, that on the death of the holder it devolves upon his eldest son and in the absence of a legitimate or an adopted son it devolves upon the nearest male relative. Devolution of the Zamindari class resemble the traditional rule of lineal primogeniture. If the holder dies leaving him surviving no son legitimate or adopted, the Zamindari devolves upon a descendant from the common ancestor of the nearest degree and in the event of there being more descendants from the common ancestor being in the same degree, the descendant in the senior line is preferred. Succession to the Zamindari is subject to the power of the Governor to dispossess a person found unfit to observe the conditions of loyalty, good police administration and improvement and cultivation of estate. But if the nearest in the line of succession is not selected the estate must be given to the nearest heir who had the prescribed qualifications and is a successor to the Zamindar. When the Zamindar is removed, succession takes place as if the Zamindar so removed had died. By the use of the expression "nearest male relative" the test of propinquity alone may be applied and when there are two or more claimants equally removed from the common ancestor the eldest male member in the senior most line will be preferred.* In adjudging the plaintiffs' claim the Court must determine whether Pratapshah—father of the plaintiff was the nearest male relative of Amarshah.

15. On the death of Amarshah there were two male relatives : they were Pratapshah father of the plaintiffs and the 1st defendant Dayaram. The contest between them had to be adjudged in the light of the rules of lineal primogeniture governing an impartible estate which are well established:

Succession is governed by the rules which govern succession to partible property subject to such modifications only as flow from the character of the impartible estate; the only modification which impartibility suggests in regard to the right of succession is the existence of a special rule for the selection of a single heir when there are several heirs of the same class who would be entitled to succeed to the property if it were partible under the general Hindu law; and in the absence of a special custom, the rule of primogeniture furnishes a ground of preference.

Subramanya Pandya Chokka Talawar v. Siva Subramanya Pillai, (1894) 17 Mad 316 at p. 325. In determining a single heir according to the rule of primogeniture the class of heirs who would be entitled to succeed to the property if it were partible must be ascertained first, and then the single heir applying the special rule must be selected.

16. Counsel for the first defendant submitted that under the terms of the Chanda Patent the Zamindari devolves on the death of the holder on the male relative who is the senior most in age, and not on the eldest member in the senior line. There is nothing in the Chanda Patent which supports that contention. By the use of the expression "nearest male relative" the rule of primogeniture is prescribed, it is not intended to confer the estate upon the eldest male relative of the Zamindar.

17. Counsel also submitted that under the terms of the Chanda Patent and the terms recorded in the Wajib-ul-Arz the Governor having the right to determine inheritance and the right to remove a person who is not loyal or does not manage the property or does not improve the cultivation or who is guilty of bad behaviour or bad administration, it must be assumed that the holder of the Zamindari has merely a life interest and on the death of the holder, the Governor re-grants the land consistently with the rules of succession according to the law and custom amongst the members of the family but subject to the dominant purpose of good administration and loyalty to the Government. Counsel for the first defendant relied upon certain circumstances which he claimed established that the interest of the Zamindar was restricted to his life and on his death there was resumption and re-grant of the Zamindari by the Governor. Counsel submitted that the Zamindari was inpartible and devolved upon the nearest male heir, that the sanction of the Governor was necessary for transfer, and also for recording inheritance, that loyalty, good management and improvement of cultivation were the conditions for holding the lands and that if the behaviour of the Zamindar was found unsatisfactory or that he was not capable of good administration he was liable to be removed. On that ground, said Counsel, the Government alone was competent to decide a dispute arising out of inheritance. But the power to take extraordinary steps to protect the Zamindari by the removal of the holder does not restrict the title of the Zamindar to a mere life interest. The incidents of the tenure are restrictions on the estate of the Zamindar, but those restrictions do not make him a mere life-tenant.

18. Under the Chanda Patent the lands of the Zamindar held by the family were confirmed in 1867 in favour of Sitaram. On his death they devolved upon Hanmantrao. There is no evidence that any fresh grant was made. On the death of Hanmantrao the lands devolved upon his son Diwakarrao who died on September 8, 1932. On the death of Diwakarrao dying without leaving any male descendant there arose a dispute between Pratapshah and Amarshah. Pratapshah claimed to be the adopted son of Diwakarrao and on that ground entitled to take the Zamindari. An inquiry was held and it was decided that Pratapshah failed to prove the adoption set up by him. On the death of Amarshah again without leaving any male lineal descendant disputes arose. The evidence is not clear as to whether any formal grant was issued in favour of Sitaram. There is no evidence that any recognition of the heirs of the successive Zamindar was accompanied by the issue of fresh patent or grant. Succession was merely recognised by the revenue authorities. The argument that the grant was for life of the grantee is therefore not supported by the terms of the Chanda Patent, nor by the entries in the Wajib-ul-Arz, nor by the history of the Zamindari. The right to determine inheritance it is true vests in the Governor but the power is exercisable in accordance with and not in violation of the custom of the family. In determining the heir the Governor is not granting afresh the Zamindari; he merely determines the successor in accordance with the custom of the family. The right of the Governor to remove a holder who is disloyal or does not manage his estate properly or does not improve cultivation or is otherwise of "bad behaviour" or guilty of bad administration, does not involve a condition that the interest of the Zamindar is only for his life. When a holder of the Zamindari is removed, the Governor is bound to hand over the Zamindari to the next heir in the order of succession as if the Zamindar removed had died and the heir will get the right.

19. Counsel, then, contended that in any event the decision of the Governor in 1950 declaring Dayaram to be the successor on the death of Amar Shah was binding and conclusive and could not be reopened. Counsel urged that Pratapshah and the 1st defendant Dayaram were related to the common ancestor in the same degree, and it was open to the Governor to select one of the two members of the family related to the last holder in the same degree, even though the person selected did not belong to the senior-most line. But if succession to the Zamindari is governed by the rule of lineal primogeniture, selection of a member of a junior branch in preference to a member of the senior branch would be plainly illegal.

20. Again, the evidence does not warrant the view that the Governor purported to pass any order in pursuance of the provisions of the Chanda Patent or the rules of succession recorded in the Wajib-ul-Arz. The order of the Governor is in the form of a memorandum addressed to the Deputy Commissioner, Chanda, dated November 9, 1951 and it states that:

"Government are pleased to recognise Shri Dayaram Bapu son of Ballarshah Bapu Raj Gond as the Zamindar of Dhanora Zamindari in the Garchiroli tahsil of the Chanda District till the date of vesting of the Zamindari in the State Government". There is no evidence that the Governor made any enquiry to determine the successor of Amarshah. An order by the Governor purporting to exercise powers under the Chanda Patent contemplates a quasi-judicial inquiry. The order does not however show that any inquiry was made for determining the rights of the contesting claimants or that any notice was issued to them or that they were heard before the Governor decided the issue. There is nothing in the pleadings in that behalf. The Governor is invested with quasi-judicial power, and if there be a dispute, the dispute must be decided after holding an inquiry, and the decision must be reached consistently with the rules of natural justice and in accordance with the custom of the family. A bald statement that the "Government are pleased to recognise Dayaram Bapu son of Ballarshah Bapu as the Zamindar of Dhanora Zamindari" does not disclose the reason for rejecting the claim of Pratapshah who according to the custom of the family was "the nearest male relative." There is no evidence on the record that the Governor was even aware that there were other claimants and if he was aware what their claims were and that the Governor had considered those claims before recognizing the claim of Dayaram. In the absence of any evidence that the order was made by the Governor in exercise of the power conferred by the Chanda Patent it is unnecessary to consider whether any order made by the Governor in exercise of the powers of the patent excludes the jurisdiction of the civil court. The decision of the Governor was apparently reached without any inquiry and was plainly contrary to the rules of Hindu Law and the custom of the family in the light of which alone the Governor was by the express mandate competent to adjudicate the claim.

21. It is true that there were mutation proceedings in regard to the Zamindari before the Naib Tahsildar Garchiroli Tahsil. The Naib Tahsildar by his order dated May 9, 1951 held that the dispute relating to the mutation was raised by Pratapshah, that Amarshah had died issueless, that the genealogical tree set up by Daulatshah son of Pratapshah was incorrect being unsupported by reliable evidence, that copies of settlement of 1867 were mere statements of interested persons, that the genealogical tree filed by Dayaram resembled the genealogical tree filed by Pratapshah and was held to be genuine, that Amarshah had clearly admitted in his statement that Dayaram was entitled to succeed to the Zamindari after him and that Dayaram was the nearest male kinsman to the deceased Amarshah. This decision of the Naib Tahsildar proceeded upon a genealogy produced by Dayaram which on the findings of the Trial Court as well as the High Court in this case is incorrect. The decision of the Naib Tahsildar in a mutation proceeding even as a piece of evidence has little evidentiary value when it is founded on a material piece of evidence which was untrue. The proceedings were carried in appeal before the Deputy Commissioner. The Deputy Commissioner confirmed the order by his decision dated August 8, 1951. He also accepted the genealogy set up by Dayaram and held that there were no other nearer male descendants in the branch and that Pratapshah was one degree more removed than Dayaram. In view of the infirmity attaching to the genealogy relied upon by the Revenue Officer that decision has also little evidentiary value.

22. The orders passed by the Governor and the revenue authorities do not exclude the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to decide the question of kinship. In that view we agree with the High Court that the Zamindari originally confirmed in favour of Sitaram must according to the tenure as recorded in the Wajib-ul-Arz devolve upon the first plaintiff Dawalatshah to the exclusion of the first defendant Dayaram.

23. The right to Malguzari land was since the death of Amarsah extinguished by the Madhya Pradesh Abolition of Proprietary Rights (Estates, Mahals, Alienated Lands) Act 1 of 1951. The Malguzari lands are by the devise contained in the will dated December 3, 1950 given to the plaintiffs. Compensation in respect of the lands would therefore belong to the plaintiffs. But it is urged that notwithstanding the devise, because of the order of the Claim Officer under Section 14 of Act 1 of 1951 the plaintiffs were not entitled to agitate the question of heirship. It is enacted by Section 3 of the Act that on and from a date to be specified by a notification by the State Government in that behalf, all proprietary rights in an estate, mahal, alienated village or alienated land as the case may be, in the area specified in the notification, vesting in a proprietor of such estate, mahal, alienated village, alienated land, or in a person having interest in such proprietary right through the proprietor, shall pass from such proprietor or such other person to and vest in the State for the purposes of the State free of all encumbrances. Section 4 sets out the consequences of the vesting of the land in the Government by virtue of the notification issued under Section 3. Section 8 provides for assessment of compensation payable to every proprietor, who is divested of proprietary rights. The compensation is to be determined in accordance with the rules contained in Schedule I. Section 12 requires that a proprietor who is divested of proprietary rights by virtue of a notification issued under Section 3 shall, within such period as may be prescribed, file a statement of claim in the prescribed form and specify the particulars mentioned therein. Section 13 authorises the Compensation Officer to determine the amount of compensation. Section 14 provides:

"(1) If, during the course of an enquiry by the Compensation Officer, any question is raised regarding the proprietary right in any property divested under S. 3 and such question has not already been determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction, the Compensation Officer shall proceed to enquire summarily into the merits of such question and pass such orders as he thinks fit".

(2) The order of the Compensation Officer under sub-section (1) shall not be subject to any appeal or revision, but any party may, within two months from the date of such order, institute a suit in the Civil Court to have the order set aside, and the decision of such Court shall be binding on the Compensation Officer, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the Compensation Officer shall be final and conclusive".

Counsel for Dayaram urged that the Compensation Officer had decided by his Order dated August 30, 1951 that compensation in respect of the Malguzari land was payable to Dayaram and since no suit was filed by the plaintiffs for setting aside that decision, the order of the Compensation Officer became final and conclusive and could not be reopened in a suit filed more than six years after that date. We are unable to accept that contention. The Compensation Officer is entitled to decide a question only regarding the proprietary right in the property divested under Section 3. He is not concerned with determination of any question relating to a private dispute between two or more persons who make competing claims in the matter of compensation, relying upon their respective titles. A question regarding the proprietary rights may in ordinary course be raised only in a claim against the State, and if that claim be decided against the claimant in a summary inquiry held by the Compensation Officer, a suit to set aside the decision must be filed within two months from that date and if no suit is filed, the order becomes final and conclusive. Section 14 was enacted with a view to put an end to disputes with regard to the claims to proprietary rights which by virtue of the notification issued under Section 3 are extinguished. It is not intended by an Order under Section 14 to determine complicated questions of title by the adjudication of a Revenue Officer in a summary inquiry without even a right of appeal and to make his adjudication conclusive unless a suit be filed within two months from the date of the order. That is also clear from the terms of Section 35 (7) of Act 1 of 1951 which provides:

"The payment of compensation under this Act to the creditors of a proprietor or to the proprietor in accordance with the prescribed manner shall be a full discharge of the State Government from all liability to pay compensation for the divesting of proprietary rights, but shall not prejudice any rights in respect of the said rights to which any other person may be entitled by due process of law to enforce against the person to whom compensation has been paid as aforesaid".

The Civil Court is declared competent to determine disputed questions with regard to title to the compensation. We agree with the High Court that Section 14 of Act 1 of 1951 does not invest the Compensation Officer with jurisdiction to determine competing claims of persons claiming proprietary rights to the property vesting in the Government by the operation of Section 3 of the Act. Section 14 is intended to determine only the proprietary rights in the land qua the State.

24. Finally it was urged that the Trial Court granted Rs. 10,000/- as mesne profits and even though the High Court disallowed the claim of the plaintiffs with regard to certain items no reduction was made in the total amount of mesne profits awarded corresponding to the claim disallowed. Counsel for the plaintiffs concedes that the High Court was in error in not reducing the amount of mesne profits awardable to the plaintiffs. He agrees that instead of the figure of Rs. 10,000/- awardable to the plaintiff Rs. 8000/- should be substituted. We modify the mesne profits awarded. Subject to this modification, this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Decree modified.

guilty of corrupt practice. Election Petition No. 1 of 1969, D/- 22-9-1969 (Pat), Affirmed. (Paras 3, 12)

Mr. M. C. Chagla, Sr. Advocate (Mr. A. K. Nag, Advocate, with him), for Appellant; Mr. S. V. Gupte, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. Birendra Prasad Sinha, U. P. Singh, S. B. N. Singh, Jira Lal Kapur and Hardev Singh, Advocates, with him), for Respondent.

SHAH, C. J.: — At the mid-term poll held on February 9, 1969 for electing a member to the Bihar Legislative Assembly from Dhanha Constituency there were four contesting candidates. Yogindra Prasad Shrivastava who stood "on the P. S. P. ticket", was declared elected by a majority of 2162 votes over his nearest rival — Markandeshwar Singh who stood "on the Congress ticket".

2. Markandeshwar Singh applied to the High Court of Patna for an order setting aside the election of Yogindra Prasad on the ground that the latter, his agents and his supporters with his consent had committed several corrupt practices at the election. Three principal corrupt practices set up in the petition were—

(1) that Yogindra Prasad procured the printing of a leaflet bearing the caption "SIDHA SAWAL" and containing false and malicious statements of fact, which he believed to be false, in relation to the personal character and conduct of Markandeshwar Singh in order to malign him and to lower him in the estimation of the voters. The statements were reasonably calculated to harm and prejudice the prospects of his election. Yogindra Prasad, his agents and supporters with his active consent and connivance distributed and circulated the leaflet in the Constituency during the election;

(2) that Yogindra Prasad also procured the printing of posters in different sizes containing false and malicious statements of fact in relation to the personal character and conduct of Markandeshwar Singh in order to malign him and lower him in the estimation of the voters, and the statements were reasonably calculated to harm his prospects of election. These posters were pasted on the walls at various places throughout the Constituency and were also displayed at different places during the election; and

(3) that Yogindra Prasad had obtained and procured the assistance of persons in the service of the Government, such as, Dafadars, Law Clerks of the Forest Department, Compounders of Government Hospital, Headmasters and teachers of Government or Government aided Schools and Presiding Officers of different booths for furthering his prospects at the election, particulars in respect of which were set out in Sch. 3 annexed to the petition.

The High Court held that Yogindra Prasad had committed corrupt practices described in items (1) and (2) only. Since no appeal has been preferred against the order rejecting the plea relating to the commission of corrupt practice with respect to item (3) nothing more need be said in that behalf.

3. Item (1) related to the printing, publication and distribution of a pamphlet, in the course of the election campaign. The caption of the pamphlet was "Straight Question". The caption was preceded by the symbol of a hut which is the election symbol of the P. S. P. candidates and a couplet in Hindi which freely translated reads "the river bank contract and the free land will be snatched away by the people. The people will not tolerate the dacoity and murder under the mask of Congress". The caption "Straight Question" is followed by a statement that the people of Dhanha want an answer from Markandeshwar Singh. Then were set out thirteen questions. It is not disputed that the author of the pamphlet intended to malign Markandeshwar Singh. Serious allegations were made in the pamphlet relating to the personal conduct of Markandeshwar Singh. The pamphlet attributed acts of dacoity, murder and violence to Markandeshwar Singh. It is conceded that the allegations which related to the personal character and conduct of Markandeshwar Singh were false and were reasonably calculated to prejudice the prospects of his election.

4. A poster was also published. It contained an exhortation to the voters to vote for Yogindra Prasad who was described as the "Hope of the poor, Leader of the youth, Fearless socialist". The poster bore the symbol of a hut. It was followed by a couplet in Hindi "The river bank contract and the free land will be snatched away by the people. The people will not tolerate the dacoity and murder under the mask of Congress". Markandeshwar Singh is a ferry contractor and in the pamphlet an allegation was made that Markandeshwar Singh was charging exorbitant rates for ferrying passengers, carts and goods. The couplet apparently refers to the ferry contract and threatens that the contract and the land given in that connection will be snatched away by the people. But by publishing this poster no corrupt practice within the meaning of Section 123 (4) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951 is committed. There was no statement of fact in the poster in relation to the personal character and conduct of any candidate, and the statement could not reasonably be calculated to prejudice his prospects at the election. The High Court held that Yogindra Prasad was responsible for publication of the pamphlet as well as the poster, and that the publication of the pamphlet and poster constituted a corrupt practice within the meaning of Section 123 (4) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951. The posters were printed at Shri Shymalal Press, Motihara and Yogindra Prasad admits that he got the poster printed. But since in our view publication of the poster does not amount to commission of a corrupt practice it is unnecessary to deal with the evidence relating to the affixing of and displaying those posters in the Constituency.

5. Mr. Chagla appearing for Yogindra Prasad concedes that the statements made in the pamphlet were false, that the person who made those statements believed them to be false or did not believe them to be true, that they related to the personal character and conduct of Markandeshwar Singh and that the statements were reasonably calculated to prejudice his prospects at the election. Counsel only contended that the appellant Yogindra Prasad Shrivastava had not published the pamphlet.

6. It is common ground that the pamphlet was printed at the Chitra Printing Press Padrauna. The bill relating to its printing is Ex. 8/7. According to the recitals in the bill the order for printing the pamphlet with the caption "Notice (Straight Question)" of which 10,000 copies were printed, was given by one Janardan Tiwari. The pamphlet, some posters, ballot papers and another publication called Notice "keep watch" were also ordered to be printed by Janardan Tiwari. An advance of Rs. 100/- was given towards the printing charges and the balance of Rs. 229/- remained due. Gopal Prasad Sinha, proprietor of the Printing Press who was examined on commission deposed that on the order given by Janardan Tiwari for printing he printed the pamphlet at his Chitra Printing Press. The witness tendered the manuscript on the basis of which the pamphlet was printed. He also produced a document containing the signature of Janardan Tiwari on the manuscript and the order form. The witness also produced the bill, posters and other matters which were printed by him. The witness stated that the amount of the bill was paid by Yogindra Prasad and that Yogindra Prasad and other persons had taken away the printed pamphlets and posters. In cross-examination the witness stated that Janardan Tiwari had given him the order and the advance, and that when the order was given for printing the pamphlets, Yogindra Prasad was present and that Yogindra Prasad had taken delivery of the printed matter.

7. Yogindra Prasad denied that he had given the order or that he had made the payment or that he had taken delivery of the pamphlets. He admitted that he had appointed one Janardan Tiwari who was an Advocate practising in Bettiah as his counting agent, that he had made his appointment on the day of counting and before his appointment as counting agent, and that Janardan Tiwari was not asked to do and had not done any election work for him. He denied that Janardan Tiwari had accompanied him in his election tour of the constituency. He also denied that the pamphlet was distributed at his instance.

8. Janardan Tiwari was not examined as a witness before the Court. The High Court compared the signatures of Janardan Tiwari as subscribed on the various documents produced by Gopal Prasad Sinha with his signature on the document under which Janardan Tiwari was appointed as counting agent. The High Court was satisfied that the person who had signed the documents produced by the printer Gopal Prasad Sinha was the same person who had signed in token of accepting appointment as counting agent.

9. Yogindra Prasad examined as a witness one Ambika Tiwari-uncle of Janardan Tiwari. The witness stated that Janardan Tiwari had not done any "propaganda work" at the election, that Janardan Tiwari was a practising lawyer at Bettiah, that at the time of election Janardan Tiwari did not go out of Bettiah except for the purpose of recording his vote. He denied that Janardan Tiwari was a counting agent of Yogindra Prasad. The witness had not been to Bettiah at the time of counting of votes and he was "not sure" if he "could identify the signature of Janardan Tiwari if shown" to him. The testimony of this witness was inconsistent even with the case of Yogindra Prasad and was unreliable.

10. Mr. Chagla appearing on behalf of the appellant however contended that the High Court was in error in taking on record the evidence of Gopal Prasad Sinha—the printer. The circumstances in which the evidence of this witness was brought on the record may first be set out. The hearing of the election petition commenced on July 15, 1969. On July 17, 1969 summons was ordered to be issued to Gopal Prasad Sinha requiring him to attend the Court for examination as a witness in support of the election petition. The summons was served on the witness. Gopal Prasad Sinha informed the Court that he was lying ill and was unable personally to present himself before the Court on the day fixed for recording his evidence. Markandeshwar Singh then applied for an order that the witness be examined on commission. The High Court passed an order on July 23, 1969 on the application ordering that a commission be issued. The statement of Gopal Prasad Sinha was recorded on July 27, 1969 and was duly certified. The Court on July 29, 1969 then passed an order that the papers filed by the Commissioner do form part of the record. No objection was raised on behalf of Yogindra Prasad against the admission of the statement. Mr. Chagla relying upon Order

26, Rules 7 and 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure, contends that in the absence of evidence to prove that on the day on which the statement of Gopal Prasad Sinha was admitted on the record, and thereafter during the course of the inquiry the witness was unable to remain present in Court his statement was inadmissible. Order 26, Rules 7 and 8 provide:

Rule 7—"Where a commission has been duly executed, it shall be returned, together with the evidence taken under it, to the Court from which it was issued, unless the order for issuing the commission has otherwise directed, in which case the commission shall be returned in terms of such order; and the commission and the return thereto and the evidence taken under it shall (subject to the provisions of the next following rule) form part of the record of the suit.

Rule 8—Evidence taken under a commission shall not be read as evidence in the suit without the consent of the party against whom the same is offered, unless—

(a) the person who gave the evidence is beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, or dead or unable from sickness or infirmity to attend to be personally examined, or exempted from personal appearance in Court, or is a person in the service of the Government who cannot, in the opinion of the Court, attend without detriment to the public service, or

(b) the Court in its discretion dispenses with the proof of any of the circumstances mentioned in clause (a), and authorises the evidence of any person being read as evidence in the suit, notwithstanding proof that the cause for taking such evidence by commission has ceased at the time of reading the same".

No order was made under clause (b) of Rule 8 by the Court. But no objection was raised by Yogindra Prasad to the admission of the recorded statement. The record of the statement was read with his consent. There was before the Court an application received a week before the date on which the commission was returned duly executed that Gopal Prasad Sinha was lying ill and was unable to attend the Court. The Court was satisfied of the truth of the grounds in that application and directed that the witness be examined on commission. Correctness of the order issuing the commission for exemption of the witness is not challenged. There is no evidence that the sickness or infirmity which prevented the witness from attending the Court on or after July 22, 1969 did not persist till the case was finally disposed of, and on that account the evidence was inadmissible. The statement of Gopal Prasad Sinha was admitted to the record on the day on which the case of Markandeshwar Singh was closed. Thereafter the evidence of Yogindra Prasad was recorded. The last witness on behalf of Yogindra Prasad was examined on August 12, 1969 and there is no evidence that the witness Gopal Prasad Sinha could have attended the Court during the time the case was pending. We do not think that the statement of Gopal Prasad Sinha is inadmissible.

11. Mr. Chagla contended that a proceeding charging a person for committing corrupt practice is in the nature of a quasi-criminal proceeding and the charge must be established beyond reasonable doubt and since the only evidence against Yogindra Prasad is of a single witness not supported by any documentary evidence or any evidence establishing any connection between Yogindra Prasad and the printer of the document which is said to constitute a corrupt practice, the High Court was not justified in relying upon the oral testimony of Gopal Prasad Sinha in holding that Yogindra Prasad was responsible for publication of pamphlet Ext. 8/2. But the circumstances of the case in our judgment amply support the findings recorded by the High Court that Janardan Tiwari had given the order for printing the pamphlet. Gopal Prasad Sinha is not shown to be interested in the election petitioner. Genuineness of his record is not challenged. Janardan Tiwari the person who gave the order has signed several documents which are on the record. His signature accepting appointment by Yogindra Prasad as counting agent is before the Court and in the view of the High Court the signature on the form of acceptance of the counting agency is of the same person who gave the order. We have looked into the documents and we do not see any reason to disagree with the High Court. If it was the case of the appellant that Janardan

Tiwari was some person other than the counting agent appointed by him, he should have examined Janardan Tiwari, Advocate, as a witness. Ambika Tiwari deposed to a story which was palpably false. His testimony could not assist the case of Yogindra Prasad.

12. On the evidence we are unable to hold that the pamphlet was not got printed at the instance of the appellant by Janardan Tiwari, his counting agent. No rational explanation has even been suggested to us as to why a perfect stranger bearing the name of Janardan Tiwari may spend a substantial sum of money for getting printed pamphlets maligning Markandeshwar Singh. The evidence of the printer Gopal Prasad Sinha establishes that it was Yogindra Prasad-appellant here who took delivery of and paid for the pamphlet. We agree with the High Court that Yogindra Prasad was responsible for the printing of the pamphlet Ex. 8/2. It is not in controversy that copies of the pamphlet were widely distributed in the Constituency during the election campaign. There is no reason to disbelieve that Yogindra Prasad was responsible for distribution of the pamphlet.

13. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Assam Forest Regulation (7 of 1891), S. 72, Rules framed under, R. 10 — Rule does not give rise to any liability to pay sum of money but merely imposes limitation on Forest Officers' power to grant leases in respect of certain forest produce. (Para 5)

The amount of damages for breach of terms of sale notice in respect of monopoly rights to quarry stone for certain period from certain areas is not an amount due under Regulation or R. 10 and it cannot be recovered as an arrear of land revenue.

(Para 5)

Mr. Naunit Lal, Advocate, for Appellants; Mr. D. N. Mukherjee, Advocate, for Respondent.

SHAH, C. J.: The Divisional Forest Officer, Kamrup Division, Assam invited tenders for the purchase of monopoly rights to quarry stone from certain areas, including Narangi Stone Quarry Mahal, for the period July 1, 1963 to June 30, 1964. Mool Chand Sarougi — hereinafter called 'the respondent' submitted a tender accompanied by the requisite deposit of Rs. 100/- as earnest money, and offered the rate of Rs. 5.25 per rupee of royalty. The tender submitted by the respondent was accepted and for the minimum quantity of 1,25,800 cft. of stone allotted to the respondent out of the quarry he was to pay Rupees 31,250/-. Intimation of acceptance of the tender was given to the respondent on July 13, 1963.

2. One Baputi Ram, a member of a Scheduled Tribe, appealed against the order of the Divisional Forest Officer accepting the tender, to the Government of Assam and obtained a stay order. After about three months he declined to prosecute the appeal and his appeal was dismissed. The respondent then declined to accept the settlement of the quarry.

3. The Divisional Forest Officer invited fresh tenders. The offers made were not however accepted and tenders were invited again. On January 10, 1964 a settlement was made for a minimum quantity of 50,000 cft. for the period from January 25, 1964 to June 30, 1964 for Rs. 10,000/-.

4. The Divisional Forest Officer, thereafter, sought to recover the amount of Rs. 31,250/- for which the tender of the respondent was accepted as arrears of land revenue in the manner provided by S. 75 of the Assam Forest Regulation VII of 1891. The respondent then moved a petition in the High Court of Assam for an order quashing the proceeding for recovery of the amount demanded. The High Court held that the amount claimed was not recoverable under the provisions of the Assam Forest Regulation VII of 1891 and passed an order quashing the proceeding for recovery and issued a mandamus to the Divisional Forest Officer, Kamrup Division not to proceed with the recovery. The State of Assam has appealed to this Court with certificate granted by the High Court.

5. Section 75 of the Assam Forest Regulation VII of 1891 provides:

"All money, other than fines, payable to Crown under this Regulation, or under any rule made thereunder, or on account of the price of any forest produce, or of expenses incurred in the execution of this Regulation in respect of any forest produce, may, if not paid when due, be recovered under the law for the time being in force as if it were an arrear of land revenue".

The amount claimed to be due from the respondent is not on account of the price of any forest produce, or of expenses incurred in the execution for recovery of any forest produce. The amount is also not due in the execution of the Regulation. So far there is common ground. It was claimed, however, that the amount was due under rule 10 promulgated in exercise of power under the Regulation and on that account it was recoverable as an arrear of land revenue. Rule 10 provides:

"No lease for any fixed period giving the right of removing India rubber, cane, kutcha or cutch, lac, agar, ivory, or any other forest produce shall be given otherwise than in accordance with the general or special orders of the Conservator who is empowered to authorise sales in respect of such leases, by auction, tender or any other method at such rates as he may decide in his discretion."

The Rule in our judgment does not apply to recovery of the amount alleged to be due for failure to carry out the obligations of the tender by proceedings under the Assam Forest Regulation 1891. It is again difficult to hold that "stone" is forest produce within the meaning of the Act. In any event the Rule does not give rise to any liability to pay a sum of money. It merely imposes a limitation upon the power of the officers of the Forest Department to grant leases in respect of certain forest produce. The lease may not be granted except in accordance with the general or special orders of the Conservator who alone is empowered to authorise a sale in respect of such a lease. It is a rule relating to the exercise of power to grant leases. The High Court was, in our judgment, right in observing that the amount of damages for breach of the terms of the sale notice is not an amount due under the Regulation, or rule 10 made thereunder.

6. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Gupta and K. R. Nagaraja, Advocates, for Appellant; Dr. L. M. Singhvi, Sr.
Advocate, (Mr. Badri Dass Sharma, Advocate for Mr. S. P. Nayar, Advocate, with him), for Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHELAT, J.: — By this appeal, under special leave, the appellant-company challenges the correctness of the judgment of the High Court of Punjab, dated February 19, 1963 refusing to set aside an umpire's award, dated March 22, 1958. The award was in respect of certain disputes between the company and the Union of India in the matter of disposals of the United States surplus war materials left by the Government of the U. S. A. at the end of the last World War. These surplus materials, called the U. S. Surplus Stores, consisted of vehicles and other stores.
It was said that these were sold to the company by the Director-General, Disposals through correspondence and sale-notes. These contracts of sale were subject to the General Conditions of Contract (Form Con. 117). Clause 13 of these General Conditions provided that:

"In the event of any question or dispute arising under these conditions or any special conditions of contract or in connection with this contract — the same shall be referred to the award of an arbitrator to be nominated by the Director General and an arbitrator to be nominated by the contractor, or in the case of the said arbitrators not agreeing, then, to the award of an Umpire to be appointed by the arbitrators in writing before proceeding on the reference....."

Upon every and any such reference, the assessment of the costs incidental to the reference and award respectively shall be in the discretion of the arbitrators, or in the event of their not agreeing, of the Umpire appointed by them."

2. Disputes having arisen between the parties both as regards the contents and the quantity of the vehicles delivered under the contracts, they were referred, in the first instance to two arbitrators nominated by the parties, and ultimately to an umpire. The disputes were crystallized into nine claims by the appellant-company totalling Rs. 6,73,34,500/-, and several counter-claims by the Government of India. At the end of the arbitration, the umpire, by his said award, disallowed all the claims made by the company, except one for which he awarded Rs. 6,94,000/- and held, in respect of the counter-claims filed by the Government of India, that the appellant-company was liable to pay to the Government in all Rs. 36,23,682.50 P. and costs amounting to Rs. 5,40,544. In the result, after deducting the claim allowed to the appellant-company, the company was held liable to pay to the Government Rs. 34,70,226.50 P.

3. The award having been filed by the umpire in the Court of the District Judge, Delhi and the Government of India having thereupon applied for a decree in terms of the award, the company applied to the Court for setting aside the award urging several grounds for so doing. The District Judge by an elaborate judgment declined to set aside the award. He, however, held that the award suffered from an error apparent on the face of the award in respect of the appellant's claim No. III (a), and further held that the counter-claims II, IV, V and VI made by the Government were not covered by the reference, and consequently, the umpire had no jurisdiction to go into them. Declining, however, to set aside the award, he remitted it for reconsideration of the aforesaid items and also for readjustment of the amount of costs in the event of enhanced compensation being awarded to the company in respect of its claim No. III (a). Dissatisfied with the judgment of the appellate Court, the company filed an appeal before the High Court. The Union of India also filed certain cross-objections. The High Court heard the appeal and the cross-objections together and by its aforesaid judgment dismissed both the appeal and the cross-objections and upheld the judgment of the District Judge.

4. In support of the claim that the award was liable to be set aside, counsel for the company submitted the following six propositions for our acceptance:

1. that the contracts of sale entered into by the company were misconstrued by the umpire and such misconstruction appears on the face of the award;

2. that the umpire, as also the High Court, failed to take into consideration several documents while deciding the scope of the sales;

3. that in respect of claim No. VI and counter-claim No. VI of the Government, the umpire acted beyond his jurisdiction as those questions did not fall within the scope of the reference;

4. that the umpire did not act according to law but acted as a conciliator and based his award on mere conjectures and surmises;

5. that his conclusion on ground rent awarded to the Government was based on no evidence; and

6. that the costs awarded to the Government were altogether disproportionate.

5. Before we proceed to consider these propositions, it is necessary to ascertain the scope of Section 30 of the Arbitration Act, 1940, and the principles underlying that section. The general rule in matters of arbitration awards is that where parties have agreed upon an arbitrator, thereby displacing a Court of law for a domestic forum, they must accept the award as final for good or ill. In such cases the discretion of the Court either for remission or for setting aside the award will not be readily exercised and will be strictly confined to the specific grounds set out in Ss. 16 and 30 of the Act. In Hodgkinson v. Fernie, 1857 (3) CB (NS) 189, Williams, J., stated the principle as follows:—

"Where a cause or matters in difference are referred to an arbitrator, whether a lawyer or a layman, he is constituted the sole and final judge of all questions both of law and fact. ...The only exceptions to that rule are, cases where the award is the result of corruption or fraud, and one other, which though it is to be regretted, is now, I think, firmly established, viz., where the question of law necessarily arises on the face of the award, or upon some paper accompanying and forming part of the award."

This observation was recently cited with approval in Union of India v. Bungo Steel Furniture Pvt. Ltd., (1967) 1 SCR 324 = (AIR 1967 SC 1032).

6. The principle is that the Court, while examining an award, will look at documents accompanying and forming part of the award. Thus, if an arbitrator were to refer to the pleadings of the parties so as to incorporate them into the award, the Court can look at them. In some cases, however, Courts extended the principle and set aside the award on a finding that the contract, though only referred to but not incorporated into the award as part of it, had been misconstrued and such misconception had been the basis of the award. Thus, in Landauer v. Asser, 1905 (2) KB 184, the dispute between buyers and sellers of goods was as to who was entitled to certain sums paid upon a policy of insurance upon the goods. This was referred to arbitration and the umpire made his award basing it on the construction he placed on the contract, namely, that as the parties to the contract were "by the terms thereof" principals, their interest and liability in insurance was defined to be the value of the invoice plus 5 per cent. On an application to set aside the award, the Court of Appeal held that inasmuch as the umpire had referred to the contract and the terms thereof, it was justified in looking at the contract, and having done so, found that he had based his decision entirely upon the terms of the contract. It also found that since the contract, if properly construed, did not justify the decision, the award was bad on the face of it and was liable to be set aside. A similar view appears also to have been taken in F. R. Absalom Ltd. v. Great Western (London) Garden Village Society Ltd., 1933 AC 592. Where the award set out the relevant words and Clause 30 of the contract and also the conclusion of law on the meaning of those words, Lord Russell said that since the award recited the contract and referred in terms to the provisions of Clause 30, thereby incorporating it into the award, and then stated the construction which the arbitrator placed upon that clause, the Court was entitled to look at that clause, to ascertain if the construction placed by the arbitrator was erroneous.

7. The correctness of the decision in 1905 (2) KB 184 was challenged before the Privy Council in Champsey Bhara and Co. v. Jivraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Co. Ltd., 1923 AC 480 = (AIR 1923 PC 66). Lord Dunedin, however, did not expressly overrule it but rested content by observing that that decision was not binding on the Board. But he, formulated the principle thus:

"An error in law on the face of the award means, — that you can find in the award or a document actually incorporated thereto, as for instance, a note appended by the arbitrator stating the reasons for his judgment, some legal proposition which is the basis of the award and which you can then say is erroneous. It does not mean that if in a narrative a reference is made to a contention of one party that opens the door to seeing first what that contention is, and then going to the contract on which the parties' rights depend to see if that contention is sound".

The Privy Council upheld the award stating that it was impossible to say what was the mistake on the face of the award which the arbitrators had made as they had not tied themselves down to any legal principle which was unsound. The mere fact that the Court would have construed a document differently than the arbitrator would not induce the Court to interfere unless the construction given by the arbitrator is such that it is against the well-established principles of construction. (see Kelanton v. Duff Development Co., 1923 AC 395).

8. In an illuminating analysis of a large number of earlier decisions, including Landauer, 1905 (2) KB 184 and F. R. Absalom Ltd., 1933 AC 592, Diplock, L. J., in Giacomo Costa Fu Andrea v. British Italian Trading Co. Ltd., (1962) 2 All ER 53 recorded his conclusion thus:

"It seems to me, therefore, that, on the cases, there is none which compels us to hold that a mere reference to the contract in the award entitles us to look at the contract. It may be that in particular cases a specific reference to a particular clause of a contract may incorporate the contract, or that clause of it, in the award. I think that we are driven back to first principles in this matter, namely, that an award can only be set aside for error which is on its face. It is true that an award can incorporate another document so as to entitle one to read that document as part of the award and, by reading them together, find an error on the face of the award".

9. The question whether a contract or a clause of it is incorporated in the award is a question of construction of the award. The test is, does the arbitrator come to a finding on the wording of the contract. If he does, he can be said to have impliedly incorporated the contract or a clause in it whichever be the case. But a mere general reference to the contract in the award is not to be held as incorporating it. The principle of reading contracts or other documents into the award is not to be encouraged or extended. (see Babu Ram v. Nanhemal, C. A. No. 107 of 1966, D/- 5-12-1968 (SC)). The rule thus is that as the parties choose their own arbitrator to be the Judge in the dispute between them, they cannot, when the award is good on the face of it, object to the decision either upon the law or the facts. Therefore, even when an arbitrator commits a mistake either in law or in fact in determining the matters referred to him, but such mistake does not appear on the face of the award or in a document appended to or incorporated in it so as to form part of it, the award will neither be remitted nor set aside notwithstanding the mistake.

10. In the light of the principle above stated, the first question calling for determination is, is there an error apparent on the award, in the sense that the umpire misconstrued the contracts of sale inasmuch as though those contracts were contained in sale-notes as well as in several letters, he considered the sale-notes only as containing the contracts of sale disregarding the correspondence which had taken place between the company and the Director-General, Disposals and his officers? Such a question would undoubtedly be one of law. But the disputes referred to the umpire contained disputes both of fact and law. Ordinarily the decision of the umpire, even though it be on a question of law, would be binding on the parties. The Court would only interfere if the case falls within the exceptions mentioned by Williams, J. in (1857) 3 CB (NS) 189 and reaffirmed by Diplock, L. J., in 1962 (2) All ER 53.

11. There were in all three separate sales to the appellant-company, which according to the respondents were incorporated in sale-notes Numbers 160, 161 and 197. Before the sale-note 160 was issued on July 11, 1946, it is a fact that the company had written a letter dated July 10, 1946 which was also endorsed by two officers of the Director-General, Disposals. The letter contained three clauses, the first of which stated that M/s. Allen Berry will buy the Moran Vehicles Depot 'as is where is' for Rs. 1,80,00,000/-. The two other clauses provided the manner and time of payment of the sale price. But the letter commenced with the following words:

"Pending detailed record of terms tomorrow the following are the broad heads of agreement, which will form the basis of sale of surplus vehicles:" The next day, i.e., July 11, 1946, the Department issued sale-note 160, which in clear terms stated that what was purchased were "all vehicles and trailers lying in Moran Depot", which meant that the vehicles sold were only those that were actually lying in that depot on July 11, 1946, and not those outside it or those borne on the records of that depot, as contended by the company. It, however, appears from the judgment of the Trial Court (Para 206) that on receipt of sale-note 160, the company wrote a letter on July 11, 1946 in which it contended that "we have purchased the entire vehicle depot of Moran." It appears that in view of this difference of opinion, a meeting of representatives of the parties was held on July 23, 1946, the minutes of which, as recorded by the Assam Controller, U. S. A. S. S., read as follows:

"(2) (a) The vehicles and trailers sold to Messrs. Allen Berry and Co. Ltd., are deemed to include all vehicles which were or should have been held in Moran Depot on the 10th July, also those which have been issued on a Memorandum Receipt as follows:—

(i) To the Americans, left behind by them in various camps and depots and not yet turned in by us.

(ii) Vehicles issued on Memorandum Receipt to military units assisting the U.S.A. S. S. Organization.

(iii) Any surplus vehicles originally allotted to U.S.A. S. S. Units — for operational purposes and now no longer required by them."

On September 17, 1946, a secraphone message was sent from New Delhi to Calcutta which stated "We have sold U.S. Army surplus vehicles presumed to be borne on Moran list, that is those actually in Moran Vehicle Depot or those that were intended to be moved to that depot, which was meant to be parking depot for surplus U.S. vehicles in Assam area." On September 26, 1946, the Director-General, Disposals, wrote to the company that "The vehicles sold to you in Assam are those U.S. Army surplus vehicles actually in Moran Vehicle Depot or those that were intended to be moved to Moran Vehicle Depot. Any mobile engineering equipment, such as mobile cranes, tracked tractors are excluded from the sale to you." On December 10, 1946, the Controller issued a release order in respect of:

1. All vehicles and trailers lying in Moran Depot on 10th July 1946 including all United States Army Surplus Stores, excluding land and buildings lying within Moran Depot and transferred to the Government of India from the Government of the United States.

2. Vehicles in operational use in Calcutta and Assam as and when no longer required by the U.S.A.S.S. Organisation."

12. The question raised by counsel is that the umpire failed to consider all these documents while considering the scope and content of the contract of sale and relied on only sale-note No. 160, dated July 11, 1946, that the contract was not contained in the said-note 160 alone, and that therefore, he misconstrued the contract, and that that misconstruction, which is a point of law, is apparent on the face of the award, as it was made the very basis of the award.

The first three issues raised by the umpire were:

(1) Whether the appellant was entitled to prove that any vehicles, stores etc. other than those mentioned in the sale-notes were sold to it;

(2) Whether the Government was bound by the clarifications, representations, explanations or assurances made or given by any officer or officers of the Department regarding the subject-matter of the contracts of sale except those necessarily implicit in the sale-notes; and

(3) Whether the Government sold any vehicles except those lying in Moran Depot on July 11, 1946, or those intended to be moved thereto.

13. The dispute between the parties, thus, clearly was that whereas the company claimed that the sale was of all vehicles borne on the records of Moran Depot, irrespective of whether they were actually lying there on July 11, 1946 or not, the Government claimed that the company was entitled to those actually lying in the Depot. According to the respondents, the contract of sale was to be found in the sale-note; and therefore, any subsequent explanations or assurances given by any officer or Officers of the Department could not vary or alter the term of the contract. These explanations and assurances were given only to remove the misunderstanding of the company over the question of the scope and extent of the sale made to it.

14. The umpire set out part of the sale-notes 160 and 197 in the award and then observed:

"the language used in these sale letters is to my mind perfectly clear, explicit and unambiguous and excludes the possibility of any vehicles, trailers or stores lying on the dates in question outside the locations specified in the sale letters having been included in the two sales. The contention that they in fact include all vehicular stores in Assam in one case and in Bengal area in the other has been made in all seriousness and a good deal of evidence both oral and documentary has been produced in support of or against such contention. The point has also been argued at great length by learned counsel for the parties. I have given the whole matter my most serious and earnest consideration and my view is that apart from the language of the two sale-deeds being against such a contention, the evidence too considered as a whole does not support it. Accordingly, I hold that the stores sold to the claimants in the case of Assam were those actually located in Moran Depot on July 10, 1946 and in the case of Bengal those actually located in Jodhpur and other depots specified in the sale letter on July 31, 1946."

He next held:

"The alleged clarifications or representations made or explanations or assurances given by any officer or officers of the Disposals Department either verbally or in writing have been very carefully examined by me and I am of opinion that neither are they, considered as a whole, capable of the interpretation sought to be put upon them by the claimants nor are the respondents bound by them. They are not in accordance with law and do not amount to legal contracts binding the respondents."

These passages clearly show that the umpire had considered, besides the sale-notes, the oral and documentary evidence led by the parties as also the contentions urged on and as regards them by counsel for the company. It is impossible, therefore, to uphold the contention that the various documents, i.e., the letter of the company dated July 10, 1946, the subsequent correspondence, minutes of the meetings which took place after the sale-note 160 was issued etc. were not taken into consideration by the umpire while coming to his conclusion as to what actually was sold to the company.

15. The dispute, amongst other disputes, referred to the umpire and crystallized by him in the form of issues on the pleadings of the parties involved, as already stated, the question first as to what was sold, and secondly, arising out of that, the question whether besides the said sale-notes 160 and 197, the subsequent clarifications or explanations were binding on the Government. These were, no doubt, questions partly of fact and partly of law. But questions both of fact and law were referred to the umpire and prima facie his findings on them would bind the parties unless, as explained earlier, the umpire has laid down any legal proposition, such as a construction which is made the basis of the award and is on the face of the award an error.

16. The point is, is this such a case? True it is that this is not a case where a question of law is specifically referred to. It is clearly a case falling in the category of cases, like 1923 AC 395 where in deciding the questions referred to him the umpire has to decide a point of law. In doing so, the umpire, no doubt, laid down the legal proposition that the clarifications or assurances given subsequent to the dates of the said sale-notes by an officer or officers of the department were not binding on the respondents nor could they affect the scope of the sales. That answer the umpire was entitled to give. But the fact that he answered a legal point does not mean that he has incorporated into the award or made part of the award a document or documents, the construction of which, right or wrong, is the basis of the award. The error, if any, in such a case cannot be said to be an error apparent on the face of the award entitling the court to consider the various documents placed in evidence before the umpire but not incorporated in the award so as to form part of it and then to make a search if they have been misconstrued by him. This, in our understanding, is the correct principle emerging from the decisions which counsel placed before us. In any event, this is not a case where the umpire, in the words of Lord Dunedin, "tied himself down to a legal proposition" which on the face of the award was unsound. The award makes it clear in so many words that he took into account the entire evidence, including the documents relied on by counsel and then only came to the conclusion that it did not assist the company in its contention as to the scope of the sales. Contentions 1 and 2 raised by Mr. Agarwal, therefore, cannot be upheld.

17. Contention No. 3 relates to 547 vehicles said to have been sold to the company under sale-note 197, dated August 2/6, 1946. There is no dispute that out of these vehicles the company removed 291 vehicles alleging that the delivery of the balance of 256 vehicles was withheld. The company made a claim being claim No. VI for the price of these 256 undelivered vehicles. The respondents' contention was that the sale to the company was confined only to the U.S.A. Surplus Stores, that these vehicles did not fall within that category, but were Reverse Land Lease vehicles belonging to the Government of India under an agreement between the U.S.A. and India. On these allegations the respondents laid counter-claim No. VI claiming the price of the 291 vehicles admittedly removed by the company when they were lying in Jodhpur Depot, Calcutta.

The umpire found that the expression "Reverse Land Lease" related to the reciprocal aid articles referred to in the said agreement. A reciprocal aid article, according to that agreement, meant an article transferred by the India Government to the U.S. Government under reciprocal aid under para 4-C of that agreement. The U.S.A. Government was deemed to have acquired as on September 2, 1945 full title over such articles except that such reciprocal aid articles incorporated into installations in India were deemed to have been returned to India Government from the date when the U. S. A. forces relinquished possession of such installations. From the inventories produced before him, the umpire held that these 547 vehicles were incorporated into installations in India, and therefore, ownership in them vested in India Government on and after the U.S.A. forces relinquished possession of those installations. They could not, therefore, be regarded as U.S. Surplus Stores which alone were and could be the subject-matter of sale-note 197. Consequently, the company was not entitled to remove the said 291 vehicles which it did, much less could the company claim compensation for 256 vehicles which it alleged were not delivered to it. In the result, the umpire allowed the Government's counter-claim No. VI, which was for the price of 291 vehicles unauthorisedly removed by the company from Jodhpur Depot.

18. The argument in connection with this part of the award was, firstly, that the findings of the umpire were vitiated as there was total lack of evidence on which they could be based, and secondly, that in any event, the umpire had no jurisdiction to award compensation to the Government in respect of counter-claim No. VI. The first part of the argument need not detain us as the finding that these vehicles formed part of reciprocal aid articles, the ownership in which vested in the Government of India and were therefore not U. S. A. S. S. was based on the agreement between the two Governments and the inventories produced before the umpire from which he could hold that they belonged to the Government of India from the date when the installations in which they were incorporated were relinquished by the U. S. forces, and that therefore, they could not form the subject-matter of sale-note 197 which related only to the U. S. Surplus Stores.

19. The second part of the argument, however, requires consideration. The question is whether the arbitration clause included a dispute relating to compensation in respect of the said 291 vehicles unauthorisedly removed by the company. Clause 13 of the General Conditions of Contract, quoted earlier, provides for reference to arbitration of all questions or disputes "arising under these conditions" or "in connection with this contract."

20. Dr. Singhvi referred us to Clause 10 of these Conditions also but it is clear that it can in no sense apply to the dispute relating to compensation. But the words "arising under these conditions" and "in connection with this contract" are undoubtedly wide and comprehensive. It is, nonetheless, a question whether the dispute as to compensation on the ground of unauthorised appropriation of these vehicles by the company falls within Clause 13. In Vidya Sagar Joshi v. Surinder Nath Gautam, AIR 1969 SC 288 the words "expenditure in connection with election" used in Section 77 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951 were construed to mean "having to do with". An arbitration clause wherein the words "in relation to or in connection with the contract" were construed not to contemplate a dispute raised by a contractor that he could avoid the contract on the ground that it was obtained by a fraudulent misrepresentation. (see Monro v. Bognor Urban District Council, 1915 (3) KB 167). But a claim for damages on the ground of negligence on the part of the defendant in removing the plaintiff's furniture against a clause for due diligence in removing it was held to fall within the arbitration clause. (Woolf v. Collis Removal Service, (1947) 2 All ER 260).

21. Counsel conceded that a dispute as to the interpretation of sale-note 197 would fall under the arbitration clause. If that is so, it must follow that the umpire was competent to decide whether the said 547 vehicles fell within the purview of the sale-note or not. If in determining that question he came to the conclusion that they did not, the obvious conclusion would be that the company was not entitled to take away 291 vehicles admittedly removed by it from the Depot. If the company did that, would the question as to the return or of compensation in lieu of such vehicles, to which it was not entitled under the sale, be a question which arises out of or in connection with the contract? Counsel went as far as to say that the umpire in deciding the company's claim No. VI and the Government's counter-claim No. VI could decide that the company was not entitled to these vehicles, but could not take the next step either to direct the return of them or payment of compensation in lieu of those vehicles. In our view, such an argument cannot be accepted. The reason is that once it is found that he was competent to decide the dispute as to whether the said 547 vehicles were not the subject-matter of the sale and 291 of them were removed unauthorisedly, he must to do justice between the parties in respect of disputes referred to him, order the company either to return them or to pay compensation for them. Since the first course was not possible after all these years, the second was the only and the obvious course. The dispute raised by the respondents that 291 vehicles were not included in the sale was co-extensive with and connected with the dispute that the company was bound to return them if it was found that they were not covered by the sale. On this reasoning it is not possible to say that the umpire went beyond his jurisdiction either in rejecting the company's claim No. VI or in accepting the corresponding counter-claim No. VI of the respondents.

22. Contention 4 relates to 600 vehicles which had been taken out of Moran Depot for operational purposes, but which the company claimed were part of the sale under sale-note 160. The umpire held (1) that these vehicles having been taken out of the Depot for operational purposes did not fall within the sale, and (2) in the alternative, that the evidence disclosed that a substantial number of vehicles in operational use were delivered to the company even though strictly speaking it was not entitled to them as they were not lying in the Depot on July 10, 1946. The umpire further held that if some of them per chance were not handed over, the respondents had sufficiently compensated the company by handing over several non-operational vehicles from outside the Depot to which the company was not entitled. Counsel argued that this part of the award was vague and without any evidence to support it, and therefore, the umpire behaved in this respect more like a conciliator than as an arbitrator.

23. Having held that sale-note 160 covered only those vehicles which were actually lying in Moran Depot on July 10, 1946, it was not incumbent on the umpire to decide the number of operational vehicles outside the Depot. Consequently, if he was satisfied that even though the company was not entitled to the said 600 vehicles claimed by it, yet the authorities had delivered a substantial number of them, and for any deficiency, had also delivered non-operational vehicles, there would be no purpose in going into the details of vehicles delivered to the company. Even though, as the judgment of the Trial Court discloses (para 223), there was evidence, both oral and documentary, that the company had collected a number of vehicles lying at places outside the Depot, and the vehicles so collected were recorded by the company, yet the company had withheld the production of those records. In view of these facts it is impossible to say that the umpire had acted without evidence, or that he behaved in the manner of a conciliator, or gave findings on conjectures and surmises.

24. Our interference was invited next on the question of ground rent on the ground that the amount of such rent was fixed by the umpire without any evidence. There is hardly any substance in this contention. The sites, on which the various depots were situated, were requisitioned by the Government under the Defence of India Rules. The Government had a statutory obligation, therefore, to pay to the owners of those sites compensation as provided by those Rules. Under the contracts of sale the company was bound to pay to the Government ground rent and other charges which the Government in its turn was liable to pay. It is, therefore, not correct to say that the umpire could award only that amount which the Government had actually paid and that the umpire should, therefore, have taken an account from the Government. It was never the case of the company that the Government had claimed ground rent higher than the compensation it was liable to pay.

25. The last objection was that the amount of costs awarded by the umpire to the respondents was disproportionate. It appears from the award that the umpire fixed the amount of costs after considering the statements of expenses incurred by the parties for the hearing before him tendered by the respective counsel for the parties. Considering the huge amounts claimed by the parties, the volume of evidence, both oral and documentary, adduced by them, the number of days occupied in recording that evidence and in arguing the case, we are not prepared to say that the discretion which the umpire exercised in the matter of costs was exercised in breach of any legal provision or unreasonably which can justify the Court's intervention.

26. In our view, none of the six contentions urged by counsel can be upheld. The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(C) Constitution of India, Article 136 — Where Collector's order imposed fine on licensee without proper investigation of terms of licence and Central Government in revision did not consider case on merits Supreme Court in appeal held should remand case to Central Government for disposal on merits instead of remitting fine itself.

Mr. A. K. Sen, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. P. R. Mridul, S. Swarup and P. C. Bhartari, Advocates; and Mr. Ravinder Narain, Advocate of M/s. J. B. Dadachanji and Co., with him), for Appellant; Mr. Niren De, Attorney-General for India (Mr. Ram Panjwani, Advocate and Mr. B. D. Sharma, Advocate for Mr. S. P. Nayar, Advocate with him), for Respondents.

SHAH, C. J. — These six appeals arise out of orders passed by the Central Government in a group of revision applications against the orders passed by the Collector of Customs, Bombay, and confirmed by the Central Board of Excise and Customs subject to certain modifications.

*(Revenue and Insurance Revn. Appln. D/- 13-6-1966.)

2. The appellant is a private limited company which carries on the business of manufacturing drums and barrels. For its manufacturing programme the appellant obtained in June, 1962 two licences for importing steel sheets. Under the first licence the appellant was authorised to import "Mild Steel Item — 18G Black Plain Sheets Drum Quality for manufacturing drums and containers," subject to the terms and conditions detailed in the annexures thereto. The total C. I. F. value of the licence was Rs. 40,00,000/-. The second licence was for "Steel Drum Sheets for Lubricating Oil Packing" of the total C. I. F. value of Rs. 50,30,000/-.

3. The appellant placed orders for import of steel sheets with a firm of manufacturers in the United States of America. The goods under the two licences reached the Bombay Port in twelve separate consignments. On arrival of the consignments, the appellant filed Bills of Entry for consumption of the goods. The Chief Customs Appraiser at Bombay did not allow clearance of the goods for the following reasons recorded by him:

(a) That under the Import Licence the appellants were entitled to import only prime quality sheets and no other sheets;

(b) that the quality of the sheets imported by the appellants appeared to be industrial scrap (sheet cuttings);

(c) that the sizes of the Steel Sheets appeared to be odd and not regular; and

(d) that the value of the invoices was not according to the prevailing prices for steel sheets in prime quality.

To avoid liability for heavy demurrage the appellant Company applied for and obtained an order for clearance of the goods lying in dock. A show cause notice was issued by the Collector of Customs requiring the appellant to show cause why the sheets imported be not forfeited. The appellant Company represented that it was engaged in the manufacture of drums and containers of various sizes and that although the sizes of steel sheets appeared to be odd, these were suitable for its manufacturing purposes.

The Company also pleaded that the sizes of sheets imported were not Industrial Scrap (sheet cutting) in terms of the definition of Industrial Scrap in the Iron and Steel Controller's Circular No. SIB/1/67/AS/60, dated July 15, 1963, and that in any event the licence did not lay down any definite quality of steel sheets to be imported.

4. The Collector rejected the representation made by the appellants. In his view the licence issued in the case was for "Prime Quality" sheets and the term "Prime Quality" meant that the sheets were of standard sizes and lengths, with uniform dimensions and without surface defects, but in the sheets imported there was "a percentage of defective sheets with clipped edges, surface grooves, sheering imperfections, etc., and the bulk of the sheets were of varying sizes and dimensions". On that account the sheets were not of "Prime quality", that the explanation of the Company was not satisfactory, and since the importers had no valid licence for importing the sheets actually imported, the importation was in contravention of the Import Control Order No. 17/55 of December 7, 1955 issued under Section 3 of the Imports and Exports (Control) Act, 1947, and punishable under Section 112 of the Customs Act, 1962. The Collector on that view passed an order imposing penalties for different amounts in respect of each of the consignments. The Company preferred appeals to the Central Board of Excise and Customs against the order passed by the Collector imposing penalties for importing twelve consignments. The Board held that only those sheets could be imported against the licences which fulfilled two conditions — (1) the sheets were suitable for manufacturing drums and (2) they were of "prime quality" material. The Board did not agree with the argument advanced on behalf of the appellant Company that the sheets were of drum quality and were permitted to be imported against the two import licences. The Board observed that the sheets imported varied in sizes and gauges in some packages; that while "certain sheets were of uniform size (i.e., length and width at both ends) the other sheets were of irregular shapes"; that gauges of sheets in some of the consignments varied between 11 and 13 and in others they varied between 18 and 24; that defects such as clipped edges, surface grooves and sheering imperfections were noticed in some sheets and that the examination report indicated that not only the sheets were not of "prime quality" but they were also unsuitable for the manufacture of drums, specially those which were of 11, 12 and 13 gauges. The Board rejected the contention of counsel for the appellants that the percentage of sheets of odd sizes and gauges 11, 12 and 13 was negligible and the presence of a small percentage of the consignment was "not representative of the nature" of the entirety of the sheets imported, and observed that even allowing "tolerances generally allowed in measurement of the sheets", all the sheets cannot be considered as of standard sizes, and in any case the fact remained that the sheets imported were not of uniform dimensions in "each skid" and on that account not of "prime quality", and not suitable for manufacturing drums. The Board accordingly upheld the action of the Collector in confiscating the goods but they reduced the fine in some cases.

5. Interrupting the narrative, it is necessary to point out at this stage two important matters: (1) that the difference in the conditions of the two licences was apparently not noticed by the Collector of Customs and by the Board and (2) that the condition that the goods should be of "prime quality" was not a condition of either licence. Under the first licence the sheets were to be of 18 gauge quality; under the second licence there was no such condition relating to thickness of the sheets. There was again no evidence that any part of the consignment was not fit for use in the manufacture of drums and barrels. By importing sheets of 11, 12 and 13 gauge or of gauges varying between 18 and 24 no breach of the conditions of the second licence was committed. The condition that the sheets imported must be of "prime quality" was imposed for the first time by the Iron and Steel Controller's Public Notice No. I/I-S/62, dated December 6, 1962 and could not obviously apply to the sheets imported under the two licences which were issued earlier. But the Collector as well as the Central Board of Excise and Customs decided the cases principally on the ground that the goods were not of "prime quality". The Collector of Customs and the Central Board of Excise and Customs also did not keep the facts in respect of the twelve consignments distinct and decided them together as if there was no difference between the conditions of the two licences.

6. The revision applications filed before the Government of India were consolidated for the purpose of hearing and a single order was passed. The Officer who heard the revision applications on behalf of the Central Government was of the view, and rightly, that the Public Notice No. I/I-S/62, dated December 6, 1962 of the Iron and Steel Controller had no retrospective operation and the condition of "prime quality" could not be applied to the sheets imported under the licences issued before that date. But in his view, one of the two licences e.g., licence dated June 13, 1962, covering the consignments was issued specifically for 18 gauge sheets, while sheets of different sizes, including 18 (gauge) were imported against that licence and on that account consignments covered by that licence "had to be treated as unauthorised". He then proceeded to observe that the fine in lieu of confiscation of the goods covered by the Collector of Customs, Bombay Orders Nos. S/10-530/63LC, S/10-531/63LC, S/10-532/63LC, S/10-533/63LC, S/10-534/63LC and S/10-535/63LC all dated November 30, 1963 be remitted in full; that in respect of four consignments covered by the Collector's Orders Nos. S/10-443/63LC, S/10-444/63LC, S/10-445/63LC and S/10-446/63LC all dated October 5, 1963 the fine be reduced by half; and that the fines reduced by the Board in the cases covered by the Collector's Orders Nos. S/10-22/64LC and S/10-71/64LC both dated March 2, 1964 be further reduced as decided by them.

7. These six appeals relate to the orders made by the Government of India in respect of those consignments covered by the order in which the fines were not remitted in full. The order of the Collector of Customs proceeded principally upon the ground that the sheets imported were not of "prime quality". Whether the sheets imported were not according to the conditions of the licence because they did not comply with the condition as to the size and gauge subject to the permissible tolerance was apparently not investigated by the Collector. The Board also did not investigate that question. In four orders passed by the Collector Nos. S/10-443/63LC, S/10-444/63LC, S/10-445/63LC and S/10-446/63LC dated October 5, 1963 the only ground given is that the goods were not of "prime quality". That conclusion was reached by him because "the materials were not of standard size, the dimensions were not uniform, the sheets were with surface defects and that a percentage of defective sheets had not only clipped edges, surface grooves, sheering imperfections but that the bulk of the sheets were of varying sizes and dimensions". All the defects in the view of the Collector justified the opinion that the sheets were not of "prime quality". We did not consider whether the goods imported were of 18 gauge size. Since the condition as to "prime quality" was imposed for the first time on December 6, 1962 the orders of the Collector were not sustainable.

8. In respect of the Order No. S/10-22/64LC and S/10-71/64LC dated March 2, 1964 the Collector observed that on examination of the goods in question the sheets were in random sizes of 19 & 20 gauge not permissible under the licence. He also observed that the licence issued in this case was valid for the "prime quality" sheets of 18 gauge only, and since the sheets imported were of varying sizes, with surface defects and of different gauges, the sheets were not of "prime quality" and were, therefore, not covered by the licence obtained by the Company. The basis of the judgment of the Collector in these cases was, that the goods were not of "prime quality".

9. The Central Board of Excise and Customs also did not deal with the different consignments separately and did not apparently consider whether on the ground that some sheets were not of the permitted gauge under the first licence the import may be regarded as unauthorised.

10. We are of the view that there was no proper investigation of the dispute by the Collector of Customs and the Central Board of Excise & Customs. We are also of the view that in view of the infirmities disclosed in the orders made by the departmental authorities the Central Government in revision should have proceeded to consider the merits of the appeals relating to the six consignments in respect of which fine was not remitted in full. The Government should have given to the appellants adequate opportunity to prove that there had been no substantial deviation from the terms of the licence or for other reasons on which they claimed that the fine may be remitted in full.

11. On behalf of the Company it was urged that since the order of the Collector and the Central Board of Excise and Customs proceeded solely upon the finding that the consignments imported were not of "prime quality" and on no other ground in respect of four consignments we should not remand the cases dealt with under order dated October 5, 1963 and that we should set aside the order of the Central Government in respect of those four consignments and remit the fine in its entirety, leaving the Central Government free to hold an inquiry only with regard to the remaining two consignments covered by the Collector's Orders Nos. S/10-22/64LC and S/10-71/64LC dated March 2, 1964. For reasons already set out we do not feel justified in accepting that contention.

12. We set aside the order passed by the Central Government in respect of the six orders passed by the Collector, where fine has not been remitted in its entirety and direct that the Central Government do consider the revision applications on their merit. If the appellant desire to lead additional evidence to prove that the goods or a substantial part of the goods imported under the various consignments were subject to "the permissible tolerance" according to the terms of the licence, or for any other reason, the Central Government will give it an opportunity to do so. The inquiry will, however, be restricted to the question whether the consignments in respect of which fine has been imposed did or did not comply with the condition in the licence of the specification "subject to the permissible tolerance" relating to 18 gauge.

13. The order passed by the Central Government is set aside in these six appeals and the cases are remanded for disposal according to law. There will be no order as to costs in these appeals.

Cases remanded.

No. 201 of 1969), and for Respondents Nos. 3 and 4 (In Cr. A. No. 202 of 1969).

SIKRI, J. : This appeal, by special leave, by the State of Uttar Pradesh is directed against the judgment and order of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad allowing the appeals of the nine accused and setting aside the convictions recorded against them by the learned Sessions Judge, Banda, who had convicted them under Sections 399 and 402, I. P. C., and also five of them under Section 25 (a) of the Indian Arms Act.

2. Nine accused were sent up for trial. Out of them the State has filed appeal against eight. Chiri is reported to have expired and appeal against him has become infructuous. Bimla is reported to have been murdered and the appeal against him has also become infructuous. Sunwa is not traceable and the notice of the filing of the appeal has not been served on him yet. He is reported to be absconding. The appeal against him will be kept pending and will be disposed of when he has been served with the notice.

Accordingly, we are concerned with the appeal of the State against Rajju, original accused No. 2 in Sessions Trial No. 91 of 1964, Dharamraj alias Dharma, original accused No. 7, Chunnilal, original accused No. 3, Gaya Prasad, original accused No. 5, and Kappa, original accused No. 8.

3. The case of the prosecution is given by Abdul Nain Siddiqui, P. W. 1, who was S. O., Police Station Baberu. On April 11, 1964, he had gone to village Hardauli in connection with the investigation of another case. At about 3 p. m. an informer contacted him and told him that Chunnilal, accused No. 3, was bringing Bimla accused, since deceased, and members of his gang to his house in the evening with the intention of committing dacoity at the house of Keshav Maharaj situate in village Jugarhali at night. He promised to give further information later. On his return to the Police Station P. W. 1 made entry to this effect in the general diary. At 3.15 p. m. he telephoned the S. P., but he was not available at the headquarters. He, therefore, telephoned the Kotwali requesting for a police force. The force did not arrive by 5.17 p. m., at 8.15 p. m. the informer contacted him at the police station and reported that the gang had arrived at the baithak of Chunnilal, accused No. 3, and gave particulars of the members of the gang, and the arms with them. P. W. 1 asked the informer to meet him at about 10 p. m. on the same night outside the abadi of village Ahar. He made an entry to this effect in the general diary at 8.15 p. m. At 8.30 p. m., P. W. 1, with a number of persons, who were armed, left the police station. P. W. 1 also directed constable Sadiq Husain to reach Jugarhali and inform Keshav Maharaj that he should collect the members of V. D. S. and the licensees and keep watch. P. W. 1, with the police force, then proceeded to village Ahar in a truck and they got down near the nallah outside the abadi about $1\frac{1}{2}$ furlongs from it and waited for the informer to contact them. Dinanath, constable, in the meantime had brought members of the V. D. S. and persons who were licensees of firearms. The informer contacted them and informed P. W. 1 and the other members of his party that the dacoits were having their meals and drinking wine and when the dacoits leave the place for committing dacoity he would come out first from the baithak of Chunnilal and would strike matchstick twice to indicate the departure of the dacoits towards Jugarhail. P. W. 1 then divided the police personnel and other persons into three parties and gave suitable instructions. It is not necessary to give details of the persons who were in each party. At about 11.30 p. m. the informer came out of the baithak of Chunnilal and struck a matchstick twice. On this P. W. 1 fired a shot from the V. L. Pistol and then one of the dacoits fired a shot from his gun, and P. W. 1 fired two shots from the double barrel gun in reply. Then the members of the three parties surrounded the accused and caught them there and then. The informer and the dacoit who had fired the shot disappeared.

4. Various arms and cartridges were recovered from the dacoits. A rifle, six cartridges and a torch were recovered from the accused Bimla, now deceased; a gun, a belt containing 11 cartridges and a torch were recovered from the accused Happa; a gun and four cartridges from the accused Dharamraj a gun and five cartridges from the accused Chiri, now deceased; from the accused Chunnilal one country made pistol, 3 live cartridges and a lathi; a pharsa from the accused Rajju; a pharsa from the accused Gaya Prasad; a lathi from the accused Sunwa and one alanskab (house breaking instrument) from the accused Matru. From the baithak of Chunnilal he recovered two empty bottles, one glass, donas, pieces of bidi and matchsticks. He brought the accused to the police station and prepared F. I. R., and also made an entry at 5 a. m. on April 12, 1964 in the general diary.

5. This story was supported by Jhallu Prasad, P. W. 5, Gangotri

Prasad, P. W. 6, and Ram Kirpal P. W. 3, who were members of the raiding party assembled by P. W. 1. The statement of P. W. 1 that an informer had contacted him finds support from the entries in the general diary and also in the evidence of Shiv Kumar Sharma, P. W. 7.

6. It was argued before the learned Sessions Judge that P. W. 1 was not able to give the number of the truck in which they travelled from Baberu to village Ahar. P. W. 1 explained it on the ground that he had not taken down the number, and the learned Sessions Judge rightly observed that "neither the fact whether the police party had travelled by truck or otherwise is in issue nor does it have any important bearing on this case inasmuch as it is not contended that the police party could not have reached village Ahar by that time."

7. The learned Sessions Judge then examined the defence of each accused. Accused Nappa had stated that he was arrested at the bus stand when he was coming to Court to present himself in connection with a quarrel between him and the members of his biradari in village Jorahra, P. W. Bissenda, and that P. W. 1 had implicated him in this case as he had not paid Rs. 800/- to him which he wanted in connection with another dacoity in which he was falsely involved and acquitted. The learned Sessions Judge rightly observed that there was no evidence on the record which substantiated his case.

8. Regarding Dharamraj's defence that the Police had arrested him from his house and the witnesses had deposed against him under the pressure of the police, the learned Sessions Judge again found that there was no evidence on record to substantiate his contention.

9. The case of Gaya Prasad, accused, that he was called by P. W. 1 and was falsely implicated in this case at the instance of Jagmohan of his village with whom he was on bad terms was not believed.

10. Chunnilal, accused, had stated that he and his brother, Matru, co-accused, were sentenced to 7 years' R. I. in connection with the murder of Nazar Mohammad, that two constables had taken him and Matru to the police station about noon and then they were implicated in this case. The learned Sessions Judge held that there was no evidence on record which showed that he was called to the police station in connection with the other case and thereafter detained at the police station.

11. The defence of Rajju, accused, was that he had gone to the house of his cousin, Chunnilal, situate in village Ahar and that the constables had taken him from the baithak of Chunnilal to the police station at about 12 noon and he was falsely implicated in this case. No evidence was led by Rajju and the learned Sessions Judge held that it could not be said that the accused was not arrested at the time of the occurrence.

12. Sunwa, accused, stated that he had been engaged by Government to remove some earth from the fields of Raja Ram Pradhan and Ram Lal and that Raja Ram and Ram Lal had felt annoyed and they got him implicated. No evidence was produced by him to substantiate this and the learned Sessions Judge found that it could not be said that he was not arrested at the time of the occurrence or that he had been falsely implicated.

13. It was urged before the learned Sessions Judge that as no identification proceedings were held in the case it could not be said that the accused were the persons who were actually arrested at the spot. The learned Sessions Judge rightly held that it was not necessary for the State to hold identification parade when according to the prosecution they were arrested at the spot. If the accused felt that the witnesses would not be able to identify them they should have requested for an identification parade.

14. The learned Sessions Judge summarised the case thus:

"It would appear from the above that none of the accused has been able to show that he was arrested at a place other than the place of occurrence, that he had any enmity with any of these accused and that he had been implicated in this case due to it. The witnesses have also not been shown to be partisan witnesses or to have been under the influence of the police. Further there does not appear to be any inconsistency in their statements. There does not, therefore, appear to be any reason to disbelieve the statements of the witnesses, Sri Abdul Haieem Siddiqi, P. W. 1, Ram Kripal, P. W. 3, Jhallu Prasad, P. W. 5, and Gangotri Prasad, P. W. 6. It would follow from it that all these accused were arrested outside the baithak of Chunni Lal, accused, at about 11.30 P. M. on the night between 11th and 12th of April, 1964 with the arms etc., which were recovered from them".

The learned Sessions Judge further found that except for Chunnilal and Matru, who belonged to village Ahar itself all the accused had come from villages situate at a distance varying from 2 miles to 20 miles. He further found that none of the accused had been able to give any reasonable explanation as to how he happened to be at the baithak of Chunnilal at that hour of the night. The learned Sessions Judge accordingly convicted the accused, as stated above.

15. The High Court, after mentioning the story given by the P. Ws. disposed of the appeal in the following para:

"I have heard the learned counsel for the parties. It is stated by the prosecution that Sri Siddiqi was informed at 8 P. M. that a dacoity was going to be committed at the house of Kesho Maharaj in village Jugarhali and that the dacoits had collected at the house of Chunnilal in village Ahar but it is strange that they did not take immediate steps to apprehend the dacoits. Moreover, the informer has not been produced. The informer would have been the best person to corroborate the story as given by Sri Siddiqi. It is correct that it is not necessary for the police to produce the informer, but, as mentioned above, he would have been the best person to corroborate the story of Sri Siddiqi. It is also the prosecution case that the dacoits were taking meals in the house of Chunnilal but it is strange that the police party did not rush into the house and arrest them while they were unarmed. It is not understood why the police waited for two hours to arrest them when they emerged out of the house. No injury has been caused to any one. It is difficult to convict the appellants on the sole testimony of Sri Siddiqi who does not remember the number of the truck in which they went to village Ahar. I therefore, find force in these appeals".

16. With great respect, the learned Judge has not given any good reason for disagreeing with the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge.

The fact that the informer has not been produced does not weaken the prosecution case, especially as P. W. 1 had recorded the information in the general diary. We are unable to find it strange, as the learned Judge did, that the police party did not rush into the house and arrest them while they were unarmed. It seems to us that the police had to wait for the dacoits to come out of the baithak of Chunnilal. We are of the opinion that the police were very wise in waiting outside and not rushing into the house for then it would have been argued that no preparation for dacoity had taken place and no offence had been made out. Further it would have involved more risk to the raiding party.

17. We find it difficult to appreciate the last reason given by the learned Judge that it would be difficult to convict the accused on the sole testimony of P. W. 1. The fact that he did not remember the number of the truck can hardly destroy his evidence. Secondly, his evidence was corroborated by a number of other witnesses. Therefore it is not correct to say that there was only the sole testimony of P. W. 1. The learned Judge had himself given a brief summary of the evidence of the other witnesses.

18. Mr. Garg, who appeared for the accused Rajju, says that he was a cousin of Chunnilal and if he was staying with Chunnilal the mere fact of his presence could not be sufficient to establish the charge under Section 399, I. P. C., against him. He says that the explanation of Rajju is reasonable, and although there is no evidence to establish it his explanation being probable should be accepted. There might have been some force in this argument if the party of the dacoits had not left the baithak of Chunnilal. It is only after the dacoits started coming out of the house that they were arrested. We may assume, although there is some dispute, that he was a cousin of Chunnilal, but even assuming this the fact that he was arrested outside the house destroys the version of Rajju that he was at the baithak of Chunnilal for innocent purposes. Moreover, a pharsa was recovered from his possession. We are unable to agree with Mr. Garg that on these facts the charge under Section 399, I. P. C., is not made out.

19. Mr. B. P. Mauriya, arguing on behalf of the accused Happa and Dharamraj, first said that in the first information report there was no mention of the V. L. Pistol. It was pointed out to him that in the first information report it is mentioned by P. W. 1 that "one miscreant, Jaikaran of Tarai, whom I and the witnesses have recognised in the light of V. L. P. and torches, succeeded in running away with his arms". The second point he raised and which we have already dealt with is regarding the police party waiting outside the baithak of Chunnilal and not entering inside when the dacoits were unarmed. Lastly, he urged that three cartridges had not been produced although the V. L. Pistol cartridge was produced in Court. We are unable to attach any significance to these facts and draw any adverse inference against the prosecution.

20. The learned Sessions Judge had awarded the following sentences:

"Each of the accused Bimla @ Chunna, Rajju, Chunni Lal, Matru, Gaya Prasad, Sunuwa, Dharam Raj @ Dharma, Happa and Chiri is convicted under Sections 399 and 402, I. P. C. and each of them is sentenced to R. I. for Seven Years under Section 399, I. P. C., and to R. I. for Fives Years under Section 402, I. P. C. Each of the accused Bimla @ Chunna, Happa, Dharam Raj @ Dharma, Chiri and Chunni Lal is also convicted and sentenced to R. I. for two years under Section 25 (a) of the Indian Arms Act. All the accused are in Jail. They shall serve out the sentences awarded to them.

The sentences, which have been awarded to these accused under Sections 399 and 402 of the I. P. C. and under Section 25 (a) of the Indian Arms Act, shall run concurrently". These sentences seem reasonable. Accordingly we allow the appeal against the five contesting respondents and award the following sentences:

"Each of the accused Rajju, Chunnilal, Gaya Prasad, Dharam Raj @ Dharama and Happa is convicted under Sections 399 and 402, I. P. C., and each of them is sentenced to R. I. for seven years under Section 399, I. P. C. and to R. I. for five years under Section 402, I. P. C. Each of the accused Happa, Dharam Raj @ Dharma, and Chunnilal is also convicted and sentenced to R. I. for two years under Section 25 (a) of the Indian 712 S. C. (Pr. 20)-[Prs. 1-2] Puran Lal v. State of U. P. (P. J. Reddy J.) A. I. R.

Arms Act. The sentences shall run concurrently".

There will be no order on the appeals against Chiri and Bimla as the appeals have become infructuous due to their deaths. The appeal against Sunwa shall be heard when he is traced and arrested.

Order accordingly.

Civil Appeal No. 1687 of 1966, D/- 21-1-1971.

Contract Act (1872), S. 73—Where work is done under a contract pursuant to the terms thereof no amount can be claimed by way of quantum meruit. AIR 1960 SC 588, Followed.

(Para 13)

The remedy under quantum meruit is available when the original contract has been discharged by the Defendant in such a way as to entitle the plaintiff to regard himself as discharged from any further performance and he must have elected to do so. The remedy is however, not available to the party who breaks the contract even though he may have partially performed part of his obligation. The remedy is a recompense for the value of the work done by the plaintiff in order to restore him to the position which he would have been in if the contract had never been entered into. In this regard it is different to a claim for damages which is a compensatory remedy aimed at placing the injured party, as near as may be in the position which he would have been in, had the other party performed the contract.

for Appellant; M/s. G. N. Dikshit and O. P. Rana, Advocates, for Respondents.

P. JAGANMOHAN REDDY J.: This appeal is by a Certificate under Article 133 (1) (a) of the Constitution against the Judgment and decree of the Allahabad High Court dated 8th March 1965 setting aside the decree of the Trial Court and dismissing the suit of the Plaintiff-Appellant.

2. The Appellant had submitted a tender to construct mile 3 of Nainital Bhowali Road at 13 per cent below the rates given in Schedule B to the Notice issued by the Government of the United Provinces on the 30th September, 1946. This tender was accepted and a contract was signed on 20th November 1946. It is alleged by the Appellant that the rates given in Schedule B were based on the calculation that stone required for the road construction work would be available at a distance of 26 Chains while as a matter of fact no stone was available within that distance. The Appellant had in fact to get stone from Gadhera and Bhumedar from a distance of 79 and 110 chains respectively. It is his contention that by reason of the non-availability of the stone and the definite understanding and assurance given by the local authorities of the P. W. D. that higher rates would be given for the extra work done over and above the work provided in the contract he carried on the work. It was also alleged that during the construction work on the road very hard shale rock came in the way not originally provided for in the contract, as such he was entitled to get the costs for the work so done at the current rates from the P. W. D. which was not paid to him. In respect of these items of work done as also due to his having done the work by bringing stone from a longer distance than was given in the estimates the Appellant claimed Rs. 48,840-0-0 due as balance together with interest by way of damages at 12% amounting to Rs. 17,582-0-0, making a total of Rs. 66,422-0-0. When this claim was rejected the Appellant gave notice under Section 80 of the C. P. C. and thereafter filed a suit for the above amount.

3. The Defendant-Respondent resisted the suit and pleaded that no assurance was given to the Appellant by officers of the PWD as alleged, that the quantity of very hard shale shown in the plaint was incorrect and at any rate the contractor, under paragraph 5 of the special instructions must be prepared to execute the work at the original tender rate in excess of the given quantities of work upto 30% and if an increase in excess of 30% is ordered over the work the contractor must intimate to the Engineer-in-charge in writing his willingness or refusal to do extra work at the original tendered rates. If he refuses to carry on at the original rates he is required to settle fresh rate for increased work over 30% before doing the work.

4. On these averments the Trial Court held issues 1, 2, 6 and 7 in favour of the Appellant while issues 3, 4 and 5 were decided against him. In the result a decree for a sum of Rs. 20,495/- for extra lead plus Rupees 1663-14-0 for extra work done under the item very hard shale and Rupees 4,155/- interest by way of damages on Rs. 22,158-14-0 making a total of Rs. 26,313-14-0 was passed with interest at 3% per annum. In appeal the High Court reversed the decree holding that (1) the employment of the figure 26 chains in the estimate was for no other purpose than that of calculation and if knowing that the same was available within 26 chains it (PWD) worked out its estimates on that basis, it could not be held to have extended any assurance much less guarantee to the contractors that they would get stone within that distance; (2) the Plaintiff-Appellant performed the work required of him without exercising his right under paragraph 5 of the special instructions which gives the option to do the extra work in excess of 30% but if he refuses to do the extra work at the originally tendered rates he should settle fresh rates for increased work over 30% before doing the work which he failed to do. In view of these findings against the appellant the appeal of the respondent was allowed and the suit dismissed but in the special circumstances of the case left the parties to bear their respective costs in both the Courts.

5. The two main questions in this Appeal are:

1) Whether the estimate of the PWD formed part of the contract so as to be binding on both parties and whether any assurances were given to the Appellant that he would be given higher rates for bringing the stone from places situated at 79 Chains and 110 Chains respectively;

2) Whether clause 5 of the special conditions of the contract was applicable to the extra item of work contained in Ex. B3 and whether he was entitled on the assurances given by the local officers to higher rate for the extra work done. Shri Bindra, learned Advocate for the Appellant has referred us to clauses 8, 11 and 14 of the Notice calling for the tender as also to certain letters and passages in the evidence to substantiate his contention that the estimates of the PWD were part of the contract and that in any case assurances were given to the Appellant that when he could not get stone from distance of 26 Chains, to bring from Chains 79 and 110 for which higher rates would be paid. It may be stated that the PWD of the United Provinces, as it then was, had issued a tender notice consisting of 16 paragraphs and the appellant was required to sign this tender notice in token of his having received it because ultimately under clause 34 of the conditions of the contract all papers signed by the parties to the contract bond will be deemed to be part of the contract bond and have to be read as conditions to the contract. Clauses 8, 11 and 14 of the notice to which reference was made are as follows:

8. All tenders should be on percentage rates above or below the rates given in the Schedule 'B'.

11. Items not provided in the Schedule B will be paid at current schedule of rate plus or minus the percentage above or below as tendered by the contractor whose tender is accepted for this work.

14. Contractors are advised to see the estimate, plans, specifications, special condition prescribed and site of work before tendering.

6. It is obvious from these clauses that the rates are given in Schedule B on the basis of certain plans and specifications. The person intending to tender for the work was required to examine this material and also inspect the site before tendering. These instructions were designed to make all those who were desirous of obtaining the contract responsible for their acts so that it cannot be said that any misrepresentation was made or they were misguided in any way. The contention of the learned Advocate for Appellant is that it was definitely stated in the estimates that stone was available at 26 Chains which representation was binding on the Respondents and if no stone was available within that distance he was entitled to claim higher rates if he had to get stone from places farther away. In fact the Appellant alleges that the Engineers assured him that he would be paid higher rates.

7. We may here observe that in none of the clauses of the notice or conditions of contract or in any other document is there any specific mention that stone will be available at 26 Chains nor is there any assurance that if stone was not available within that distance the contractor will be paid higher rates. The mere fact that the estimates were prepared by the PWD on the basis of the stone being available at 26 Chains which Respondents admitted as stated in the Judgment of Civil Judge, Nainital does not mean that there was any assurance or undertaking given that stone would be available at that place. In fact it is not denied that stone was available within the distance of 26 Chains but it was in the area belonging to the Cantonment, for the removal of which permission of the Cantonment authorities had to be taken. Evidently the contractor was not able to obtain that permission. In our view it was upto the contractor to have satisfied himself before entering into the contract that the Cantonment authorities would permit him to take stone from its jurisdiction just in the same way as permission will have to be taken from any private individual in whose land stone required for road building is found. If the contractor has failed successfully to negotiate with the owners of land from which he could bring stone it cannot be said that the estimate prepared by the PWD on the basis that the stone was available at 26 Chains was a statement which amounted to an assurance or constituted a condition of the contract.

8. The Appellant as P. W. 1 stated in his evidence: "Before giving offer I saw the estimates and plan. In the estimate it was written that the stone would be found within 26 Chains. On this basis estimate was prepared through the PWD. I enquired this from the Asstt. Engineer also. He too informed that stone would be available within 26 Chains. On this basis I prepared the estimate. . In the beginning of the year 1947 I started work. I attempted to take out stones from within 26 Chains. The moment I started to take out stones, the Cantonment authorities checked me. For this act I was challaned, but I was acquitted. The entire area within 26 Chains was of the Cantonment." Furtheron he says "I have seen the tender notice and I had gone through it; after that I signed it. Schedule B was attached to the notice. I signed it after going through it. I submitted tender 13% less than the Scheduled rate ... before giving the tender I went to that place and found that the stones were available within 26 Chains, when I wanted to take them out, I learnt that this was within the Cantonment boundary, I sought permission to take out stones from the Cantonment authorities, but it was disallowed."

9. It is clear from this evidence that the Appellant before giving the tender inspected the site, went to the place where stone was said to be available and after satisfying himself that the stone was available he gave the tender. A perusal of the documentary evidence would also show that he actually commenced work after his request to allow him higher rate was rejected which was long after the time when under the contract he was required to start the work. In fact just before the date fixed for the completion of the work, he had under Ex. B-4 dated the 12th June 1947 made the following representation:

"That as agreed upon the contract deed of my contract Nainital Bhowali Motor Road Mile 3 the lead of stones for masonry work is given only about half a mile. On inspecting the place I find it very difficult to get a quarry there as there is no stone at all. I am getting the stones from near the K. M. Sanitorium which falls at a distance of two and a half mile from my place, as has already been brought to your and the C. E's kind notice. Therefore, you are requested kindly to allow me a lead of two and a half miles distance."

On this the concerned authorities seem to have made the endorsement: "As lead and royalty is provided in the schedule B of the tender, the request cannot be acceded to. Draft reply is put up". Accordingly by letter dated the 21st June '47 he was informed as follows:

"Reference your application dated 12th June 1947. Please refer to item Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9 of Schedule B attached with your tender and on which basis you tendered your rate in this connection. As the rates noted therein provides all lead and royalty and there is no mention there that the rate contains a lead for 1/2 a mile, your request cannot be acceded to".

10. This correspondence shows that the Appellant's claim to have extra lead was definitely rejected as untenable even before he started the work under the contract, as is apparent from Ex. B2 dated the 19th July '47. In that letter the appellant was being informed as follows:

"Please note that since you have signed the contract for the above work, the work must be started now in consultation with the Overseer-in-charge, Nainital Section. The date of start and completion will be as follows:

Date of start — 20 November 1946

Date of completion — 19 July 1947".

11. It cannot therefore be said that the Appellant was in any way induced by any assurances given by the P. W. D. authorities that they would give a higher rate for the extra lead before he commenced work. The case of the Appellant in these letters was that no stone was available within half a mile while in his deposition he gave a contrary version altogether. Subsequently he seems to have become hopeful because in the letter of the Assistant Engineer dated 28th December, 1948 it is stated:

"In the estimate lead for 26 chains was provided on the assumption that stone will be available within the distance from the quarries in cantonment areas. Later on when the work was in progress the cantonment authorities objected to quarrying stones from cantonment land....."

No doubt the Executive Engineer in his letter dated 15th June, 1950, Ex. 22 has recommended the case of the Appellant for a higher rate as he says "when the stones were not available from the cantonment area it seems that the contractor naturally was forced to bring them from quarries situated outside the cantonment area" and he further says "If these quarries are the places from where stones were actually obtained then naturally the contractor is entitled to get the lead for the full quantity of stones brought by him to complete different items requiring the use of stones".

12. This letter seems to be a recommendatory letter by a subordinate to the higher officer but it does not in any way establish the right of the Appellant to obtain a higher rate, nor does the evidence justify this conclusion. In our view neither the terms and conditions of the contract nor the oral or documentary evidence justify the conclusion that the Appellant was entitled to any extra lead.

13. Another argument was put forward by the learned Advocate for the Appellant which is also based on the same assumption that the availability of the stone at 26 Chains was a condition of the contract namely that once stone was not available at 26 Chains the contract was at an end and that because the Appellant had done the work he should be paid on the basis of quantum meruit. This in our view is a far-fetched argument and has no relation to the facts and circumstances of the case. Even assuming that the stand taken by the Appellant that the availability of stone at 26 Chains was a condition of the contract was justified, he had notwithstanding the rejection of his claim even before he started the work, acquiesced in the stand taken by the Respondents that he is not entitled to any higher rates, carried on and completed the contract as if there was no such condition. We, therefore, cannot understand the contention of the Appellant's Advocate as to how the contract came to an end and who put an end to it. Even if at that stage the contract had been put an end to by the Respondents which is no one's case, as the Appellant had not started the work no question of quantum meruit would arise. The principle of quantum meruit is rooted in English law under which there were certain procedural advantages in framing an action for compensation for work done. In order to avail of the remedy under quantum meruit, the original contract must have been discharged by the Defendant in such a way as to entitle the Plaintiff to regard himself as discharged from any further performance and he must have elected to do so. The remedy it may be noticed is however, not available to the party who breaks the contract even though he may have partially performed part of his obligation. This remedy by way of quantum meruit is restitutory that is it is a recompense for the value of the work done by the Plaintiff in order to restore him to the position which he would have been in if the contract had never been entered into. In this regard it is different to a claim for damages which is a compensatory remedy aimed at placing the injured party, as near as may be in the position which he would have been in, had the other party performed the contract. This Court had in Alopi Parshad and Sons Ltd. v. Union of India, 1960-2 SCR 793 = (AIR 1960 SC 588) observed at p. 809 (of SCR) = (at p. 595 of AIR):

"Compensation quantum meruit is awarded for work done or services rendered when the price thereof is not fixed by a contract. For work done or services rendered pursuant to the terms of a contract compensation quantum meruit cannot be awarded where the contract provides for consideration payable in that behalf".

Though in that case the basis of the principle was not explained, it nonetheless lays down that where work is done under a contract pursuant to the terms thereof no amount can be claimed by way of quantum meruit. In the view we have taken on the facts of the case we do not propose to examine the decisions cited at the Bar in this behalf. The claim of the Appellant for higher rates which in fact was by way of damages has been rightly disallowed by the High Court.

14. On the second question also the Appellant cannot succeed because under clause 12 of the contract Ex. B1. the Plaintiff was bound to perform additional work which was required of him on the same terms and conditions on which he undertook to do the work for which he tendered. It appears that by a subsidiary contract entered into between the Appellant and the P. W. D. Ex. B3 on the 12th April, 1946, the Appellant undertook to execute some additional work for the Department. The quantity of work which appellant actually performed was far in excess of what was mentioned in Ex. B3. The Appellant therefore claimed payment for the work done by him in excess of the quantity mentioned in the contract plus 30 per cent at the current rate as against the stipulated rates. It was submitted on behalf of the State of U. P. before the High Court that under clause 12 of the contract Ex. B1 and paragraph 5 of the special instructions the plaintiff was not entitled to any amount in excess of what he had already been paid. This contention was accepted because under the aforesaid clause 12 the contractor was bound to perform all additional work which was required of him on the same terms and conditions in which he undertook to do the main work. Paragraph 5 of the special instructions further provides as follows:

"Contractors must be prepared to do at their original tender rate work in excess of the given quantities of work upto 30 per cent; if an increase in excess of 30 per cent is ordered over the work the contractor must intimate to the Engineer Incharge in writing his willingness or refusal to do extra work at the originally tendered rates. In the latter case he should settle fresh rate for increased work over 30 per cent before doing the work".

These instructions being part and parcel of the original contract Ex. B1 would govern the parties. As such the Appellant unless he gave notice under that paragraph that he is not prepared to do the extra work over the 30% at normal rates, he cannot claim anything other than at the rates mentioned in the contract, unless he had settled fresh rates for that extra work. There is no evidence nor is it claimed by the Appellant that he had given any notice as required under paragraph 5 of special instructions and since he did the work without fulfilling these requirements he is not entitled to claim any amounts at a higher rate for the extra work done. As neither of the contentions have force the Appeal is dismissed but in the circumstances without costs.

(V 58 C 135)

(From Gujarat: (1966) 2 ITJ 871)

J. C. SHAH, C. J., K. S. HEGDE
AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.

The Commissioner of Income-Tax, Gujarat (In all the Appeals), Appellant v. M/s Bhanji Lavji Porbandar, (In all the Appeals), Respondent.

Civil Appeals Nos. 1181 to 1183 of 1967, D/- 21-1-1971.

Income Tax Act (1922), Section 34 (1) (a) — Where assessee has disclosed all primary facts in his return necessary for assessment, the Income Tax Officer is incompetent to start reassessment proceedings under Section 34 (1) (a) merely because he had dropped assessment proceeding on a wrong legal inference from facts disclosed — (1966) 2 ITJ 871 (Guj.), Affirmed.

(Para 6)

No duty is cast on assessee to instruct Income Tax Officer on questions of law. Assessee has not to satisfy him that there was no concealment with regard to any question. It is for the Income Tax Officer to establish that there was failure to disclose facts material to assessment of income which had escaped assessment.

(Paras 6, 7)

The filing of blank return form for 1949-50 with a statement that there was no income chargeable to tax in British India as in the two previous years, did not amount to non-disclosure of facts for purposes of Section 34 (1) (a) when the Income Tax Officer being fully aware of the previous assessments had cancelled the return form.

(Para 8)

Mr. S. T. Desai, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. S. K. Aiyar, R. N. Sachthey and B. D. Sharma, Advocate, with him), for Appellant (In all the Appeals); M/s. S. P. Mehta, R. R. Raya and D. R. Raiyani, Advocates, and Mr. O. C. Mathur, Advocate of M/s. J. B. Dadachanji and Co., for Respondent. (In all the Appeals).

SHAH, C. J.: — These appeals are filed with certificate granted by the High Court of Gujarat. They arise out of proceedings for re-assessment of income of the respondent relating to assessment years 1947-48, 1948-49 and 1949-50. The respondent — who will hereinafter be called 'the assessee' — carried on the business in ghee at Porbandar, which was at all material times relevant to the assessments in question outside the taxable territories. The Income-tax Officer C-III Ward, Bombay, initiated proceedings against the assessee as a non-resident for the assessment years, amongst others, 1947-48, 1948-49 and 1949-50. The assessee had in the relevant years of accounts a current account with the Bank of India Ltd., in Bombay and sale proceeds in respect of large quantities of ghee supplied outside taxable territories were credited in that account and were then transferred to Porbandar. The assessee had also a current account with the firm Shamji Kalidas and Company at Bombay and in this accounts Messrs. Shamji Kalidas and Company had paid interest to the assessee. The assessee being a non-resident, tax at the maximum rate was deducted by Messrs. Shamji Kalidas and Company, in respect of the interest paid to the assessee under Section 18 (3-A) of the Income-tax Act, 1922. The assessee disclosed those facts to the Income-tax Officer and contended that since the assessee had no business in the taxable territories nor any income taxable in the taxable territories (other than the income from Messrs. Shamji Kalidas and Company in respect of which certificates showing deduction at the maximum rate), the assessment proceedings initiated by the Income-tax Officer be discharged. The Income-tax Officer upheld the contention and made an order on December 30, 1948, for the assessment years 1947-48 and 1948-49 observing that there was no source of income taxable in British India and that the proceedings started should be dropped. In the assessment year 1949-50 the Income Tax Officer also passed an order that the proceeding be discharged.

2. In 1956 the Income-tax Officer, Porbandar, initiated proceedings under Section 34 (1) (a) of the Income-tax Act, 1922, for re-opening the assessment of the assessee for the assessment years 1947-48, 1948-49 and 1949-50, and served the requisite notices. The assessee challenged the jurisdiction of the Income-tax Officer to assess him on various grounds one of which alone survives for consideration. The assessee submitted that it had disclosed fully and truly all the primary facts necessary for the purpose of assessment and on that account the Income-tax Officer had no jurisdiction to initiate re-assessment proceedings. The assessee contended that the Income-tax Officer could not commence re-assessment proceedings merely because he entertained a view different from the view of his predecessor. The Income-tax Officer rejected the plea raised by the assessee and brought the income which in his view had escaped assessment to tax. Appeals filed by the assessee to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner and to the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal were dismissed.

3. At the instance of the assessee, four questions were referred to the High Court of Gujarat as arising out of the order of the Tribunal. We are concerned with the third question:

"(3) Whether on the facts and circumstances of the case, the Tribunal was justified in upholding the action under Section 34 (1) (a) as valid in all the three assessment years?"

The High Court recorded on that question an answer in the negative. With certificate granted by the High Court, the Commissioner of Income-tax has appealed to this Court.

4. The High Court held that all primary facts relevant to the assessment of the income of the assessee were disclosed by the assessee. In respect of the notice for the first two years, viz. 1947-48 and 1948-49 the Income-tax Officer had by his order dropped the proceedings of assessment observing:

"In response to notice issued under Section 23 (2) of the Act Mr. A. V. Deshpande x x x attends on behalf of the assessee states that the assessee is a non-resident and has absolutely no business in British India. The assessee is doing ghee business at Porbandar and delivers goods at Porbandar to merchants who buy ghee from Indian Union. There is no office nor any agency of the non-resident in British India. The non-resident assessee has maintained a Bank account in British India but this is only for recovering from the merchants dues in respect of goods delivered at Porbandar. Bank Pass Books are produced. It appears that the cheques that are received from the merchants are credited in this account and subsequently transferred to Porbandar. The assessee has, however, got a current account with Shamji Kalidas & Co., and receives interest on the amounts deposited in this firm. Mr. Deshpande, however, produces certificates of the taxes deducted at the maximum rate under Section 18 (3A) on interest received by the non-resident. The tax is regularly paid upto 1948-49 assessment years. As there is no source of income taxable in British India, I drop the proceedings already started."

In the proceeding for assessment of income for the assessment year 1949-50 the assessee submitted a blank return stating:

"With reference to your above, we have to return herewith the forms sent by you and have to inform that the income-tax is always paid by us at maximum scale in British India and that we have no other income therefore and hence the forms sent by you are returned herewith with a request to cancel the same."

After considering the representation the Income-tax Officer passed the following order:

"Return of income for assessment year 1949-50 was served on the assessee direct at Porbandar. The assessee is a non-resident and has absolutely no business in British India. The non-resident has interest income in British India on which tax is recovered at the maximum rate. Assessment proceedings in the previous year were also dropped after enquiries. I, therefore, cancel the return of income issued for assessment year 1949-50."

5. The assessee had in the course of the assessment proceedings shown his bank pass-books of his account with the Bank of India Ltd. He also disclosed the account with Messrs. Shamji Kalidas & Company. The Tribunal in dealing with the appeals relating to the assessment years 1947-48 and 1948-49 observed:

"The duty of the assessee is to disclose all the primary facts in his possession. In the present case, a considerable portion of the sale proceeds of ghee was received in Bombay. There is difference between accrual and receipt x x x and x x x it depended upon the opinion of the Income-tax Officer as to whether any profit had accrued in British India. Receipt of sale proceeds of ghee in British India, however, stands on a different footing, and the question of full and true disclosure on the part of the assessee of all material facts should be examined with regard to the sale proceeds of ghee only. If the assessee could satisfy us that there was no concealment with regard to the said question, that should be enough for our purposes, and it would not be necessary further to examine the position with regard to the profits which are deemed to have accrued in British India under Ss. 42 (1) and 42 (3)."

The Tribunal proceeded to observe that the statements made by the assessee's representative only disclosed that the assessee was a non-resident, that it had no business in British India, that it had delivered ghee at Porbandar, and that it had no office or agency in British India. They also observed that the Bank Account and the Bank Pass Books of the assessee were produced and the Income-tax Officer was informed that the cheques received were "subsequently transferred to Porbandar", and the current account with Messrs. Shamji Kalidas & Company and the amounts deposited therein were also disclosed. In the view of the Tribunal, by these disclosures, the "assessee did not furnish any particulars about how the delivery was given" and "the all-important, question about the price of the goods was not mentioned", that on that account the statement must be regarded as incomplete: that it was the duty of the assessee's representative to disclose "the profits embedded in the price, but the sequence of the several statements was such that the assessee wished to show thereby that there was no office or agency in British India and whatever was done was done at Porbandar"; that the question of receipt of sale proceeds in British India was "thus by-passed"; that the Income-tax Officer was informed about the interest paid to the assessee but "no question was raised of any possible liability of the assessee to tax on other account"; that "all the statements taken together contained such a meagre presentation of the facts, that it was difficult to consider that there was a full and true disclosure of material facts"; and that "the material facts were not disclosed, whatever was disclosed was not fully disclosed, and in that sense there was no true disclosure". The Tribunal then observed:

"This is not a case where the Income-tax Officer drew a wrong legal inference from facts. This is a case where facts must be regarded as not fully or truly disclosed. x x x Even so, in this case, it is mainly the assessee who failed to carry out the obligation under the law, with the result that the income escaped assessment. The words "full" and "true" and "material facts" and the Explanation to S. 34 (1) (a) would lose all their meaning if the meagre statements by the assessee were to pass muster. Under those circumstances, we must hold that the initiation of action under S. 34 (1) (a) was valid."

6. In our judgment, the High Court was right in holding that the Tribunal misconceived the nature of the proceedings and the duty imposed upon the assessee by S. 34 (1) (a). It is not for the assessee to satisfy the Income-tax Officer that there was no concealment with regard to any question; it is for the Income-tax Officer, if that issue is raised, to establish that the assessee had failed to disclose fully and truly certain facts material to the assessment of income which had escaped assessment. Failure to disclose how the delivery of ghee was given at Porbandar was wholly irrelevant, and failure to furnish particulars in that behalf cannot assist the case of the Department. Observation relating to the failure to disclose the price of ghee supplied is not strictly accurate, for, it was disclosed by the assessee's representative that the cheques were delivered for payment of the dues for ghee supplied at Porbandar and that "they were subsequently transferred to Porbandar". It was again no duty of the assessee to disclose to or instruct the Income-tax Officer that there were "profits embedded in the receipt" of the money at Bombay. Section 34 (1) (a) does not cast any duty upon the assessee to instruct the Income-tax Officer on questions of law. The assessee had disclosed that ghee was delivered at Porbandar by him and the price in respect of those supplied was received in Bombay which was subsequently transferred to Porbandar. We are unable to accept the view of the Tribunal that the "question of receipt of sale proceeds in British India was thus by-passed". The assessee's representative had expressly stated that the assessee had maintained a Bank account in British India in which "for recovering from merchants dues in respect of the goods delivered at Porbandar" were credited. The assessee also produced the Bank Pass Books. The finding that "the question of receipt of sale proceeds was by-passed" cannot be accepted as correct. The statement that the cheques were "subsequently transferred to Porbandar" only means that the amounts realized by encashment of the cheques were sent to Porbandar, and not that the cheques were sent to Porbandar. We do not think that any more detailed disclosure was necessary to comply with the requirements that the assessee had fully and truly disclosed all the material facts necessary for the purpose of assessment.

7. The Income-tax Officer may, if he is satisfied, that on account of failure on the part of the assessee to disclose fully and truly all material facts necessary for the purpose of assessment, income has escaped assessment, he may assess or re-assess the income. But when the primary facts necessary for assessment are fully and truly disclosed, he is not entitled on change of opinion to commence proceedings for re-assessment. The Income-tax Officer was apprised of all the primary facts necessary for assessment, and he proceeded to "drop the assessment proceedings". He may have raised a wrong legal inference from the facts, disclosed but on that account he was not competent to commence re-assessment proceedings under Section 34 (1) (a) for the two assessment years 1947-48 and 1948-49.

8. Counsel for the Commissioner contended that in any event the assessee had in the assessment of income for the year 1949-50 not disclosed all the primary facts. Counsel contended that the statement before the Income-tax Officer was a bare statement about the receipt of interest from Messrs. Shamji Kalidas and Company and there was no reference to the account with the Bank of India Ltd. There is no substance in this contention. The assessee had invited the attention of the Income-tax Officer to the previous assessment proceedings and also had invited his attention to the fact that on the interest received tax at maximum rate was charged. In the Bank account there was no express reference. But we agree with the High Court that since the factual position having remained unaltered in the assessment year 1949-50, there was no non-disclosure of material facts necessary for assessment of the income. The Income-tax Officer was fully aware of the assessment proceedings for the years 1947-48 and 1948-49, and in his order he expressly referred to those proceedings. Being aware of the earlier proceedings and the reasons for passing the previous order, if the Income-tax Officer passed an order in effect holding that there was no income of the assessee chargeable to tax, the Income-tax Officer cannot seek to re-assess the income on the ground of failure to disclose fully and truly the facts necessary for assessment. We do not think that any ground is made out for disagreeing with the High Court in respect of the validity of the order of re-assessment for the year 1949-50.

9. The appeals fail and are dismissed with costs. One hearing fee.
Appeals dismissed.

HEGDE, J.: The appellant firm (which will hereinafter be referred to as the "assessee") carried on business in drugs, chemicals, mercury, camphor and art silk yarn as also in money-lending, over a number of years. The accounting year with which we are concerned in this appeal is Samvat year 2008 commencing from October 31, 1951 and ending on October, 18, 1952. The firm consisted of two partners, Mohanlal Bagmal and Seshmal Sobhachand. Two minors, Ramaniklal Sobhachand and Lakshmichand Sobhachand were admitted to the benefits of the partnership. The assessee had dealings for several years with a firm known as "Bhojaji Sobhachand" (to be hereinafter referred to as the Bombay Firm). Sobhachand Amarchand, a partner of the Bombay firm, is the father of Seshmal, Ramaniklal and Lakshmichand and he was having sixteen per cent share in the Bombay firm. That firm became insolvent in April 1952. The Bombay firm owed certain amount to the assessee. In the assessment of income-tax of the appellant for the assessment year 1952-53, relevant to the accounting year Samvat 2008, the assessee claimed a deduction of Rs. 2,68,385 as bad debt due from the Bombay firm, incurred by that firm in the course of business transactions. The Income-tax Officer disallowed that claim holding that "these transactions were mere accommodations which can have no bearing to the regular business carried on by the assessee. In appeal the Appellate Assistant Commissioner agreed with the Income-tax Officer. He held that the debt did not arise in the course of the assessee's business as Chemists and Druggists nor in the course of their money-lending business. On a further appeal taken by the assessee to the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal, the Tribunal confirmed the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. The assessee thereafter applied to the Tribunal under Section 66 (1) of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 to submit a statement of the case with the question

"whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case the disallowance of the bad debt of Rs. 2,68,385/- is right in law" to the High Court of Madras for its opinion. The Tribunal rejected that application but pursuant to an order of the High Court under Section 66 (2), the Tribunal submitted a statement of the case on the following question:

"Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case, the Tribunal was right in law in holding that the debt of Rs. 2,68,385/- was not one incurred in the course of money-lending business of the assessee".

2. The High Court opined that the debt in question was not a bad and doubtful debt in the assessee's money lending business nor a debt representing loss sustained in the other business. The question referred was, therefore, answered in the affirmative and against the assessee. Thereafter the present appeal was brought after obtaining special leave from this Court. At the hearing of the appeal this Court found that the Tribunal's order was very brief and that it gave no reasons in support of its conclusions. It also found that the statement submitted by the tribunal was inadequate. This Court took the view that the question framed at the instance of the High Court did not bring out the real question arising for decision. It accordingly reframed the question as follows:

"Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of the case the Appellate Tribunal erred in disallowing a sum of Rs. 2,68,385/- written off by the assessee in their books of accounts as irrecoverable?"

By its order dated July 29, 1969 this Court called upon the Tribunal to submit a supplementary statement of case on the reframed question. The tribunal accordingly submitted a fresh statement of the case on the question referred. But that statement merely catalogued the arguments advanced at the bar. The tribunal did not give any findings on the points arising for decision. Hence by its order dated April 7, 1970, this Court directed the tribunal to submit a further statement. The tribunal has accordingly submitted a further statement.

3. The facts found by the tribunal are found in paragraphs 11 and 12 of the statement. They read:

"11. We have taken into consideration the available materials and the rival submissions. The only facts in favour of the assessee are that incidental charges are debited to the Bombay firm in respect of some of the remittances and there is a flow of moneys to the Bombay firm up to 10-3-1952 when the last of the remittances was sent to it before the firm collapsed in or about April, 1952. On the other hand the narrations in the entries, as they stand, the failure to adjust interest in the account of the Bombay firm at the stage at which it became a debtor in Samvat year 2007, the manner in which the partner of the appellant-firm tried to explain the position in March, 1954 and the stand of the firm itself at all earlier stages support the case of the Department.

"12. Having considered all the circumstances of the case, we are of the opinion that the sums in question were not sent to the Bombay firm as loans made in the ordinary course of the money-lending business of the assessee nor in respect of any other business of the assessee. As this is the finding with regard to the whole of the amount of Rs. 2,68,385/-, there is no question of allocating any portion thereof as between the business of money lending or for any other purpose as referred to in para 7 above."

4. It is true as contended by the learned Counsel for the assessee that the conclusions reached by the Tribunal are not supported by proper discussion of the material before it. It is also true that the tribunal after cataloguing the arguments advanced at the bar, has come to certain abrupt conclusions, but all the same it cannot be denied that the findings reached by the Tribunal are findings of fact and these findings are supported by the evidence on record. The tribunal has found that the monies sent by the assessee to the Bombay firm were not loans made in the ordinary course of its money-lending business, nor in respect of any other business of the assessee. This finding covers the entire amount sought to be deducted. In view of this finding, which is binding on this Court, our answer to the question reframed has to be in the negative and in favour of the Department. The appeal fails and is dismissed. No costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(Para 5)

Mr. D. N. Mukherjee, Advocate, for Appellant.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

DUA, J.:— The appellant, Basudev Hazra, was a leaseholder in respect of tolls of the public ferry at Sadar Ghat on the outskirts of Burdwan town for crossing the river Damodar. This lease was for a period of three years

*(Cri. Ref. No. 36 of 1967, D/- 13-9-1967 — Cal.)

BO/BO/A495/71/GNB/C

(August 14, 1963 to August 13, 1966) Ex. 2. On November 30, 1964 Matiar Rahman Mandal filed a complaint against the appellant in the court of the Sadar Sub-Divisional Officer (Judicial) Burdwan alleging that the appellant used to realise illegally 20np. per cart from the cultivators who used to drive their carts across the dry bed of the river. The matter was reported to the S. D. O. who directed an enquiry. This infuriated the appellant. On November 29, 1964 the appellant realised double the amount of toll and on protest and refusal by the complainant he was threatened with violence by the appellant.

2. The Magistrate trying the appellant for offences under Sec. 23 and 24 of the Bengal Ferries Act, 1 of 1885 convicted him of both the offences. The appellant was sentenced to a fine of Rs. 10 under Sec. 23 and to a fine of Rs. 20/- under Section 24: in default of payment of fine in the former case he was to undergo simple imprisonment for ten days and in the latter for 20 days.

3. On the appellant challenging his conviction on revision in the Court of the Sessions Judge, the Additional Sessions Judge, Burdwan made a reference to the High Court recommending the appellant's acquittal. It was observed by the Additional Sessions Judge in his reference that according to the appellant's defence the complainant's party were in fact using the landing stage and the path constructed and repaired by him and, therefore, they were liable to pay the usual toll tax. After reproducing Section 24 he added:

".....the complainant's case as it appears from the petition of complaint and also from the evidence of the three witnesses examined on the point is that they do not take advantage of any of the facilities provided by the lessee and that the lessee demanded toll from them even though they were using their own path. The defence as I have already stated, was that the pathway and the landing stage belonged to the lessee and that, therefore, he was entitled to collect toll. Forgetting the defence for the moment it seems to me that no conviction u/s 24 can be sustained on the case of the complainant as it is".

According to him the collection of money from the people using their own pathway might amount to extortion but it would not attract Section 24. We need not refer to the recommendation with respect to the appellant's conviction under S. 23 as this was accepted by the High Court and there is no appeal against acquittal under that section.

4. The High Court accepted the recommendation with respect to the conviction under S. 23 and acquitted the appellant of that offence. In regard to the conviction under S. 24 the High Court observed that the trial Magistrate had found (i) that the appellant had been realising toll charges in excess of the scheduled rate of 20 Ps. per cart and also realising such charges from persons who did not use the ferry and (ii) that though the complainant had not availed of the ferry and had taken the cart over the sandy bed of the river 40 Ps. per cart were realised from him. These findings of fact were held not open to re-examination on revision. The High Court added that realisation of 40 Ps. fell within the mischief of S. 24 which forbids every lessee from realising more than lawful toll even in cases in which he is entitled to demand ferry charges. Repelling the argument that the present was a case of extortion and it did not fall within the purview of S. 24 the High Court, after referring to the complainant's case, observed that it was a case of illegal realisation of toll in excess, when the appellant was not entitled to realise it at all and not a case of extortion under the Indian Penal Code. The amount had been illegally demanded as a toll and that also in excess of permissible rate. The reference with respect to S. 24 was, as observed earlier, rejected.

5. The appellant has secured special leave to appeal under Art. 136 of the Constitution and his counsel Mr. D. N. Mukherjee has strenuously contended that the realisation of 40 Ps. per cart from those who do not use the ferry cannot as a matter of law fall within the mischief of Section 24 of the Bengal Ferries Act. His contention in essence is that unless someone actually uses a ferry no charges realised from him for permitting him to cross the river, even if the demand is made by way of toll, can attract the provisions of S. 24. The contention though prima facie somewhat attractive does not stand scrutiny. Section 24 reads as under:

"Penalty for taking unauthorised tolls, and for causing delay. — "Every such lessee or other person as aforesaid asking or taking more than the lawful toll, or without due cause, delaying any person, animal, vehicle or other thing, shall be punished with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees."

It is obvious that this section does not speak of taking toll in excess of the lawful limit only from those persons who use the ferry. This Act was enacted for regulating ferries but that does not mean that an illegal demand under the pretext of claim by way of toll under this Act when it is not legally claimable was not intended by the legislature to be prohibited and made punishable by the language of Section 24. Shri Mukherjee drew our attention to Section 5 of the Act in which "ferry" is defined to include a bridge of boats, pontoons or rafts, a swing-bridge, a flying bridge, a temporary bridge and a landing stage. According to him, this definition suggests that it is only when a ferry is used and excessive charges realised that Section 24 would be attracted. The submission is difficult to accept. This definition which is not exhaustive does not seem to us to control or otherwise to throw helpful light in the interpretation of S. 24. This section seems to have been designed in effect to protect the persons crossing the river against harassment and abuse of the privileged position which the lessee or other person authorised to collect the tolls of a public ferry occupies under the statute in the matter of control over the passage or pathway for crossing, fording or ferrying across the river. Demanding or receiving more than lawful dues and unduly delaying persons, animals, vehicles or things in crossing the river are both rendered penal and punishable. Whether the person from whom the amount is demanded or received is under no obligation to pay anything by way of toll while crossing the river bed or is bound by law only to pay 20 Ps. per cart as toll would thus be immaterial when payment is demanded or received on the pretext that it is due as toll when it is legally not so due. In either case S. 24 would seem to be attracted: this construction would serve to suppress the mischief at which this section appears to be aimed. The question whether or not the appellant's case falls within the mischief of extortion as defined under the Indian Penal Code is not strictly relevant to the point arising in the controversy because if the appellant's case is covered by S. 24 of the Act then he is liable to be punished thereunder. His liability to be prosecuted under the Indian Penal Code cannot by itself in law exclude the applicability of S. 24 to his case. The Additional Sessions Judge was, in our opinion, not quite right in observing that the defence that the accused was entitled to claim the toll may be ignored, because defence of an accused person can legitimately be taken into consideration while assessing the value of the evidence and judging the guilt or innocence of the accused. The appellant's defence in this case would clearly tend to support the complainant's case that the amount received was demanded as toll which was an unlawful demand. To exclude cases like the present from the operation of S. 24 would unduly restrict its effectiveness and would indeed facilitate illegal recoveries prohibited by it. To that extent it would defeat the object and purpose which this section is intended to achieve. When the appellant's counsel took us through the evidence we found that the appellant had also delayed the prosecution witnesses without due cause in crossing the river in violation of S. 24. It is, however, unnecessary to pursue this aspect. Finally it may be pointed out that Art. 136 of the Constitution does not confer a right of appeal on a party. It only confers a discretionary power on this Court to be exercised sparingly to interfere in suitable cases where grave miscarriage of justice has resulted from illegality or from misapprehension or mistake in reading evidence or from ignoring, excluding or illegally admitting material evidence. The present case suffers from no such infirmity.

6. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

(A) Income Tax Act (1961), S. 56 — Interest on the amount of assessee's own contribution to an unrecognised provident fund cannot be considered as salary in view of S. 17 (3) (ii) but it is an "income from other sources" within S. 56. AIR 1967 Assam 58, Reversed. (Para 6)

(B) Interpretation of Statutes — There is no need to call into aid any of the rules of construction when meaning of the statute is plain and unambiguous. (Para 7)

Mr. Jagadish Swarup, Solicitor-General of India, (M/s. G. C. Sharma, R. N. Sachthey and B. D. Sharma, Advocates, with him), for Appellants; Mr. T. A. Ramachandran, Advocate, amicus curiae, for Respondent.

HEGDE, J.: The Commissioner of Income-tax, Assam and Nagaland has brought this appeal by certificate. The assessment with which we are concerned in this appeal is for the assessment year 1963-64, the relevant accounting year is the financial year 1962-63. The assessee was the manager of a Tea Estate under the managing agency of M/s. Gillanders Arbuthnot & Co. Ltd. The said company had a Provident Fund scheme for its employees. But that provident fund was not a recognised one. The assessee retired during the previous year relevant to assessment year 1963-64 and received out of this provident fund an amount of Rs. 27,948/- which represented the interest on the amount of his own contribution to the fund. The Income-tax Officer assessed this amount as the assessee's income from other sources. That order was confirmed in appeal by the Appellate Assistant Commissioner. But on further appeal to the tribunal by the assessee, the tribunal came to the conclusion that the receipt in question being profits 'in lieu of salary', the same was his salary as defined in Section 17 of the Income-tax Act, 1961 (to be hereinafter referred to as the Act); the same having not been assessed as his salary, the assessment order relating to that item of receipt was not legal. At the instance of the Commissioner, the tribunal referred the following question of law to the High Court of Assam and Nagaland for its opinion:

"Whether on the facts and circumstances of the case and having regard to the provisions of section 17 (3) (ii) of the Income-tax Act, 1961 the amount of Rs. 27,948/- representing the interest on the amount of the assessee's own contributions to an unrecognised provident fund was assessable under the residuary section 56 of the said Act?"

2. The High Court answered that question in the negative and in favour of the assessee. While it came to the conclusion that the receipt in question cannot be considered as salary as defined in S. 17, in its view the same was exempt from payment of tax in view of S. 17 (3) (ii). The Commissioner is challenging the above conclusion.

3. The receipt of Rs. 27,948/- is undoubtedly an income as defined by S. 2 (24). The receipt of an interest on any investment is a gain made by the investor and therefore the same is "income". The next question is whether the said income is exempt from tax or if it is not exempt under what head the same has to be brought to tax?

4. Section 14 of the Act gives the heads of income. They are: (A) Salaries; (B) Interest on securities; (C) Income from house property; (D) Profits and gains of business or profession; (E) Capital gains and (F) Income from other sources.

5. The salaries are brought to tax under S. 15 and "the income from other sources" is brought to tax under S. 56. In this appeal we are not concerned with the other heads of income. The salary is defined in S. 17 as including any "profits in lieu of or in addition to any salary or wages" (S. 17 (1) (iv).) Sub-s. (3) of S. 17 says:

"profits in lieu of salary" includes.—

x x x

(ii) any payment . . . due to or received by an assessee from an employer or a former employer or from a provident or other fund (not being an approved superannuation fund) to the extent to which it does not consist of contribution by the assessee or interest on such contributions."

(emphasis supplied)

6. The contributions to recognised provident funds are dealt with by other provisions of the Act. Herein we are concerned with the contribution to an unrecognised provident fund. The learned Judges of the High Court opined that the receipt by the assessee with which we are concerned is exempt from the payment of tax in view of S. 17 (3) (ii). In our opinion they were clearly in error in arriving at that conclusion. Deductions from salaries are dealt with by S. 16. In view of S. 17 (1) (iv), all receipts of profits in lieu of salary have to be considered as salary. But then the question is what is meant by "profits in lieu of salary". In defining the expression "profits in lieu of salary", the legislature excluded from the scope of that expression any payments received by the assessee from a provident fund, his own contributions to the fund or any interest on such contributions. From that it follows that the receipt of Rs. 27,948/- by the assessee in the relevant accounting year cannot be considered as salary, though undoubtedly that is an income. Section 17 has nothing to do either with deductions or with exemptions. It is merely a provision defining the expression "salary". As the income in question is not salary and the same cannot be said to be either interest on the securities, income from house property, profits and gains of business or profession or capital gains, it has to be considered as "income from other sources" and brought to tax under Section 56. Section 56 (1) provides that income of every kind which is not to be excluded from the total income under the Act shall be chargeable to income-tax under the head income "from other sources" if it is not chargeable to income-tax under any of the heads specified in Section 14 items 'A' to 'E'.

7. In our opinion the meaning of Section 17 (3) (ii) is plain and unambiguous. Hence there is no need to call into aid any of the rules of construction as was sought to be done by the High Court.

8. The respondent was not represented before this Court. We are obliged to Mr. T. A. Ramachandran for acceding to our request to appear on his behalf as amicus curiae and assist us at the time of hearing of the appeal.

9. For the reasons mentioned above we allow this appeal, discharge the answer given by the High Court and answer the question referred to the High Court in the affirmative and in favour of the Department. Under the circumstances of the case we make no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

SHAH, C. J.: — Gurbux Rai Harbux Rai — hereinafter called 'the assessee' — is a registered firm carrying on business in piece goods and commission agents. It has its head office at Kanpur and a branch office at Farrukhabad. During the chargeable accounting periods July 4, 1943 to June 21, 1944 and June 22, 1944 to July 10, 1945 Gurbux Rai and Harbux Rai (each representing his joint family) were the two partners of the assessee with equal shares in the profit and loss. In proceedings for assessment of tax under the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940 for the two chargeable accounting periods the assessee informed the Tax Officer that the joint family of Gurbux Rai had been dissolved and there was a reconstitution of the business of the partnership with effect from July 4, 1943. According to the assessee the constitution of the firm after partition was that in the firm at Kanpur the former two partners were interested, their share being equal, but in the business of the firm at Farrukhabad there were three partners — Harbux Rai with -8/- share, Chameli Devi with -4/- share and Gopaldas with -4/- share.

2. In assessing tax under the Indian Income-tax Act, 1922 for the assessment year 1944-45 relevant to the account year ending June 21, 1944 the Income-tax Officer held that the case set up by the assessee that there was partition amongst the members of the family of Gurbux Rai could not be accepted. In the view of the Income-tax Officer, an attempt was made "to avoid proper incidence of taxation as an afterthought to create evidence for camouflaging the Farrukhabad business as a separate unit of assessment". The Income-tax Officer directed that the income be assessed as the income of the assessee and not as the income of a separate firm. The excess profits tax assessment being consequential upon the income-tax assessment, the Excess Profits Tax Officer assessed the entire income of the two businesses at Kanpur and at Farrukhabad, in the hands of the assessee firm.

3. Against the order passed by the Income Tax Officer the assessee appealed to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner who by his order dated October 10, 1947 observed:

".....that partial partition in respect of moveable property of Gurbux Rai was effected on a date somewhere near Asadh Samvat 2000, from which date Farrukhabad was conducted by a separate firm consisting of Harbuxrai, Mst. Chameli and Gopaldas". Pursuant to this order the Income-tax Officer modified the assessment with respect to the Income-tax assessment of the assessee for the assessment years 1944-45 and 1945-46. The Excess Profits Tax Officer however started proceedings under Section 10-A by notice dated February 6, 1951 calling upon the assessee to show cause why appropriate adjustments should not be made in the assessment, and passed orders in that behalf for both the chargeable accounting periods holding that the main purpose of the partial partition of the family business of Gurbux Rai was avoidance of excess profits tax liability. By order dated February 21, 1951 passed under Section 15 of the Excess Profits Tax Act the Excess Profits Tax Officer modified the original excess profits tax assessment. In the revised assessment in pursuance of orders under Section 10-A he included the income of the branch shop at Farrukhabad in the total income of the assessee for purposes of excess profits tax assessment. The assessee appealed against the order of additional assessment contending that the Excess Profits Tax Officer was not competent to re-open the case under Section 15 as he had no definite information coming into his possession to enable him to discover that the profits of the chargeable accounting period had escaped assessment. The assessee contended that all the materials in the case were before the Excess Profits Tax Officer at the time of his original assessment and no new information came into his possession thereafter. The assessee also contended that the Excess Profits Tax Officer was not competent to pass any order under Section 10-A merely to make an adjustment in the revised assessment under Section 15. The Income-tax Appellate Tribunal held that the Excess Profits Tax Officer had received definite information regarding the state of the law in pursuance of the appellate order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner who had held that the family of Gurbux Rai was partially partitioned. The Tribunal also held that the Excess Profits Tax Officer was competent to pass an order under Section 10-A, of the Excess Profits Tax Act.

4. The Tribunal thereafter referred the following questions to the High Court of Allahabad under S. 21 of the Excess Profits Tax Act read with Section 66 (1) of the Income-tax Act, 1922:

"(1) Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of this case there was any definite information within the meaning of Section 15 by virtue of which the Excess Profits Tax Officer was competent to re-open the excess profits tax assessment?"

(2) Whether in the circumstances of this case, the Excess Profits Tax Officer was competent to apply the provisions of Section 10-A and make necessary adjustments in pursuance thereto in the revised assessment under Section 15?"

The High Court of Allahabad held that since the Excess Profits Tax Officer purported to re-open the assessment under Section 15 of the Excess Profits Tax Act "only because of the order of the Appellate Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax holding that the Farrukhabad business was no longer the business of the assessee and that the family of Gurbux Rai had partitioned its movable property, all of which proceeded upon material which was already initially before the Excess Profits Tax Officer and to which he had applied his mind when he made the original assessment, it was not a case where the Excess Profits Tax Officer can be said to have discovered" in consequence of definite information which had come into his possession, that profits chargeable to excess profits tax had escaped assessment. The High Court accordingly answered the first question in the negative.

5. The High Court then observed that if the Excess Profits Tax Officer was not competent to take proceedings under Section 15 of the Excess Profits Tax Act, it was not open to him to apply the provisions of Section 10-A in the proceedings upon re-opening the assessment under Section 15, for, in the view of the High Court an order under Section 10-A may be passed only where the Excess Profits Tax Officer is seized of jurisdiction in a pending assessment proceeding. As the proceedings initiated by the Excess Profits Tax Officer under Section 15 were void, he had no power in him to make an order under Section 10-A of the Act. The High Court accordingly answered the second question also in the negative.

6. Against the order passed by the High Court, with certificate granted by the High Court these two appeals are preferred.

7. A parallel proceeding which had come before this Court in Civil Appeals Nos. 741-743 of 1966 (SC) Gurbux Rai Harbux Rai v. Commr. of Income-tax, U. P., D/- 2-8-1968, may also be referred to. It may be recalled that the Excess Profits Tax Officer at Kanpur had served a notice under Section 10-A of the Excess Profits Tax Act requiring the assessee to show cause why appropriate adjustments as respects liability to excess profits tax should not be made so as to counteract the avoidance or reduction of liability to excess profits tax by converting the business in the name of Pussulal Jangalal—the Farrukhabad firm—into a separate business. The contention of the assessee that the disruption of the family was a genuine and bona fide transaction was rejected by the Excess Profits Tax Officer. The case was then taken to the Income-tax Appellate Tribunal. The Tribunal confirmed the order of the Excess Profits Tax Officer. But at the instance of the assessee the Tribunal referred the following question to the High Court of Allahabad:

"Whether on the facts and circumstances of this case, the transaction in question was one which could be avoided under Section 10-A of the Excess Profits Tax Act?"

The High Court by order dated July 31, 1969 answered the question in the affirmative. Against the order passed by the High Court no further proceedings have been taken by the assessee challenging the conclusion of the High Court and that order has become final.

8. The High Court has held in the judgment under appeal that action taken under Section 15 of the Excess Profits Tax Act was not competent and on that account the Excess Profits Tax Officer had no jurisdiction in the matter. But in the judgment of the High Court in Income-tax Reference No. 118 of 1962, D/- 31-7-1969 (All) no question of jurisdiction arose. The Court had only answered the question whether the transaction of partial partition was one which could be avoided under Section 10-A of the Excess Profits Tax Act. The decision of the High Court (which had become final) about the authority of the Excess Profits Tax Officer to take action under Section 10-A does not affect the maintainability of the present appeal.

9. Section 10-A of the Excess Profits Tax Act, insofar as it is relevant provides:

"(1) Where the Excess Profits Tax Officer is of opinion that the main purpose for which any transaction x x x was x x effected x x was the avoidance or reduction of liability to excess profits tax, he may, x x x make such adjustments as respects liability to excess profits tax as he considers appropriate so as to counteract the avoidance or reduction of liability to excess profits tax which would otherwise be effected by the transaction x x x".

10. Section 15, insofar as it is relevant provides:

"If in consequence of definite information which has come into his possession, the Excess Profits Tax Officer discovers that profits of any chargeable accounting period chargeable to excess profits tax have escaped assessment, or have been under-assessed, or have been the subject of excessive relief, he may at any time serve on the person liable to such tax a notice containing all or any of the requirements which may be included in a notice under Section 13, and may proceed to assess or re-assess the amount of such profits liable to excess profits tax x x x".

The High Court in the judgment under appeal held that proceeding under Section 10-A may be commenced only if there be a valid proceeding under the Excess Profits Tax Act which was pending for assessment or re-assessment of excess profits which had escaped assessment and not otherwise. In our opinion the High Court was right in so holding. Section 10-A does not contemplate an independent proceeding. Section 10-A merely confers power upon the Excess Profits Tax Officer to make adjustments with respect to liability to excess profits tax: it confers power which the Excess Profits Tax Officer may exercise in the course of the original assessment or in the course of re-assessment.

11. It is necessary therefore to determine whether an order was made under Section 10-A in a pending proceeding for assessment of Excess Profits Tax. But the question whether there was a pending proceeding under Section 15 in the course of which an order under Section 10-A could be made cannot be ascertained on the materials available before us. The High Court has decided that the proceeding under Section 15 was not valid, because there was no definite information with the Excess Profits Tax Officer and on that account proceeding under Section 10-A was not valid. It has been assumed that there was a pending proceeding under Section 15 in the course of which an order under Section 10-A was made. Expression of that opinion of the High Court is challenged. We are of the view that in the interests of justice, it is necessary that a supplementary statement of the case should be called for on the question whether there was any proceeding pending under Section 15. On the question whether the proceeding under Section 15 if pending was valid, we express no opinion at this stage.

12. We direct the Tribunal to submit a supplementary statement of the case on the question whether the proceeding under Section 10-A was started in the course of assessment or re-assessment proceeding commenced under Section 15. The supplementary statement to be submitted to this Court within three months from the date on which the papers reach the Tribunal. At this stage we express no opinion on the question whether the High Court was right in holding that the proceeding under Section 15 was not competent.

Order accordingly.

M/s. Chhugamal Rajpal, Appellant
v. S. P. Chaliha and others, Respondents.

21-1-1971.

Income Tax Act (1961), Section 151
(2) — Notice issued under Section 148 read with Section 151 (2) by I. T. O. on feeling that certain transactions by assessee with creditors were bogus and that there was case for investigating truth of alleged transactions is invalid as not complying with requirements of Section 151 (2). (Para 8)

The I. T. O. had no material before him which could satisfy the requirements of either Clause (a) or Clause (b) of Section 147. Therefore, he could not have issued a notice under Section 148. The important safeguards provided in Sections 147 and 151 are not to be lightly treated by the Income Tax Officer as well as by the Commissioner. (Para 8)

chanda, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. R. N.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

HEGDE, J. (on behalf of himself, Shah, C. J. and Grover, J.): — This is an assessee's appeal by special leave against the judgment of the High Court of Patna dismissing in limine its writ petition under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution of India.

2. The assessee is having construction contracts under the Railways as well as the Government. It is a partnership firm. For the assessment year 1960-61, relevant to the accounting year 1959-60, after the assessee submitted its income-tax return, it was asked by the Income-tax Officer during the income-tax assessment proceedings to produce before him its books of account and the other relevant papers. The assessee also produced before him a statement showing various creditors from whom it had borrowed on Hundis during the accounting year in question. In that statement it gave the full names and addresses of the alleged creditors.

After enquiry, the assessee's total income was assessed at Rs. 69,886/-. On June 3, 1966, the 1st respondent (Income-tax Officer, Ward 'A', Muzaffar-pur) issued to the assessee a notice under Section 148 of the Indian Income-tax Act, 1961. The material portion of that notice reads as follows:

"Notice under Section 148 of the Income-tax Act, 1961.

Income-Tax Officer, Muzaffarpur
Dated, the 3-6-1966.

To

M/s. Chugamal Rajpal, Muzaffarpur.

Whereas (I) have reason to believe that your income chargeable as income of 1960-1961 in respect of which you are assessable to tax for the assessment year 19 19 has escaped assessment within the meaning of Section 147 of the Income Tax Act, 1961.

I therefore propose to re-assess the income for the said assessment year and I hereby require you to deliver to me within 30 days from the date of service of this notice a return in the prescribed form of your income assessable relevant to

The income of the assessment year 1960-61 in respect of which you are assessable for the said assessment year.

2. The notice is being issued after obtaining the necessary satisfaction of the Commissioner of Income-Tax, Bihar and Orissa, Patna.

Sd/- S. P. Chaliha
Income-Tax Officer,
Ward A, Muzaffarpur."

3. The assessee challenged the validity of that notice as well as the proceedings taken on the strength of that notice on various grounds. As we are accepting the contention of the assessee that the impugned notice is invalid inasmuch as it did not comply with the requirements of Section 151
(2) of the Act, we have not thought it necessary to examine the other contentions advanced on behalf of the assessee. In this case the notice was issued after four years but before eight years of the date of the original assessment.

4. Section 151 (2) of the Act reads:

"No notice shall be issued under Section 14 after the expiry of four years from the end of the relevant assessment year, unless the Commissioner is satisfied on the reasons recorded by the Income-tax Officer that it is a fit case for the issue of such notice."

5. Section 148 prescribes:

"(1). Before making the assessment, re-assessment or re-computation under Section 147, the Income-tax Officer shall serve on the assessee a notice containing all or any of the requirements which may be included in a notice under sub-section (2) of Section 139; and the provisions of this Act shall, so far as may be, apply accordingly as if the notice were a notice issued under that sub-section.

(2) The Income-tax Officer shall, before issuing any notice under this section, record his reasons for doing so."

6. Section 147 deals with income escaping assessment. At this stage we need not refer to that section. We shall refer to that provision at a later stage. Section 139 (2) says:

"In the case of any person who, in the Income-tax Officer's opinion, is assessable under this Act, whether on his own total income or on the total income of any other person during the previous year, the Income-tax Officer may, before the end of the relevant assessment year, serve a notice upon him requiring him to furnish, within thirty days from the date of service of the notice, a return of his income or the income of such other person during the previous year, in the prescribed form and verified in the prescribed manner and setting forth such other particulars as may be prescribed."
(Contd. in Col. 2.)

(proviso is not necessary for our present purpose)

7. When this appeal came up for hearing on the last occasion, as we found the affidavit filed by the Income tax Officer to be vague and indefinite, we directed the learned Counsel for the Department to produce before us the records of the Income-tax Officer to show that the Income-tax Officer had complied with the requirements of S. 148 and Section 151 (2) of the Act. When the appeal was taken up for hearing on the 18th January, 1971, only the report submitted by the Income-tax Officer to the Commissioner and the order of the Commissioner was produced. The order sheet recording the reasons of the Income-tax Officer as required by Section 148 (2) was not produced. Hereinbelow we have set out the report of the Income-tax Officer as well as the order of the Commissioner:

9. Whether the Board is satisfied that it is a fit case for the issue of notice under S. 148.

Secretary, Board of Revenue.

During the year the assessee has shown to have taken loans from various parties of Calcutta. From D. I.'s Inv. No. A/P/Misc. (5) D. I./63-64/5623, dated 13-8-65, forwarded to this office under C. I. T. Bihar and Orissa, Patna's letter No. Inv. (Inv.) 15/65-66/1953-2017 dated Patna 24-9-65, it appears that these persons are name-lenders and the transactions are bogus. Hence proper investigation regarding these loans is necessary. The name of some of the persons from whom money is alleged to have taken on loan on Hundis are:

1. Seth Bhagwan Singh Sricharan.
 2. Lakha Singh Lal Singh
 3. Radhakissan Shyam Sunder.
- The amount of escapement involved amounts to Rs. 1,00,000/-.

Sd/- S. P. Chaliha, 30-4-66.

Income-tax Officer,
A-Ward, Mazaffarpur".

8. In his report the Income-tax Officer does not set out any reason for coming to the conclusion that this is a fit case to issue notice under Section 148. The material that he had before him for issuing notice under Section 148 is not mentioned in the report. In his report he vaguely refers to certain communications received by him from the C. I. T., Bihar and Orissa. He does not mention the facts contained in those communications. All that he says is that from those communications "it appears that these persons (alleged creditors) are name lenders and the transactions are bogus". He has not even come to a prima facie conclusion that the transactions to which he referred are not genuine transactions. He appears to have had only a vague feeling that they may be bogus transactions. Such a conclusion does not fulfil the requirements of Section 151 (2). What that provision requires is that he must give reasons for issuing a notice under Section 148. In other words he must have some prima facie grounds before him for taking action under Section 148. Further his report mentions:

"Hence proper investigation regarding these loans is necessary". In other words his conclusion is that there is a case for investigating as to the truth of the alleged transactions. That is not the same thing as saying that there are reasons to issue notice under Sec. 148. Before issuing a notice under S. 148, the Income-tax Officer must have either reasons to believe that by reason of the omission or failure on the part of the assessee to make a return under Section 139 for any assessment year to the Income-tax Officer or to disclose fully and truly all material facts necessary for his assessment for that year, income chargeable to tax has escaped assessment for that year or alternatively notwithstanding that there has been no omission or failure as mentioned above on the part of the assessee, the Income-tax Officer has in consequence of information in his possession reason to believe that income chargeable to tax has escaped assessment for any assessment year. Unless the requirements of Clauses (a) or (b) of Section 147 are satisfied, the Income Tax Officer has no jurisdiction to issue a notice under Section 148. From the report submitted by the Income-tax Officer to the Commissioner, it is clear that he could not have had reasons to believe that by reason of the assessee's omission to disclose fully and truly all material facts necessary for his assessment for the accounting year in question, income chargeable to tax has escaped assessment for that year; nor could it be said that he as a consequence of information in his possession, had reasons to believe that the income chargeable to tax has escaped assessment for that year. We are not satisfied that the Income-tax Officer had any material before him which could satisfy the requirements of either Clause (a) or Clause (b) of Section 147. Therefore he could not have issued a notice under Section 148. Further the report submitted by him under Section 151 (2) does not mention any reason for coming to the conclusion that it is a fit case for the issue of a notice under Section 148. We are also of the opinion that the Commissioner has mechanically accorded permission. He did not himself record that he was satisfied that this was a fit case for the issue of a notice under Section 148. To Question No. 8 in the report which reads "Whether the Commissioner is satisfied that it is a fit case for the issue of notice under Section 148", he just noted the word "yes" and affixed his signatures thereunder. We are of the opinion that if only he had read the report carefully, he could never have come to the conclusion on the material before him that this is a fit case to issue notice under Section 148. The important safeguards provided in Sections 147 and 151 were lightly treated by the Income-tax Officer as well as by the Commissioner. Both of them appear to have taken the duty imposed on them under these provisions as of little importance. They have substituted the form for the substance.

9. In the result this appeal is allowed, the order of the High Court is set aside and the impugned notice quashed. The Respondent No. 2 shall pay the costs of the appellant both in this Court and in the High Court.

Appeal allowed.

J. C. SHAH, C. J., G. K. MITTER,

Trilochan Mishra etc., Appellants
v. State of Orissa and others, Respondents.

Writ Petns. Nos. 159 to 163 of 1969, D/- 21-1-1971.

Orissa Kendu Leaves (Control of Trade) Act (1961), Sections 3 (2) (a), 8 (1) (as amended in 1969) and Rule 5-B (6), (7), (8), (9) and (16), Rule 6 (3) and Rule 7 (1) framed under the Act are not violative of Articles 14, 15, 19 (1) of the Constitution.

There can be no legitimate grievance against the amendment of the Act and promulgation of new rules. They are all necessary to enable the Government to control the business in Kendu leaves effectively. Provisions in form G for the appointment of agents and form I for the appointment of additional agents did not work against the interest of the Government working a monopoly business. The provision for appointment of additional agents and additional purchasers are not per se bad. The exigency of business may require such appointments. The fact that some of the agents were nominees or relations of the purchasers does not affect the scheme of State monopoly. Appointment of State Forest Corporation as additional agent can in no way detract from Government monopoly. (Paras 12, 14)

Mukherjee, Advocate, for Respondent No. 23 (In all the petitions); Mr. M. Veerappa, Advocate, for Respondent No. 110 (In W. P. No. 159 of 1969).

MITTER, J.: — The petitioners in all these petitions under Article 32 of the Constitution pray for a declaration that Sections 3 (2) (a), 8 (1) and Rule 5-B (6), (7), (8), (9) and (16) and Rule 6 (3) and Rule 7 (1) of the Orissa Kendu Leaves (Control of Trade) Act, 1961 as amended and the rules framed thereunder are violative of the fundamental rights of the petitioners guaranteed under Articles 14, 15 and 19 (1) of the Constitution, for a declaration that the "revised policy" as enjoined by the said Orissa Kendu Leaves (Control of Trade) Amendment Act, 1969 and rules framed is arbitrary, discriminatory and mala fide and for a writ or direction in the nature of a mandamus quashing the appointment of respondents 2 to 108 as purchasers.

2. To appreciate the grievances of the petitioners it is necessary to note in brief how the trade in Kendu leaves has been taken over by the State of Orissa by successive legislation and two decisions of this Court bearing thereupon. Kendu leaves appear to have formed a lucrative source of revenue for the State of Orissa for many years past. After the merger of the Indian States with the Province of Orissa the Government of Orissa passed an order in exercise of the powers under Section 3 (1) of the Orissa Essential Articles Control and Requisitioning (Temporary Powers) Act, 1947 by which the Kendu leaves growing areas in the State were divided into units and licences were issued to persons entitled to trade in such leaves. The District Magistrate fixed the minimum rates from time to time and the Order provided that the licensees were bound to purchase Kendu leaves from the pluckers or owners of private trees and forests at rates not below the minimum prescribed. The licensees were however not fettered in the matter of the sales of the leaves after purchase. This was followed by the Orissa Kendu Leaves Control Order, 1960 which effected some changes in the scheme previously adopted. In 1961 Orissa Kendu Leaves (Control of Trade) Act was passed with the object of creating a State monopoly in the trade of these leaves. Section 3 (1) of that Act provided that no person other than the Government, an officer of Government authorised in that behalf or an agent in respect of the unit in which the leaves are grown shall purchase or transport Kendu leaves. Sub-section (2) provided for transport of leaves from one place to another within the unit wherein such leaves have grown to any other place in that unit. By sub-section (3) any person desiring to sell Kendu leaves was at liberty to sell them to the aforesaid Government officer or agent at any depot situated within the said unit. Under Section 4 the Government was to fix the price at which the leaves were to be purchased by them or by any officer or agent from the growers after consultation with the Advisory Committee. Section 5 enabled the Government to divide each district into such number of units as they thought fit. Under Section 7 the Government or their authorised officer or agent were bound to purchase at the price fixed under Section 4 the leaves which were offered to them for sale at the depots. Under Section 8 (1) Government was authorised to appoint agents on their behalf in respect of different units for the purpose of purchase of and trade in Kendu leaves in respect of different units and any such agent might be appointed in respect of more than one unit. Under Section 10 Kendu leaves purchased by Government or their officers or agents under the Act were to be sold or otherwise disposed of in such manner as the Government might direct.

3. The whole Act and the notifications thereunder were challenged in this Court, particularly Sections 3 and 4, on the ground that they were in conflict with Articles 19 (1) (f) and (g) and 19 (6) of the Constitution in Akadasi Padhan v. State of Orissa, (1963) Suppl 2 SCR 691 = (AIR 1963 SC 1047). It was held therein by this Court that the Act was a valid piece of legislation although it created a State monopoly. The validity of Section 3 was upheld as the persons specified in Cls. (b) and (c) were intended to work as agents of the Government and all their actions and dealings in pursuance of the provisions of the Act were to be actions and dealings on behalf of the Government and for the benefit of the Government. The validity of Section 4 was also upheld but Rule 7 (5) promulgated under the Act was held to be bad because it left it to the sweet will and pleasure of the officer concerned to fix any terms and conditions regarding agents on an ad hoc basis on the ground that the agency permitted under Article 19 (6) (ii) of the Constitution had to be an agency in the strict and narrow sense of the term and could only include agents who could be said to carry on the monopoly at every stage on behalf of the State for its benefit and not for their own benefit at all.

4. In effect this Court upheld the creation of State monopoly and the employment of agents for carrying on the monopoly business by the State but R. 7 (5) was held to be invalid for the reasons indicated. According to the petitioner after the judgment of this Court the form of the agreement for agents known as the 'G' form was introduced under the rules and two sets of persons were employed to carry on the business of the State monopoly, one set known as the 'agents' and the other "purchasers". The agents were to purchase and collect Kendu leaves on behalf of the Government and the purchasers were to purchase from the Government, the rates of purchase and the price of sale being fixed by the authorities. On this basis auctions of Kendu leaves were held for the years 1966 and 1967.

5. It appears that early in 1968 letters were addressed to certain traders by the authorities intimating them that it had been decided by the Government of Orissa to renew leases of Kendu leaves held by them for the year 1968 if they accepted the terms set out therein. Under this scheme the Government offered to those licensees who in their view had worked satisfactorily in the previous year and had paid the amounts due from them regularly to continue their licences with the added provision that the agents with whom they had been working in 1967 would also work during 1968. A petition was moved before the Orissa High Court challenging this action of the Government in January 1968. Government withdrew the offers to renew the previous licences and informed the licensees that it had been decided to invite offers for advance purchase from persons who had purchased Kendu leaves from individual units during the year 1967 and had not committed default in payment of the dues. Other writ petitions were filed challenging the legality of the new method adopted by the State Government of offering to enter into agreements for advance purchase of Kendu leaves by private offers in preference to open competition. It was urged on behalf of the petitioners that by entering into agreements of advance purchase contracts for Kendu leaves by private negotiation the State Government sought to support their party interests in preference to public benefit envisaged by a proper scheme of State monopoly. In appeal from the orders of the High Court Rasbihari Panda v. State of Orissa, AIR 1969 SC 1081 this Court held that the State monopoly could only be administered for the benefit of the general public and any arrangement used as a cloak for conferring private benefit upon a limited class of persons by carrying on business on their own behalf was invalid. The Court also observed:

"...in so far as the right to make tenders for the purchase of Kendu leaves was restricted to those persons who had obtained contracts in the previous year the scheme was open to the same objection. The right to make offers being open to a limited class of persons it effectively shut out all other persons carrying on trade in Kendu leaves and also new entrants into that business. It was ex facie discriminatory, and imposed unreasonable restrictions upon the right of persons other than existing contractors to carry on business."

The Court found that no explanation had been attempted on behalf of the State as to why an offer made by a well-known manufacturer of bidis interested in the trade to purchase the entire crop of Kendu leaves for the year 1968 for three crores of rupees was turned down. The plea put forward on behalf of the Government that its action was bona fide was held not to be an effective answer to a claim made by a citizen that his fundamental rights were infringed, by the action of the Government. It however appeared to this Court that during the pendency of the proceedings the entire year for which the contracts were given had expired and the persons to whom the contracts were given were not before the Court. In these circumstances counsel for the appellants agreed that "it would be sufficient if it was directed that the tenders for purchase of Kendu leaves be invited by the Government in the next season from all persons interested in that trade."

Acting upon this suggestion the Court directed that the State Government would act in the interest of the general public and not of any class of traders so that in the next season the State might get the entire benefit of the monopoly in the trade in Kendu leaves and no disproportionate share thereof might be diverted to any private agency.

6. The petitioners' case in this series of petitions is as follows. They claim to be growers of Kendu leaves (which form the wrapper of tobacco smoked as bidi) in certain districts of the State of Orissa. They also claim to be traders and businessmen by vocation dealing primarily in such leaves. The petitioner in Petition No. 159 of 1969 claims to be a purchaser since 1965 for unit No. 60 in Bolangir Division and claims to have been working as such till the year 1968. He participated in the tender for appointment of purchasers for 1969 and had furnished solvency certificate worth Rs. 75,000/-, had deposited earnest money and complied with all the terms and conditions required under the provisions of the Act and the rules for making a valid tender. His complaint is that although his tender was the highest i.e. Rs. 213-50 per quintal, it was settled in favour of one A. K. Guha, a respondent, at the rate of Rs. 200/- only per quintal, a rate below that offered by the petitioner. His main grievance is that he was refused the appointment as purchaser as he was neither willing nor able to pay contribution at Rs. 10/- per bag which amounted approximately to Rupees 15,000/- for his area to the political fund of the Swatantra Party which happened to be at the relevant time the major partner in the Coalition Cabinet of Orissa. His case is that a suggestion was made to him for such contribution by a member of the legislative assembly of the Swatantra Party, Radha Mohan Mishra and also by Murari Prasad Mishra, Minister for Forest belonging to the same party and he was given to understand that his tender would not be considered if he was not prepared to make the payment. According to the petitioner the Government of Orissa tried to wriggle out of the findings of this Court in Rasbihari Panda's case, AIR 1969 SC 1081 (supra) by subterfuges in order to implement their policy of conferring the benefit of the trade on a chosen few for political and selfish financial ends of the party in power. It was alleged that as a preliminary to this they amended the Act and the rules framed thereunder. The main attack in the petition is directed against the addition of a provision to S. 3 (2) by which a registered grower might be permitted to transport his leaves from any place within the unit wherein such leaves were grown to any other place outside the unit for the purpose of sale to the Government or any agent in respect of the unit authorised to purchase the same from him. Complaint was also made about the amendment of S. 8 (1) relating to the appointment of agents by the addition of the proviso:

"that the Government may for the purpose of purchase of leaves from the registered growers, appoint an additional agent in respect of one or more units."

Challenge was also made to several clauses in rule 5-B which provide for disposal of Kendu leaves. Those Clauses are (6), (7), (8), (9) and (16) which run thus:

"(6) At the time of opening of the tenders, the tenderer shall produce a certificate of solvency for at least one-fourth of the total annual purchase price according to the rate quoted by him, granted by a Revenue Officer not below the rank of a Subdivisional Officer if the tenderer has landed property at a place, wherein the Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act, 1962, is in force or a Bank guarantee for an equal amount.

(7) Government may accept or reject all or any of the tenders so received for any unit without assigning any reason therefor. The earnest money deposit shall, in case of an unsuccessful tenderer, be refunded to him and in case of a successful tenderer, it shall, subject to the provisions of sub-rule (11), be adjusted towards payment of security deposit required by sub-rule (12):

Provided that in rejecting a tender Government shall take into consideration the following among other grounds:—

- (1) Inadequacy of price offered
- (2) Speculative offers
- (3) Past conduct of parties in the trade
- (4) Transport facilities at the command of the offerer
- (5) Solvency of the offerer
- (6) Experience in the trade.

(8) If the tenders received for a unit are not considered acceptable, the Government may select as purchaser or purchasers for such unit or units any person or party of persons or parties on such terms and conditions as may be mutually agreed and such selection need not be limited to persons who have submitted tenders for such unit or units. All the rules applicable to a successful tenderer shall apply mutatis mutandis to persons or parties selected as purchasers under this sub-rule.

(9) Notwithstanding anything contained in the foregoing provisions Government may sell or otherwise dispose of Kendu leaves collected by purchase or otherwise by Government or by their officers or agents in such manner as Government may deem proper.

(16) Notwithstanding anything contained in the foregoing provisions, the purchaser who is selected to purchase the Kendu leaves procured through the additional agent of any unit by the Government, shall on selection as such execute an agreement in form J."

Besides the above the petitioner also challenged the validity of sub-r. (3) of Rule 6 and the new R. 7 substituting the old rule. Rule 6 (3) enabled a registered grower who wished to transport his leaves outside the unit in which he was registered for sale to an additional agent, if any, of the said unit appointed under the proviso to S. 8 (1) on an application for a transport permit in Form D to be granted by the Divisional Forest Officer.

7. The above rule is really a complement to the proviso to S. 8 (1) in order to allow additional agents to function. Rule 7 in effect provided as follows. Under cl. (1) Government was empowered to appoint agents for a unit or units under sub-s. (1) of section 8 and to publish a notice in the official Gazette and in such other manner as was thought fit, giving terms and conditions of agency and inviting any applications for such agency, provided that no application need be invited for appointment of the additional agent referred to under the provisions of sub-s. (1) of S. 8 and such additional agent might be appointed directly by Government subject to such terms and conditions as might be decided upon, the additional agent having to execute an agreement in Form I. By cl. (2) the application for agency was to be in form E and was to be submitted to such authority by such date and in such manner as may be specified in the notice. Under cl. (3) every application was to be accompanied by a treasury challan showing a cash deposit of Rs. 500/- in the name of the Divisional Forest Officer as advance security deposit. The applicant was also to furnish a certificate of solvency for a sum calculated at the rate of Rs. 10/- per bag for the stipulated number of bags for the respective unit, granted by a Revenue Officer not below the rank of a Subdivisional Officer if the agent had landed property at a place wherein the Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act, 1962 was in force, or a bank guarantee for an equivalent amount. Cl. (4) enabled the Government to accept or reject any application without assigning any reason therefor. Under cl. (5) Government was empowered in case it was not possible to select suitable agents for the purpose out of those who had applied for appointment as agents, to call for fresh applications, or if the time at their disposal was not sufficient, to appoint a person or party as agent who in the opinion of the Government was suitable for the work. Under cl. (6) an agent or party appointed in terms of cl. (5) had to execute an agreement in Form G within 15 days of the order of appointment failing which the appointment was liable to be cancelled. Under cl. (8) the agent was to maintain registers and accounts as might from time to time be directed by the Government which were to be submitted when called for. Under cl. (9) the agent was to furnish a list of persons employed by him within the unit and any such person so appointed if objected to was to be forthwith removed from employment by the agent. Under cl. (10) Government was at liberty to grant to the agent renewal of his agency for such period not exceeding one year at a time if it was found during the period of his agency that he had duly observed and performed the terms and conditions to the satisfaction of the Government.

8. The petitioner alleged that—

(a) As a result of the judgment in Akadasi Padhan's case, (1963) Suppl. 2 SCR 691 = (AIR 1963 SC 1047) (supra) the profit which could go to the agents was greatly reduced and they could have little interest in the scheme. The purchasers therefore set up their own men as agents and the pretended dichotomy between agents and purchasers was a mere eye-wash. The agents were not really agents of the Government. A table shown as annexure B to the petition purported to show how the agents were related to the purchasers.

(b) By virtue of the various amendments to the Act and Rules and by the conduct of the Government no outsider or no one other than the existing purchasers could and did submit tenders.

(c) The provisions relating to the solvency certificate and the provision for appointment of additional agents and additional purchasers at the discretion of the Government and the power to authorise registered growers to transport their leaves outside the unit in which they were grown were all aimed at confining the business in the hands of a chosen few completely ousting others.

(d) No principle was followed in accepting tenders. The claims of highest bidders were ignored to accommodate favourites of authorities. Appointments were in some cases made of persons whose tenders were lower than the highest ones offered. In some cases areas were settled with persons who had never submitted any tender for the area and in others settlement was made with a non-tenderer at a lower price.

9. Before us, learned counsel for the petitioners limited himself to the following objections:

1. Agents could not be allowed to be nominees of purchasers. They ought to be independent contractors.

2. The provision for appointment of additional agents under the proviso to Section 8 and Rule 7 (1) were unreasonable and arbitrary.

3. The appointment of purchasers who were not the highest tenderers was also arbitrary and mala fide. Rule 5-B (7) which allowed the Government to accept or reject all or any of the tenders without assigning any reason therefor was gravely objectionable in that it permitted the Government to make discrimination in favour of men of their choice and allowed the extraction of money for party funds. The demand for production from tenderers of a certificate of solvency for at least 1/4th of the total annual purchase price from a sub-divisional Officer if the tenderer had landed property in Orissa or a bank guarantee in the case of others was also discriminatory. It was said that the power to appoint additional agents and additional purchasers after the auction had been held was for the purpose of Government benefiting anyone it liked to the detriment of the interest of the general public and the interest of the State.

10. Our attention was drawn to the special forms which had been incorporated in the rules and the differences between them, as for instance, forms G and H which applied in the case of an agent and purchaser and forms I and J which applied to the cases of additional agents and additional purchasers.

11. It was submitted that the scheme as envisaged after the amendment of the Act in 1969 was not really in aid of establishing a State monopoly and it left loopholes for patronage by the party in power in Government of their own favourites by the extraction of money for party funds and otherwise. Counsel further submitted that agents if they were nominees or relations of purchasers, were really not bona fide agents of the Government. He drew our attention to the activities of the agent before the leaves were sold to show that a good deal of money had to be invested and quite a number of operations performed before the leaves could be put up for auction and it was submitted that if they were the nominees of the purchasers they really acted in the latter's interest and not that of the Government. Under the terms of the agreement in Form G the agents had to open depots and storage godowns at such centres within the unit as directed by the Subdivisional Officer and he could transport his leaves from the collection depot to the storage godowns. They were also prevented except with the permission of the Divisional Forest Officer from moving the Kendu leaves to places outside the unit.

12. We are not satisfied that there can be any legitimate grievance against the amendment of the Act and the promulgation of new rules set forth above. They all appear to be necessary to enable the Government to control the business in Kendu leaves effectively. Nothing was shown to us as to how any of these provisions in form G for the appointment of agents and form I for the appointment of additional agents worked against the interest of the Government working a monopoly business. The provision for appointment of additional agents and additional purchasers are not per se bad. The exigency of business may require such appointments. Further we find ourselves unable to appreciate the points sought to be made on the basis that some of the agents were nominees or relations of the purchasers. We do not see how this can affect the scheme of State monopoly. An agent had to purchase Kendu leaves from growers at prices fixed by the Government under Section 4 (1) and he had to deliver processed Kendu leaves to such persons as were to be directed by the Forest Officers. He was to be entitled to various charges including—

(1) a fixed sum per bag of processed leaves towards costs incurred for collecting the leaves, storage, transport, packing and other charges, and

(2) remuneration at the rate fixed for each bag of processed leaves which he secured by selection or purchase.

He had also to pay collection charges to persons for collecting the leaves from Government forests and lands as may be specified in writing by the Government. It may be that on the actual rates fixed by Government the agents could not secure much profit. It is also possible that purchasers would rather deal with agents who carried out the processing and storing business in a manner which was conducive to production of good finished products than with strangers whose business methods were not known to them. But by itself such a course of dealing could not affect the interest of a Government running the monopoly business.

13. In the counter affidavits filed herein there is a denial by the Minister concerned and by Radha Mohan Mishra that any suggestion was ever made to any of the petitioners that they would have to pay Rs. 10/- for each bag if they wanted their tenders accepted. On the face of this we are not in a position to hold that the grievance of the petitioners as regards choice of persons as purchasers who were willing to contribute to party funds has been proved.

14. With regard to the appointment of additional agents, the counter affidavits show that only the State Forest Corporation had been appointed such an agent. It goes without saying that the appointment of such a corporation as an additional agent can in no way detract from Government monopoly. The counter affidavits also show that no additional purchasers had been appointed.

15. With regard to the grievance that in some cases the bids of persons making the highest tenders were not accepted, the facts are that persons who had made lower bids were asked to raise their bids to the highest offered before the same were accepted. Thus there was no loss to Government and merely because the Government preferred one tenderer to another no complaint can be entertained. Government certainly has a right to enter into a contract with a person well known to it and specially one who has faithfully performed his contracts in the past in preference to an undesirable or unsuitable or untried person. Moreover, Government is not bound to accept the highest tender but may accept a lower one in case it thinks that the person offering the lower tender is on an overall consideration to be preferred to the higher tenderer.

16. We may in this connection refer to the manner in which the contracts current at the time of the filing of the petition had been settled. The counter affidavit on behalf of the State of Orissa shows that forest and other lands, producing Kendu leaves were divided into 180 units for the years 1969, 1970 and 1971. Three units out of these were reserved for the Orissa Forest Corporation; the remaining 177 units for the public tender. Out of these 167 units were settled at the highest prices offered. 139 out of 167 were settled in favour of persons who actually made the highest tenders. 29 units were settled at the highest prices offered but in favour of other tenderers on considerations such as past experience, clean past records, etc. One unit was settled by negotiation at a price higher than the highest tender received. In the case of 5 units persons who had offered inflated and speculative prices did not turn up and the units were settled with the next best tenderers. In the case of one unit on the highest tenderer withdrawing his tender it was settled in favour of another tenderer who was to pay the next highest price. In the case of another unit the highest tenderer who had been a defaulter in the previous year had his tender rejected and the unit was settled in favour of the tenderer who had offered the next highest price. In the case of one unit on the highest tenderer failing to furnish a bank guarantee it was settled in favour of the next highest tenderer. In the case of still another unit the claims of the sole tenderer who had filed a forged bank guarantee was not considered and the unit was settled by negotiation at the highest available price. Lastly in the case of six units no tenders had been received and these were settled by negotiation at the best available prices. The five writ petitions concerned only seven units in respect of which tenders of the petitioners had not been accepted.

17. In our view, the counter affidavit showing the manner in which the units were disposed of completely demolishes suggestions of fraudulent preference of one tenderer to another. As the petitioners have not been able to satisfy us that the amendments effected in 1969 either in the Act or in the rules are against the exercise of a monopoly in the business of Kendu leaves by the Government of Orissa and as they have further failed to make out any case of arbitrary or mala fide action on the part of the State authorities, the petitions must be dismissed with costs.

Petitions dismissed.

Hakam Singh, Appellant v. M/s. Gammon (India) Ltd., Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 646 of 1967, D/-8-1-1971.

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Section 20 — Parties cannot by agreement confer jurisdiction on Court not possessed by it under the Code — But agreement that one of the Courts having such jurisdiction alone shall try dispute is not contrary to public policy and does not contravene Section 28, Contract Act. (X Ref: Contract Act, Section 28). (Para 3)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), Section 20, Expl. II — Word "Corporation" in Expl. II includes not only statutory Corporation but also company registered under Companies Act. (Para 5)

M/s. J. P. Goyal and G. S. Chatterjee, Advocates, for Appellant; Mr. V. S. Desai, Sr. Advocate, (Mr.

BO/BO/A115/71/GNB/C

B. R. Agarwala, Advocate of M/s. Gagrati and Co., with him), for Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, C. J.: — On October 5, 1960 the appellant agreed to do certain construction work for the respondent on the terms and conditions of a "written tender". Clauses 12 & 13 of the tender were:

"12. In the event of any dispute arising out of this sub-contract, the parties hereto agree that the matter shall be referred to arbitration by two Arbitrators under the Arbitration Act of 1940 and such amendments thereto as may be enacted thereafter.

13. Notwithstanding the place where the work under this contract is to be executed, it is mutually understood and agreed by and between the parties hereto that this contract shall be deemed to have been entered into by the parties concerned in the City of Bombay and the Court of law in the City of Bombay alone shall have jurisdiction to adjudicate thereon."

Disputes arose between the parties and the appellant submitted a petition to the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Varanasi for an order under Section 20 of the Indian Arbitration Act 10 of 1940 that the agreement be filed and an order of reference be made to an Arbitrator or Arbitrators appointed by the Court to settle the dispute between the parties in respect of the construction works done by him. The respondent contended that the Civil Courts in Bombay alone had because of the terms contained in Clause 13 jurisdiction to entertain the petition. The Trial Judge rejected that contention observing that the condition in Clause 13 that "the contract shall be deemed to have been entered into by the parties concerned in the City of Bombay has no meaning unless the contract is actually entered into in the city of Bombay", and that there was no evidence to establish that it was entered into in the city of Bombay. The Trial Judge concluded that the entire cause of action had arisen at Varanasi and the parties could not by agreement confer jurisdiction on the Courts at Bombay, which they did not otherwise possess.

2. The High Court of Allahabad in exercise of its revisional jurisdiction set aside the order passed by the Subordinate Judge and declared that the Courts in Bombay had jurisdiction under the general law to entertain the petition, and by virtue of the covenant in the agreement the second branch of Clause 13 was applicable and binding between the parties and since the parties had agreed that the Courts in Bombay alone had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the contract, the petition to file the arbitration agreement could not be entertained by the Courts at Varanasi. Against the order of the High Court directing that the petition be returned for presentation to the proper Court, the appellant has appealed to this Court with special leave.

3. Section 41 of the Arbitration Act, 1940 provides in so far as it is relevant:

"Subject to the provisions of this Act and of Rules made thereunder:

(a) the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, shall apply to all proceedings before the court, and to all appeals under this Act".

The Code of Civil Procedure in its entirety applies to proceedings under the Arbitration Act. The jurisdiction of the Courts under the Arbitration Act to entertain a proceeding for filing an award is accordingly governed by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. By Cl. 13 of the agreement it was expressly stipulated between the parties that the contract shall be deemed to have been entered into by the parties concerned in the City of Bombay. In any event the respondents have their principal office in Bombay and they were liable in respect of a cause of action arising under the terms of the tender to be sued in the Courts at Bombay. It is not open to the parties by agreement to confer by their agreement jurisdiction on a Court which it does not possess under the Code. But where two courts or more have under the Code of Civil Procedure jurisdiction to try a suit or proceeding an agreement between the parties that the dispute between them shall be tried in one of such Courts is not contrary to public policy. Such an agreement does not contravene S. 28 of the Contract Act.

4. Counsel for the appellant contended that merely because the respondent carried on business in Bombay the Courts at Bombay were not invested with jurisdiction to entertain any suit or a petition for filing an arbitration agreement. Section 20 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"Subject to the limitations aforesaid, every suit shall be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction—

(a) the defendant, or each of the defendants where there are more than one, at the time of the commencement of the suit, actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain; or

(b) x x x x

(c) the cause of action, wholly or in part, arises.

* * *

"Explanation II. — A corporation shall be deemed to carry on business at its sole or principal office in India, or, in respect of any cause of action arising at any place where it has also a subordinate office, at such place."

Plainly by the terms of S. 20 (a) read with Explanation II, the respondent Company was liable to be sued at Bombay where it had its principal place of business.

5. The argument of counsel for the appellant that the expression "corporation" in Explanation II includes only a statutory corporation and not a company registered under the Indian Companies Act is, in our judgment, without substance. The Code of Civil Procedure uses the expression "corporation" as meaning a legal person and includes a company registered under the Indian Companies Act. Order 29 of the Code of Civil Procedure deals with suits by or against a corporation and there is nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure that a corporation referred to under S. 20 means only a statutory corporation and not a company registered under the Indian Companies Act.

6. Since an application for filing an award in respect of a dispute arising out of the terms of the agreement could be filed in the Courts in the City of Bombay, both because of the terms of Cl. 13 of the agreement and because the respondents had their Head Office where they carry on business at Bombay, the agreement between the parties that the Courts in Bombay alone shall have jurisdiction to try the proceeding relating to arbitration was binding between them.

7. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

AO/BO/A109/71/SSG/C

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, C. J.— Jage Ram and two others—hereinafter collectively called the defendants—were lessees of certain property belonging to Mahabir Prasad, his mother Gunwanti Devi and his wife Saroj Devi (collectively referred to hereafter as 'the plaintiffs'). The plaintiffs commenced an action in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Delhi, for a decree for Rs. 61,750 being the amount of rent due by 'the defendants'. The Subordinate Judge, Delhi decreed the suit. Execution of the decree was resisted by the defendants on the plea inter alia, that the decree was inexecutable because of the provisions of the Delhi Land Reforms Act, 1954. The Subordinate Judge upheld the contention and dismissed the application for execution. Mahabir Prasad alone appealed against that order and impleaded Gunwanti Devi and Saroj Devi as party-respondents. Saroj Devi died in November, 1962 and Mahabir Prasad applied that the name of Saroj Devi be struck off from the array of respondents. The High Court made an order granting the application "subject to all just exceptions".

3. The High Court dismissed the appeal holding that because the heirs and legal representatives of Saroj Devi were not brought on the record within the period of limitation prescribed by the Limitation Act the appeal abated in its entirety. Against that order, this appeal is preferred with certificate granted by the High Court.

4. The decree in favour of Mahabir Prasad, Gunwanti Devi and Saroj Devi was a joint decree. Order 41, Rule 4 Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"Where there are more plaintiffs or more defendants than one in a suit, and the decree appealed from proceeds on any ground common to all the plaintiffs, or to all the defendants, any one of the plaintiffs or of the defendants may appeal from the whole decree, and thereupon the Appellate Court may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants, as the case may be".

Order 41, Rule 4, Code of Civil Procedure invests the appellate Court with power to reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants even though they had not joined in the appeal if the decree proceeds upon a ground common to all the plaintiffs or defendants. In the view of the High Court the power of the Appellate Court under Order 41, R. 4 Code of Civil Procedure may be exercised only in those cases where there is a decree which proceeds upon a ground common to more persons than one and the appeal is filed by one or more of them but not all, and other persons who are interested in the result of the appeal are not made parties to the appeal either as appellants or respondents. Where, such other persons are made parties to the appeal and one of them dies and his heirs are not brought on the record within the period of limitation prescribed by the Limitation Act, the appeal abates in its entirety. The High Court observed:

".....Appellant Mahabir Prasad has impleaded the remaining two decree-holders as respondents to the appeal. The execution application of all the decree-holders has been dismissed on a common ground that the decree which is sought to be executed has become null and void. The appeal abates so far as decree-holder Sarojni respondent is concerned because her legal representatives have not been brought on the record within time. The order of the executing Court has become final so far as this deceased respondent is concerned. It follows that that order cannot be modified or varied in favour of appellant Mahabir Prasad and the second surviving decree-holder respondent for obviously that may result in inconsistent orders with regard to the same decree. The order of the executing Court in so far as Sarojni deceased respondent is concerned has become final and if the same order is modified or interfered with so far as the other two decree-holders, namely, appellant Mahabir Prasad and respondent Gunwanti Devi are concerned, the apparent result will be two inconsistent orders with regard to the same decree which the decree-holders seeks to execute. So the appeal of appellant Mahabir Prasad also abates".

In support of their view the High Court relied upon the Judgment of this Court in Rameshwar Prasad v. Shyam Beharilal Jagannath, (1964) 3 SCR 549 = (AIR 1963 SC 1901). That was a case in which nine persons instituted a suit for a decree in ejectment and for recovery of rent against two defendants and obtained a decree. In appeal the District Judge set aside the decree, against one of the defendants. The plaintiffs filed a second appeal in the High Court and when the appeal was pending one of the plaintiffs (appellants in the High Court) died. No application for bringing his legal representatives on the record was made within the prescribed time. The respondents objected that the entire appeal had abated because the interest of the surviving appellants and of the deceased appellant was joint and indivisible and that in the event of the success of the appeal there would be two inconsistent and contradictory decrees. The surviving appellants claimed that the appeal was maintainable on the ground that without impleading the plaintiff who had died they could have appealed against the entire decree in view of the provisions of Order 41, Rule 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and on that account they were competent to continue the appeal, even after the death of one of the joint decree-holders and abatement of the appeal so far as he was concerned, and the Court had power to hear the appeal and to reverse or vary the whole decree. This Court held that the provisions of Order 41, Rule 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure were not applicable, for the second appeal in the High Court was filed by all the plaintiffs jointly, and the surviving appellants could not be said to have filed the appeal as representing the deceased appellant. The Court further held that the appellate Court had no power to proceed to hear the appeal and to reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants under Order 41, Rule 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure, when the decree proceeded on a ground common to all the plaintiffs, or defendants, if all the plaintiffs or the defendants appealed from the decree and any of them died, and the appeal abated in so far as he was concerned under Order 22, Rule 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Rameshwar Prasad's case, (1964) 3 SCR 549 = (AIR 1963 SC 1901) is obviously distinguishable from the present case. In Rameshwar Prasad's case, (1964) 3 SCR 549 = (AIR 1963 SC 1901) all the plaintiffs whose suit had been dismissed had filed an appeal and thereafter one of them died and his heirs were not brought on the record. In the present case there is an order against the decree-holders but all the decree-holders did not appeal: only one of them appealed and other two were joined as party-respondents.

5. In a later judgment of this Court in Ratan Lal Shah v. Firm Lalmandas Chhadammalal, (1970) 1 SCR 296 = (AIR 1970 SC 108) the plaintiffs obtained a joint decree against two persons Ratan Lal and Mohan Singh. Against the decree Ratan Lal alone appealed to the High Court of Allahabad. Mohan Singh was impleaded as a party-respondent to the appeal. Notice of appeal sent to Mohan Singh was returned unserved, and no steps were taken to serve him with notice of the appeal. The High Court dismissed the appeal holding that there was a joint decree against Ratan Lal and Mohan Singh in a suit founded on a joint cause of action and the decree against Mohan Singh had become final. The appellant could not, on that account claim to be heard in his appeal, if he was heard and his claim was upheld. The High Court observed that there would be two conflicting decisions between the same parties and in the same suit based on the same cause of action. This Court set aside the judgment of the High Court observing that even though Mohan Singh was not served with notice of appeal, the appeal filed by Ratan Lal was maintainable, in view of the provisions of Order 41 Rule 4 Code of Civil Procedure. In Ratan Lal Shah's case, (1970) 1 SCR 296 = (AIR 1970 SC 108) this Court allowed the appeal to be prosecuted, even though one of the joint decree-holders impleaded as a party-respondent had not been served with the notice of appeal. In the present case one of the respondents had died and his heirs have not been brought on the record. No distinction in principle may be made between Ratan Lal Shah's case (1970) 1 SCR 296 = (AIR 1970 SC 108) and the present case. Competence of the appellate court to pass a decree appropriate to the nature of the dispute in an appeal filed by one of several persons against whom a decree is made on a ground which is common to him and others is not lost merely because of the person who was jointly interested in the claim has been made a party-respondent and on his death his heirs have not been brought on the record. Power of the appellate court under Order 41 Rule 4 to vary or modify the decree of a Subordinate Court arises when one of the persons out of many against whom a decree or an order had been made on a ground which was common to him and others has appealed. That power may be exercised when other persons who were parties to the proceeding before the subordinate court and against whom a decree proceeded on a ground which was common to the appellant and to those other persons are either not impleaded as parties to the appeal or are impleaded as respondents. The view taken by the High Court cannot therefore be sustained.

6. Even on the alternative ground that Mahabir Prasad being one of the heirs of Saroj Devi there can be no abatement merely because no formal application for showing Mahabir Prasad as an heir and legal representative of Saroj Devi was made. Where in a proceeding a party dies and one of the legal representatives is already on the record in another capacity, it is only necessary that he should be described by an appropriate application made in that behalf that he is also on the record, as an heir and legal representative. Even if there are other heirs and legal representatives and no application for impleading them is made within the period of limitation prescribed by the Limitation Act the proceeding will not abate. On that ground also the order passed by the High Court cannot be sustained.

7. The appeal is allowed and the proceeding remanded to the High Court to be dealt with and disposed of according to law. Defendants will pay the costs of this appeal. Costs in the High Court will be the costs in the appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Mr. D. P. Uniyal, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. K. P. Gupta, Advocate, with him), for Appellants; Mr. I. N. Shroff, Advocate, for Respondent.

HEGDE, J.: — This is an appeal by special leave. It is brought by the legal representatives of one Dewan Bahadur Brij Mohan Zutshi who was the Dewan of Ratlam State from 1912 to 1929. The appellants sued the State of Madhya Pradesh for a declaration of their title to the suit lands. Their suit was decreed by the trial Court but in appeal the same was dismissed and the Judgment of the first appellate Court was affirmed by the High Court.

2. The appellants' case is that the Maharaja of Ratlam announced the grant of suit lands to Zutshi in appreciation of the services rendered by him but no written order was issued. After the death of the previous Maharaja, the succeeding Maharaja after making the necessary enquiries and going through the records ordered on May, 10, 1948:

"made inquiries felt that for all practical purposes a grant had been made to the Dewan Bahadur and what was left was the mere formality of a patta which had evidently been held up until certain construction work was complete".

3. But before he made this order he had already signed the merger agreement. Curiously enough on May 11, 1948, a day after he made the order earlier referred to, he passed the following order:

"My attention has been drawn to the fact that some of the orders which I may have passed after the signing of the covenant on the 22nd April, 1948 might be embarrassing to the successor Government and that they may not feel justified in honouring them. I have therefore authorised Mr. Sharma "(his Dewan)" to review all such orders and to refer them to the Regional Commissioner for approval. Pending such approval all such orders will be held up to enable Mr. Sharma to scrutinize them".

4. In view of this order the order made on May 10, 1948 approving the alleged grant in favour of Zutshi was held up. The Regional Commissioner did not accord his approval for the grant. Mr. Zutshi died in 1950. The suit from which this appeal arises was instituted on January 25, 1960.

5. The main evidence relied on in favour of the alleged grant is the order made by the Maharaja on May 10, 1948. The oral evidence adduced in support of the alleged grant has not been accepted either by the first appellate Court or by the High Court. Not much importance can be attached to the order made by the Maharaja on May 10, 1948 in view of his order of May 11, 1948.

6. Even if we assume that the Maharaja had made a grant on May 10, 1948, the same having not been accepted by the successor Government, the claim made is unenforceable in law — see State of Gujarat v. Vora Fiddali Badruddin Mithibarwala, (1964) 6 SCR 461 = (AIR 1964 SC 1043).

7. Admittedly Zutshi did not come into possession of the suit lands in pursuance of the alleged grant in 1924. The evidence relating to that grant has not been accepted by the first appellate Court as well as by the High Court.

8. In the result this appeal fails and the same is dismissed. But in the circumstances of the case we make no order as to costs in this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Mr. K. L. Gosain, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. Naunit Lal, Advocate, with him), for Appellant; Mr. S. P. Sinha, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. M. I. Khawaja, Advocate, with him), for Respondents.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

HEGDE, J.: One Jaimal was the owner of the suit properties. He died in 1938 leaving behind him his wife Nihali. His son Ditta had predeceased him. The appellant is the daughter of Ditta. The respondents are collaterals of Jaimal. The family genealogy is found at p. 125 of the paper-book. During the lifetime of Jaimal, he appears to have executed two wills. The first will was executed on December 18, 1935 and the second will on November 13, 1937. Both of them are registered wills. By the second will he revoked the first will. By that will he directed that on his death, his entire estate will devolve on his widow, Nihali during her life and thereafter the same would devolve on Bhagtu and Amru, his collaterals. On the death of Jaimal, the properties were mutated in the name of Nihali. Nihali died sometime in 1960 or 1961. On her death Bhagtu and Amru claimed the properties on the basis of the will of November 13, 1937 but the appellant claimed the properties as the sole legatee from Nihali under her will of April 25, 1958. This dispute led to the present proceedings.

2. The respondents sued the appellant for the possession of the suit properties on the strength of the will dated November 13, 1937. The appellant denied the genuineness as well as the validity of that will. The sole question for decision was whether Nihali got the properties on the strength of the will dated November 13, 1937 or in her own right as the heir to her husband. The trial Court dismissed the suit holding that Nihali got possession of the properties not on the strength of the will but as the widow of Jaimal. The trial Judge thought that the will executed by Jaimal in 1937 had been revoked as it was not invoked after the death of Jaimal for a long period. In appeal the Additional District Judge, set aside the order of the trial Court and decreed the plaintiff's claim holding that the will executed by Jaimal was true and genuine and that it was the last will executed by him. The High Court has affirmed that decision. The concurrent finding of the 1st Appellate Court as well as the High Court that the will executed by Jaimal on November 13, 1937, is genuine is a finding of fact and the same cannot be assailed in this Court. Nihali having succeeded to the properties of Jaimal on the strength of that will cannot claim any rights in those properties over and above that given to her under that will. The life estate given to her under the will cannot become an absolute estate under the provisions of the Hindu Succession Act. Therefore the appellant cannot claim any title to the suit properties on the basis of the will executed by Nihali in her favour.

3. In the result this appeal fails and the same is dismissed. But in the circumstances of the case we make no order as to costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(Para 3)

M/s. Yogeshwar Prasad and M. V. Goswami, Advocates; for Appellant; Mr. D. Goburdhun, Advocate, for Respondents.

GROVER, J.: This is an appeal by certificate from a judgment of the Patna High Court by which a petition under Articles 226 and 227 of the Constitution filed by the appellant was dismissed.

2. The disputed land belonged originally to one Anwar Ali Khan. His heirs gifted it to Mustaque Ali Khan. It was recorded as Ghairmazrua orchard. Mustaque Ali Khan settled this land and some other land with Mohini Devi, the mother of the appellant, by a registered patta dated June 19, 1946 on annual rental of Rs. 236/8/6 for the construction of houses thereon which could be rented out. The estate of Mustaque Ali Khan vested in the State of Bihar under the Bihar Land Reforms Act, 1950, hereinafter called the "Act". Mohini Devi created a trust in the name of her deceased husband of which the appellant was the Secretary. The disputed land continued to remain in his possession in that capacity. In 1956-57 proceedings were started for the acquisition of the disputed land for extension of the Darbhanga Medical College. An amount of Rs. 12,689/2/- was assessed as compensation for the property which had been acquired and an award was made in the joint names of the appellant and the State of Bihar. Because the appellant objected to the inclusion of the State in the award he sought a reference under S. 30 of the Land Acquisition Act. That reference was pending in the court of the District Judge, Darbhanga when on April 16, 1960 proceedings under S. 4 (b) of the Act were started in respect of the disputed land. On April 25, 1961 the Land Reforms Deputy Collector made an order that the settlement of the disputed land with Mohini Devi in 1946 by Mustaque Ali Khan was invalid and that it should be annulled. This order was confirmed by the Collector of Darbhanga on May 25, 1962. The appellant moved the Commissioner for setting aside of the aforesaid orders but without any success. He then filed a petition under Arts. 226 and 227 of the Constitution challenging those orders. The High Court referred to the following part of the order of the Commissioner:

"The circumstances of the settlement and certain features of the settlement itself may disclose the intention of the party. The land has been settled at a very low rate of Rs. 3/- per katha. But the amount of compensation has been calculated at Rs. 12,689/2/-. It is, therefore, obvious that the rate mentioned in the Patta did not disclose the real value of a plot of land situated in an important part of the city close to the Darbhanga Medical College Hospital. By acquiring such a valuable piece of land on a low rate, the intention of Smt. Mohini Devi was obviously to appropriate the profits which would have accrued to the State on vesting of the Zamindari. Had there been any intention of using this land for the construction of a house, the construction would have been taken in hand after obtaining the settlement. This was not done. The expansion of the Darbhanga Medical College Hospital was well known, and the possibility of obtaining advantage out of that expansion obviously attracted the purchaser." It was contended on behalf of the appellant before the High Court that the revenue authorities had not referred to any specific evidence in respect of their conclusion on the question of loss to the State being the object of settlement. The High Court, however, was of the view that this contention was not well founded. This is what the High Court said:

"Here the finding is based on circumstantial evidence as the order of the Commissioner, which I have extracted above, clearly shows. The revenue authorities were fully entitled to take into consideration the circumstances and features of the settlement for the purpose of determining the object with which it had been made. Besides, they also took into account the potential and the present value of the land which had been settled at a rate which, in the circumstances, was a very low rate, having regard to the situation of the land. I am, therefore, unable to accept the contention of the learned counsel that there was no material before the revenue authorities to come to the conclusion at which they have reached."

The High Court, however, agreed that if the finding of the revenue authorities was based on no material whatsoever the position would be different.

3. Section 4 of the Act relates to the consequences of the vesting of an estate or tenure in the State. Under clause (b) of that section the Collector has been empowered to make inquiries in respect of any transfer including the settlement or lease of any land comprised in such estate or tenure or the transfer of any kind of interest in any building etc. and if he is satisfied that such transfer was made at any time after the first of January 1946, with the object of defeating any provisions of the Act or causing loss to the State or obtaining higher compensation thereunder, the Collector may, after giving reasonable notice, annul such transfer and dispossess the person claiming under it. The order of the Deputy Collector as well as the Commissioner says that both the authorities were considerably influenced by the rental of Rs. 3/- per katha at which the settlement had been made. The High Court also was of the view that this fact weighed with the authorities among other considerations in coming to the conclusion that the settlement had been made with a view to causing considerable loss to the State Government. In our opinion neither the revenue authorities nor the High Court took into consideration the absence of any proof having been adduced with regard to the actual rate of settlement prevailing at the time when the settlement of the disputed land was made. We are altogether unable to understand how the rate of Rs. 3/- per katha was considered to be very low when no material had been produced to show what the current rate of rental prevailing at the relevant time was of land similar to the disputed land. Therefore one of the principal matters which weighed with the authorities and the High Court was based on pure assumptions and conjectures and on no evidence whatsoever. On this ground alone the impugned orders should have been quashed.

4. The appeal is allowed and the impugned orders are hereby set aside. The appellant shall be entitled to his costs in this court.

Appeal allowed.

M/s. T. S. Arora and Ranjit Singh Rathore, Advocates, for Appellants; Mr B. D. Sharma, Advocate for Mr. S. P. Nayar, Advocate, for Respondents.

HEGDE, J.: The appellants and their deceased father S. Bhagat Singh Saluja were originally residents of Wazirabad District which is now in Pakistan. At about the time of partition of the country, they migrated to India. In pursuance of a notification under S. 5 of the Displaced Persons (Claims) Act, 1950 they filed a claim for Rs. 1,63,500/- in respect of 10 items of immovable property left by them in Pakistan, out of which 9 were in the town of Wazirabad and one was in the village Mangat Tehsil. Their claim was duly verified and accepted by the Claims Officer. Thereafter on February 15, 1955, the appellants received from respondent No. 2 a notice requiring them to appear before him on February 25, 1955 in connection with the proposed revision of their claim under the suo motu powers given under S. 5 of the Displaced Persons (Claims) Supplementary Act, 1954. In the notice the appellants were not informed the grounds on which the revision was sought to be made. When the 1st appellant appeared before Respondent No. 2 on February 25, 1955, he examined him and recorded his statement and thereafter on February 26, 1955 — the very next day — respondent No. 1 served an order on the appellants reducing the value of their property and fixing the same at Rupees 58,165/-.

2. The appellants challenged this order by means of a writ petition in the High Court of Punjab. The main ground taken in the writ petition was that the appellants had not been given adequate opportunity to show cause against the proposed revision of their claim. The learned single Judge who heard the writ petition dismissed the same holding that the first appellant being an advocate, the opportunity given to him must be considered as adequate. The other grounds taken on behalf of the appellants were also rejected. The Letters Patent Appeal taken by the appellants was also dismissed. Thereafter the present appeal has been brought after obtaining special leave from this Court.

3. The principal question that falls for decision in this appeal is whether the appellants had been given adequate opportunity to show cause against the proposed revision of the value of the property fixed by the Claims Officer. It may be noted that the Claims Officer's valuation had become final. If the authorities wanted to suo motu revise that order, the appellants should have been given a reasonable opportunity to show cause against the proposed revision. The appellants should have been informed the grounds on which the valuation was sought to be revised and they should have been also informed about the material in possession of the authorities justifying revision of the valuation earlier made. The notice issued to the appellants was a bald one. It merely called upon the appellants to appear before respondent No. 2 in connection with the proposed suo motu revision; the first appellant when he appeared before respondent No. 2 was not informed the grounds on which the latter proposed to revise the valuation made by the Claims Officer; nor was he called upon to produce documents or oral evidence in support of his claim. It is clear from the material on record that the appellants had not been given reasonable opportunity to show cause against the proposed revision of the valuation. The mere fact that the first appellant is an advocate cannot cure all these defects. Even an advocate could not have divined what was passing in the mind of respondent No. 2 unless the appellants had been informed the grounds on which the revision of the valuation was sought to be made. They might have showed cause against the proposed revision and possibly placed material before respondent No. 2 to show that the impression gathered by him was not correct. Quite clearly the procedure adopted by respondent No. 2 was opposed to the principles of natural justice. To say the least it was arbitrary.

4. In view of our above conclusion it is not necessary to go into the other grounds taken by the appellants.

5. For the reasons mentioned above, we allow this appeal, set aside the orders passed by the High Court; allow the writ petition and set aside the impugned order. The case will now go back to the Additional Settlement Commissioner or his present equivalent for disposal according to law. He will now give an adequate opportunity to the appellants to put forward their case and deal with their objections in accordance with law. The respondents shall pay the costs of the appellants both in this Court as also in the High Court.

Appeal allowed.

Mr. B. Datta, Advocate and Mr. D. N. Mishra, Advocate for M/s. J. B. Dadachanji and Co., for Appellant; Mr. K. Jayaram Advocate, for Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

HEGDE, J.: — The material facts in this appeal, by special leave lie within a narrow compass. The appellant was working as Officiating Secretary of the respondent Municipality in December, 1951. It is said that when the cash balance was checked on December 24, 1951, it was short by Rs. 250/-. On that ground he was dismissed from service by the President of the Municipality. On the question whether the appellant was guilty of misconduct, there was difference of opinion between the President and the Vice-President as well as between the President and the Municipality. Later on the Municipality was superseded by the Government and an administrator appointed. The administrator after looking into the revelant papers came to the conclusion that the appellant should be dismissed from service. He accordingly passed the order dismissing him on July 25, 1952. The appellant's appeal to the Director of Local Authorities was rejected on January 24, 1953. Thereafter he instituted a suit seeking a declaration that his dismissal was illegal and invalid and therefore he continues to be in service. The trial Court came to the conclusion that the appellant's dismissal was illegal and void but it dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation. In appeal the first appellate Court differed from the trial Court on the question of limitation but it held that though the appellant's dismissal was wrongful, the same was not illegal and void. On that ground it affirmed the decree of the trial Court. In second appeal the High Court concurred with the conclusions reached by the first appellate Court.

2. All the Courts below have concurrently come to the conclusion that the appellant had not been given proper opportunity to establish his innocence. They came to the conclusion that no charges had been served on the appellant nor any proper enquiry held. Hence, there was a breach of principles of natural justice; but both the first appellate Court and the High Court rejected the plaintiff's prayer on the ground that his dismissal was merely wrongful and not illegal; hence he could claim only damages and not a declaration that he continues to be in service. The respondent-Municipality is a 'B' class Municipality. According to Rule 6 of the Rules framed by that Municipality in matters of appointment, punishment, dismissal, fine, reduction in rank, suspension from work, leave, pension and contribution to Provident Fund, the relevant rules applicable to the State servants prevailing from time to time were to apply to the servants of the Municipality. In that way Rule 55 of the Bombay Civil Services Conduct, Discipline and Appeal Rules governed the case of the plaintiff. That rule provides inter alia that no order of dismissal, removal or reduction shall be passed on a member of the service unless he has been informed in writing all the grounds on which it is proposed to take action against him and he has been afforded an adequate opportunity of defending himself. It further provides the manner in which the enquiry has to be held against any such person. On the facts found by the Courts below, clearly there was a contravention of Rule 6 read with Rule 55 of the Bombay Civil Services Conduct, Discipline and Appeal Rules. But both the first appellate Court and the High Court have come to the conclusion that Rule 6 is only directory and not mandatory and hence its contravention merely makes the order of dismissal wrongful and not illegal. In coming to that conclusion they have followed the earlier decisions of the Gujarat High Court as well as the decision of the Bombay High Court in Broach Municipality v. Bhadrikal Ambalal Patel, (1951) 53 Bom LR 282. The rule that came up for consideration in Ambalal Patel's case, (1951) 53 Bom LR 282 (supra) is similar to the one with which we are concerned in this appeal. The interpretation placed by the Bombay High Court on that Rule as far back as in 1950 appears to have been consistently followed by the Bombay High Court and later on by the Gujarat High Court as could be gathered from the judgment of the High Court. Herein we are concerned with an interpretation of a rule under a local law. The concerned High Courts have consistently taken the view that the procedure prescribed under that rule is directory and not mandatory. It will not be proper for this Court to disturb the settled law. In this view, we do not think that we should interfere with the judgment of the High Court.

3. This appeal is accordingly dismissed. But in the circumstances of the case we direct that the parties shall bear their own costs in all the Courts.

Appeal dismissed.

Patna High Court. The facts may be shortly stated. By a registered indenture of lease dated December 18, 1900 the Eastern Coal Co. Ltd., was granted a lease by the Zamindar of Jharia of certain land in mauza Gourkhanti in pargana Jharia. The Eastern Coal Co. erected buildings for manufacture of coke and also constructed office and the quarters for the staff and the labourers. On May 17, 1946 the Eastern Coal Co. sold the machineries on the demised land to the appellant and also granted a lease of the land on which the buildings stood to him.
One of the terms of the lease was that royalty would be paid by the appellant at the rate of Re. 1/- per ton on despatches of coke. The rate was subject to being revised from time to time by mutual arrangement between the parties "as may be justified by market condition". According to the appellant the Eastern Coal Company came to an arrangement in 1950 with him by which royalty on breeze coke was to be paid at the rate of 2 As. per ton. In December 1951 another arrangement was arrived at by which royalty on hard coke was to be paid at the reduced rate of 8 As. per ton instead of Re. 1 per ton stipulated in the lease dated May 17, 1946. This arrangement was to be given effect to from July 19, 1952. On January 5, 1955 the Eastern Coal Company informed the appellant that the colliery had been sold to the Bhowra Kankanee Collieries Ltd. respondent No. 1, the sale being effective from January 1, 1955. Respondent No. 1 claimed royalty on all despatches of coke including breeze coke at the rate of Re. 1 per ton. The appellant took up the position that by mutual agreement Eastern Coal Company had agreed to the royalty being payable on hard coke at the rate of 8 As. per ton and on breeze coke at 2 As. per ton. The appellant paid to respondent No. 1 the amount calculated according to the above rates.

2. On January 31, 1956 respondent No. 1 instituted a suit against the appellant claiming a sum of
Rs. 23,287-4-3 on account of royalty on all kinds of coke despatched during the period January 1955 to November 1955 at the rate of Re. 1 per ton. The Company further claimed damages at 6% per annum amounting to Rupees 1212-11-9. The appellant contested the suit, his main plea being that by virtue of the arrangement arrived at

with the Eastern Coal Company in accordance with the terms of the lease dated May 17, 1946 the royalty was payable at the rate of Re. 1 per ton for hard coke and 2 As. per ton for breeze coke. The trial Court accepted the plea of the appellant about reduction of the rates of royalty in terms of the arrangement arrived at with the Eastern Coal Company. It was further held that the document Exh. A-4 in which this agreement or arrangement was incorporated did not require registration compulsorily and was admissible in evidence. The suit was dismissed. Respondent No. 1 preferred an appeal to the High Court. Although the point with regard to the admissibility of Exh. A-4 for lack of registration was raised before the High Court it did not give any decision on it. The judgment of the High Court rested on the finding that the appellant had failed to prove that the reduction in the rate of royalty had been given effect to from July 1952.

3. Mr. B. Sen for the appellant sought to raise the question about the admissibility of Exh. A-4 for want of registration. In the first place this contention cannot be entertained so long as the finding of the High Court on the only point which was canvassed before it about the reduction of the rate of royalty is not set aside. The High Court had held after an examination of the evidence that it had not been proved that there was any change in the market condition in July or in December 1953 to call for a reduction in the rate of royalty or that there was any mutual arrangement or agreement between the lessor or the lessee for such a reduction which was to become effective from July 1952. No attempt was made by Mr. Sen to persuade us to reverse this conclusion. Even on the assumption that a mutual arrangement or agreement as evidenced by Exh. A-4 was arrived at between the appellant and the Eastern Coal Co. Ltd., we are unable to agree that any reduction in the rate of royalty could have been effected by means of Exh. A-4 which had not been registered under the provisions of the Indian Registration Act. It is well settled by now that a document which varies the essential terms of the existing registered lease, such as the amount of rent, must be registered: See Durga Prasad Singh v. Rajendra Narain Bagchi, (1910) ILR 37 Cal 293 which was approved by the Full Bench in Lalit Mohan Ghosh v. Gopal Chuck Coal Company Ltd., (1912) ILR 39 Cal 284 (FB). The decision of the Madras High Court in Obai Goundan v. Ramalinga Ayyar, (1899) ILR 22 Mad 217, taking a contrary view has not been followed by the High Courts in India and the consistent view that has been taken is that registration of an agreement is necessary which reduces the rent of an existing registered lease. See Mulla on Indian Registration Act, 7th Edn. pages 75-76.

4. The other contentions faintly raised before us arising out of issue No. 3 and that Exh. A-4 had been acted upon do not survive in view of the conclusions arrived at by the High Court and the view that we have taken about the admissibility of the aforesaid document. The Civil Miscellaneous Petitions which were filed in this Court shall stand dismissed as, in our opinion, no ground has been made out for admitting additional evidence or for impleading the Oriental Coal Co. Ltd., as a party respondent here.

5. The appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

for defending oneself. If a person is not told clearly and definitely what the allegations are on which the charges preferred against him are founded he cannot possibly, by projecting his own imagination, discover all the facts and circumstances that may be in the contemplation of the authorities to be established against him. The whole object of furnishing the statement of allegations is to give all the necessary particulars and details which would satisfy the requirement of giving a reasonable opportunity to put up defence. So, in spite of the Government servant repeatedly objecting to the vagueness of charges and non-furnishing of statement of allegations, the failure to supply him the facts, circumstances and particulars relevant to the charges even at the stage of second show cause notice would amount to denial of proper and reasonable opportunity of defending himself in complete disregard of Rule 55. The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

GROVER, J.: This is an appeal by certificate from a judgment of a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court reversing the judgment and decree of a learned Single Judge made in exercise of original jurisdiction in a suit filed by the appellant.

2. The record of the case is voluminous and apparently that led to very lengthy judgments both by the Single Judge and the Division Bench. A host of facts have been introduced out of which it is necessary to state only those which are relevant for the purpose of the disposal of the points before us. The appellant was appointed Station Officer in the Bengal Fire Service in 1943. In March 1949 he was appointed to act as Assistant Director of Fire Services and Regional Officer, Calcutta Industrial Area until further orders. S. Bose, who was appointed Director of Fire Service on or about the same date, received some complaints against the appellant. He made certain preliminary enquiries. In the beginning of May 1949 Bose informed the appellant that the post of Assistant Director Fire Service would be treated as abolished with effect from the date of the appointment of the appellant as Assistant Director. This led to protests by the appellant against the abolition of that post. A lot of acrimonious dialogue started between Bose and the appellant; the former made his final report to S. K. Gupta, Secretary Local Self-Government, as to the charges which were to be preferred against the appellant. On July 12, 1949 the appellant was suspended. On July 19, 1949 a communication containing the charges against the appellant was sent to him by S. K. Gupta, Secretary Local Self-Government. It is necessary to reproduce it in extenso:

"Charges.

Whereas it has been made to appear to the Government of West Bengal —

(1) that you, Sri S. C. Chakravarty, Regional Officer, Calcutta Industrial Area, West Bengal Fire Service incited the subordinate staff of the said service by circulating false rumours regarding the retrenchment policy of the Government, thereby spreading insubordination and discontent within the Force;

(2) that you, Sri S. C. Chakravarty, Regional Officer, Calcutta Industrial Area, West Bengal Fire Service, took an active part in a conspiracy to implicate the present Director of Fire Service West Bengal in a false case by planting firearms in his office and to injure him by planting a time bomb in his car when he might be going on inspection;

(3) that you, Sri S. C. Chakravarty, Regional Officer, Calcutta Industrial Area, West Bengal Fire Service, have been guilty of —

(a) wilful disobedience of Government Order directing you to stay at your headquarters at Barrackpore and of the order of the Director Fire Service to produce the petrol log book of your inspection car;

(b) grave negligence of duty; failure to attend office on many days and irregular attendance even on the days when you came to office, resulting in accumulation of work;

(c) fabricating false entries in the cash book by putting signatures on dates when you did not attend office;

(d) taking illegal issue of petrol from the accounts of different fire stations in addition to the quota allotted to you for your use; and

(e) cooking up false complaint against some members of the staff of the West Bengal Fire Service whom you tried to rope in into the conspiracy but failed and refusing permission to them to see the Director, Fire Service, apprehending a disclosure.

And whereas these acts of indiscipline, conspiracy, negligence in the performance of your duties and other irregularities were committed by you while you were holding the responsible position of the Regional Officer, Calcutta Industrial Area, in a disciplined organisation like the West Bengal Fire Service and which, therefore, amounted to an abuse or misuse of the position so enjoyed by you.

Now, therefore, you are directed to show cause why you should not be dismissed from the service of the Government or otherwise suitably punished departmentally.

The enquiry will be conducted by the undersigned. Sri S. C. Chakravarty is directed to put in a written statement of his defence by the 8th August, 1949, and to state within the time aforesaid whether he desires to be heard in person.

of West Bengal".

Local Self-Government Department, Calcutta.
The 19th July, 1949.

3. It is common ground that a statement of the allegations on which each charge was based was never sent to the appellant. He sent a letter dated August 5, 1949 with reference to the communication containing the charges. He emphatically denied what had been alleged against him and described the charges as false and actuated by mala fides. What is worth noticing is that the appellant in categorical terms stated that the charges and allegations were vague, indefinite and lacking in material particulars and pointed out that "unless the charges are made specific to the point and contain full details with date, time, place, and person etc. it is impossible for me to meet them properly." No further particulars or details were supplied at that stage or subsequently. S. K. Gupta submitted his report on May 1, 1950. He found charges 1, 2 and 3 (b) as having been proved against the appellant. Charge 3 (a) was dropped. As regards charges 3 (c) and 3 (d) it was found that there had been gross negligence on the part of the appellant in attendance as well as in carrying out all his ordinary duties; viz., checking and signing of the cash book and disposal of current work including grant or refusal of leave applications. The appellant was not found guilty of charge 3 (e). On June 10, 1950, the Deputy Secretary to the Government, West Bengal, sent a notice to the appellant in which it was stated that in view of the findings of the Enquiry Officer he was considered to be unsuitable for retention in service and it was proposed to remove him. A summary of the findings of the Inquiry Officer was sent and the appellant was directed to show cause why he should not be removed from the service of the Government. The appellant wrote a long letter on July 1, 1950 in which he once again pointed out that according to law he was entitled to have a statement of allegations on which each charge was based before the enquiry started. But he was not given any such statement with the result that he could not defend his case properly. On June 16, 1950 the Director of Fire Services communicated an order of dismissal to the appellant who filed an appeal to the Government without any success. In August 1951 the appellant moved the High Court under Article 226 of the Constitution for quashing the order of dismissal. In April, 1952 the High Court acceded to the appellant's prayer and quashed the order of dismissal on the sole ground that the punishment which had been tentatively proposed in the show cause notice was removal and therefore an order of dismissal could not have been made. On May 15, 1952 the appellant called upon the Government to reinstate him in his post. On May 31, 1952 an order was made by the Governor, West Bengal, removing the appellant from service. A memorandum was sent by the Joint Secretary, Local Self-Government, along with a copy of the order of the Governor. It was stated therein that after a careful consideration of the report of the Enquiry Officer and the representation submitted by the appellant the Government, in consultation with the Public Service Commission, West Bengal, had decided that he should be removed from service.

4. In September 1952 the appellant filed a suit in the Calcutta

High Court challenging the order of his removal from service and asking for various reliefs including a declaration that he was still in Government service and a decree for arrears of pay and allowances from the date of suspension till institution of the suit and interim pay and allowances till the disposal of the suit together with interest etc. We need refer only to para 19 (a) of the plaint in which it was pleaded that the enquiry was vitiated because under the rules and procedure for holding such enquiry the appellant was entitled to be furnished with definite charges. But the charges and allegations were vague, indefinite and lacking in material particulars and in spite of repeated requests these were neither made specific nor material particulars like, day, time, place and persons were supplied. In the written statement filed by the respondent it was denied that the charges or allegations were vague, indefinite or lacking in material particulars as alleged. It is unnecessary to set out the other pleadings but the issues which were settled would indicate the points which the trial Court was called upon to decide. These issues were:—

1. Is there a valid contract of employment between the plaintiff and the defendant under the Government of India Act?
2. Was the suspension order dated 12th July 1949 mala fide, wrongful and ultra vires?
3. Was Mr. S. K. Gupta in a position to exercise unbiased mind in the matter of enquiry?
4. Was the order dated 16th September 1950, illegal, void and ultra vires the Constitution and it cannot operate to terminate the service of the plaintiff?
5. Was the order of removal dated 31st May, 1952 illegal, void in law and ultra vires the Constitution of India and the Civil Service Rules for grounds stated in paragraphs 29 and 30 of the plaint?
6. Was the plaintiff no longer in suspension and was unable to be reinstated in service to his usual pay and allowances from the date of his suspension in view of the order dated 24th April, 1952?
7. To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

Some additional issues were framed out of which we may only refer to those which were settled on June 8, 1959 and which were in these terms:—

1. Was the enquiry made by Mr. Gupta vitiated on the grounds as alleged in paragraph 19 of the plaint?
2. Is the Court debarred from trying issues Nos. 4, 5 and 6 and the additional issues settled today by reason of res judicata?

The learned Judge found that the Enquiry Officer S. K. Gupta was biased against the appellant before he held the enquiry. It was further found that no particulars and other necessary details were given in the charges and they were vague resulting in non-compliance with Rule 55 of the Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules and the necessary particulars were not supplied in spite of the repeated objections of the appellant to the charges being vague and indefinite. In the opinion of the learned Judge the trial was vitiated for want of definite charges. It was held that the appellant had been duly appointed as member of the Fire Service of the State and that a contract in terms of Article 299 of the Constitution was not necessary. Issues 2 and 4 were not pressed. Reading the prayer in the light of the averments in the plaint the learned Judge granted a declaration that the purported removal of the appellant was void and inoperative and he remained or was still in Government service. He was held entitled to salary and other benefits from the date of his suspension till the date of the judgment. It was particularly mentioned that the parties had worked out the figures of the salary and allowances etc., at Rs. 69,636/- for which a decree was granted together with interest at 6% per annum till the date of realisation. The respondent filed an appeal to the Division Bench of the High Court. We do not consider that we need refer to all the points dealt with by the Division Bench. In our judgment the Division Bench was wholly in error in reversing the decision of the learned Single Judge on one of the crucial points, namely, non-compliance with Fundamental Rule 55 and complete vagueness and indefiniteness of the charges on which no proper enquiry could be held. It is incomprehensible how the details as to date, time, place and person etc. would not have made the charges more definite as appears to have been the opinion of the Division Bench. We are unable to agree that the details without which a delinquent servant cannot properly defend himself are a matter of evidence. In this connection reference may be made to Fundamental R. 55 which provides, inter alia, that without prejudice to the provisions of the Public Servants Enquiry Act 1850 no order of dismissal, removal or reduction shall be passed on a member of service unless he is informed in writing of the grounds on which it is proposed to take action and has been afforded an adequate opportunity of defending himself. The grounds on which it is proposed to take action have to be reduced to the form of a definite charge or charges which have to be communicated to the person charged together with a statement of the allegations on which each charge is based and any other circumstance which it is proposed to be taken into consideration in passing orders has also to be stated. This Rule embodies a principle which is one of the basic contents of a reasonable or adequate opportunity for defending oneself. If a person is not told clearly and definitely what the allegations are on which the charges preferred against him are founded he cannot possibly, by projecting his own imagination, discover all the facts and circumstances that may be in the contemplation of the authorities to be established against him. By way of illustration one of the grievances of the appellant contained in his letter dated March 24, 1950, to the Enquiry Officer may be mentioned. This is what he said though the language employed is partly obscure and unhappy:

"Regarding the first charge I beg to submit that the allegation is vague. In the charge it has not been specifically stated as to where, when and before whom I circulated false rumours, regarding retrenchment policy of the Government and thereby spread insubordination. In fact if one goes through the statements of P. Ws. made to D. F. S. as submitted before my suspicion, it will appear that no specific case could have made with all material particular as to date, time and person. Having been able to take deposition and to conduct enquiry keeping me in dark and finally put me out of office. Sri S. Bose was able to win over the witnesses and was able to shape his case to suit his purpose."

Now in the present case each charge was so bare that it was not capable of being intelligently understood and was not sufficiently definite to furnish materials to the appellant to defend himself. It is precisely for this reason that Fundamental Rule 55 provides, as stated before, that the charge should be accompanied by a statement of allegations. The whole object of furnishing the statement of allegations is to give all the necessary particulars and details which would satisfy the requirement of giving a reasonable opportunity to put up defence. The appellant repeatedly and at every stage brought it to the notice of the authorities concerned that he had not been supplied the statement of allegations and that the charges were extremely vague and indefinite. In spite of all this no one cared to inform him of the facts, circumstances and particulars relevant to the charges. Even if the Enquiry Officer had made a report against him the appellant could have been given a further opportunity at the stage of the second show cause notice to adduce any further evidence if he so desired after he had been given the necessary particulars and material in the form of a statement of allegations which had never been supplied to him before. This could undoubtedly be done in view of the provisions of Art. 311 (2) of the Constitution as they existed at the material time. The entire proceedings show a complete disregard of Fundamental Rule 55 in so far as it lays down in almost mandatory terms that the charges must be accompanied by a statement of allegations. We have no manner of doubt that the appellant was denied a proper and reasonable opportunity of defending himself by reason of the charges being altogether vague and indefinite and the statement of allegations containing the material facts and particulars not having been supplied to him. In this situation, for the above reason alone, the trial Judge was fully justified in decreeing the suit.

5. A faint attempt was made by the learned counsel for the respondent to assail the decision of the trial Court on issue No. 1. Both the Single Judge and the Division Bench had given concurrent findings against the respondent on that point. The respondent cannot be permitted to re-agitate the matter before us.

6. We accordingly allow this appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the Division Bench and restore that of the trial court. The appellant will further be granted a declaration that he is entitled to the salary and allowances for the period subsequent to the date of the decree of the learned Single Judge of the High Court to the date of his superannuation. The appellant will be entitled to his costs in this court.

Appeal allowed.

Ram Narain and others, Appellants v. The State of U. P., Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 17 of 1970,
D/- 11-12-1970.

(A) Penal Code (1860), S. 302 — Appellate Court's interference with an order of the Trial Court awarding lesser penalty in a murder case is justified only when its inadequacy (as manifested by the facts and circumstances of the case) results in a failure of justice. (Para 5)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 136 — The Supreme Court will cure High Court enhancing a sentence at the instance of a private complainant when the State does not seek enhancement and the Trial Court awarding lesser punishment has practised no deviation from recognised principles and has caused no failure of justice. (Para 7)

Mr. A. S. R. Chari, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. B. R. G. K. Achar, Advocate, with him), for Appellants; Mr. O. P. Rana, Advocate, for Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by DUA, J.: In this appeal by special leave we are only concerned with the question of sentence imposed on appellants 1, 2 and 3 by the High Court. They are Ram Narain son of Manni Lal Ahir, Babulal son of Bhikhari Ahir and Nankau son of Manni Lal. Special leave was declined to the other convicts who had applied along with the present appellants.

2. Eight persons were tried in the Court of the 1st Temporary Sessions Judge, Kanpur for the murder of one Bitta. The three appellants with whom we are now concerned were alleged to have been armed respectively with deadly weapons like gandasa, sword and ballam. They were charged under Section 148, I. P. C. with having formed an unlawful assembly along with the five co-accused with the common object of committing the murder of the deceased. They were further charged under Section 302 read with Section 149, I. P. C. for committing the said murder.

3. At the trial evidence was led to show that five accused persons had direct enmity with the deceased and about the remaining three it was admitted that Shivrath, accused, is the brother of the wife of Rameshwar, accused, and Jai Jai Ram and Nankau (one of the appellants here) are cousins of the accused Rameshwar and Babulal. The actual occurrence took place at 3.30 a. m. on the night between 17th and 18th April, 1966. Prosecution evidence was led to show that Rameshwar, Shivrath, Baboo alias Babua and Jailal pressed the deceased with their lathis when the three appellants along with Lallu, accused, who was armed with a lathi inflicted injuries on the deceased killing him. The trial Court came to the conclusion that all the eight accused persons had motive for killing the deceased and that they had jointly committed his murder after forming an unlawful assembly with the common object of doing so. In considering the question of sentence that Court took the view that all the accused were equally guilty of murder and it made no difference as to who actually gave the blow with the gandasa, sword or the ballam or as to who pressed the victim with lathis. The final conclusions of the trial Court may be stated in its own words:

"Considering the entire evidence on the record and the circumstances of the case, I have come to the conclusion that all the eight accused jointly committed the murder of Bitta after forming an unlawful assembly of which the common object was to commit the murder of Bitta and this offence was committed by all of them in prosecution of the said common object of the unlawful assembly formed by them. Thus all the accused are clearly guilty of the offence of rioting and murder with which they stand charged.

*(Cri. Appeals Nos. 483, 484 and 58) of 1967 and Cri. Revn. No. 475 of 1967, D/- 15-9-1969 — All.)

Coming to the question of sentence it is to be noted that all the accused are equally guilty so far as the offence of murder is concerned irrespective of the fact whether some particular accused actually gave blow of a gandasa or a sword or a ballam or pressed the victim with a lathi. As most of the accused had some cause of grievance against the deceased and because no revolting cruelty was committed on the dead body of the deceased after he had died, the lesser penalty for murder, that is life imprisonment would meet the ends of justice in this case".

4. The eight convicted persons appealed to the High Court by three separate appeals and the complainant Mahabir preferred a criminal revision for enhancement of the sentence imposed on Nankau, Ramnarain and Babulal with whom we are concerned in this appeal. The High Court dismissed the appeal preferred by the convicts and allowed the criminal revision as a result of which the sentence on the present three appellants was enhanced to one of death. After discussing the injuries caused to the deceased the High Court observed:

"From the above it is evident that each of these appellants Nankau, Ramnarain and Babulal inflicted fatal injuries on Bitta which were individually sufficient to cause his death. The murder of Bitta was cold-blooded and a premeditated one. We are accordingly of the opinion that the three appellants Nankau, Ramnarain and Babulal each inflicted fatal injuries on Bitta and deserve the extreme penalty of death."

5. We are asked by Shri Chari, learned counsel for the appellants, to set aside the sentence of death and restore that of life imprisonment imposed by the trial Court. The question of sentence, it is well settled, is always a matter of judicial discretion of the trial Court within the statutory limits. In the case of murder the discretion is limited to two alternatives for the sentence can be either one of death or of imprisonment for life. The proper exercise of discretion in this respect is generally a matter of some difficulty. This discretion has, however, like all discretions, to be exercised on a proper consideration of all the relevant facts and circumstances keeping in view the broad objective of the sentence being neither too severe nor too lenient. If the reasons for awarding the lesser penalty by the trial Court in case of murder are such on which a judicial mind may appropriately do so then the appellate Court is not expected to enhance the sentence and impose the extreme penalty of death. Merely because the appellate Court feels that left to itself it would have preferred to impose the sentence of death is by itself and without more not a sufficient ground to justify enhancement. It is only when the sentence appears on the facts and circumstances of the case to be so manifestly inadequate as to have resulted in failure of justice that enhancement of the sentence may be justified by the appellate Court.

6. In the present case reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge for imposing the lesser penalty appear to us to be such that a judicial mind may well do so; they are neither contrary to any well-established principle nor so erroneous as to persuade us to hold that the sentence imposed is manifestly inadequate. It has to be remembered that under the existing law in cases of murder it is not necessary for the Court to give reasons for not imposing the extreme penalty of death and the discretion of the Court in awarding the lesser penalty is, therefore, wider than before the amendment of the law in this respect. It is further noteworthy that the State had not considered it proper to ask for enhancement of the sentence. The High Court was moved by private complainant who was apparently inspired by considerations of private vengeance. The High Court appears to have ignored this aspect.

7. It is true that this Court normally does not interfere with the discretion exercised by the High Court on the question of sentence even though the same has been enhanced but where the trial Court has exercised its discretion on proper consideration of the material on record and its order cannot be described to be either contrary to recognised principle or otherwise having caused failure of justice and further when the State does not consider that the ends of justice require enhancement of the sentence but the High Court interferes at the instance of a private complainant this Court would be fully justified in considering for itself the propriety of the sentence as enhanced by the High Court. In our view the High Court was in error in enhancing the sentence of the three appellants from life imprisonment to that of death. We accordingly allow the appeal and setting aside the sentence of death, restore the sentence of life imprisonment imposed by the trial Court.

Appeal allowed.

Mr. G. D. Gupta, Advocate, for Appellant; M/s. S. K. Dholakia, and S. P. Nayar, Advocates, for Respondent No. 2.

DUA, J.: — The appellant, Patel Uka Naran, was the President of the Sultanpur Juth Vividh Karyakari Sahkari Mandli (hereinafter called the Mandli) on January 22, 1966, having held that office for nearly 7 or 8 years till August 31, 1966 when he was succeeded by Arjan Limba. Kalyan Karamshi (complainant) an illiterate agriculturist was a shareholder of the Mandli. He had taken a loan of Rs. 800/- from the Mandli and in January, 1966, Rs. 1,215.73 (inclusive of interest upto January 15, 1966 and expenses for notice, etc.) were due from him on account of this loan. On January 10, 1966 he was given a notice by the Mandli to pay this amount within eight days from its receipt failing which it was threatened that the amount would be recovered by proceedings for recovery of revenues. It was pointed out that the Mandli had obtained a certificate to recover the amount according to revenue proceedings. To avoid unnecessary additional expense the complainant was requested to make arrangements for paying the amount. On January 22, 1966, Bhagvanji Vithaldas was the Secretary of the Mandli. These facts are not disputed. According to the prosecution case on January 22, 1966 the complainant went to the Mandli Office and paid to the appellant Rs. 1,220/- (12 currency notes of Rs. 100/- each and two currency notes of Rs. 10/- each) who gave him a receipt for the amount scribed by a clerk and signed by the appellant with the seal of the Mandli thereon: Ex. P/13. The Secretary was not present in the office on that day and that is why a pucca receipt for this amount was not issued. The appellant told the complainant that after adjusting the account the amount received in excess would be returned to him. The complainant, feeling satisfied went home with the kutchra receipt. On October 29, 1966 after the appellant had ceased to be the President of the Mandli and Arjan Limba had taken over, a notice Ex. P/15 described as the last notice was sent by the Mandli to the complainant informing him that Rs. 415.73 had become due as interest on the principal amount of Rs. 800/- upto January 15, 1966 and requiring him to pay the principal and interest accrued upto the date of payment and also the expenses of the notice. This notice further pointed out that earlier a notice dated January 10, 1966 had been sent to the complainant on which no action was taken by him and as the debt had become barred by time, a certificate had already been received by the Mandli for recovering the amount "by attachment according to land revenue proceedings". It was emphasised that if the amount was not paid the Mandli would be obliged to take attachment proceedings. On the complainant informing the Mandli of the payment having already been made by him and enclosing a copy of the receipt (Ex. P/13), the Secretary of the Mandli wrote back on December 5, 1966 intimating to the complainant that the amount of the receipt had not been credited in the account books on the date of the receipt or thereafter. He was informed that he might take such further action in the matter as he liked. It may be pointed out here that Bhagvanji Vithaldas, who was the Secretary on January 22, 1966 had since died and he was succeeded by Bhikhalal Shamjibhai (P. W. 4) sometime in March, 1967 as deposed by him. On December 20, 1966 the complainant received a letter from the Registrar of Co-operative Societies, Rajkot asking him to institute a complaint in respect of the payment of Rs. 1,220/- made by him to Uka Naran, the ex-President of the Mandli promising him the necessary assistance in the matter. Three days later the complaint, out of which the present appeal arises, was instituted and after trial the Judicial Magistrate, First Class, Gondal, convicted the appellant on September 22, 1967 of an offence under Section 409, I. P. C. sentencing him to simple imprisonment for one year and fine of Rs. 2,000/-, with further simple imprisonment for two months in case of default in payment of fine. Out of the fine, if realised, Rs. 1,220/- were directed to be paid to the complainant. That Court also convicted him of an offence under Section 420, I. P. C. imposing a sentence of simple imprisonment for two months.

2. On appeal the Sessions Judge, Rajkot set aside the appellant's conviction under Section 420, I. P. C. and converted his conviction under Section 409 to one under Section 406, I. P. C. and also reduced the sentence to simple imprisonment for 9 months. The fine was also reduced to Rs. 1,500/- and it was directed that out of the fine, if realised, Rs. 1,220/- be paid to the Mandli instead of the complainant. The appellant's revision to the High Court of Gujarat was summarily rejected on April 19, 1967 and leave to appeal to this Court was declined on December 19, 1967. The appellant secured special leave to appeal to this Court on May 3, 1968.

3. The appellant had denied receipt of the sum of Rs. 1,220/- and execution of the receipt, Ex. P/13. But the trial Court and the Sessions Court on appeal, concurrently found that the receipt was signed by the appellant after receiving the amount of Rs. 1,220/-. The evidence of the complainant Kalyan Karamshi (P. W. 1) and of Narain Chagga (P. W. 2) the totat of the Mandli who had scribed the receipt, in whose presence the amount of Rs. 1,220/- was paid by the complainant to the appellant and who had put the seal of the Mandli on the receipt was believed by both the Courts. The receipt was accordingly held to be genuine and not forged as suggested by the appellant. The plea of the appellant that he was not present at Sultanpur on January 22, 1966 but was at Kodinar was found by both the Courts to be untrustworthy. The learned Sessions Judge, while rejecting the plea of the receipt being forged also took notice of the fact that during the trial different positive suggestions were made by the appellant in regard to the forgery of the receipt.

4. In this Court the appellant's learned counsel was unable to make out any special ground for re-appraisal and re-examination of the evidence afresh and for review of the concurrent conclusions of the two Courts below. This Court, it may be remembered, normally does not proceed to review the evidence in appeals in criminal cases unless there is some illegality or grave irregularity or some serious lapse on the part of the Court below in marshalling or evaluating the evidence and feels justified in adopting such a course in the larger interests of justice. We find no such extraordinary circumstance in this case impelling us to re-examine the evidence in order to determine its credibility.

5. The only point which the appellant's counsel pressed and did so with a certain degree of persistence, is that after the new President of the Mandli had taken over the charge, the debts due to the Mandli were got verified and the debtors were personally called for the purpose of verification. The counsel desired this Court to summon the records of the verification proceedings to see if the complainant had been summoned and if his debt was verified in his presence. In case it was so verified, then the story of the payment of Rs. 1,220/- to the appellant on January 22, 1966 must, according to the appellant's counsel, be held to be false. His application under Order 47 of the Supreme Court Rules made on January 4, 1971 prayed for permission to the appellant to rely on verification report a copy of which was filed with the special leave petition and on all the annexures and documents mentioned therein.

6. Now Jayantilal, a senior clerk in the Rajkot District Registrar's office, was examined by the appellant as D. W. 1. He produced a copy of the verification report Ex. 43 dated September 11, 1966, relating to the enquiry held by the new Managing Committee into the advances made by it. Neither in the trial Court nor on appeal in the Sessions Court was any point sought to be made on behalf of the appellant with any seriousness on the basis of this report. In the special leave petition in this Court in paragraph 7 it was averred that the verification report conclusively proves the petitioner's innocence. It is stated there that the new Managing Committee verified the debts due to it on September 11, 1966 and some of the debts were verified by the Committee by calling the debtors personally. Those who could not come were served with notices for the purpose of verifying the amounts due from them. The report Ex. 43, as produced at the trial was incomplete because it did not contain the list of the persons served with notices. According to the appellant's averments the complainant's name does not appear in the list of persons served with notices for the purpose of verifying the debts due from them and since the complainant had admittedly received the notice of demand for the amount due as per Ex. P/15 it is sought to be inferred that his claim had been verified by calling him personally. In that event, according to the appellant, the receipt, Ex. P/13, must be held to be a forged document. This reasoning is prima facie unacceptable. It may be recalled that as soon as the complainant received Ex. P/15 on October 29, 1963 he immediately informed the Mandli about the payment and also forwarded a copy of the receipt and on learning that the amount had not been credited in his account he lodged the complaint. We have not been able to appreciate how this demand notice can establish the forged nature of the receipt. On this view we do not consider it necessary to refer in detail to the order of this Court dated September 21, 1970 in this appeal on which the appellant's counsel attempted to rely. Suffice it to say that on that date after hearing the appellant's counsel a Bench of this Court of which one of us was a member directed the office to send for the records of the Mandli mentioned in the report (Ex. P/43) including the annexures and also any further report that might be found on the record. On December 15, 1970 on a representation by the appellant's counsel it was ordered that he should make an application before the close of the Court for adducing additional evidence. This order was not complied with. The application presented on January 4, 1971 is not accompanied by any prayer to condone the delay. In any event in face of the direct evidence of P. W. 1 and P. W. 2 regarding the payment of the amount by the complainant to the appellant and execution of the receipt, in our view, it is futile for the appellant to rely on verification enquiry proceedings. Ex. P/43 does not help the appellant and there is no cogent ground made out for, nor does the cause of justice require, the production of any additional evidence as desired by the appellant. The application dated January 4, 1971 is without merit and is rejected.

7. The concurrent conclusions of the two Courts below are not tainted with any infirmity and they are binding on this Court. This appeal must, therefore, be dismissed. The appellant should surrender to his bail bond to undergo the remaining sentence of imprisonment.

Appeal dismissed.

cate (M/s. Sadhu Singh Bireswar Bhattacharya and Jagmohan Khanna, Advocates, with him), for Respondents.

HIDAYATULLAH, C. J.: This is an appeal against the judgment of a learned single Judge of the High Court of Punjab dated December 14, 1966 confirming the dismissal of a suit filed by the appellants. The facts of the case are as follows:

One Bhag Singh mortgaged certain lands to Ran Jang Singh in the year 1923. On September, 6, 1961 one Vernon Seth Chotia, son of Bhag Singh executed a power of attorney in California, U.S.A. authorising Sardar Kartar Singh Chawla, an advocate of this Court, to sell the property and to execute the sale deed and present it for registration. This power of attorney was witnessed by one Daniel E. Cooper. On the strength of this document, Sardar Kartar Singh Chawla executed the sale deed on May 30, 1963 in favour of the respondents in this appeal. He presented it for registration and the document was registered. The vendees thereupon sought to redeem the mortgage and applied under S. 9 of the Punjab Redemption of Mortgages Act, 1913. They deposited the entire amount due under the mortgage in the Collector's court and we understand that the amount is still lying there, because of the later proceedings from which this appeal arises. The Collector ordered the redemption of the mortgage. The Appellants who are the sons of the original mortgagee thereupon filed a suit under S. 12 of the Act on August 7, 1963. It is necessary to refer to their petition of plaint, not with a view to finding out what they stated there, but to see what reliefs they claimed in the suit. In para 10 of the petition of plaint, the appellants as plaintiffs stated:

"The plaintiffs pray that a decree for declaration to the effect that the defendants are neither the owners of the above mentioned land nor they have any right to get the aforesaid land redeemed as per the orders of the S. D. O. Mukatsar exercising the powers of Collector, dated the 6th August, 1963 which is illegal and against law and the plaintiffs are not bound by it and neither the defendants are entitled to take possession of the aforesaid land in accordance with that order, be passed in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendants with costs."

2. While this suit was still pending and because of the challenge to the power of attorney on the ground that it had not been properly authenticated under the law, a fresh power of attorney was executed by Vernon Seth Chotia on March 23, 1964 in favour of Sardar Kartar Singh Chawla. The second power of attorney was subscribed and sworn to before the Notary Public in and for the County of Alameda, State of California. The Clerk of the Court as required by the laws of California appended a certificate that the Notary Public had duly given the certificate in acknowledgment of the execution of the power of attorney by Vernon Seth Chotia. The endorsement of the Notary Public reads:

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this 23rd day of March 1964.

Betty J. Botelko

Notary Public in and for the County of Alameda, State of California."

This second power of attorney was produced in the suit and the court of first instance ordered the dismissal of the suit, because it was of opinion that the transfer in favour of the redeeming mortgagors by Vernon Chotia was thereafter flawless. Appeal in the District Court and a second appeal filed in the High Court failed. This appeal has been brought by special leave.

3. Mr. Hardev Singh in arguing the appeal referred to the provisions of S. 85 of the Indian Evidence Act which provides that a Court shall presume that every document purporting to be a power of attorney and to have been executed before and authenticated by a Notary Public was duly executed and authenticated. He contended that authentication of the power of attorney had to be in a particular form, and that it was not sufficient that a witness should have signed the document, be he a Notary Public or any other. It ought to have been signed by the persons named in S. 85 and should have been authenticated properly. He admitted that there was no prescribed form of authentication, but he relied upon a ruling of the Allahabad High Court reported in Wali Mohammad v. Jamal Uddin, AIR 1950 All 524, where it is stated that authentication means that the person who authenticates must satisfy himself about the identity of the person executing or making the document. He argued that the authentication should have shown on its face that the Notary Public had satisfied himself that Vernon Chotia was the real person who had signed the power of attorney before him. He contended, therefore, that the first power of attorney was invalid because it was not authenticated before any of the persons named in S. 85 and the second power of attorney was invalid, because it did not show on its face that the Notary Public had satisfied himself that it was Vernon Chotia who executed the document. He also contended that, in any event, the execution of the second power of attorney was ineffective after the expiry of four months during which registration had to be obtained and further that the act of Mr. Chawla in presenting the document for registration under the invalid first power of attorney could not be cured by the execution of a second power of attorney.

4. Mr. Hardev Singh referred us to the provisions of Sections 32 and 33 of the Indian Registration Act. Under Section 32, it is provided that a document to be registered, whether the registration is compulsory or optional, must be by the presentation at the proper registration office either by some person executing or claiming under the same or by the agent of such person, representative or assign, duly authorised by power-of-attorney executed and authenticated in the manner therein mentioned. His contention was that for a proper registration, due presentation was a condition precedent and that presentation could only be either by the executant, that is the Principal who conveyed under the deed or a duly constituted representative under a power of attorney properly executed. He referred then to Section 33 which says that if the principal at the time of execution does not reside in India the power of attorney will be recognised only if it is executed before and authenticated by a Notary Public. In other words, his contention was that power of attorney for purpose of presentation of a document for registration as also for its execution must be a properly authenticated document and in the case of a person residing abroad, it must be a document executed by the Principal before the Notary Public and attested and authenticated by the Notary Public after due proof of the identity of the person making the document. He relied further upon the ruling in Dottie Karan v. Lachmi Prasad Sinha, 58 Ind App 58 = (AIR 1931 PC 52) and contended that if a power of attorney under which a document was presented and got registered, were found to be defective, then the registration would be of no consequence, because the registering officer would lack jurisdiction to register the document.

5. These are the stages by which Mr. Hardev Singh contended that registration in this case was ineffective, that the vendees derived no title and therefore they had no title to claim redemption either under the Punjab Redemption of Mortgages Act or otherwise. These contentions were also raised in the High Court and the two Courts below, but were concurrently rejected.

6. It is plain that presentation for registration could be, either by the Principal or by a duly constituted attorney. It is equally plain that a proper power of attorney duly authenticated as required by law had to be made before power could be conferred on another either to execute the document or to present it for registration. That indeed is the law.

7. The short question in this case is whether Mr. Chawla possessed such a power of attorney for executing the document and for presentation of it for registration. Now, if we were to take into account the first power of attorney which was executed in his favour on May 30, 1963, we would be forced to say that it did not comply with the requirements of the law and was ineffective to clothe Mr. Chawla with the authority to execute the sale deed or to present it for registration. That power of attorney was not authenticated as required by Section 33 of the Indian Registration Act which in the case of an Indian residing abroad, requires that the document should be authenticated by a Notary Public. The document only bore the signature of a witness without anything to show that he was a Notary Public. In any event there was no authentication by the Notary Public (if he was one) in the manner which the law would consider adequate. The second power of attorney however does show that it was executed before a proper Notary Public who complied with the laws of California and authenticated the document as required by that law. We are satisfied that that power of attorney is also duly authenticated in accordance with our laws. The only complaint is that the Notary Public did not say in his endorsement that Mr. Chawla had been identified to his satisfaction. But that flows from the fact that he endorsed on the document that it had been subscribed and sworn before him. There is a presumption of regularity of official acts and we are satisfied that he must have satisfied himself in the discharge of his duties that the person who was executing it was the proper person. This makes the second power of attorney valid and effective both under Section 85 of the Indian Evidence Act and Section 33 of the Indian Registration Act.

8. The only question is whether the second power of attorney was effective to render valid the transaction of sale and the registration of the document both earlier than the power of attorney. In our judgment, it would be so. Mr. Hardev Singh does not read into this matter the fact of ratification by Vernon Seth Chotia of his earlier power of attorney. The second power of attorney states in express terms that the first power of attorney was defective and was being ratified. Vernon Seth Chotia also stated in the second power of attorney that the act of Mr. Chawla would be his act which included not only the making of the document but also the presentation of that document. Now the law is quite clear that ratification relates back to the original act provided there is a disclosed principal and this has been stated nowhere better than by Lord Macnaghten in Keighley Maxsted and Co. v. Durant, 1901 AC 241 at pp. 246, 247, quoting Tindal, C. J. in Wilson v. Tumman, (1843) 6 M & G 236 at p. 242.

"That an act done, for another, by a person though without any precedent authority whatever, becomes the act of the principal, if subsequently ratified by him, is the known and well established rule of law. In that case the principal is bound by the act, whether it be for his detriment or his advantage, and whether it be founded on a tort or on a contract, to the same effect as be, and with all the consequences which follow from, the same act done by his previous authocity. And so by a wholesome and convenient fiction, a person ratifying the act of another, who, without authority has made a contract openly and avowedly on his behalf, is deemed to be, though in fact he was not, a party to the contract".

Relation back of an act of ratification was expressly accepted in this case. Other cases have been summarised in the manual of the Law and Practice of Power of Attorney issued by the Council of Chartered Institute of Secretaries. This follows from the maxim of law "Omnis ratihabitio retrotrahitur et mandato priori aequiparatur" that is to say, ratification is thrown back to the date of the act done, and the agent is put in the same position as if he had authority to do the act at the time the act was done by him. The learned authors quote the case of the House of Lords which we have above cited and add to it certain other cases with which we do not consider necessary to encumber this judgment.

9. It therefore follows that the second power of attorney was a valid document and it authorised Mr. Chawla to execute the document as well as to present it for registration. This being a document ratifying a former inconclusive act related back to the time when the first document was made and cured the illegality in the presentation for registration which had taken place.

10. The case of the Privy Council on which great reliance was placed, namely, 58 Ind App 58 = (AIR 1931 PC 52) (cit. supra) no doubt states that presentation by a person who is not properly authorised by a power of attorney is ineffective and the registration void, but there the Judicial Committee was not considering the case of a subsequent ratification. They were only concerned with an invalid document and nothing more. If there had been ratification, the other principle to which we have adverted here would have been taken note of and the decision would probably have been different.

11. In these circumstances, we are satisfied that there was proper execution of the document and registration. It is hardly necessary in view of our decision, to say anything more about this case. We are also satisfied that the appellants were not entitled to a declaration. We have reproduced the paragraph in which the reliefs were asked in the plaint. It will be noticed that they neither asked for the cancellation of the order of the Collector nor for any injunction, two of the reliefs which they were entitled to ask in the case in addition to the declaration. Such a suit would be hit by Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act and we would be quite in a position to deny them the declaration without these specific reliefs. Indeed they had only to ask for the setting aside of the order.

12. Further, this is obviously an unmeritorious suit on the part of the mortgagees. They are after all mortgagees and redemption has been offered to them by a person who is the son of the original mortgagor and who has resorted to the quick remedy of the Redemption Act, for getting the mortgage redeemed. This mortgage took place as far back as 1923 and we are now in the year 1970. It is obvious that over the years this property must have appreciated considerably in value. The intention of the mortgagees is to retain the property as long as they can by raising technical objections in the way of the mortgagors seeking to redeem it. Further again the appellants as plaintiffs in the case joined the transferees from Vernon Seth Chotia but made no attempt to join Vernon Seth Chotia, the son of the original mortgagor. The suit could be only properly framed with all the parties before the Court. In our opinion, even if Vernon Seth Chotia was not a necessary party, he was at least a proper party. If he had been brought before the court, we would have known from him whether he had given the authority to execute the document and he could have adopted the act of Sardar Chawla by ratifying it again. The suit was not properly framed. For all these reasons, the appeal has no merits and it fails and will be dismissed with costs.

13. We are surprised to note that the learned Judge in the High Court did not award costs. Normally costs should follow the event and it is not the rule that costs should be left to be borne to the parties. Here a case was decided against one of the parties in a contentious matter, and costs should have been awarded.

Appeal dismissed.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 311 (2) — 'Reduction in rank' means reduction from a higher to a lower rank or post and not merely losing places in rank or cadre — For punishment of forfeiture of approved service resulting in loss of higher salary or reducing chances of promotion to higher post remedy lies under relevant service rules and not under Article 311 (2) — AIR 1959 Orissa 167, Overruled; AIR 1958 SC 36, Relied on; Case law discussed. (Paras 9 and 13)

(B) Civil Services — Punjab Police Service Rules (1959), Rule 16.1 — 'Reduction' and 'forfeiture of approved service for increment' are two distinct and separate punishments — Second show cause notice is essential under Rule 16.24, Clause (ix) only in case of dismissal or reduction in rank — Punishment of forfeiture of approved service imposed on a constable reducing his salary to the starting point in the time-scale is not a reduction in rank.

Mr. V. C. Mahajan, Advocate, for Appellant; Mr. A. K. Nag, Advocate, for Respondent.

SHELAT, J.: — The respondent was at all material times a constable in the Punjab Police Service and was posted at Ambala. In November, 1960, he was served with a charge-sheet attributing to him arrogance towards his superior officers and indiscipline. A departmental enquiry was admittedly held in accordance with the procedure laid down therefor in the Punjab Police Rules, 1934. The said charges having been held to have been proved, an order followed forfeiting his entire service with permanent effect. This meant bringing down his salary to Rs. 45/- per month, which would be the salary payable to a constable at the starting point of his service. An appeal by him before the Deputy Inspector-General having failed, he filed a suit in the Court of Sub-Judge, Ambala.

2. The suit was on the basis that the said order amounted to reduction in rank, that therefore, Article 311 (2) of the Constitution was attracted and that no show cause notice against the action proposed against him having been served upon him before the said order was passed, the order was vitiated and was bad. The Trial Court accepted this contention and decreed the suit. An appeal by the appellant-State failed as the District Judge, relying on Rupnarain Singh v. State of Orissa, AIR 1959 Orissa 167, held that the said order amounted to reduction in rank and the respondent was therefore entitled to the procedural safeguards laid down in Article 311 (2). A second appeal by the State before the High Court was summarily rejected. Hence, this appeal founded on special leave granted by this Court.

3. The only question arising in this appeal, the facts not being in dispute, is whether the order forfeiting the respondent's service, which meant reducing his salary to the starting point in the time-scale for constables, amounted to reduction in rank within the meaning of Article 311 (2). The respondent being a constable, there was no question of his being reduced from a higher post or rank to a lower post or rank. The order, none-the-less, reduced the emoluments received by him as it deprived him of the increments earned by him as a result of the approved service, he had put in, having been forfeited. It also affected his seniority, and therefore, chances of promotion. The question is, whether for that reason the order is tantamount to reduction in rank attracting Article 311 (2).

4. Rule 1.13 of the Punjab Police Service Rules (hereinafter referred to as the Rules) provides that a "Gazetted Police Officer" means a police officer appointed under Section 4 of Article V of 1861, and includes the Inspector-General, Deputy Inspectors-General, Assistant Inspectors-General, Superintendents, Assistant Superintendents and Deputy Superintendents. The expression "enrolled police officer" means police officers appointed under Section 7 of the said Act and includes inspectors, sergeants, sub-inspectors, assistant sub-inspectors, head constables and constables. The expression "upper subordinate" includes all enrolled police officers of and above the rank of assistant sub-inspector, and the expression "lower subordinate" includes all other enrolled police officers. There is thus a hierarchy in the Police Service of the State comprised of several posts, the post of a constable being the last rung in the ladder. Rule 13.1, which deals with promotion of police officers from one rank to another, provides that such promotions from one rank to another and from one grade to another in the same rank shall be made by selection tempered by seniority. Cl. 3 of that rule lays down that for purposes of regulating promotion amongst enrolled police officers, six promotion lists, A, B, C, D, E and F should be maintained. Lists A, B, C and D are meant to regulate promotion to the selection grade of constables and to the rank of head constables and assistant sub-inspectors. List E regulates promotion to the rank of sub-inspector and List F regulates promotion to the rank of Inspector. Rule 13.5 deals with promotion of constables to selection grade and Rule 13.6 provides that a list, called List A, shall be maintained by each Superintendent of Police of Constables eligible under Rule 13.5 for promotion to the selection grade of constables. Rule 13.7 provides for a list, called List B, divided into two parts, namely, selection grade constables considered suitable as candidates for the Lower School course at the Police Training School, and constables, selection or time-scale, considered suitable for drill and other special courses at the Police Training School. Rule 13.8 lays down that promotion to the post of head constable has to be made in accordance with the principle described in sub-rules (1) and (2) of Rule 13.1. Rule 13.8-A provides that infliction of any major punishment would be a bar to admission to or retention in lists A, B or C. Rule 16.1 lays down diverse punishments which can be awarded to members of the service in accordance with the provisions contained in these Rules. These punishments are: (1) dismissal, (2) reduction, (3) stoppage of increment or forfeiture of approved service for increment, (4) entry of censure, (5) confinement to quarters for a period not exceeding 15 days, (6) extra guards, fatigue or other duty, and punishment drill for certain days. Under Rule 16.1 (3), a major punishment means any authorised punishment of reduction, withholding of increments, forfeiture of approved service, dismissal and every judicial conviction on a criminal charge. Rule 16.4 defines 'reduction' and provides that a police officer may be reduced (a) to a lower rank (except in the case of sergeants and of constables on the time-scale), (b) from the selection grade of a rank to the time-scale of the same rank, (c) if in a graded rank to a lower position in the seniority list of his grade or to a lower grade in his rank. Rule 16.5 provides that the increment of a police officer on a time-scale may be withheld as a punishment. Clause (2) of that rule provides that approved service for increment may be forfeited, either temporarily or permanently, and such forfeiture may entail either the deferment of an increment or increments or a reduction in pay. It further provides that the order must state whether the forfeiture of approved service is to be permanent, or, if not, the period for which it has been forfeited. Thus, under Rr. 16.4 and 16.5 the two punishments of reduction and forfeiture of service are two distinct punishments. Rule 16.24 lays down the procedure to be followed in departmental enquiries. Clause (ix) of that Rule clearly provides that it is only in the case of an order of dismissal or reduction in rank that a second show cause notice against the proposed action against a police officer has to be served before an order is passed against him. Such a second show cause notice is, therefore, not required to be served in the case of other major or minor punishments. There is no dispute that in the present case the procedure laid down in these Rules and applicable to the respondent was followed.

5. The contention, however, was that though the Rules distinguish the two punishments of reduction and forfeiture of service and treat them as distinct, there were certain decisions of this Court which have held that for an order to amount to reduction in rank within the meaning of Art. 311 (2) it was not necessary that it must actually reduce a Government servant from a higher to a lower post or rank, and that even if the order affected adversely his seniority or chances of promotion within the rank or cadre to which he belongs, it would still constitute reduction in rank.

6. Parshottam Lal Dhingra v. Union of India, 1958 SCR 828 = (AIR 1958 SC 36) was one such case on which counsel leaned heavily. But the question there was whether the reversion of the appellant from Class II service, wherein he was at the relevant time officiating, to Class III service to which he permanently belonged, amounted to punishment, and therefore, attracted Art. 311 (2). The decision laid down the principle that reduction in rank would be punishment if it carried with it penal consequences and that the two tests to be applied were (1) whether the servant had the right to the post or rank, and (2) whether evil consequences, such as forfeiture of pay or allowances, loss of seniority in his substantive rank, stoppage or postponement of future chances of promotion followed as a result of reduction in rank. The appellant in that case was holding an officiating post and had therefore no right under the Railway Code to continue in it. The Court held that since under the general law such appointment was terminable at any time on reasonable notice, the reduction could not operate as a forfeiture of any right, and therefore, the order could not be said to have visited him with any evil consequences. Consequently, it did not amount to reduction in rank by way of punishment. The decision also laid down that the words "dismissal", "removal" and "reduction in rank" used in Article 311 (2) were words of art, having technical meanings, they having been adopted from service rules prevailing earlier, such as Classification Rules of 1920 and 1930, and having therefore acquired well-known meanings. Under those rules, dismissal, removal and reduction in rank were major punishments providing special procedural protection. On examination of the history of the service rules, Section 96B (i) of the Government of India Act, 1915 and Section 240 of the 1935 Act, the Court held that "both at the date of the commencement of the 1935 Act and of our Constitution the words "dismissed", "removed" and "reduced in rank", as used in the service rules, were well understood as signifying or denoting the three major punishments which could be inflicted on Government servants". The decision concluded that "the principle is that when a servant has right to a post or to a rank either under the terms of the contract of employment, express or implied, or under the rules governing the conditions of his service, the termination of the service of such a servant or the reduction to a lower post is by itself and prima facie a punishment, for it operates as a forfeiture of his right to hold that post or that rank and to get the emoluments and other benefits attached thereto." The passage in the judgment emphasised before us was:

"A reduction in rank likewise may be by way of punishment or it may be an innocuous thing. If the Government servant has a right to a particular rank, then the very reduction from that rank will operate as a penalty, for he will then lose the emoluments and privileges of that rank. If, however, he has no right to the particular rank, his reduction from an officiating higher rank to his substantive lower rank will not ordinarily be a punishment. But the mere fact that the servant has no title to the post or the rank and the Government has, by contract, express or implied, or under the rules, the right to reduce him to a lower post does not mean that an order of reduction of a servant to a lower post or rank cannot in any circumstances be a punishment. The real test for determining whether the reduction in such cases is or is not by way of punishment is to find out if the order for the reduction also visits the servant with any penal consequences." According to this decision, reduction in rank within the meaning of Art. 311 (2) means reduction from a higher to a lower rank or post in the hierarchy of the service to which a Government servant seeking protection of that article belongs and not reduction in the same rank, e.g., losing places in seniority in the rank to which he belongs.

7. Shri Madhav Laxman Vaidkunthe v. State of Mysore, (1962) 1 SCR 886 = (AIR 1962 SC 8) another decision relied on by counsel, was a case of a Mamlatdar, officiating as a District Deputy Collector. His reversion from the officiating post to his permanent post was held to be punishment attracting Article 311 (2). This was a clear case of reduction in rank as the reversion brought down the appellant from a higher to a lower post. It did not merely affect his seniority or the stage at which he was in the time-scale to which he belonged in the hierarchy of service.

8. The decision in point really is the High Court, Calcutta v. Amal Kumar Roy, (1963) 1 SCR 437 = (AIR 1962 SC 1704) where the respondent, a Munsif, was excluded by the High Court from consideration for the post of a Subordinate Judge for a year thereby depriving him eight places in the cadre of Subordinate Judges when he was appointed an Additional Subordinate Judge. The respondent's contention was that such an exclusion amounted to withholding of promotion or reduction in rank. The first part of the contention was rejected on the ground that he had no right to promotion and the second on the ground that deprivation of eight places in seniority in the same rank did not constitute reduction in rank. This decision was followed in Shitla S. Srivastava v. North Eastern Railway, (1966) 3 SCR 61 = (AIR 1966 SC 1197) where it was held that the removal of the appellant's name from a provisional panel of persons for consideration for higher posts did not attract Article 311 (2) as it did not amount to reduction in rank. The Court held that the expression "rank" in Article 311 (2) had reference to a person's classification and not his particular place in the same cadre in the hierarchy of the service to which he belongs.

9. It is thus clear that reduction in rank within the meaning of Article 311 (2), as the expression itself suggests, means reduction from a higher to a lower rank or post and not merely losing places in the rank or cadre to which the Government servant belongs, and consequently, his seniority within such cadre or rank. This would be so, even if as a result of the Government's action he loses a higher salary or his chances of promotion to a higher post are reduced. For such action, the remedy would be under the rules governing the service and not under Article 311 (2) as such action does not amount to reduction in rank as understood for the purposes of Article 311 (2).

10. Counsel for the respondent, however, argued that there were other decisions which have held otherwise and assisted him. P. C. Wadhwa v. Union of India, (1964) 4 SCR 598 = (AIR 1964 SC 423) was one such decision which, he thought, assisted him. In that case, the appellant was officiating in the senior time-scale and was posted at Ferozepore as an Additional Superintendent of Police. In July, 1958, he was reverted to his substantive post. The reason for the reversion was that he was tried as a Superintendent of Police and was found to be immature. The record showed that the reversion was not due to the return of the permanent incumbent from leave or deputation or for any other administrative reason and other officers junior to him continued in the senior time-scale while he was reverted. The record also revealed that an enquiry was not resorted to only for the reason that it would take a long time. His contention in these circumstances was that his reversion amounted to reduction in rank. That was accepted because it would seem from the facts that the reversion was from senior time-scale to junior time-scale of the service. Though both the posts were cadre posts in the Police Service, the reversion was from the post of the Additional Superintendent of Police to one of Assistant Superintendent of Police, the former obviously being a post higher than the latter. Although both the posts were in the same cadre, promotion from the junior to the senior time-scale was by seniority. It is clear, therefore, that appointment of one in the junior time-scale to a post in the senior time-scale was promotion, and therefore, appointment to a higher post. Such is not, however, the position in the instant case.

11. Debesh Chandra Das v. Union of India, AIR 1970 SC 77 was another decision relied upon by Mr. Nag. The appellant there was the Chief Secretary of Assam and a member of the Indian Civil Service. He was appointed a Secretary in the Union Government, a tenure post, the tenure period of which was to expire in July, 1969. In September, 1966, he was asked to choose between reversion to the service of his parent State or compulsory retirement. He complained against the order by a writ petition contending that the order was a stigma and amounted to reduction in rank, which, therefore, could not be passed without undergoing the procedure laid down in Article 311 (2). His appointment as the Secretary at the Centre was not by way of deputation but was by way of appointment to a tenure post. This Court held, on an examination of the rules, that cadres for the Indian Administrative Services were to be found in the States only, that there were no cadres in the Government of India, that a few of them were, however, intended to serve at the Centre and when they did so, they enjoyed better emoluments and better status. Such an appointment, the Court held, meant promotion to a higher post. In the circumstances, the order amounted to the appellant's reduction from a higher to a lesser rank. This, again was a case where the Government servant was reverted from a post higher than the post of the Chief Secretary, Assam, and not a reduction in the same time-scale post or deprivation of places in the same time-scale post thereby adversely affecting his seniority therein or chances of promotion.

12. The decision of the High Court of Orissa in AIR 1959 Orissa 167 would apparently assist the respondent, for the impugned order there was similar to the one in the instant case. That order directed that the petitioner, who was then serving as a forester, be reduced to the lowest scale of Rs. 50/- in the scale of pay of Rs. 50-2-70 fixed for the foresters. The High Court upheld the contentions of the petitioner, viz., (1) that the order was punishment, and (2) that it amounted to reduction in rank within the meaning of Section 240 (3) of the 1935 Act and Article 311 (2). These conclusions were reached on two premises. The first was that Rule 2 of the Bihar and Orissa Subordinate Services Discipline and Appeal Rules in Clause (iii) provided, amongst others, the punishment of "reduction to a lower post or time scale or to a lower stage in the time-scale". Following the decision in Afzalur Rahman v. Emperor, AIR 1943 FC 18 where the Court had observed that in construing Section 240 of the 1935 Act, the longstanding service practice based on statutory rules in force long before the passing of the 1935 Act, and which were continued in force by that Act, should be considered, the High Court held that the expression "reduction in rank" in Section 240 (3) must also include reduction to a lower stage in the time-scale as Rule 2 (iii) had treated reduction to a lower post and "reduction to a lower stage in the time-scale" as one kind of punishment. Such a reasoning does not apply to the present case because Rule 16.1 of the Punjab Police Rules makes a clear distinction between "reduction" and stoppage of increment or forfeiture of approved service for increment, the two being distinct and separate punishments permissible under that Rule. The second premise upon which the High Court reached the said conclusions rested on the observations in Dhingra's case, 1958 SCR 828 = (AIR 1958 SC 36) wherein this Court laid down the criterion to judge whether an order is a punishment or not by observing that it would be punishment if the order entailed or provided for forfeiture of pay or allowances or loss of seniority in his substantive rank, or stoppage or postponement of his future chances of promotion. The passage relied on by the High Court laid down determinants for treating an order as one of punishment and not a test for reduction in rank. As already stated, in Dhingra's case, 1958 SCR 828 = (AIR 1958 SC 36) the impugned order was held to be one of reduction in rank because the appellant there was reduced from Class II to Class III service, i. e., from a higher to a lower post, the time-scales of the two posts being different. The reduction of rank was held not to be a punishment because the appellant was not entitled to the better post wherein he was merely officiating and therefore did not visit him with any evil consequences. The observations relied on by the High Court thus related to the question whether the impugned order was one of punishment and not for deciding whether it amounted to a reduction in rank and were, therefore, not apposite. The basis for the second premise of the High Court, therefore, was not correct and therefore, cannot help the respondent.

13. The aforesaid analysis of the decisions leads us to the conclusion that the expression "reduction in rank" in Article 311 (2) has to be construed according to the well-established meaning it has acquired, as in the case of the other two expressions, namely, 'dismissal' and 'removal' in that article, under the various service rules and the provisions in that regard in the Constitution Acts of 1915 and 1935. The expression "reduction in rank" in the article, therefore, means reduction from a higher to a lower rank or post when imposed as a penalty. Therefore, an order forfeiting the past service which has earned a Government servant increments in the post or rank he holds, howsoever adverse it is to him, affecting his seniority within the rank to which he belongs or his future chances of promotion, does not attract the article. His remedy, therefore, is confined to the rules of service governing his post. In our view, neither Parshotam Lal Dhingra's case, 1958 SCR 828 = AIR 1958 SC 36) nor Rupnarain Singh's case, AIR 1959 Orissa 167 assists the respondent, as the first does not lay down what he contended and the second was not correctly decided.

14. The result is that the State's appeal succeeds and must be allowed. Consequently, the respondent's suit has to be dismissed. In the circumstances of the case, however, there will be no order as to costs.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Appeal No. 264 of 1967, D/- 2-12-1970.

(A) Interpretation of Statutes — Conferment of specific power without prejudice to generality of general power already specified — Specific power is only illustrative and does not restrict general power in any way. AIR 1945 PC 156, Rel. on; AIR 1970 SC 1978, Dist. (Para 5)

(B) Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act (1954), Sections 19, 24, 22 — Section Officer-cum-Managing Officer can cancel under Section 19, allotment based on oral verification if relevant revenue records justify such course — Chief Settlement Commissioner can also cancel such allotment under Section 24.

On the basis of an oral verification some land was allotted to a person. Subsequently the Section Officer-cum-Managing Officer, relying on Fard Taqsim and Khasra Girdawari, discovered that an area of some acres was in excess of what the allottee was entitled to. He cancelled the allotment to the extent of the excess. The appellate authority in appeal against that order referred the matter to the Chief Settlement Commissioner who acting under Section 24 cancelled the order of allotment to the extent of the excess. He also relied on Fard Taqsim and Khasra Girdawari. The appeal was thereafter dismissed.

Held, the oral verification was subject to correction, variation and cancellation if revenue records justified such a course. The Fard Taqsim was an important revenue record and the Section Officer-cum-Managing Officer as well as the Chief Settlement Commissioner were right in placing reliance on the Fard Taqsim and Khasra Girdawari. Both of them had jurisdiction to cancel the allotment under Sections 19 and 24 respectively. The appellate authority was also right

P. JAGANMOHAN REDDY, J: —

This appeal is against the order of cancellation of the allotment made in favour of the Appellant's father in 1948 under the Displaced Persons (Compensation and Rehabilitation) Act, 1954 (hereinafter called the Act) in the following circumstances:

After the partition of India in 1947 the Appellant's father Shri Ram Chander filed a claim in respect of the land which was owned and left behind by him in Pakistan. In respect of this claim land measuring 49.2 Standard acres was allotted to him in village Pasina Kalan, Tehsil Panipat, District Karnal. Soon thereafter the Appellant's father, after this allotment died in 1948 leaving the Appellants and their brother Shri Ved Prakash as the only legal heirs. After the proprietary rights were conferred upon the Appellants, Ved Prakash sold his share of the land to Appellants Nos. 2 and 3 by Registered sale deed dated 27th November, 1957. It appears that the Section Officer-cum-Managing Officer, Department of Rehabilitation, Jullundur Respondent No. 4 while verifying the claim discovered that an area of 15-17½ standard acres was in excess of what the Appellants were actually entitled to, having regard to the nature of the land left by their father in Pakistan which was not wholly canal irrigated but comprised of Banjar Jadid, Banjar Qadim and Ghair Mumkin land and accordingly he reopened the allotment and cancelled it to the extent of the excess. Against this order the appellants filed an appeal to Respondent 3 challenging the jurisdiction of Respondent 4, the Section Officer-cum-Managing Officer to pass an order cancelling permanent rights conferred on them. Respondent 3 however referred the matter to Respondent 2—the Chief Settlement Commissioner, Punjab on 31-7-1964 who acting under Section 24 (1) of the Act cancelled the order of allotment to the extent of 15-17½ standard acres out of the area allotted to Appellant's father. Thereafter the appeal filed by the Appellants was dismissed by Respondent 3 as infructuous. A revision against the order of the Respondent 2 was preferred to the Central Government under Section 33 of the Act which was also rejected on the 27th May 1966. The Appellants thereafter filed a Writ Petition in the High Court of Punjab for the issuance of a writ of certiorari for quashing the orders passed by the Respondents 1 to 4 which was dismissed in limine by a Bench of that Court on the 28th July 1966. Subsequently another Bench of the same Court however, granted a certificate to appeal to this Court under Article 133 of the Constitution of India in as much as following the Judgment of this Court in Ramesh v. Gendalal Motilal Patnik, AIR 1966 SC 1445, it was held that the order of dismissal in limine was a final order and the value of the subject matter in dispute being Rs. 20,000/- the Appellant was declared to be entitled to the grant of a certificate to appeal as a matter of right.

2. It is contended before us by Shri Bhamari Lal learned Advocate for the Appellants that once proprietary rights have been conferred upon the Appellants in respect of the entire area of the land which is allotted to them, the Section Officer-cum-Managing Officer had no jurisdiction to cancel the allotment and if this is so the High Court ought to have quashed that order in exercise of the jurisdiction vested in it under Article 226 of the Constitution of India. It is also contended that Respondent 3 was not justified in making a reference to Respondent 2 for cancelling the proprietary rights conferred upon the Appellants because if Respondent 4 had no jurisdiction to cancel the order, he had also no jurisdiction to cancel the allotment except to cancel the order of Respondent 4. Further the reference made by Respondent 3 to Respondent 2 is equally bad because under Sec. 19 of the Act read with Rule 102 of the Displaced Persons Compensation & Rehabilitation Rules, it is for the Section Officer-cum-Managing Officer Respondent 4 to refer the matter to Respondent 2, as such the reference by Respondent 3 to Respondent 2 is bad in law.

3. Lastly it was contended that the authorities were in error in holding that there was no material for them to hold that the land which was owned by the Appellant's father in Pakistan was not canal irrigated land because the first Fard Taqsim received from the Pakistan authorities did not even show the name of the Appellant's father as owner of any land in Pakistan and when the second Fard Taqsim was received by the Rehabilitation authorities from Pakistan they did show the Appellant's father as owner of the land but Khasra Girdawari which was received with it did not show the entire land as canal irrigated. In these circumstances it was urged that no reliance could be placed upon these contradictory documents which were sent by Pakistan authorities from time to time. The learned Advocate also contended that the best evidence which could have shown the classification of the land owned by the Appellant's father was the 'Shud Kar' entries of the canal Department which would corroborate the Appellant's contention that the entire land was canal irrigated but when these documents were sent for, the Pakistan authorities said that the 'Shud Kar' had been destroyed and subsequently the Deputy Commissioner for India in Pakistan had informed that the Pakistan authorities were not co-operative in supplying the entries in 'Shud Kar'. It was also contended by the learned Advocate that the Jamabandi papers which are the most important Revenue records ought to have been looked into instead of the Fard Taqsim and the Khasra Girdawari and if so examined the Jamabandi papers would have shown that the land which the Appellant's father owned was canal land.

4. It is not denied that the Appellant's father obtained the allotment on the basis of an oral verification of his claim under 3 categories — Quasi permanent, Temporary and Reserve. This oral verification is subject to correction, variation and cancellation if subsequently relevant revenue records which were called for from the Pakistan authorities justified such a course. The Section Officer-cum-Managing Officer could therefore under Section 19 of the Act cancel any allotment or terminate any lease or amend the terms of any lease or allotment under which any evacuee property was allotted. The Chief Settlement Commissioner had also the powers under sub-section (1) of Section 24 of the Act to call for the records at any time of the proceedings under the Act in which an officer specified therein has passed an order, for the purpose of satisfying himself as to the legality or propriety of any such order and may pass such order in relation thereto as he thinks fit. Sub-section (2) further provides as follows:

"Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing power under sub-section (1), if the Chief Settlement Commissioner is satisfied that any order for payment of compensation to a displaced person or any lease or allotment granted to such a person has been obtained by him by means of fraud, false representation or concealment of any material fact, then, notwithstanding anything contained in this Act, the Chief Settlement Commissioner may pass an order directing that no compensation shall be paid to such a person or reducing the amount of compensation to be paid to him, or as the case may be, cancelling the lease or allotment granted to him; and if it is found that a displaced person has been paid compensation which is not payable to him, or which is in excess of the amount payable to him, such amount or excess, as the case may be, may, on a certificate issued by the Chief Settlement Commissioner, be recovered in the same manner as an arrear of land revenue".

5. It is therefore contended relying on sub-section (2) that inasmuch as no fraud or false representation or concealment of any material fact has been alleged or proved in this case, the Chief Settlement Commissioner cannot exercise the revisionary power under Section 24. This contention in our view has no validity. It is a well-established proposition of law that where a specific power is conferred without prejudice to the generality of the general powers already specified, the particular power is only illustrative and does not in any way restrict the general power. The Federal Court had in Talpade's case indicated the contrary but the Privy Council in King Emperor v. Sibnath Banerjee, 72 Ind App 241 = (AIR 1945 PC 156) observed at page 258:

"Their Lordships are unable to agree with the learned Chief Justice of the Federal Court on his statement of the relative positions of sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 2 of the Defence of India Act, and counsel for the respondents in the present appeal was unable to support that statement, or to maintain that Rule 26 was invalid. In the opinion of their Lordships, the function of sub-section (2) is merely an illustrative one; the rule-making power is conferred by sub-section (1), and "the rules" which are referred to in the opening sentence of sub-section (2) are the rules which are authorized by, and made under, sub-section (1); the provisions of sub-section (2) are not restrictive of sub-section (1), as, indeed is expressly stated by the words "without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by sub-section (1)".

6. The decision of this Court in Estate Development Ltd. v. Union of India, (1970) 1 SCJ 927 = (AIR 1970 SC 1978) did not consider this aspect of the matter and was only concerned with sub-sec. (2) of Section 24 and consequently it is not of much assistance to the Appellants.

7. In this view the contention of the learned Advocate that neither the Section Officer-cum-Managing Officer under Section 19 nor the Chief Settlement Commissioner under Section 24 had jurisdiction to revise their earlier orders, has no force, nor is there any justification in the contention that Respondent 3 could not refer the matter to the Chief Settlement Commissioner for him to exercise the power under Section 24 (1) of the Act.

8. On the merits of the case there is no doubt that the initial allotment was made on the assumption that the land belonging to the Appellant's father which was left in Pakistan was canal land but as it turned out from the records which the Department of Rehabilitation obtained from the Pakistan Government the lands owned by the Appellants were not entirely canal land but there were included in it Banjar Jadid, Banjar

Qadim and Ghair Mumkin land, which did not entitle the Appellant's father to allotment of 49.2 Standard Acres but to a lesser extent. In other words the allotment made to the Appellant's father initially was 15-17½ standard acres in excess of the extent to which he was entitled. The Appellant, however, as already stated contests this finding. The learned Advocate on their behalf has urged before us that Fard Taqsim and Khasra Girdawari had not correctly indicated either the extent of the land or its classification. We do not think this contention is tenable. The Chief Settlement Commissioner has in his order dated the 22nd February 1965 stated that the second Fard Taqsim and also Khasra Girdawari of 1946-47 showing the class of soil abandoned in Pakistan was verified after inspection from the original records from the Pakistan authorities and also by the officials of the Indian Government. The Chief Settlement Commissioner proceeded to observe that on the basis of second Fard Taqsim and the latest Khasra Girdawari supplied by the Pakistan Government it was found that the entire land abandoned by Shri Ram Chand was not canal irrigated in spite of the fact that the total area of land abandoned by him in Chak No. 708/GB was 51-7-8 A. K. M. The kind of soil as found out from the Fard Taqsim was as under:

Nehri	29-6-16 A.K.M.
Banjar Jadid	14-6-12 -do-
Banjar Qadim	6-7-15
Ghair Mumkin	0-2-5

9. On the basis of this information the Appellant will be entitled to only 33-10½ standard acres and consequently there is an excess allotment to the extent of 15-17½ standard acres. The Chief Settlement Commissioner also pointed out that on four occasions the authorities concerned being moved by the Appellants had sought for and obtained information and in so far as 'Shud Kars' are concerned they were informed that they were destroyed after 6 years and that no 'Shud kars' were available for the year 1947 or before and on the 4th occasion when again information was sought for with respect to these Shud Kar as stated earlier the Deputy Commissioner for India in Pakistan had replied that the Pakistan authorities were not co-operative in such matters.

10. It may be observed that nowhere was it urged that neither the Fard Taqsim nor the Khasra Girdawari were not important revenue records nor that they do not disclose the classification of the land or source of irrigation. What was urged was that the records sent by the Pakistan Government were not reliable. We do not think that the contention that Fard Taqsim and Khasra Girdawari are not important documents is justified nor can it be said that it is not possible to say what is the nature, extent or quality of the land. The learned Advocate has referred us to page 49 of Land Resettlement Manual by Tirlok Singh which is said to be a standard work. It is therein stated that for class of land the entry in the Jamabandis is to be followed strictly.

11. Even the earlier references in the book show that the entries in the Jamabandi did not give all the necessary details and therefore certain directions had to be given. It is also evidence that details regarding the extent distribution and classification of land could be obtained from Fard Taqsim which is also an important Revenue record.

12. A reference to the Punjab Land Revenue Act, 1887 would show that a Jamabandi is a Register of holding of owners and tenants prepared pursuant to Section 31 (2) of the Punjab Land Revenue Act, 1887. Under Sections 31 to 40 of the said Act record of rights and annual records are prepared. Jamabandi is part of the standing record maintained under Section 31 (2). A standing record is one framed at a settlement made before the said Act was passed or in pursuance of a notification issued under Section 32 of the Act and is considered to be a convenient way of distinguishing it from the annual record, an amended edition of the record-of-rights prepared for each estate yearly or at such intervals as the Financial Commissioner may prescribe in which all changes which have occurred since the standing record was framed are, or should be, incorporated. The form in which the Jamabandi is to be maintained is given in Land Revenue Rule 72 in which one of the particulars to be given in Column 6 is the "well or other means of irrigation" for the particular land. Khasra Girdawari is a harvest inspection book. This is given in the Punjab Land Records manual. Column 5 requires the class of land according to last Jamabandi to be shown. A new Khasra Girdawari will be brought into use when a new quadrennial Jamabandi has been prepared. While Fard Taqsim is prepared under the Rules for the preparation and maintenance of Fard Taqsim arazi matruka made in exercise of the powers conferred by Section 46 of the said Act. The Fard Taqsim arazi matruka of the village would show that Column 7 requires the "well or other sources of irrigation" to be stated, just in the same way as in the Jamabandi Col. 6. (The relevant particulars and forms of Jamabandi, Khasra Girdawari and Fard Taqsim are at pages 199-200, 361 to 367 and 305-306 respectively of the Punjab Land Revenue Act 1887-V Edition-1963 by Aggarawala). We are however, not concerned with the various aspects of these records as it is not necessary for us to consider them in this case except to the extent necessary namely to show that a Fard Taqsim is as important a document as Jamabandi and gives in so far as this case is concerned the relevant data for determining whether the land owned and left by the Appellant's father was entirely canal land. Both the Section Officer-cum-Managing Officer as well as the Chief Settlement Commissioner therefore, were right in placing reliance on the Fard Taqsim and Khasra Girdawari to come to the conclusion that the entire land belonging to the Appellant's father was not canal irrigated, and therefore, what was allotted was 15-17½ standard acres in excess.

13. Even from the order in Revision of the Central Government, Department of Rehabilitation dated 3-3-1966 it is apparent that the Appellants had again pressed before him similar contentions to those urged before the Chief Settlement Commissioner. Shri Nair in a detailed order while dismissing the revision observed:

"as regards the plea that yet another opportunity may be given to the petitioners to produce some documentary evidence I am of the opinion that in the circumstances explained by the Chief Settlement Commissioner (R) it will hardly serve any purpose as the Shud kar of the Canal Department on which they rely are reported to have been destroyed.

However, if there is any cogent documentary proof to establish that the entire land was Nehri, the petitioners can place it before the authorities concerned in order to get their account corrected. As matters stand at present which indicate that all possible efforts were made to obtain the information from Pakistan, I find no illegality or impropriety in the impugned order. The petition is devoid of force and is hereby rejected".

14. We consider this order to be fair and reasonable. There is no doubt that it is still open to the Appellants to avail of the opportunity afforded to them to procure and produce such material from which it can be established that the entries in the Fard Taqsim and Khasra Girdawari are not correct or that the lands owned by the Appellants' father were canal lands entitling the Appellants to an allotment of 49.2 standard acres. Till then no exception can be taken to the orders passed by the concerned authorities. The appeal therefore fails and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Further a certificate which does not set out the grounds in support of the order is defective. (Para 7)

Mr. S. V. Gupte, Sr. Advocate (Mr. Naunit Lal, Advocate, with him), for Appellant; Mr. D. Goburdhun, Advocate, for Respondent No. 2.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, C. J.: Raja Bahadur Harihar Prasad Narain Singh hereinafter called 'the Raja' settled in 1936 an area of 15 bighas of land in village Nanour Tauzi Nos. 11021 and 11163 out of his joint family estate upon Ambica Prasad and Harihar Prasad—hereinafter called "respondents 1 and 2". The Annual Jama of the land was Rs. 15/-. The appellant who is the son of the Raja filed in 1942 a suit for partition of the joint family estate. The suit was compromised. The appellant claims that the land settled upon respondents 1 and 2 were allotted to his share by that compromise. In 1946 the appellant dispossessed respondents 1 and 2 from the land settled upon them. Respondents 1 and 2 commenced an action in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Patna, against the appellant and his brother for a decree for possession of the land and for mesne profits. The appellant by his written statement denied the settlement and set up the plea by respondents 1 and 2, that he and the members of his family were at all relevant times in possession of the land and that he had not dispossessed respondents 1 and 2 as alleged.

2. The Trial Court decreed the suit holding that the land in "dispute was" settled upon the respondents 1 and 2 by the Raja and that the Respondents 1 and 2 were in possession of the land since that date and that they were wrongfully dispossessed by the appellant. The High Court in appeal confirmed the findings of the Trial Court and dismissed the appeal filed by the appellant. With certificate granted by the High Court under Article 135 of the Constitution, this appeal has been preferred.

3. The decision of the Trial Court which was confirmed by the High Court proceeded upon appreciation of evidence on questions of fact. Both the Courts have held that there was a settlement in favour of respondents 1 and 2 by the Raja, that Respondents 1 and 2 were in possession of the land since that date, and that they had been forcibly dispossessed of the land by the appellant. This Court normally does not interfere with concurrent findings on questions of fact and does not enter upon a re-appraisal of the evidence. No ground is made out before us for attempting a re-appraisal of the evidence.

4. It was urged that even on the findings recorded no decree could be passed in favour of respondents 1 and 2 because they had failed to establish that the lands were settled for legal necessity or for benefit to the estate of the joint family, and since respondents 1 and 2 had failed to make out any such case, the suit filed by respondents 1 and 2 must fail. In the written statement as originally filed, no plea was raised that the settlement amounted to an alienation not binding upon the other members. There was no issue on that question and obviously the Trial Court did not decide that question. The High Court was of the view that the settlement was beneficial to the estate as an act of prudent management by the Raja. The High Court relied upon several circumstances: the fact that respondents 1 and 2 were the gotias of the family of the appellant, that in respect of certain lands taken away from them no consideration had been paid, that all along respondents 1 and 2 helped the zamindar in a previous litigation and certain promises were made to them as reward for services rendered which till then were not rewarded and that respondents 1 and 2 used to perform the ceremony of Ghiudhari in the family. The High Court further held that the estate was a large one and was utilised for supporting those families which were loyal to the estate, and when lands were settled with such families "the Jama charges were practically nominal". In view of these circumstances the High Court held that the settlement made by the Raja was proved to be an act done for the benefit of the estate. We see no reason to disagree with that finding of the High Court.

5. In any event an alienation by the Manager of the joint Hindu family even without legal necessity is voidable and not void. On the findings of the Trial Court and confirmed by the High Court, respondents 1 and 2 were in possession of the land, since the year 1936. The appellant forcibly deprived respondents 1 and 2 of possession of the land. In the circumstances respondents 1 and 2 were entitled to be restored to possession of the land, unless the appellant in an action for partition of the joint family established his claim to the land in dispute. No such attempt was made by the appellant.

6. The appeal must therefore fail and is dismissed with costs.

7. It is necessary to invite the attention of the High Court that the certificate pursuant to which the appeal has been filed under Article 135 of the Constitution is plainly defective. The High Court merely recorded that "the value and nature of the case fulfilled the requirements of Article 135 of the Constitution and the case was a fit one for appeal to the Supreme Court under Article 133 (1) (a) or Article 133 (1) (c) of the Constitution". This Court has often pointed out that a certificate which does not set out the grounds in support of the order granting certificate is defective. Article 135 of the Constitution only invests the Supreme Court with jurisdiction in respect of any matter to which the provisions of Article 133 or Article 134 do not apply if jurisdiction and powers in relation to that matter were exercisable by the Federal Court immediately before the commencement of the Constitution under any existing law. Under Sections 109 and 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure an appeal did lie to the Federal Court if the conditions prescribed thereunder were fulfilled. But prima facie, the conditions of Sections 109 and 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure were not fulfilled. The value of the subject matter in the Court of First Instance was Rs. 5,250/-, and the judgment of the High Court was one of affirmance. The case raised no substantial question of law. In our judgment, the High Court committed a serious error in granting a certificate under Clauses (1) (a) and (1) (c) of Article 133 in this case.

Appeal dismissed.

M/s. R. L. Kohli and J. C. Talwar, Advocate, for Appellant; Mr. I. N. Shroff, Advocate, for Respondent.

SIKRI, J.: — This appeal by special leave is directed against the judgment of the High Court of Madhya Pradesh, Gwalior Bench, allowing the appeal of the State and convicting the appellant for having committed an offence punishable under Section 435, Indian Penal Code, and sentencing him to undergo imprisonment for one year. The only point involved in the present appeal is whether the appellant was a person of unsound mind within Section 84 of the Indian Penal Code at the time of the incident. The Magistrate held that he was not liable to punishment as he was insane at that time and did not know that he was doing anything wrong or anything contrary to law. The High Court, on the other hand, came to the conclusion that the case of the appellant did not fall within the exception created by S. 84, I. P. C.

2. It is now well settled that the crucial point of time at which unsoundness of mind should be established is the time when the crime is actually committed and the burden of proving this lies on the accused. (See State of Madhya Pradesh v. Ahmadullah, (1961) 3 SCR 583 = (AIR 1961 SC 998). In D. C. Thakkar v. State of Gujarat, (1964) 7 SCR 361 = (AIR 1964 SC 1563); it was laid down that "there is a rebuttable presumption that the accused was not insane, when he committed the crime, in the sense laid down by Section 84 of the Indian Penal Code: the accused may rebut it by placing before the Court all the relevant evidence oral, documentary or circumstantial, but the burden of proof upon him is no higher than that which rests upon a party to civil proceedings." It was further observed:

"The crucial point of time for ascertaining the state of mind of the accused is the time when the offence was committed. Whether the accused was in such a state of mind as to be entitled to the benefit of Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code can only be established from the circumstances which preceded, attended and followed the crime."

3. The learned counsel contends that if regard is had to the circumstances which preceded, attended and followed the crime it would be clear that the accused is entitled to the benefit of Section 84 of the Indian Penal Code.

4. The prosecution case is that on January 22, 1965, the appellant set fire to the grass lying in the khalyan of Nemichand at the time of the setting of the sun. He was caught at the spot while setting fire. On being asked why he did it the accused said, "I burnt it and do whatever you want". The accused was arrested on January 23, 1965, and he remained in police custody till February 2, 1965, when it was found that the accused needed medical examination, and accordingly the District Magistrate ordered that he be medically examined. No explanation has been given why he was kept in police custody all that time. There is no evidence either to indicate as to his condition from the time of his arrest to the time when his case was referred for medical examination. These facts were within the knowledge of the police and we should have expected that the prosecution would lead evidence regarding his condition during this time. Further, the police made it impossible for the appellant to prove his mental condition at the time of the incident by keeping him in their custody from January 23 to February 2, 1965, not having him examined and not sending him to judicial custody earlier where he would have been examined by the jail doctor.

5. On February 20, 1965, V. S. Vaidya, Assistant Surgeon, Civil Hospital, Vidisha, reported to the Jailor, Sub-Jail, Vidisha, as follows:

"Subject: In Ref. to your letter No. 295, dated 8-2-1965.

Sir,

Ratanlal Prisoner was kept under observation as indoor patient during this time. He was keeping silent, he never used to reply any question so in my opinion he should be refd. to some specialist for further investigation and needful". On February 22, 1965, Y. D. Kamran, Civil Surgeon, Vidisha, reported as follows:

"Shri Ratanlal, undertrial, was examined by me. He does not appear to be deaf or dumb, but is mentally retarded. He should be referred to Superintendent, Mental Hospital, Gwalior, for expert opinion".

On March 29, 1965, Dr. B. Shah, Psychiatrist and Superintendent, Mental Hospital, Gwalior, reported as follows:

"This is to certify that Shri Ratanlal s/o Kishanlal who has been kept under observation in this hospital from 18-3-1965 to 29-3-1965 is a person of unsound mind, in terms of Indian Lunacy Act, 1912. He is not dangerous and/or violent by reason of lunacy and thus unfit to be at large. The report is based on the following facts observed here:—

(1) Remains depressed.

(2) Does not talk.

(3) He is a case of Maniac depressive.

(4) Psychosis and needs treatment".

On April 28, 1965, another report was given that he was still a person of unsound mind in terms of Indian Lunacy Act, 1912, but was better though still confused, and further that treatment was being continued and it may take 4 to 6 weeks more for recovery.

6. The defence also led evidence as to his condition before the incident in question. Shyamlal, D. W. 1, son-in-law of the appellant stated that "the accused was not feeling well for 2-3 years. He was in such a condition that if he is sitting will remain sitting. If he is to go then he will go and if he wishes to fall in the river then he will fall. Such was the condition of his mind that he used to set fire to his own clothes and house." He further stated that on the day of the incident the appellant did not allow anybody to enter his house and had put a lock on the house and his children took their food outside, and the accused did not talk to anybody. He further stated that "prior to this incident the accused was being taken to Bhopal after tying him for the treatment of his mind. He was also taken to Bhavera but the accused did not improve." In cross-examination it was brought out that "prior to the setting of fire the accused was neither got admitted in the Government hospital nor any report was lodged in the police station." No cross-examination was directed to ascertain the nature of his illness or to bring out that he was otherwise sane.

7. Another witness, Than Singh, D. W. 2, (the appellant is his maternal uncle) stated that the appellant "used to do whatever he thought. He used to run away wherever he liked. He used to jump in the river also. He used to enter the house of anybody. He used to lock his house. His children used to lie hungry outside. He used to set fire in his clothes also. On the day of occurrence the condition of the accused was worst. He did not speak to anybody on that day." The witness, however, admitted that the accused had not been taken to Government hospital.

8. The Trial Court also mentioned that Moolchand, P. W. 3, Madora, P. W. 4, and Dharma, P. W. 6, admitted that the appellant remained in the khalyan throughout the period that the grass was burning till the chowkidar took him to thana and did not utter a word and did not try to run away.

9. The Trial Court relying on the evidence of Shyamlal, D. W. 1, Than Singh, D. W. 2, and the behaviour of the accused on that day came to the conclusion that the accused was insane. He also relied on the certificates issued by the doctors, mentioned above. He further found support in the absence of motive for the crime. He also relied on the fact that the appellant's khalyan adjoined the khalyan which was set on fire by him, and if the appellant had been sane he would not have taken the risk of having his own khalyan burnt, which was most likely.

10. The High Court, with respect, erred in differing from the Trial Court. The High Court observed that the appellant had not examined in defence any expert in mental diseases to substantiate his plea of legal insanity. It is expecting rather a great deal from a poor villager that he should produce experts in mental diseases, specially in view of the certificates issued by the Medical authorities after he was arrested. The High Court further erred in holding that the medical reports were of no evidential value. It is true that the reports speak of the mental state of the accused at the time when the reports were issued but the High Court failed to note that the appellant was in police custody from January 23, 1965, and the police could have produced evidence to show that he was absolutely sane till the day when they sent him for medical examination.

11. The High Court thought that the evidence of the two defence witnesses only suggested an irrational behaviour on the part of the accused. The High Court failed to note that, according to D. W. 2, the appellant used to set fire to his own clothes and house, and this could hardly be called irrational; it is more like verging on insanity.

12. The High Court also felt it rather unsafe to rely on the testimony of the two defence witnesses because such evidence could always be procured. It was also impressed by the fact that there was no independent witness forthcoming nor was there any evidence showing that the accused was taken to Bhopal or Gwalior for treatment. The High Court observed:

"Apart from this, these witnesses merely suggest that there was irrational behaviour on the part of the accused. But it has not been proved that he entertained any homicidal tendencies. The evidence adduced is merely of conduct not confirming to the accepted pattern of human behaviour. Such evidence is inadequate to establish that there was such an impairment of cognitive faculties of the accused as to render him legally insane". With respect, it is not necessary that every insane person should have homicidal tendencies. In this case he is not charged for an offence involving homicide but arson.

13. Although the High Court discarded the medical evidence, it took account of its own observations, when it stated:

"We had an opportunity to observe the accused, who was produced before us by the learned counsel, and he appeared to be a man of normal understanding. We also find that in answering questions which were put to him by the Court under Section 342, Cr. P. C., the accused showed intelligence and care".

With great respect, these are irrelevant considerations. The appeal was heard on April 25, 1968, and the incident occurred on January 22, 1965. A person can surely improve within three years.

14. We are inclined to agree with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Magistrate. We hold that the appellant has discharged the burden. There is no reason why the evidence of Shyam Lal, D. W. 1, and Than Singh, D. W. 2, should not be believed. It is true that they are relations of the appellant, but it is the relations who are likely to remain in intimate contact. The behaviour of the appellant on the day of occurrence, failure of the police to lead evidence as to his condition when the appellant was in custody, and the medical evidence indicate that the appellant was insane within the meaning of Section 84, I. P. C.

15. We accordingly allow the appeal and acquit the appellant of the offence under Section 435, I. P. C., because at the time of the incident he was a person of unsound mind within the meaning of Section 84 of the Indian Penal Code. His bail bond shall stand cancelled.

Appeal allowed.

(A) Defence of India Rules (1962), Part XII-A (Gold Control Rules) (as inserted in 1963), Rules 126-Q, 126-X and 126-J (4) — Notification, D/-

*(Cri. Appeal No. 215 of 1966, D/- 8-2-68 — Mys.)

LN/LN/F935/70/CWM/P

10-1-1963 under Rule 126-X read with Rule 126-J (4) as modified on 5-11-1963 by another notification — Construction of — Prosecution for offence punishable under Part XII-A — Who can institute.

Prosecution for an offence punishable under Part XII-A referred to in Rule 126-Q can be instituted by or with the consent of an officer not inferior in rank to the Assistant Collector of the Central Excise Department.

In view of the multifarious activities of the higher officers of the Central Excise Department it is clear that after the responsible officers of the Department not inferior in rank to the Assistant Collector had applied their mind and come to a decision as to the desirability of starting the prosecution in a given case further steps in the matter of actual prosecution including the drafting and presentation of the complaint can be lawfully carried out by others.

(Paras 10, 11 and 13)

(B) Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 537 — Wide language of complaint and charge — Cannot prejudice accused when he admits salient facts alleged.

When the relevant salient facts alleged by the prosecution are admitted by the accused, there can be no question of prejudice having been caused to accused by wide language of the complaint and charge.

(Para 14)

Mr. V. M. Tarkunde, Sr. Advocate, (M/s. R. Jethmalani, N. H. Hingorani and Mrs. K. Hingorani, Advocates, with him), for Appellant; Mr. S. P. Nayar, Advocate, for Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by DUA, J.: — This appeal by special leave is directed against the judgment and order of the Mysore High Court on appeal setting aside in part the order of the appellant's acquittal by a Second Class Magistrate and convicting him under Rule 126-P (2) of the Defence of India Rules as amended in 1963 — hereafter called the Rules — and sentencing him to rigorous imprisonment for six months. The order of the trial Court acquitting him of the offence under Section 135 of the Customs Act was upheld.

2. The appellant alighted from a service plane at H. A. L. Aerodrome, Bangalore on November 16, 1963 at about 12.45 in the afternoon, E. R. Fariman, Inspector, C. I. D. had prior incriminating information about the arrival of a person whose description seemed to tally with that of the appellant. The Inspector and his staff who were on the look out waited for the appellant to take his baggage from the baggage counter. As soon as the appellant took delivery of a plastic bag and a hold-all the Inspector asked the appellant to accompany him to the Security Room. On being questioned the appellant gave his name as Tara Chand though he admitted that he had travelled under the name of J. D. Shaw. In the Security Room in the presence of Panchawatdars the plastic bag and the hold-all were opened and examined. From a pillow taken out of the hold-all were found two tape bags containing 16 pieces of gold with foreign markings. These tape bags had been put into the pillow which was then stitched. The appellant was then produced by the Inspector before his D. S. P. along with the articles seized from him. After obtaining sanction from the Collector under Section 137 (1) of the Customs Act and under Rule 126-Q of the Rules Shri Rasool, Superintendent of Central Excise (P. W. 3) filed the complaint.

3. The learned Magistrate trying the appellant found the gold pieces to be of foreign origin. He, however, did not find any evidence establishing them to be smuggled with the result that the appellant was acquitted of the offence under Section 135 of the Customs Act. The learned Magistrate did not draw any presumption against the appellant because the seizure of the gold pieces was not by the Customs authorities but by the police who thereafter handed over the gold pieces to the office of the Collector of Central Excise and Customs.

4. While considering the case against the appellant under Rule 126-P (2) of the Rules, the learned Magistrate observed that according to the relevant notification issued by the Government of India on November 5, 1963 in modification of the earlier one issued under Rule 126-J read with Rule 126-X of the Rules, it is either the Assistant Collector of Central Excise or the Collector of Central Excise who can institute prosecution. These officers are not authorised to delegate the power to institute prosecution. According to the learned Magistrate the Collector of Excise had, therefore, no power to delegate the right to institute prosecutions with which he alone had been clothed. Exhibit P/5 was in the circumstances considered to be ineffective. On this reasoning the complaint having not been filed by the officer competently authorised the appellant was acquitted.

5. On appeal by the Superintendent of Central Excise and Customs (the complainant in the case) the High Court disagreed with the view taken by the learned Magistrate. It may be pointed out that the appeal by the complainant was confined only to the acquittal under Rule 126-P (2) of the Rules and the appellant's acquittal under Section 135 of the Customs Act was not questioned, it being conceded that there was no evidence on the record to bring the appellant's case under Section 135 of the Customs Act.

6. The High Court relying on Ex. P/5 and the two notifications issued by the Government of India came to the conclusion that the Collector was lawfully empowered to authorise the Superintendent of Central Excise to prosecute the appellant. That Court also arrived at the conclusion that the appellant, who was not a dealer or refiner, having a licence, was found in possession of gold, of which no declaration had been made under the law and, therefore, he was guilty of an offence punishable under Rule 126-P (2) of the Rules. The appeal was accordingly allowed and the appellant convicted and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six months.

7. In this Court Shri Tarkunde assailed the legality of the view taken by the High Court. According to him the trial Court had rightly held the prosecution not to have been instituted by a duly authorised person. Let us see if the scheme of the relevant statutory provisions supports the learned counsel.

8. Part XII-A of the Rules deals with Gold Control and it contains Rules 126-A to 126-Z. This part was inserted in the Defence of India Rules in January 1963. Rule 126-Q provides:

"(1) No prosecution for any offence punishable under this Part shall be instituted against any person except by, or with the consent of, the Administrator or any person authorised by the Administrator in this behalf.

(2) Nothing in Rule 154 shall apply to any contravention of any provision of this Part or any order made thereunder."

The word "Administrator" was substituted for the word "Board" in September 1963. We are informed that no Administrator as defined in R. 126 (a) was appointed by the Central Government under power conferred on it by Rule 126J (1). Under Rule 126X the Central Government is empowered to perform all or any of the functions of the Administrator and also by notification to exercise all or any of the powers conferred on the Administrator by Part XII-A if considered necessary or expedient in the public interest to do so. The Administrator who is to take suitable measures: (a) to discourage the use and consumption of gold, (b) to bring about conditions tending to reduce the demand for gold and, (c) to advise the Central Government on all matters relating to gold, is enjoined by Rule 126J (3) to discharge his functions subject to the general control and directions of the Central Government. Sub-rules (4) and (5) of Rule 126J provide:

"(4) The Administrator may by general or special order authorise such person as he thinks fit to exercise all or any of the powers exercisable by him under this Part and different persons may be authorised to exercise different powers:

Provided that no officer below the rank of Collector of Customs or Central Excise or Collector of a district shall be authorised to hear appeals under sub-rule (3) of Rule 126-M.

(5) Subject to any general or special direction given or condition attached by the Administrator any person authorised by the Administrator to exercise any powers may exercise these powers in the same manner and with the same effect as if they had been conferred on that person directly by this Part and not by way of authorisation".

9. We may bear in mind the effect of sub-rule (5) on the scheme. Rule 126-H (2) (d) dealing with restrictions on possession and sale of gold by persons other than licensed holders lays down:

"(2) Save as otherwise provided in this Part,—

... ..

(d) no person other than a dealer licensed under this Part shall buy or otherwise acquire or agree to buy or otherwise acquire, gold, not being ornament, except,

(i) by succession, intestate or testamentary, or

(ii) in accordance with a permit granted by the Administrator or in accordance with such authorisation as the administrator may, by general or special order make in this behalf:

Provided that a refiner may buy or accept gold from a dealer licensed under this Part;"

Turning now to the two notifications on the construction of which the fate of this case depends, we find that on January 10, 1963 the Central Government issued a notification in exercise of the powers conferred on it by Rule 126X read with Rule 126J (4) authorising certain officers of the Central Excise Department to exercise any or all of the powers of the Gold Board in relation to certain matters specified therein. At sl. No. 10 of the Table contained in the notification officers not inferior in rank to the Assistant Collector were authorised to exercise powers and functions in relation to the matter of "according of sanctions for the prosecution of offences" with reference to Rule 126Q. We have reproduced the exact words of the entry in Col. (4) of the Table. This notification was amended in certain respects on November 5, 1963. At sl. No. 10 of the amended Table officers not inferior in rank to the Assistant Collector of Central Excise Department were authorised to exercise the powers and functions in relation to the matter of "institution of prosecution for any offence punishable under Part XII-A of the Defence of India Rules" with reference to Rule 126Q. Here again we have reproduced the exact words used.

10. According to Shri Tarkunde these notifications did not empower the Assistant Collector to authorise the Superintendent of Central Excise and Customs to institute the present proceedings. The Assistant Collector, said the counsel, was authorised only himself to institute them and he could not lawfully accord consent for the institution of prosecution as he purported to do under Ex. P/5. We are unable to accept this submission.

(Contd. in Col. 2.)

The actual wording of the relevant entries in all the columns of serial No. 10 in the Table of the later notification may here be reproduced.

"10. Assistant Collector of the Central Excise Department

126—Q

Institution of prosecution for any offence punishable under Part XIIA of the Defence of India Rules, 1962".

This has to be read along with the opening part of the earlier notification dated January 10, 1963 which remains the principal notification and was amended only in certain particulars on November 5, 1963. According to the opening part of the principal notification the officers not inferior in rank to the officers specified in Col. 2 of its Table were authorised to exercise any or all of the powers of the Gold Board in relation to the matters specified in the corresponding entries in Cols. 3 and 4. In place of "Gold Board" we have to read the word "Administrator" and since no Administrator was ever appointed, the powers and functions entrusted to him were at the relevant time being exercised by the Central Government. We may point out that it was apparently by oversight that the word "Administrator" was not substituted for the expression "Gold Board" in the notification though in September 1963 such substitution had been effected by appropriate amendment in the relevant rules. This was not controverted at the Bar and indeed no point was sought to be made on this ground. It would thus be seen that in determining the scope and extent of the power of the officers authorised in the Table of the Notification to exercise the powers and functions of the Administrator, actually exercised by the Central Government (there being no Administrator appointed under the rules), we have to see the nature of the power and function mentioned in Col. 4 and examine it by reference to the rule mentioned in Col. 3 in the light of the expression "in relation to the matters specified" in the notification which, in our opinion, to some extent widens the scope of the powers and functions delegated by the notification.

11. Under Rule 126-Q as read in the light of the entries at Serial No. 10 of the notification prosecution for an offence punishable under Part XII-A can, in our opinion, be instituted by or with the consent of an officer not inferior in rank to the Assistant Collector of the Central Excise Department. In Ex. P/5 dated September 4, 1964, Shri V. Parthasarathy, Collector of Central Excise accorded his sanction to the prosecution of the appellant as required under Rule 126Q of the Defence of India Rules. He did so in exercise of the powers conferred on him by the two notifications mentioned above. The offence for which the consent was given was described in this document as under:

"Whereas Shri Tarachand S/o Deviraj (Devichand) Room No. 4, Mistry Bungalow, Duncan Road, Bombay 4 was found to have acquired gold not being ornament except by succession, intestate or testamentary or in accordance with the permit granted either by the Administrator or by the Deputy Secretary in the Office of the Gold Control Administrator, Bombay, duly authorised in this behalf by the Government of India vide their Notification No. F. 1/8/63-CC dated 20-10-1963, 16 pieces of gold of 10 tolas each bearing markings as to its origin and purity contrary to the provisions of Rule 126H (d) of the Defence of India Amendment Rules.

Whereas any person having in his possession or in his control any quantity of gold or buys or otherwise acquires or accepts gold in contravention of any provisions of Part XII-A of the Defence of India Rules renders himself liable for punishment under Rule 126P (2).

And on careful study of the material placed before me and satisfying myself that the said Sri Tarachand is liable to action under Rule 126P (2) of the Defence of India Amendment Rules, 1963 for, reasons mentioned above, I, V. Parthasarathy, Collector of Central Excise, Mysore Collectorate, Bangalore, in exercise of the powers conferred on me by the Government of India in their Notification No. F25/1/63-GCR, dated 5-11-63 issued under Rule 126J read with Rule 126-X of the Defence of India Amendment Rules do hereby accord consent for the institution of prosecution of the said Sri Tarachand as required under Rule 126Q of the Defence of India Amendment Rules, 1963."

12. This authority, in our opinion, quite clearly falls within the notification read as a whole and the High Court was right in so construing it.

13. The submission that these notifications must be construed strictly because by these instruments the authority to prosecute is delegated and so construed they should be held to confer power only to prosecute but not to accord consent to the appellant's prosecution by some other person or authority has not impressed us. The attempt by the appellant's learned counsel in this connection to equate these notifications with powers of attorney does not carry the matter any further. The plain reading of the relevant entries in the notifications leaves no doubt in our mind as to its meaning, scope and effect. It quite clearly authorises the Collector to exercise the power and function in relation to the matter of institution of prosecution for any offence punishable under Part XII-A of the Rules referred to in Rule 126-Q. Keeping in view the multifarious activities of the higher officers of the Central Excise Department it seems to us that after the responsible officers of this Department not inferior in rank to the Assistant Collector had applied their mind and come to a decision as to the desirability of starting the prosecution in a given case further steps in the matter of actual prosecution including the drafting and presentation of the complaint can be lawfully carried out by others. That this is the real object and purpose of the notifications is clearly brought out on plain reading of their language. To hold otherwise, as desired by Shri Tarkunde, would not only mean unduly straining the unambiguous statutory language but would also tend to thwart, instead of effectuating, their real purpose. We are thus in agreement, with the view taken by the High Court.

14. The counsel next submitted that the charge levelled against the appellant was different from the one for which he has been convicted. In any event the charge framed, according to the counsel, was vague and it has caused him prejudice in his defence. Here again, we are unable to agree. In the complaint all the relevant facts were stated quite clearly and it was emphasised that the appellant had been found in possession of 16 pieces of gold with foreign markings ingeniously concealed inside long tabular pouches, in turn hidden inside a pillow case. He was stated to be guilty inter alia of offences punishable under Rule 126-P (2). The second charge framed by the Court was as follows:

"That you on or about the 16th November, 1963 at about 12.45 hours at H. A. L. Aerodrome, Bangalore, alighted from the plane No. 105 which arrived from Bombay and when you and your articles were searched, you were found in possession of 16 pieces of gold each bearing markings as to its foreign origin and purity weighing 10 tolas each, having illegally imported into India in contravention of prohibition imposed by the Ministry of Finance Notification No. 1211 F1/48, dated 25th August, 1948 and without permit issued by the Gold Control Authorities as required under Rule 126-H (d) under the Defence of India Amendment Rules, 1963 and thereby committed an offence under Rule 126P (2) r/w 126-I (10) of the Defence of India Amendment Rules, 1963 relating to Gold Control and within my cognizance".

The appellant never complained that this charge was vague or outside the complaint. Indeed in his statement in Court the appellant has admitted all the relevant facts alleged by the prosecution. The facts alleged and proved clearly bring the appellant's case within the mischief of Rules 126-H (2) (d) and 126-P (2). Rule 126-H (2) (d) has already been reproduced earlier. Under Rule 126-P (2) (ii) whoever has in his possession or under his control any quantity of gold in contravention of any provision of Part XII-A is punishable with imprisonment for a term of not less than six months and not more than two years and also with fine. All the relevant salient facts alleged by the prosecution having been admitted by the appellant there can hardly be any question of prejudice having been caused to him by the wide language of the complaint and the charge, assuming the language to be wide. This argument is accordingly repelled.

15. Lastly the counsel contended that the sentence imposed was too severe. The entire gold seized from him having been confiscated the sentence undergone should, according to the submission, be held to serve the cause of justice. We have already noticed that under Rule 126P (2) (ii) the minimum period of imprisonment prescribed is six months. According to the appellant the law has since been amended and under the Gold (Control) Act 18 of 1965 which has repealed Part XII-A of the Rules there is no minimum sentence of imprisonment prescribed. In our opinion this case must be governed by the law as it was in force prior to the enforcement of the Gold (Control) Act, 1965. Our attention has not been drawn to any provision of law nor to any principle or precedent which would attract the provisions of the Gold (Control) Act of 1965 to this case in regard to the question of sentence.

16. This appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

S. M. SIKRI, V. BHARGAVA
AND I. D. DUA, JJ.

C. R. Bansi, Appellant v. State of Maharashtra, Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 83 of 1965,
D/- 15-12-1970.

(A) Civil Services — Central Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules (1957), Rule 23, Expl. — Explanation is restricted to Rule 23 for giving a dismissed servant a right of appeal — Person who has ceased to be a member of Central service cannot invoke aid of explanation for being treated as a public servant requiring sanction for his prosecution. (Paras 7, 8)

(B) Prevention of Corruption Act (1947), Section 6 — Sanction for prosecution — Income-tax Officer employed in connection with affairs of union dismissed from service for criminal misconduct — He ceases to be a public servant within meaning of Section 6(1) (a) and no sanction for his prosecution is necessary — Fact that his appeal against dismissal order is pending cannot make him a public servant.

(Para 8)

(C) Prevention of Corruption Act (1947), S. 5 (1) (a) — Charge under, of habitually accepting bribe — Individual instances though may be useful to prove general averment in particular cases, their mention in the charge is not at all essential — Charge is not illegal for non-mention of particular instances — AIR 1954 SC 359, Foll.

(Para 9)

(D) Constitution of India, Article 136 — Concurrent findings of fact — Supreme Court would not ordinarily go into questions of fact unless it is shown that they are vitiated in any respect.

(Para 10)

(E) Prevention of Corruption Act (1947), Section 5 — Charge for offence of criminal misconduct under Section 5 (2) read with Section 5 (1) (a) & (d) — Prosecution failing to prove particular instances of bribery alleged — Accused proved to have resources and property beyond his known means — Presumption under Section 5 (3) can be raised — Conviction of accused under Section 5 (2) upheld.

The proposition that if the prosecution fails to establish any of the offences mentioned in Section 5 (1) (a) to 5 (1) (d), the question of assets being found disproportionate to the known sources of the accused becomes irrelevant, cannot be accepted as correct.

(Para 11)

Section 5 (3) does not create a new offence. But this does not mean that if the prosecution fails to prove the specific charges the presumption under Section 5 (3) cannot be applied.

(Para 15)

Where the accused was charged with offence of criminal misconduct punishable under Section 5 (2) read with Section 5 (1) (a) and (d) and (3) of the Act and it was established that the accused had pecuniary resources and property disproportionate to his known means.

Held, that the presumption under Section 5 (3) arose in the case even though the prosecution failed to prove the particular instances of bribery alleged by it. AIR 1954 SC 359 and

The Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SIKRI, J.: — This is an appeal by special leave against the judgment and order of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay dismissing the appeal of the appellant against the conviction recorded by the Special Judge for Greater Bombay. The appellant was convicted by the Special Judge under Section 5 (2), read with Section 5 (1) (a) and (d) and Section 5 (3), of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 (2 of 1947) — hereinafter referred to as the Act — and sentenced to suffer rigorous imprisonment for three years and to pay a fine of Rs. 1,25,000, in default of payment of fine to suffer further rigorous imprisonment for one year. The Special Judge further directed that the amount of fine be recovered from the properties seized.

2. The following charge was framed against the appellant:

"That you, while functioning as (a) Income-tax Officer, from about 1st April, 1947 to November 1954 at Jalgaon Dhulia, Codhra and Mahansa (b) as Inspector of Income-tax from November, 1954 to January 1958 at Surat and Broach, (c) as Income-tax Officer from January 1958 to the end of November 1961 at Bhavnagar, Dhulia, Amraoti and Ratnagiri, habitually accepted or obtained and habitually agreed to accept or attempted to obtain gratification other than legal remuneration and obtained for yourself pecuniary advantage by corrupt and illegal means or by otherwise abusing your position as a public servant, with the result that, during the said period, you came in possession of assets of the value of about Rs. 2,01,080/- which were disproportionate to your known sources of income for which you could not satisfactorily account and you thereby committed the offence of criminal misconduct punishable under sub-section (2) read with sub-ss. (1) (a), (d) and (3) of Section 5 of Act (2 of 1947), the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, and within the cognizance of this Court".

3. The case of the prosecution before the Special Judge was that the appellant was habitually corrupt, and wherever he was posted he used to develop personal contacts with the assessee, whose cases were pending before him and in his talk with them he tried to impress upon them that they were likely to be heavily taxed; he used to create a favourable psychological background and taking advantage of the same tried to screw out money from them; if the assessee did not accept his proposal or proved to be smarter, he used to harass him by various methods. The prosecution sought to establish the charge against him under Section 5 (1) (a) of the Act by leading evidence of five instances:-

(i) He obtained from the witness Gopaldas an amount of Rs. 3,000/- as a loan and subsequently converted it as his personal gratification for finalising income-tax cases of his firm.

(ii) He demanded an illegal gratification of Rs. 10,000/- from the witness Gopaldas to show him favour in the Wealth Tax Proceedings.

(iii) He attempted to obtain bribe from P. W. 7 — Motilal Bansgopal, whose income-tax proceedings were pending before him.

(iv) He attempted to obtain bribe from the assessee P. W. 9, Somchand Khimji, whose income-tax proceedings were pending before him.

(v) He also made a demand of bribe of Rs. 400/- to Rs. 500/- from P. W. 93 Gulabdas Kisondas Bhatia of Dharangaon.

4. Before the Special Judge the prosecution also relied on the presumption arising under Section 5 (3) of the Act as the accused was found to be in possession of assets worth about Rs. 2,01,080/- which were disproport-tionate to his known sources of income.

5. The learned Special Judge, in a very detailed and lengthy judgment, held that it was not proved that the appellant had obtained Rs. 3,000/- from Gopaldas representing that he wanted the amount as a hand-loan for taking delivery of the car. He further held that it was not proved that the appellant demanded bribe of Rs. 10,000/- from him as a motive for doing him favour in the disposal of his wealth tax cases. Regarding P. W. 7, Motilal Bangsopal, the Special Judge held that the accused had entertained a corrupt motive in asking the assessee — P. W. 7 — to see him at his residence, and this circumstance could be considered against him in considering the charge for the offence of habitually being corrupt. Regarding Somchand, P. W. 9, the Special Judge held that the appellant had made an implied demand of bribe and had a guilty conscience. Regarding Gulabdas, he held that the allegation regarding demand of bribe from P. W. 93, Gulabdas, had not been proved. He summarised the findings thus:

"Thus out of specific instances the prosecution has established only two and it has been proved that the accused had made an implied demand of bribe from P. W. 9, Somchand and he had also asked P. W. 7, Motilal to come to his residence in connection with the delay in filing the return. The second instance though does not establish any demand of bribe as such, it does prove the proclivity of the mind of the accused and a corrupt tendency and would support the prosecution version."

He further held that "the two instances proved will not themselves be sufficient to prove habit of bribe taking and the question is whether considering all the matters before the Court it can be held that the accused is guilty of criminal misconduct and if yes, of what category." He further held that the appellant could be convicted on the strength of presumption arising under Section 5 (3).

6. The High Court repelled the contention of the appellant that no presumption arose under Section 5 (3) of the Act because no specific instances had been held to be proved and, at any rate, they did not amount to an offence. The High Court distinguished the cases of R. S. Pandit v. State of Bihar, (1963) Suppl 2 SCR 652 = (1964-2 Cri LJ 65) and Surajpal Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (1961) 2 SCR 971 = (AIR 1961 SC 583). The High Court further observed that the Trial Judge had accepted the evidence regarding two instances while it was prepared to accept the instance involving Gopaldas also. The High Court generally agreed with the finding regarding disproportionate assets and disbelieved the explanation offered by the appellant.

7. Before we deal with the merits of the case, we shall take up two preliminary points raised by the learned counsel for the appellant, Mr. Chari. He urged that as sanction had not been given for prosecuting the appellant the whole trial was bad. He said that the search of the appellant's house took place on November 4, 1961, and on June 27, 1962, he was dismissed from service by the Commissioner of Income-tax. On July 30, 1962, charge-sheet was filed in the Court of Special Judge. On September 21, 1962, the appellant submitted an appeal to the President of India and the President was pleased to convert the order of dismissal into one of removal. The learned counsel contends that pending the appeal the appellant should have been deemed to be in service and, therefore, deemed to be in service on July 30, 1962. A similar point was raised before the Special Judge and he repelled the contention in the following terms:

"For requiring a sanction to be taken before taking cognizance of an offence against a person, he must be in actual employment of the State. A mere right of appeal will not invest him with that status. Moreover, a person may have right of appeal, but he may not exercise the same and may not file the appeal. It is purely within his discretion and the act of taking cognizance which is the course of law would not be made dependent upon such arbitrary and discretionary alternatives held by a person."

The Special Judge also referred to Rule 23 of the Central Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1957, and the explanation therein in which it is stated:

"In this rule the expression 'member of a Central Civil Service' includes a person who has ceased to be a member of the service."

This explanation was also relied on before us. Regarding the explanation the learned Special Judge came to the conclusion that the explanation was restricted to that particular rule for giving the dismissed servant a right to prefer an appeal.

8. We agree with the conclusion of the learned Special Judge. Section 6 of the Act reads as follows:

"Previous sanction necessary for prosecution. (1) No Court shall take cognizance of an offence punishable under Section 161 or Section 164 or Section 165 of the Indian Penal Code (Act 45 of 1860) or under sub-section (2) of Section 5 of this Act, alleged to have been committed by a public servant, except with the previous sanction,

(a) in the case of a person who is employed in connection with the affairs of the Union and is not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Central Government, of the Central Government;

(b) in the case of a person who is employed in connection with the affairs of a State and is not removable from the office save by or with the sanction of the State Government, of the State Government;

(c) in the case of any other person, of the authority competent to remove him from his office.

(2) Where for any reason whatsoever any doubt arises whether the previous sanction as required under sub-section (1) should be given by the Central or State Government or any other authority, such sanction shall be given by that Government or authority which would have been competent to remove the public servant from his office at the time when the offence was alleged to have been committed". It seems to us that the person must be employed in connection with the affairs of the Union in sub-clause (a) and with the affairs of the State in sub-clause (b). The case of the appellant would be covered in sub-clause (a) because he had been employed in connection with the affairs of the Union. But the sub-section contemplates that the person must be employed in connection with the affairs of the Union and not that he was employed with the affairs of the Union. The policy underlying Section 6, and similar sections, is that there should not be unnecessary harassment of public servants. But if a person ceases to be a public servant the question of harassment does not arise. The fact that an appeal is pending does not make him a public servant. The appellant ceased to be a public servant when the order of dismissal was passed. There is no force in the contention of the learned counsel and the trial cannot be held to be bad for lack of sanction under Section 6 of the Act.

9. The other preliminary point which the learned counsel raised was that the charge was defective. We have already set out the charge. It is true that there are no instances given in the charge. But as the charge is of habitually accepting the bribe it is not necessary that the various instances should have been mentioned. It was expressly so held by this Court in Biswabhusan Naik v. State of Orissa, (1955) 1 SCR 92 = (AIR 1954 SC 359). This Court overruled a similar point in the following words:

"But no particulars need be set out in the charge in such a case because the offence under Section 5 (1) (a) does not consist of individual acts of bribe as in Section 161 of the Indian Penal Code but is of a general character. Individual instances may be useful to prove the general averment in particular cases but it is by no means necessary because of the presumption which Section 5 (3) requires the Court to draw". This Court accordingly held in that case that there was no illegality in the charge. We accordingly hold that the charge in this case was not illegal.

10. We may now deal with the merits of the case. This is an appeal by special leave, and as there are concurrent findings of fact we do not ordinarily go into questions of fact. But we allowed Mr. Chari to take us through the relevant evidence, both oral and documentary, in order to show whether the concurrent findings were vitiated in any respect. He has not been able to point out any circumstances which may lead us to differ from the concurrent findings. It is true that as far as the case of Gopal-das is concerned the High Court differed from the Special Judge and held that the allegations were proved. The learned counsel has taken us in detail through the material relevant to this witness and we are inclined to agree with the conclusion arrived at by the High Court. But apart from that the concurrent findings regarding P. W. 7, Motilal, and P. W. 9, Somchand, and the presumption arising under Section 5 (3) are sufficient to sustain the conviction recorded against the appellant.

11. The learned counsel urged before us that if the prosecution fails to establish any of the offences mentioned in Ss. 5 (1) (a) to 5 (1) (d), the question of assets being found disproportionate to the known sources of the accused becomes irrelevant. A number of cases were referred to us but we are unable to agree with this proposition because we are bound by the ruling to the contrary given by this Court.

12. In (1955) 1 SCR 92 = (AIR 1954 SC 359) after referring to Section 5 (1) (a) and Section 5 (3), Bose, J., speaking for the Court, observed:

"Therefore, all that the prosecution has to do is to show that the accused, or some person on his behalf, is in possession of pecuniary resources or property disproportionate to his known sources of income and for which the accused cannot satisfactorily account. Once that is established then the Court has to presume, unless the contrary is proved, that the accused is guilty of the new offence created by Section 5, namely criminal misconduct in the discharge of his official duty".

Then the Court proceeded to deal with the facts thus:

"Now the accused was found in possession of Rs. 3,148. He accounted for Rs. 430 of that sum by showing that it was paid to him at the time as a trap. He has been acquitted of that offence, so all he had to account for was the balance Rs. 2,698. This is a large sum for a touring officer to carry with him in cash while on tour. His explanation was not considered satisfactory and that is a question of fact with which we are not concerned in this Court. Therefore, all that remains to be seen is whether this was disproportionate to his known sources of income".

Then the Court referred to the findings regarding his total emoluments drawn and the small piece of land owned by him, and observed:

"Once the facts set out above were found to exist and the explanation of the accused rejected as unsatisfactory, Section 5 (3) was at once attracted and the Court was bound to presume (the word used in the section is "shall" and not "may") that the accused was guilty under Section 5 (2), especially as this part of the section goes on to say — "and his conviction therefor shall not be invalid by reason only that it is based solely on such presumption".

"These facts alone are enough to sustain the conviction and we need not consider the other matters".

The conviction, therefore, of Biswabhusar Naik, in that case, solely proceeded on the presumption as in the earlier part of the judgment it was observed that he was separately charged and separately prosecuted under Section 161 of the Indian Penal Code for three specific offences of bribe taking but was acquitted on all the counts and his conviction was only under Section 5 (2) alone.

13. Similarly in C. S. D. Swamy v. The State, (1960) 1 SCR 461 = (AIR 1960 SC 7) Swamy's conviction was sustained only on the presumption. The appellant, Swamy, in that case was put up on trial on charges under Sections 5 (1) (a) and 5 (1) (d) of the Act. Payments of particular sums by way of bribe were not proved against him. But the High Court, holding that the appellant's bare statements from the dock unsupported by any other acceptable evidence could not satisfactorily account for the large deposits standing to his credit in his bank accounts raised the presumption under Section 5 (3) of the Act and held him guilty of criminal misconduct in the discharge of his official duty under Section 5 (1) (d) of the Act. It was contended before this Court that the charge relating to specific instances of bribery having failed the contrary presumption under Section 5 (3) of the Act should have been established. This Court repelled the argument in the following words:

"The finding of the High Court and the Court below is that the prosecution had failed to adduce sufficient evidence to prove those particular facts and circumstances of criminal misconduct within the meaning of Section 5 (1) (a) of the Act, but the failure to bring the charge home to the accused under Section 5 (1) (a) does not necessarily lead to the legal effect contended for. As soon as the requirements of sub-section (3) of S. 5 have been fulfilled, the Court will not only be justified in making, but is called upon to make, the presumption that the accused person is guilty of criminal misconduct within the meaning of Section 5 (1) (d). If there is evidence forthcoming to satisfy the requirements of the earlier part of sub-section (3) of Section 5, conviction for criminal misconduct can be had on the basis of the presumption which is a legal presumption to be drawn from the proof of facts in the earlier part of the sub-section (3) aforesaid. That is what has been found by the Courts below against the accused person. Hence, the failure of the charge under Clause (a) of sub-section (1) of Section 5 does not necessarily mean the failure of the charge under Section 5 (1) (d)".

14. It will be noticed that while Bose, J., in (1955) 1 SCR 92 = (AIR 1954 SC 359), held that once the presumption applies the accused was guilty of the new offence created by Section 5, namely, criminal misconduct in the discharge of his official duties, without specifying any of the sub-clauses, Sinha, J., as he then was, held that the offence under Section 5 (1) (d) was made out. It is not necessary to decide in this case which is the correct way of putting the matter because whichever reasoning is accepted the case of the appellant fails.

15. The case of (1961) 2 SCR 971 = (AIR 1961 SC 583) does not assist the appellant. It is true that, as laid down by this Court, Section 5 (3) does not create a new offence. But this does not mean that if the prosecution fails to prove the specific charges the presumption under Section 5 (3) cannot be applied. In Surajpal's case, (1961) 2 SCR 971 = (AIR 1961 SC 583) what happened was that the only charge against Surajpal was of criminal misconduct under Section 5 (1) (c) of the Act. But since he was acquitted of the charge it was held that he could not be convicted of criminal misconduct referred to in Clauses (a), (b) or (d) of Section 5 (1) of the Act for which he had not been charged.

16. (1963) Suppl 2 SCR 652 = (1964-2 Cri LJ 65) also does not assist the appellant. It is true that it was held in that case that Section 5 (3)

does not create a separate offence but lays down only a rule of evidence and marks a departure from the well-established principle of criminal jurisprudence that onus is always on the prosecution to bring home the guilt to the accused. But it does not follow from this that if the prosecution has failed to prove specific instances it cannot rely on the presumption.

17. The learned counsel contended that if this is the law the prosecution need not allege any specific instance at all and could come to Court only alleging that the accused had assets disproportionate to his known sources of income. This point does not arise in this case and is not likely to arise again because the Act has since been amended and the act of possessing pecuniary resources or property disproportionate to known sources of income, for which the public servant cannot satisfactorily account, has been made into a separate offence. Therefore we need not consider this example given by the learned counsel.

18. Accordingly we hold that the appellant in this case had pecuniary resources and property disproportionate to his known sources of income, and that both the High Court and the learned Special Judge rightly held that the presumption arose under Section 5 (3).

19. We may mention that the learned counsel tried to show that the assets were not too disproportionate but nothing has been shown which would entitle us to set aside the concurrent findings on this aspect of the case.

20. The learned counsel then said that a fine of Rs. 1,25,000/- has been levied and the appellant has already undergone sentence of about four months. He said that the appellant is now on bail and it would be hard on him if we send him back to jail. He further said that the investigation began somewhere in 1961, the trial began in 1963, and the expenses of the trial and the printing of the records has cost the appellant a great deal, and further that the State has kept Rs. 1,25,000/- out of the seized amount for recovery of the fine. The learned counsel for the respondent drew our attention to Section 5 (2) which provides that any public servant who commits criminal misconduct in the discharge of his duty shall be punishable with imprisonment which shall not be less than one year but which may extend to seven years and shall also be liable to fine, provided that the Court may, for any special reasons recorded in writing, impose a sentence of imprisonment of less than one year. It seems to us that in view of the facts mentioned by the learned counsel for the appellant it will meet the ends of justice if the sentence is reduced to one already undergone, maintaining the sentence of fine.

21. In the result the appeal is allowed to the extent that sentence of three years' rigorous imprisonment is altered to imprisonment already undergone. His bail bonds shall stand cancelled.

Sentence reduced.

Civil Appeals Nos. 2012 and 2013 of 1969, D/- 23-11-1970.

Constitution of India, Art. 246, Schedule VII, List II, Entry 54 — Taxing entry — Madras General Sales Tax Act (1 of 1959), Section 42 (3) — Power to seize and confiscate and levy penalty in respect of goods carried in a vehicle whether sold or not — Not incidental or ancillary to power to levy sales tax and hence is unconstitutional.

A legislative entry does not merely enunciate powers: it specifies a field of legislation and the widest import and significance should be attached to it. Power to legislate on a specified topic includes power to legislate in respect of matters which may fairly and reasonably be said to be comprehended therein. A taxing entry therefore confers power upon the Legislature to legislate for matters ancillary or incidental including provision for preventing evasion of tax.

But the power conferred by sub-section (3) of Section 42 of Madras General Sales Tax Act to seize and confiscate and to levy penalty in respect of all goods which are carried from one State to another in a vehicle whether the goods are sold or not is not incidental or ancillary to the power to levy sales tax. Section 42 (3) is, therefore, unconstitutional. AIR 1941 FC 16 and AIR 1955 SC 58 and AIR 1962 SC 123, Rel. on; AIR 1968 SC 59, Distinguished; AIR 1970 Mad 25, Affirmed. (Paras 4, 6)

Mr. A. K. Sen, Sr. Advocate (Mr. A. V. Rangam, Advocate, with him), for Appellants; (In both the Appeals); Mr. T. A. Ramachandran, Advocate, for Respondent (In both the Appeals).

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, J.: — Motor Lorry No. K. L. R. 3919 driven along a highway from Coimbatore in the State of Madras towards the border of the State of Kerala was when searched by the Check Post Officer found to carry 85 bags of foodstuffs: 45 bags of maida, 20 bags of flour, and 20 bags of Khandasari sugar. The driver of the motor lorry was found to carry with him a bill of sale and a delivery note which covered 85 bags of flour. On the ground that without a bill of sale or delivery note maida and Khandasari sugar were attempted to be transported, and suspecting that there was an attempt at evasion of sales tax, the Check Post Officer by order dated March 2, 1965, confiscated the goods and gave an option to M/s K. P. Abdulla & Bros. the owners of the goods to pay Rs. 1,000/- as penalty in lieu of confiscation.

2. The owners of the goods then moved a petition in the High Court of Madras challenging the validity of Section 42 (3) (a) of the Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1959, and for an order quashing the penalty, and another petition for a direction to the State of Madras and the Check Post Officer to return the goods seized and "confiscated while in transit". Ramakrishnan, J., rejected the petitions. In appeals filed by the owners, the petitions were allowed and the orders imposing penalty and confiscation of goods were set aside. The State of Madras has appealed to this Court with certificate granted by the High Court.

3. Section 42 of the Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1959, provides:

"(1) If the Government consider that with a view to prevent or check evasion of tax under this Act in any place or places in the State, it is necessary so to do, they may, by notification, direct the setting up of a check post or the erection of a barrier or both, at such place or places as may be notified.

"(2) At every check post or barrier mentioned in sub-section (1), or at any other place when so required by any officer empowered by the Government in this behalf, the driver or any other person in charge of any vehicle or boat shall stop the vehicle or boat, as the case may be, and keep it stationary as long as may reasonably be necessary, and allow the officer in charge of the check post or barrier, or the officer empowered as aforesaid, to examine the contents in the vehicle or boat and inspect all records relating to the goods carried, which are in the possession of such driver, or other person in charge, who shall, if so required, give his name and address and the name and address of the owner of the vehicle or boat as well as those of the consignor and the consignee of the goods.

(3) The officer in charge of the check post or barrier, or the officer empowered as aforesaid, shall have power to seize and confiscate any goods which are under transport by any vehicle or boat and are not covered by,

- (i) a bill of sale or delivery note,
- (ii) a Goods Vehicle Record, a Trip Sheet or a Log Book, as the case may be; and

(iii) such other documents as may be prescribed under Sections 43 and 44;

Provided that before ordering confiscation the officer shall give the person affected an opportunity of being heard and make an inquiry in the prescribed manner;

Provided further that the officer ordering the confiscation shall give the person affected option to pay in lieu of confiscation—

(a) in cases where the goods are taxable under this Act, in addition to the tax recoverable, a sum of money not exceeding one thousand rupees, or double the amount of tax recoverable, whichever is greater; and

(b) in other cases, a sum of money not exceeding one thousand rupees". By sub-section (2) the driver or any person in charge of the vehicle is required to stop the vehicle and to allow the officer in charge of the check post or barrier to examine the contents in the vehicle, and to inspect all records relating to the goods carried in the vehicle. The officer in charge of the check post or barrier is invested with power by sub-sec. (3) to seize and confiscate any goods which are carried and are not covered by the documents specified therein. The officer is required when ordering confiscation to give the person affected option to pay penalty in lieu of confiscation.

4. Entry 54 of List II of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution authorises the State Legislature to legislate in respect of taxes on the sale or purchase of goods. A legislative entry does not merely enunciate powers: it specifies a field of legislation and the widest import and significance should be attached to it. Power to legislate on a specified topic includes power to legislate in respect of matters which may fairly and reasonably be said to be comprehended therein: see The United Provinces v. Mst. Atiq Begum, 1940 FCR 110 = (AIR 1941 FC 16), Navinchandra Mafatlal v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay City, (1955) 1 SCR 829 = (AIR 1955 SC 58) and Balaji v. Income-tax Officer, Special Investigation Circle, (1962) 2 SCR 983 = (AIR 1962 SC 123). A taxing entry therefore, confers power upon the Legislature to legislate for matters ancillary or incidental including provision for preventing evasion of tax. Sub-ss. (1) and (2) of S. 42 are intended to set up machinery for preventing evasion of sales tax. But, in our judgment, the power to confiscate goods carried in a vehicle cannot be said to be fairly and reasonably comprehended in the power to legislate in respect of taxes on sale or purchase of goods. By sub-section (3) the officer in charge of the check post or barrier has the power to seize and confiscate any goods which are being carried in any vehicle if they are not covered by the documents specified in the three sub-clauses. Sub-section (3) assumes that all goods carried in a vehicle near a check post are goods which have been sold within the State of Madras and in respect of which liability to pay sales tax has arisen, and authorises the check post officer, unless the specified documents are produced at the check post or the barrier, to seize and confiscate the goods and to give an option to the person affected to pay penalty in lieu of confiscation. A provision so enacted on the assumption that goods carried in a vehicle from one State to another must be presumed to be transported after sale within the State is unwarranted. In any event power conferred by sub-section (3) to seize and confiscate and to levy penalty in respect of all goods which are carried in a vehicle whether the goods are sold or not is not incidental or ancillary to the power to levy sales tax. A person carrying his own goods even as personal luggage from one State to another or for consumption, because he is unable to produce the documents specified in clauses (i), (ii) & (iii) of sub-section (3) of Section 42, stands in danger of having his goods forfeited. Power under sub-section (3) of Section 42 cannot be said to be ancillary or incidental to the power to legislate for levy of sales tax.

5. The High Court was of the view that the question which fell to be determined was concluded by the judgment of this Court in The Commissioner of Commercial Taxes v. R. S. Jhaver, (1968) 1 SCR 148 = (AIR 1968 SC 59). That case arose under Section 41 (2) of the Madras General Sales Tax Act 1 of 1959, and this Court struck down the power conferred under the Madras General Sales Tax Act, 1959, upon the officer of the Government to seize such accounts, registers, records or other documents of the dealer as he may consider necessary, if he had reason to suspect that any dealer has attempted to evade payment of any tax, fee or other amount. This Court held that tax and penalty cannot be levied before the first sale in the State, and on that account authority conferred to levy tax and penalty before the sale and to confiscate the goods for non-payment was outside the legislative competence of the State. That case may have no direct bearing in this case.

6. In the present case, however, the power to confiscate the goods and to levy penalty in lieu of confiscation, when in respect of the goods found in a vehicle the driver of the vehicle is not carrying with him the documents specified therein, is not a provision which is ancillary or incidental to the power to tax sale of goods.

7. The appeals therefore fail and are dismissed with costs. One hearing fee.

Appeals dismissed.

Raja Bahadur Kamakhya Narain Singh, (In both the Appeals), Appellant v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bihar and Orissa (In both the Appeals), Respondent.

Civil Appeals Nos. 481 and 482 of 1966, D/- 1-9-1969.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 136 — Appeals arising out of references under Section 66 (2), Income Tax Act (1922) — Supreme Court cannot exercise any wider power of interference than that permitted to the High Court under the Income Tax Act.

(Para 12)

(B) Income Tax Act (1922), Section 66 — Adventure in the nature of trade — Mixed question of law and fact — Tribunal misdirecting itself in law — Court can review finding of tribunal.

The question, whether an assessee carries on business or whether certain transactions are in the course of business or whether they amount to adventures in the nature of trade or business, is a mixed question of fact and law. But to distinguish a question of fact and a question of law is not always easy, for, sometimes there is a common area between the two and though a mere question of fact can be turned into one of law, care should be taken against a finding of a mixed question of fact and law being given the unassailability which the Act confers on a pure finding of fact. Since the expression 'adventure in the nature of trade' implies the existence of certain elements in the transactions which in law would invest them with the character of trade or business and the question on that account becomes a mixed question of law and fact, the Court can review the Tribunal's finding if it has misdirected itself in law. AIR 1959 SC 359; AIR 1957 SC 49 and AIR 1954 SC 253, Rel. on.

(Para 12)

(C) Income Tax Act (1922), Section 33 — Subsequent Tribunal having advantage of examining assessee's transactions during a longer period and thus having a more comprehensive picture of all transactions — Can come to conclusion different from that arrived at earlier.

(Para 16)

(D) Income Tax Act (1922), Sections 4, 10 — Profits over sale of shares acquired not for dealing in them — Would be on capital account. (1963) 2 ITJ 180 (Pat), Reversed.

The profits made on the sale of shares, acquired with the intention of obtaining control over the company's management and not for dealing in them, would be on the capital and not revenue account. AIR 1955 SC 252 and AIR 1963 SC 835, Rel. on; (1963) 2 ITJ 180 (Pat), Reversed.

(Para 20)

(E) Income Tax Act (1922), Sections 4, 10 — Sale of investment realising enhanced profits — Whether and when profits are assessable to tax — Test laid down — (1963) 2 ITJ 180 (Pat), Reversed.

Where a person in selling his investment realises an enhanced price, the excess over his purchase price would be profit assessable to tax, if what is done is not a mere realisation of the investment but an act done for making profits. The distinction whether the transaction is of one kind or the other depends on the question whether the excess was an enhancement of the value by realising a security or a gain in an operation of profit making. The surplus realised on the sale of shares, would be capital if the assessee is an ordinary investor realising his holding; but it would be revenue, if he deals with them as an adventure in the nature of trade. The fact that the original purchase was made with the intention to re-sell if an enhanced price could be obtained is by itself not enough but in conjunction with the conduct of the assessee and other circumstances it may point to the trading character of the transaction. The test often applied is, has the assessee made his shares and securities the stock-in-trade of a business. (Para 13)

Held, that the Tribunal misdirected itself in applying the law to the facts found by it both in the matter of gold and shares, and the High Court would have been entitled to interfere with its findings instead of holding that it could not do on the ground that the findings were findings of fact. The questions involved being mixed questions of fact and law were not unassailable. (1963) 2 ITJ 180 (Pat), Reversed.

Mr. S. T. Desai, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. D. N. Mukherjee, Advocate, with him), for Appellant, (In both the Appeals); Mr. Jagdish Swarup, Solicitor General of India, (M/s. S. K. Aiyar, R. N. Sachthey and B. D. Sharma, Advocates, with him), for the Respondent, (In both the Appeals).

SHELAT, J.:— These two appeals, under special leave, arise from two

References to the High Court of Patna under Section 66 (2) of the Income-tax Act, 1922 and relate to the assessment years 1945-46 and 1946-47. In the first appeal, the question arising for determination is whether, on the facts and circumstances of the case, the surplus receipt of Rs. 13,43,469/-, realised as a result of the sale of gold is assessable as income, or profits or gains for the assessment year 1945-46 under Section 4 (3) (vii) of the Act. In the second appeal, two questions arise for determination; one relates to the surplus receipt of Rs. 33,481/- arising out of the sale of some more gold, and the second relates to the receipt of Rs. 88,522/- realised by the assessee as a result of sale of certain shares. All the three questions raise the common problem whether the said transactions in gold and shares were by way of realisation of investment or were adventures in the nature of trade or business.

2. The assessee was at all material times a landholder deriving large income from agriculture, royalties of minerals and income from forests forming part of his estate. Prior to 1937 when he was a minor, his estate was under the management of a Court of Wards. On attaining majority, the estate, which included Government securities of the value of about Rs. 40 lacs, was handed over to him on August 19, 1937. During the account year 1938-39 he sold the whole lot of these securities and realised Rs. 44,25,088/- the sale thus resulting in an excess of Rs. 4,55,305/-. This excess amount was assessed as profit by the income-tax officer for the assessment year 1939-40. But on appeal against the assessment order, the Appellate Tribunal set aside that order on a finding that the said sale was by way of a change in investment, and therefore, was not a transaction in the nature of trade or business. On March 23, 1939, the assessee opened an account in the Imperial Bank of India initially with Rs. 46 lacs, which included the said sale proceeds of Rs. 44 lacs and odd and to which on March 27, 1939 he added Rs. 2.60 lacs. The account was opened in the name of his wife and was called "Account of Rs. 48 lacs floating in the share market". In September 1939, the assessee purchased shares and debentures of the value of Rs. 34.14 lacs from out of the funds in the said account. He, however, sold certain shares for Rs. 5,75,723/- in October 1939, and then the rest of them in 1940 and 1941 realising Rs. 29,58,677/- and Rs. 64,201/- respectively. The first sale fetched a profit of Rs. 1,17,064/-; the second a profit of Rs. 25,133/- and the third a loss of Rs. 1,642/-. — The income-tax officer brought to tax the two surpluses in the assessments for the assessment years 1940-41 and 1941-42. But the department was again unsuccessful as the Tribunal once again held, on the strength of the correspondence which had passed between the assessee, his bankers and the brokers in Calcutta, that the only possible conclusion emerging from that correspondence was that the assessee's intention was not to deal in shares and debentures, and that the said transactions were a mere change in investment carried out of a single scheme of earning a better yield from investments. The Tribunal's orders in respect of these assessments for the assessment years 1939-40 to 1941-42 were made part of the Statement of Case filed by the Tribunal before the High Court in the present References.

3. Between June 28, 1940 and November 9, 1940 the assessee purchased 68109 tolas of gold for Rupees 23,47,380/- from out of the sale proceeds of the said shares. The gold so purchased was kept in his family vaults at Padma, the seat of his estate, for nearly 4 years. Between October 9, 1944 and October 20, 1944, he disposed of the bulk of the gold i. e., 55494 tolas, for Rs. 36,80,174/- the sale resulting in a surplus of Rs. 13,43,469/-, which is the subject-matter of the first appeal. The remaining quantity of gold was sold in October 19, 1945; that that sale brought him an excess of Rs. 33,481/-, which is part of the subject-matter of the second appeal.

4. In respect of these two surplus amounts, the assessee contended that they were the result of a change in investment and could not be said to be transactions in the nature of trade or business. His case was that neither the Government securities, nor the shares and debentures purchased out of their sale proceeds, nor the gold were sold and purchased by way of dealing in them, that at no time they became his stock-in-trade for any business or adventures in the nature of trade or business therein, that the transactions were mere conversions from one investment to another, depending upon the circumstances which prevailed during the respective periods and that the sale of gold in 1944 and 1945 was occasioned partly due to the tide in the second world war turning in favour of the allies and partly due (a) to his having to pay Rs. 7 lacs by way of income-tax, (b) expenses for the marriage of his younger brother, (c) for payment of Rs. 6 lacs debt to one Gupta and (d) for purchase of Victory Bonds worth Rs. 14 lacs and odd at the instance of the Government authorities as contribution of his estate to the war effort.

5. The Tribunal rejected the case that gold had been sold for the reasons given by the assessee or as a change in investment and held that (1) conversion of shares into gold was not due to any panic resulting from the war, (2) that there was no pressing necessity for the sale of gold as alleged by him, (3) that Victory Bonds were not by way of any war effort since the assessee sold them away within a short time after their purchase, and (4) the sale proceeds of gold were utilised in purchasing shares for which he borrowed an additional amount of Rs. 5.10 lacs in 1945-46 against gold. In this view the Tribunal confirmed the I. T. O.'s decision that the two excess amounts were liable to income-tax in the two assessment years.

6. The sale proceeds of gold sold as aforesaid were utilised by the assessee in purchasing 7025 shares of Karanpura Development Company Limited for Rs. 2,37,267/- during the period December 8, 1944 to April 20, 1945 and shares of Bokaro Ramgur Company for Rs. 39,81,663/- purchased in 1945-46. Part of the sale proceeds were also utilised in purchasing the said Victory Bonds. Between November 8, 1945 and February 21, 1946, he sold 6950 of the Karanpura shares realising a net surplus of Rs. 88,522/-, which the Income Tax Officer treated as business profit and brought to tax for the assessment year 1946-47.

7. As the Statement of Case by the Tribunal shows, the Tribunal examined the assessee's dealings since the time he took over the said estate. The Tribunal noted that the said shares were purchased from the said Rupees 48 lacs in the Bank reserved for that purpose and that they were sold and purchased at very short intervals.

From these facts it held that he must be considered to have launched a scheme in dealing in shares, which conclusion, it thought, was strengthened by the fact of the assessee having borrowed Rs. 5.10 lacs for the said purpose. The Tribunal further held that the complete picture of the said transactions over a length of time had not been before the preceding Tribunal when it passed the earlier orders for the assessment years 1939-40 to 1941-42, and therefore, its conclusions were not applicable to the transactions in question. It consequently held the assessee to be a dealer in shares. As regards the gold also the Tribunal confirmed the orders of the I.T.O. rejecting the assessee's case that the gold was purchased by him owing to the war crisis and sold by him on account of the pressing necessities alleged by him and the change in the war situation then.

8. By an order dated April 2, 1959, the High Court referred that Statement of Case back to the Tribunal under S. 66 (4) directing it to consider further all the materials before it and file a supplementary Statement of Case as the High Court found the Statement factually incorrect in certain respects. The Tribunal accordingly sent a supplementary Statement of Case on April 23, 1960.

9. After setting out the assessee's transactions of the sale of Government securities in 1938-39, the purchase of shares from their sale proceeds, their sale in 1939-40 and 1940-41, the purchase of gold and its sale, the Tribunal once again rejected the assessee's claim that those transactions were conversions of one investment to another made for a better return or that the gold was sold in October 1944 for pressing necessities alleged by the assessee. Regarding the purchase and sale of shares, the Tribunal stated that the assessee purchased shares of the value of Rs. 37 lacs and odd in 1945-46, that those were shares of two concerns only, Bokaro and Ramgur Company Limited and Karanpura Development Company Limited and that as the latter company's shares were of the value of Rs. 2,37,267/- only, the bulk of the amount of Rs. 37 lacs and odd went into the purchase of the shares of Bokaro and Ramgur Co. Ltd. The Tribunal noted that the sale of Karanpura shares resulted in a net profit of Rs. 88,522/-, that in respect of the Karanpura shares there was correspondence showing that his brokers had advised him to acquire 51 per cent of the company's shareholding as he desired to obtain control over its management, that for doing so he wanted to obtain founder's shares (each of which shares carried 3 votes per share), that a compromise was proposed in a suit he had filed as the lessor of the mines leased out to the company, that M/s. Bird & Co., the managing agents of that company, were not willing to sell him shares representing the unissued capital of the company on terms proposed by the assessee and that ultimately he failed to obtain majority of shares which only could have enabled him to obtain control over the company's management. But the Tribunal found that "the assessee was attempting to obtain control of the company not by purchasing of shares in the market, but by issue of shares by the company in order to settle the dispute between the company and the assessee. These negotiations finally failed".

It finally held that having perused the correspondence and having regard to the circumstances, the purchase of Karanpura shares was not in pursuance of a scheme to obtain control over the company by acquiring 51 per cent of the votes therein.

10. The High Court, after hearing the References, held that though the Tribunal had in the earlier assessments held that the assessee's transactions in shares, securities and gold did not amount to transactions in the nature of trade or business, and therefore, the assessee could not be treated as a dealer in these articles, there was no bar to the revenue coming to a different conclusion, though to do so it must have some new materials and facts before it. It further held that the present Tribunal could also arrive at such a conclusion having regard to (a) the frequency of transactions of purchase and sale of shares, (b) the short interval between purchase and sale of shares, (c) the fact of Rs. 48 lacs in the assessee's wife's account having been ear-marked for shares transactions, (d) his borrowing Rs. 5-10 lacs against gold for purchase of shares, and lastly, the fact that the Tribunal this time had before it a more complete picture of the assessee's transactions over a length of period which its predecessor had not when it dealt with the assessments for the assessment years 1939-40 to 1941-

42. The High Court further held that there was fresh material, namely, that when the gold was sold, its sale proceeds were again invested in shares and the fact that though Victory Bonds were purchased in January 1945 they were sold after an interval of two months only. The High Court, in this view, concluded that "the Appellate Tribunal, therefore had before it fresh materials for coming to a conclusion contrary to the one come to by its predecessors in the previous orders." It rejected the assessee's case (a) that he had converted one investment into another, i.e., from shares and securities to gold, because of the worsening of the war situation after the fall of France in 1940, (b) that when the war situation improved in 1944 and with that the price of gold began to fall he once again converted his investment from gold to shares, i.e., from an unproductive investment into one which could give him an adequate yield, and (c) that he had sold gold because of pressing necessities. The first contention was held unsustainable because even after purchasing gold the assessee had retained considerable cash; the second was rejected on the ground that the assessee had sold gold not because of the allied victory in sight but because he found the gold unprofitable by reason of the fall in its price and the third was rejected as the assessee had failed to make good the pressing necessities alleged by him. The High Court further held that the findings given by the Appellate Tribunal were all findings of fact and as they could not be said to have been arrived at without any evidence they could not be interfered with in a Reference under Section 66 (2), and answered the questions as to the two surplus amounts of Rs. 13 lacs and odd and Rs. 33 thousand and odd as liable to assessment. In regard to the excess of Rs. 88,522/- resulting from the sale of Karanpura shares, the High Court agreed with the Tribunal that that amount also was rightly brought to tax. It held that the finding of the Tribunal that the purchase of these shares was not in pursuance of a scheme to obtain control in the company and that the assessee's scheme for that purpose was to acquire shares representing the unissued capital of the company was one of fact with which also it had no jurisdiction to interfere.

11. Counsel for the appellant disputed the correctness of the High

Court's judgment and contended (1) that it was in error in declining to go into the correctness of the findings of the Tribunal by merely stating that they were findings of fact, (2) that the question whether a particular item was a trading profit or capital accretion depended on the intention on the part of the assessee at the time of the transaction in question and which had to be arrived at by an inference from established facts and was, therefore, a mixed question of fact and law, (3) that on the facts and circumstances, the Tribunal, and following it the High Court, was in error in treating the gold and the Karanpura shares as the stock-in-trade of the assessee for his alleged trading activities, (4) that the onus of proving that the activities of the assessee amounted to activities in the nature of trade or business was on the department and particularly so, as the Tribunal in the earlier assessments had come to a contrary conclusion, and (5) that the facts and circumstances as accepted by the Tribunal in its Statement of Case showed that the purchases of gold and shares were made without any intention at that time to re-sell them at profit, and that therefore, the subsequent sales thereof would not stamp those transactions with the character of trade or business in them.

12. Since these appeals arise out of References under S. 66 (2), we cannot exercise any wider power of interference than that permitted to the High Court under the Act. That was not disputed by Mr. Desai. But in support of his contention that this was a case where the High Court could and should have interfered with the Tribunal's findings, he cited a number of decisions. It is not necessary to go into all those decisions as the principles on which such interference can be made and the scope of power under S. 66 to do so are by now well established. That the question, whether an assessee carries on business or whether certain transactions are in the course of business or whether they amount to adventures in the nature of trade or business, is a mixed question of fact and law is well settled. The decision in Venkataswami Naidu and Co. v. C.I.T. (1959) 35 ITR 594 at pp. 603 to 604 = (AIR 1959 SC 359 at pp. 363, 364) is an instance in point where this Court observed that the expression 'adventure in the nature of trade' appearing in the definition of "business" implies the existence of certain elements in the adventure which in law would invest it with the character of trade and that renders the question whether a transaction is in the nature of trade a mixed question of law and fact and the High Court in such a case would interfere if the Tribunal had misdirected itself in law. [cf. also Liquidators of Purna Limited v. C.I.T. (1954) 25 ITR 265 = (AIR 1954 SC 253)]. But to distinguish a question of fact and a question of law is not always easy, for, sometimes there is a common area between the two and though a mere question of fact can be turned into one of law care should be taken against a finding of a mixed question of fact and law being given the unassailability which the Act confers on a pure finding of fact. The case of Sree Meenakshi Mills Limited v. C.I.T. (1957) 31 ITR 28 = (AIR 1957 SC 49) holds that where an ultimate finding on an issue is an inference, to be drawn from facts found, on application of a principle of law, there is a mixed question of law and fact and such an inference in such a case is a question of law open to review by the court. On the other hand, when the final determination of the issue does not involve any application of a principle of law, an inference is a pure inference of fact drawn from the other basic facts. Such an inference can be attacked only if there is no evidence to support it, or, if it is perverse. Since the expression 'adventure in the nature of trade' implies the existence of certain elements in the transactions which in law would invest them with the character of trade or business and the question on that account, becomes a mixed question of law and fact, the Court can review the Tribunal's finding if it has misdirected itself in law.

13. It is fairly clear that where a person in selling his investment realises an enhanced price, the excess over his purchase price is not profit assessable to tax. But it would be so, if what is done is not a mere realisation of the investment but an act done for making profits. The distinction between the two types of transactions is not always easy to make. The distinction whether the transaction is of one kind or the other depends on the question whether the excess was an enhancement of the value by realising a security or a gain in an operation of profit making. If the transaction is in the ordinary line of the assessee's business there would hardly be any difficulty in concluding that it was a trading transaction, but where it is not, the facts must be properly assessed to discover whether it was in the nature of trade. The surplus realised on the sale of shares, for instance, would be capital if the assessee is an ordinary investor realising his holding; but it would be revenue, if he deals with them as an adventure in the nature of trade. The fact that the original purchase was made with the intention to re-sell if an enhanced price could be obtained is by itself not enough but in conjunction with the conduct of the assessee and other circumstances it may point to the trading character of the transaction. For instance, an assessee may invest his capital in shares with the intention to re-sell them if in future their sale may bring in higher price. Such an investment, though motivated by a possibility of enhanced value, does not render the investment a transaction in the nature of trade. The test often applied is, has the assessee made his shares and securities the stock-in-trade of a business.

14. Though the assessee was at the material time a landholder of a large estate, that fact by itself would not mean that his transactions in shares, securities and bullion cannot be transactions in the nature of trade. They had, therefore, to be examined in the light of all the facts and circumstances to ascertain whether they had been entered into in pursuit of a trading activity. The first relevant fact is that the assessee's occupation was that of a landholder, having, on attaining majority, a considerable amount of money available for raising income therefrom. The transactions in question were obviously not in the line of any business or trade carried on by him. Since the Tribunal came to a conclusion as regards the nature of the assessee's transactions different from that arrived at earlier, it would be useful to tabulate them at one place. So tabulated, they are as follows:

(1) Sale of Government securities in 1938-39 which realised Rs. 44.25 lacs;

(2) Opening of an account with this and certain other amounts totalling Rs. 48 lacs in the Imperial Bank;

(3) Purchase out of these funds, shares and debentures of the value of Rs. 34.14 lacs in September 1939;

(4) Sale in October 1939, i.e., within a month, of some of these shares bringing him Rs. 5.75 lacs;

(5) Sale of the bulk of the shares in 1940 bringing in Rs. 29.58 lacs;

(6) Sale of the remaining shares in 1941 resulting in a small deficit;

(7) Purchase of 68109 tolas of gold in June 1940 for Rs. 28.47 lacs;

(8) Sale of the bulk of the gold, i.e., 55495 tolas in October 1944 resulting in a surplus of Rs. 13 lacs and odd;

(9) Sale of the remaining gold in October 1945 resulting in a surplus of Rs. 33,481/-;

(10) Purchase of Karanpura shares between December 1944 and April 1945 of the value of Rs. 2,37,267/-;

(11) Purchase of Victory Bonds in January 1945 of Rs. 14 lacs, and sale thereof in March 1945;

(12) Borrowing Rs. 5.10 lacs against gold in 1945-46;

(13) Purchase of Bokaro Ramgur shares in 1945-46 for Rs. 39.81 lacs; and

(14) Sale of Karanpura shares in 1945-46 bringing in a surplus of Rupees 88,000/- and odd.

As already stated, though these transactions were not in the line of any trade or business carried on by the assessee, nonetheless, if they possess the characteristics of adventures in the nature of trade, the profits resulting therefrom would be liable to tax. But in an enquiry on the question whether these transactions were in the nature of trade or business, it would not be altogether irrelevant to notice that in 1938-39, when the assessee sold the Government securities, he sold the entire lot and invested the bulk of their sale proceeds in shares and debentures, i.e., as much as Rs. 34 lacs. The same feature is present also in his purchase of gold in 1940 and its disposal in 1944 and 1945 using its sale proceeds in buying shares, which, it must be remembered, were of two companies only. The transactions thus are not diversified, nor are gradual according to the opportunities offered by fluctuating market prices, but are in bulk and almost at a time, which ordinarily are not the characteristics of the dealings of a person carrying on trade or business, in them. Thus, in 1938-39 all Government securities were sold and the bulk of their sale proceeds, i.e., Rs. 34 lacs and odd, used in the purchase of shares. The same was the case when gold was bought and sold. Furthermore, when a person trades in shares and debentures, he does not ordinarily buy shares of two companies only, except when a particular script has the possibility of giving an unusual or a certain profit. There was nothing on record to show, nor did the Tribunal find, that that was the case with the shares of either of the two companies whose shares the assessee purchased in such large quantity. Prima facie, these transactions would appear in the nature of investments and their conversion into what the assessee believed to be better investments as the circumstances changed from time to time.

15. In support of his contention that these transactions were not in the nature of trade or business, the assessee had relied on the correspondence between him on the one hand and his bankers and brokers on the other, which had satisfied the Tribunal previously with reference to the assessment years 1939-40 to 1941-42. That correspondence lends support to the assessee's case inasmuch as he had therein clearly instructed his brokers to invest the sale proceeds of the said Government securities in such a way as to give him an annual yield of net 7 per cent. There can be no doubt that Government securities were sold accordingly and shares of certain companies were purchased from their sale proceeds in accordance with the advice of his brokers and bankers. When it was found that certain shares so purchased were not likely to yield the percentage he desired, they were sold within hardly a month from their purchase. The circumstances in which these transactions were brought about, would disclose, as was held by the previous Tribunal in the case of the earlier assessments, that the assessee's intention then was to change his investments from Government securities into shares and debentures which, he was advised, would procure him a better yield. This conclusion is consistent with his sale of the entire lot of Government securities at a time, his going in for shares with their sale proceeds and the sale in October 1939 of certain shares which were found incapable of giving the return he desired.

16. Since the present Tribunal had the advantage of examining the assessee's transactions during the whole of the period, i.e., right from 1938-39 to 1944-45 and thus have a more comprehensive picture of all the transactions, there would be no bar to its coming to a conclusion different from that arrived at in the earlier years, if the acts and conduct of the assessee taken as a whole throughout the period pointed to a different conclusion as both the Tribunal and the High Court have said. But the only new materials pointed out by the Tribunal from which a different conclusion could be arrived at were (1) the sale of gold in 1944 and 1945, (2) the purchase of the said shares from its sale proceeds, and (3) the sale of Karanpura shares.

17. The question, therefore, the Tribunal had before it was, whether when the assessee purchased the gold he did so with the intention to deal in it. The Tribunal held, and the High Court concurred with it, that the assessee's transactions showed that they were in the nature of trading transactions. Two facts, however, throw considerable doubt on the validity of that conclusion and neither the Tribunal nor the High Court seems to have weighed them with the consideration which they demand. The first fact is that in 1940 he converted his entire share-holding into gold, a fact consistent with his case that he did so because of the nervousness engendered by the breaking out of the Second World War, the initial German victories and the fall of France. The Tribunal did not countenance this case for it thought that if that was so, the assessee would have invested the other cash lying with him also in gold, and secondly because according to it the war panic started in 1942 and not in 1940. We do not think that this was an accurate approach. The fact that the assessee did not invest all his cash cannot mean, as the Tribunal thought, that his case about the purchases of gold was not correct. The war had commenced in 1939 and it is a notorious fact that in 1940 the fortunes of the allies were none too bright. The fact was that the assessee sold his entire share-holding and applied their sale proceeds and also a further amount of Rs. 13 lacs and odd obtained from his lessees, M/s. Anderson Wright and Company, into gold. The second fact, whose significance does not also seem to have been adequately apprehended, was that the assessee, who started with the plan of getting at least net 7 per cent yield, put a very large part of his funds into gold, an altogether sterile security, and retained that gold in his family vaults for nearly 4 years. The Tribunal had before it the gold prices current during the years 1940 to 1944. These indicate that the gold price remained steady at Rs. 42 per tola all throughout 1940. There was, however, an upward trend noticeable from about the end of 1941 which went up to Rs. 65 towards the end of 1942. By the middle of 1943 the gold price had risen to Rs. 90 and even more. In October, 1944, when the assessee sold a large bulk of his gold holding, the price was at Rs. 68 per tola. If the idea of the assessee in purchasing the gold was to trade in it, he would not have waited for 4 years without disposing of a particle of it. The price was on the upward trend in 1941 and reached the climax in 1943 when he could have sold the gold and made considerable gain. The fact that he did not do so and waited until October 1944 appears to give credence to his case that by about the end of 1944 the war fortunes were turning in favour of the allies, that confidence had gradually been regained by trading circles and that that was why he thought that it was no longer necessary for him to retain the gold any further and could safely invest his money in income bearing securities. The further fact that he sold practically the whole of his stock of gold in October, 1944 instead of selling it bit by bit when the price was rising since about the end of 1942 is inconsistent with the hypothesis that the object with which the gold was purchased was to trade in it.

18. Regarding share transactions, we think that the Tribunal placed undue emphasis on the fact that when he opened the bank account in March, 1939 with the sale proceeds of Government securities, he did so, firstly, in the name of his wife and secondly, called that account as one of "Rs. 48 lacs floating in the share market". The first had no particular significance and the second properly viewed only meant that he wanted to set apart this fund for transactions in shares and securities and not mix up his other capital and the income arising from his estate. The name he gave to this account cannot for that reason only render his dealings with that account into trading transaction, if otherwise, they were not.

19. Similarly, the Tribunal was unduly impressed by the fact that he sold away the Victory Bonds within about two months from their purchase. The correspondence produced by the assessee clearly shows that he had bought those Bonds at the pressure of the then Commissioner. The Bonds were not likely to fetch him the yield he desired. His purchase of them had thus served the purpose, viz., his showing to the authorities that his estate had made a war contribution. The sale by him of those Bonds would not affect the Government or its war effort. The fact that he sold them soon after the purchase would not invest it with the stamp of trade or business in Victory Bonds.

20. As regards the Karanpura shares, the correspondence between him and the company and the advice he had from his brokers referred to in the Statement of Case show that the assessee did at one time entertain the idea of obtaining control over the company's management by procuring 51 per cent of its total shares. He could do so by purchasing shares in the open market and also by other means. He purchased 7025 shares in the market but that was clearly not enough. There was at that time litigation going on between him and the company and he seems to have hit upon the idea that he would compromise his suit if the managing agents of the company were to sell him shares representing its unissued capital at prices offered by him. The object of his offer was that he would not have to pay the market price of the shares which was 3 times more than the one offered by him. The company did not agree and his move for compromise failed. According to him, there was, therefore, no useful purpose for retaining those shares and he sold 6950 shares leaving only 75 shares with him. On these facts the Tribunal was not right in concluding that the shares which the assessee purchased from the market were not for the purpose of acquiring the major share-holding in the company and that the control over the company was to be obtained only by purchasing shares representing the unissued capital. Both the purchase of shares and the move to obtain shares representing the unissued capital were part of the same design and if the latter failed, his purchase of 7025 shares would obviously not bring him nearer his object. Furthermore, the bulk of the sale proceeds of gold went into the purchase of Bokaro Ramgur shares which remained with him till the assessment years in question. The profits made on the sale of shares, acquired with the intention of obtaining control over the company's management and not for dealing in them, would be on the capital and not revenue account. (see Kishan Prasad and Company Limited v. C. I. T., (1955) 27 ITR 49 = (AIR 1955 SC 252) and C. I. T. v. National Finance Limited, (1962) 44 ITR 788 = (AIR 1962 SC 835). The Statement of Case itself set out facts which were consistent with the assessee's case.

21. In our view the Tribunal misdirected itself in applying the law to the facts found by it both in the matter of gold and shares, and the High Court would have been entitled to interfere with its findings instead of holding that it could not do so as the findings were findings of fact. The questions involved being mixed questions of fact and law, the hypothesis on which the High Court acted that the findings were purely findings of fact and therefore, were unassailable was in our view not correct.

22. The appeals, therefore, will have to be allowed and the answers given by the High Court set aside. We hold that the two questions referred to the High Court should have been answered in assessee's favour and we do so accordingly. The respondent will pay to the appellant costs of these appeals but only one hearing fee.

Appeals allowed.

RAY, J.:— This appeal is by special leave against the judgment dated 21 October, 1970 of the High Court of Punjab and Haryana convicting the nine appellants, Surta, Ram Sarup, Birkha, Jagram, Mangal, Juggal, Mannu, Lakhi and Sisram under Section 148 of the Indian Penal Code and sentencing them to six months rigorous imprisonment and also convicting them under S. 339/149 of the Indian Penal Code and sentencing them to rigorous imprisonment for one year. The other two appellants were awarded a sentence of imprisonment till the rising of the Court and a fine of Rs. 50/- under Section 148 of the Indian Penal Code and in default of payment of fine to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one month each. They were further sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100/- under Section 333/149 of the Indian Penal Code and in default of payment to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two months each.

2. The appeal by special leave was limited to the question of sentence only.

3. On 30 July, 1966 Mangal Singh, Assistant Sub-Inspector accompanied by four constables left Police Station, Rewari for patrol duty sometime after 8 p. m. One Piare Lal lodged a report with Mangal Singh that two of his cows were missing. Mangal Singh and his constables reached village Jatuwas in the company of Piare Lal. Piare Lal pointed out the two cows. Mangal Singh called Kurra who was Lambardar. Three other persons came along with Kurra. Mangal Singh informed those three persons that the two cows belonged to Piare Lal and were alleged to be stolen property. These persons refused to hand over the cows. When efforts of Mangal Singh failed to persuade the villagers to hand over the cows he ordered the constables to untie the cows for taking them away. At this Kurra and the three other persons, Chhelu, Ram Rikh and Partap assaulted Mangal Singh. The four constables intervened. The villagers rushed to the spot and fell upon Mangal Singh and the constables. In order to defend himself Mangal Singh fired from his service revolver which injured one of the villagers. Mangal Singh received some injuries on his arm and his revolver fell from his hand. The four constables and Piare Lal ran away from the spot. After some time the Sub-Inspector of Rewari Police Station learning that a Police Officer was lying injured reached the place and found Mangal Singh. The Police Officer recorded the statements of Mangal Singh and of the constables. Mangal Singh was sent to the hospital at Rewari for medical examination. The Sub-Inspector Ripudaman Singh carried on the investigation. He arrested 22 persons and recovered the service revolver from the person of Surta.

4. The defence version was that crops of the accused were damaged by stray cattle. They made a complaint to the Deputy Commissioner. The accused had been told to detain the stray cattle so that they could be removed. The accused rounded up the cattle and informed the officers at Delhi to send a truck for taking away the cattle. Before the cattle could be taken away the Police party arrived. The accused informed the Police party that the cattle could not be taken away. This infuriated Mangal Singh who started firing. The defence further stated that they caused injuries in the exercise of private defence of person as otherwise Mangal Singh would have killed some of them.

5. The High Court found that when the four constables went forward to untie the cattle the villagers attacked Mangal Singh and other constables and it was at this stage that the pistol was used. The accused did not have the right to stop the Police party from untying the cattle. It was also found by the High Court that the accused did not have the right of private defence and force was used to restrain them from interfering with the Police party taking possession of the cows.

6. Before the High Court it was submitted on behalf of the appellants that the sentence was severe. The High Court held that the sentence was not at all excessive and in fact the Sessions Judge erred on the side of leniency. Counsel on behalf of the appellants submitted that the accused spent about 3 months in prison before being enlarged on bail and in the facts and circumstances of the case that sentence should suffice.

7. This Court interferes with sentence only when it is established that the sentence is harsh or unjust in the facts and circumstances of the case. Sometimes consideration of age has also occasioned interference. There are instances of interference in sentences of fine in cases of violation of statutory offence. In the present case, the Sessions Court and the High Court both considered the question of sentence. There is nothing on record to suggest that the sentence passed is unjust or harsh.

8. The appeal is therefore, dismissed. The accused will surrender if on bail and serve out the sentence.

Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1971 SUPREME COURT 804 (V 58 C 163)

(From: Orissa)*

S. M. SIKRI, C. J., P. JAGANMOHAN REDDY AND I. D. DUA, JJ.

Balakrushna Swain, Appellant v. The State of Orissa, Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 44 of 1968, D/- 9-2-1971.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 161 — Unjustified and unexplained long delay on part of investigating officer in recording statement of material eye witness during investigation of murder case will render evidence of such witness unreliable. Cr. A. Nos. 222 & 223 of 1966, dated 15-2-1967 (Orissa), Reversed.

(Paras 5, 6, 8)

Mr. R. Mahalingier, Advocate, amicus curiae for Appellant; M/s. Gobind Das and B. D. Sharma, Advocates, for Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

P. JAGANMOHAN REDDY, J.: — The Appellant Balakrushna Swain was convicted of an offence of murder under Section 302 and awarded death sentence by the Additional Sessions

*(Cri. Appls. Nos. 222 and 223 of 1966, D/- 15-2-1967 — Orissa.)

Judge, Cuttack, subject to confirmation by the High Court. He was further convicted of an offence under Section 148 and sentenced to four months rigorous imprisonment. Two other accused namely Laxmidhar Swain and Pranakrushna Swain were convicted under Sections 148 and 323 Indian Penal Code and both sentenced in respect of Section 148 Indian Penal Code to four months rigorous imprisonment. Further though both of them were convicted under Section 323 the former was sentenced to a fine of Rs. 50/- while the latter to Rs. 200/- in default to undergo respectively one month and four months rigorous imprisonment. Eight other accused who were tried along with them were acquitted. The Appellant and the other two accused appealed to the High Court which while confirming the conviction awarded life sentence instead of death penalty on the Appellant and maintained the sentences passed on the other two convicted accused. The Appellant has come up before us in Appeal by special leave.

2. The deceased Bhramar Swain had after the death of his wife kept Sundari sister of Chakradhar Swain P. W. 5 as his Mistress. After she had lived with him for sometime it was said that there arose a faction in the village in which the Appellant supported the claim of Sundari that she should be given the status of a wife by the deceased. Sundari's brother P. W. 5 and their maternal uncle Baishnab were also supporting the deceased to make provision for and accept Sundari as his wife. In respect of this dispute there was some strained feeling between Sundari's brother Chakradhar and the deceased. Apart from this there were also some land disputes arising out of purchases by the deceased from one Fakir Swain father of P. W. 9 and P. W. 10 his homestead and house standing in front of his house. The Appellant however raised an objection that he and the deceased jointly purchased this property but the deceased claimed that he alone had purchased it. It is also said there was a disagreement with some of the villagers of Nachhipura because of which the deceased lived for a year or two at village Pokhariapada in the house of his relation Daitari Naik. The deceased came back to Nachhipura a few days before the occurrence namely on 6-1-66. P. W. 5 was helping the deceased in building a part of his house and for this purpose he brought a rafter from the house which the deceased had purchased from Fakir Swain. While this rafter was being fixed for reconstructing the house of the deceased the Appellant came there, started a quarrel and after some exchange of words the Appellant snatched away the wooden rafter and carried it away. On the same evening it is said that a meeting in a lane near the house of Anand Swain was held attended to by 11 accused originally charged before the Sessions Judge, at which there was a talk that the deceased had come to the village and that he should be killed. That night at about 9 p. m. the deceased after taking his night meal wanted to go to sleep in the house of Uttam P. W. 2. As he was apprehending danger he was accompanied by P. W. 2 and P. W. 5 and on the way the deceased and P. W. 5 both went to ease themselves. After easing and washing themselves while they were returning and proceeding towards the house of P. W. 2 the Appellant and the accused Laxmidhar Swain suddenly appeared from a hay stacked nearby with Lathis or some like weapons. Laxmidhar Swain at once gave a stroke on the head of Chakradhar P. W. 5 while the Appellant gave a stroke on the head of the deceased who fell down. Uttam P. W. 2 who was walking in front, on listening the cry of P. W. 5 came back when Pranakrushna Swain gave him a stroke on his back. After the deceased had fallen down, it is alleged that the Appellant gave a Katari blow on him, as a result of which the deceased died. All the accused then ran away. The villagers who had heard the disturbance came there and found that P. W. 5 was also having severe bleeding injuries. The dead body of the deceased was then placed on a bamboo platform erected at the spot. P. W. 1 who is deceased's sister's son and who is said to be adopted by the deceased went to the Police Station at Ersama which is situated at about 7 miles away from the Village and gave the F. I. R. at 6 a. m. on 7-1-66 in which he said:

"My maternal uncle after easing himself went to clean himself in the common pond of Gurubari Swain, Nisakar Swain and others on the southern side of the village and came out. Balakrushna Swain, Pranakrushna Swain and Laxmidhar Swain came out at once from the side of that tank with Lathis or some like weapon as was visible. Laxmidhar Swain at once gave a stroke on the head of Chakradhar Swain. Balakrushna Swain gave a stroke on the head of my maternal uncle Bhramar. I could not clearly see, in the moonlight, the weapon they held. My maternal uncle at once fell down just after the stroke on him. When Uttam Charan Swain came there hearing the cry of Chakradhar Swain, Panu Swain gave two strokes on his back".

Thereafter the F. I. R. records P. W. 1 as stating that 20 or 25 people who were standing there said 'kill him catch him'. He further says he was able to recognise by the voice seven accused whose names he gave. Apart from these seven persons he had also named five others who were standing there holding a lathi which he says was visible to him in the moonlight. The Investigating Officer Banambar Ray P. W. 19 started the investigation, went to the spot, held an inquest and collected blood stained mud M. O. XII from the paddy field where the incident is said to have taken place. He also went to the house of the deceased and searched for blood stained earth but did not find it. P. W. 19 says while he was going to the place of incident, he met P. W. 5 who was being carried in a basket, so he gave a requisition Ex. 11 to the Medical Officer, Ersama for examination and treatment. The body of the deceased was also sent on 8-1-66 to Cuttack for post-mortem examination, as carriers could not be arranged earlier. On 7-1-66 he arrested the Appellant and two others and the remaining accused were arrested on different dates. A wooden lathi M. O. IV was recovered from the house of the Appellant on 8-1-66 and M. O. V and VI, the blood stained Lungi and Ganji (Vest) of P. W. 5 was seized on 15-1-66. He then sent the blood stained articles to the chemical examiner. These articles bore a few brown stains of blood with respect to which the serilogist reported that the result of the test on the Ganji was inconclusive while the blood on the Lungi and blood stained earth had disintegrated and therefore it could not be ascertained that what was found on these articles was human blood.

3. The case of the defence is that the accused did not commit the offence and said that due to previous enmity and party faction they have been implicated. The further case of the defence was that on the evening of the incident at about 6 p. m. on 6-1-66 during the course of a quarrel between the deceased on the one side and Chakradhar P. W. 5 and the Appellant on the other in the house of the deceased about a wooden pole brought from the house of the deceased which he had purchased and which the Appellant claimed belonged jointly to him and the deceased; a wooden rafter from the roof fell on the deceased as also on P. W. 5 Chakradhar and injured them. As a result of the injury thus caused, the deceased died. Thereafter the dead body was removed to the paddy field and placed on a bamboo platform erected for this purpose.

4. The Sessions Judge as well as the High Court rejected this defence relying on the evidence of P. W. 1 who had stated that though a wooden rafter had fallen down it did not cause any injury either to the deceased or Chakradhar P. W. 5. The eye witnesses to this incident are P. W. 1, nephew of the deceased, P. W. 2 Uttam Swain and P. W. 5 Chakradhar, the brother of Sundari. Of these P. W. 2 was declared hostile. The High Court observed that of these eye witnesses the evidence of P. W. 1 and P. W. 2 is not reliable but it believed the evidence of P. W. 5 and confirmed the conviction of the Appellant.

5. It has been contended before us that the evidence of P. W. 5 is also not reliable, in that he is inimically disposed to the deceased and was an interested witness inasmuch as he was the brother of Sundari whose side he was taking to obtain for her the status of a wife. In fact according to the submission of the learned Advocate the Appellant had not killed the deceased but the rafter had fallen while they were all quarrelling in the house of the deceased injuring the deceased and P. W. 5 as a result of which injury the deceased died. Thereafter there was a conference between P. W. 1, P. W. 5 and others all night in that house as to what should be done with the dead body and ultimately it was decided to remove the dead body to the paddy field put it on a bamboo platform which was to be built for this purpose and implicate the accused. Accordingly P. W. 1 was sent to give a report. As we said earlier the High Court did not rely on the evidence of P. W. 1 and P. W. 2 as in its view they could not have witnessed the occurrence. It was also observed that P. W. 1 was an interested witness being the sister's son of the deceased and also that he could not have seen the actual murder and assault as on his own showing he was proceeding to P. W. 2's house when the deceased who had gone to ease himself was assaulted while he was on his way to join him. P. W. 2's evidence was not relied on although he is stated to have been assaulted by (the accused) the Appellant, Pranakrushna Swain because there was no mark of injury on his person nor was he medically examined. P. W. 19, the Investigating Officer admitted that although he had seen P. W. 2 in the Village from January 7 to January 13, 1966 he found no marks of assault on him nor did P. W. 2 consent for being sent to medical examination. As we have pointed out earlier P. W. 2 was also declared hostile and the prosecution allowed to cross-examine him. In these circumstances their evidence was rightly not relied upon to support the prosecution case as to who and in what circumstances the occurrence took place. The only other evidence is that of P. W. 5 who was not examined till the 15th January i.e. till after 10 or 11 days of the incident. There was no reason why P. W. 19 could not have examined him because on his own showing P. W. 19 had met P. W. 5 while he was going to the Village when P. W. 5 was being taken to the Hospital. No doubt P. W. 19 says that P. W. 5 was not in a condition, for him, to record his statement but apart from his saying so he does not tell us in what condition P. W. 5 was. P. W. 5 went to the Ersama Primary Health Centre where Dr. Kanungo P. W. 22 who was then the Medical Officer in-charge had examined him on receiving a requisition Ex. 11 from the Police. According to the Doctor, P. W. 5 was under his treatment from 7-1-1966 to 12-1-1966. On examination he found four wounds:

1) "One contused wound with blood clot over the injury over the surrounding tissues, extending to face. The margins were rough and regular.

The size of injury was 1 1/2" x 1/4". As the injury was bleeding I could not measure its depth, but the injury had a depth. The injury was on the left side head.

2) One contused wound with blood clot, with haematoma of mucous surface on right side upper lip. The size of the injury was 1/4" x 1/4". The colour of the injury was black.

3) One bruise with swelling 3" x 1 1/2" on the left fore-arm dorsal aspect-close to elbow joint.

4) One bruise with swelling 2" x 1" on left side back over scapula."

In cross-examination the Doctor admitted that P. W. 5 was not treated as an emergency patient and since there were only 2 beds for emergency cases he did not admit him as Indoor patient and that P. W. 5 was making his own arrangement for his stay and attending the Primary Health Centre daily for his treatment. P. W. 5 however states that he was admitted as an indoor patient for 12 days which cannot be accepted in view of the Doctor's evidence. While noting this divergence in the evidence of P. W. 19 and P. W. 5 the High Court seems to accept an explanation given by the Public Prosecutor that because P. W. 5 was being seen by the P. W. 19 everyday, P. W. 5 may have made arrangements for his stay in the Hospital premises but this is no-one's case. P. W. 19 says that P. W. 5 was coming everyday for treatment but there is no evidence as to whether P. W. 5 was staying in the Hospital premises or elsewhere, as such we find no justification in accepting the statement of P. W. 5 which in our view is a falsehood. In answer to a question by the Additional Sessions Judge P. W. 22 says he found a laceration in injury No. 1 although he did not mention the word laceration. He however admitted that in a contused wound there is always a laceration but the margins are regular. In further cross examination the Doctor said that since the margins of injury were regular he mentioned it as a contused wound instead of a lacerated wound and noted accordingly in his report Ex. 11/1. He further states that by a lathi no incised wound can be caused. Incised wounds have always some depth. In injury No. 1 also he found a depth but says that in contused wound also there can be some depth. This evidence clearly shows that P. W. 5 was not certainly, in a condition where his statement could not have been taken. The statement by P. W. 5 that he was an indoor patient was an attempt to support P. W. 19's explanation for not recording his statement earlier. That there was no valid reason for P. W. 19 not to record his statement earlier when he met P. W. 5 on the 7th itself is clear from his admissions that after he received the injuries he did not lose his senses and in fact sat at the place where the incident took place for two ghadis. The High Court itself has commented on the lapses in investigation and the delay in examination of P. W. 5 who was a material witness; none-the-less it merely says "even so the evidence of Chakradhar P. W. 5 cannot be rejected on account of his delayed examination by the investigating officer. In our opinion the delayed examination does not affect the veracity of Chakradhar Swain". Why when a similar statement made by P. W. 1 regarding the occurrence is not relied on, the statement of P. W. 5 should be relied particularly when such a long delay in his not being examined earlier is not explained. The High Court said that the Doctor P. W. 22 had not mentioned that there was a bleeding injury on the right side fore-head in certificate Ex. 11/1 although such an injury was mentioned in the Police requisition Ex. 11 of 7-1-66. This comment we may observe is not warranted because the Doctor was not cross-examined in respect of these discrepancies. The mere fact that P. W. 19 had given a requisition to examine P. W. 5 for an injury on the right side does not necessarily establish that the injury was on the right side. A good deal of cross-examination was directed in respect of the Report Ex. 11/2 given by him but nowhere was he asked as to whether there was an injury on the left side and why he had omitted to mention it. It is no one's case that there were two wounds one on the left side and the other on the right side. What P. W. 5 says is that Laxmidhar gave him four lathi blows as a result of which he had bleeding injury on the nostril and on the left side of head and he fell down because of this assault. The Doctor however said that this injury was on the right side. While there could have been a mistake whether the injury was on the right side as spoken by the Doctor or on the left side as spoken by the injured, there could be no mistake as to whether there could be one wound or two wounds because the witness does not speak about his having two wounds one on the left side and the other on the right side. Further P. W. 5 says that the Doctor gave him a discharge slip on the day he was discharged but later took it back after consultation with the Thana Babu and thereafter he did not give him any discharge slip. P. W. 5's blood stained clothes were also seized on the 15th about 10 days after the incident. The witness wants us to believe that for these 10 days he was wearing these blood stained clothes without removing them.

6. In view of all these incongruities we think there is justification in the comment of the learned Advocate for the accused that the delayed examination of P. W. 5 by P. W. 19 would give an opportunity to P. W. 5 to concoct a different version than what actually took place.

7. On the question of how the deceased received the fatal injury also there is material contradiction in the evidence of P. W. 5, Dr. N. K. Mohanty P. W. 16 who conducted the post-mortem, says that he found three external injuries which are:

1) Incised looking lacerated wound on scalp 3" x 3/4" x bone deep extending vertically from a point 2 1/2" above the root of the nose, on the frontal bone and right parietal bone.

2) Ecchymosis on left fore-head extending over an area of 2" x 2".

3) Ecchymosis of left upper eye lid.

On dissection a linear fracture of the skull 7" long extending in the frontal bone from a point 3" above the root of the nose which after running 2" turns to left vertically downwards on the left temporal bone. There was also a crack fracture 4" long running through the pituitary fossa extending to left along the front margin of the left petrous temporal bone. The injury to the brain in his opinion was the cause of death and that a blunt weapon must have caused the head injury. He was asked in examination-in-chief whether the blunt side of a Katari might also cause such an injury and his answer was that it could be so caused but in cross-examination he admitted that the head injury on the deceased was not an injury caused by a sharp cutting weapon by using its sharp edge. The evidence of P. W. 5 is that the Appellant gave a lathi blow on the waist of the deceased and after he fell down on the ground the Appellant gave a blow with the Katuri on his head. He further says he could see clearly the Katuri and that the Katuri blow on the deceased was given when P. W. 5 was still standing. According to this witness there was only one blow with a lathi and that too on the waist, if so this evidence is inconsistent with the Doctor's finding that the head injury must have been caused by a blunt weapon like a lathi. P. W. 5 however had stated in the Committal Court that one blow was given with lathi on the head and the other blow was on the waist and that too with a lathi. When confronted with his statement in the Committal Court that the Appellant had given a lathi blow on the head of the deceased, he denied that he made such a statement. When he was asked that in the Committal Court he had not said the Appellant had given a Katuri blow on the head of the deceased he said it is not a fact that he did not speak of a Katuri blow on the deceased. It was also put to him that he had not stated before the Police that a Katuri blow was given by the accused to the deceased but does not remember whether he stated before the police whether only one blow was given to the deceased. While the High Court noted this contradiction it appeared to it that the evidence of the Doctor that a blunt weapon must have caused the injury to the deceased was consistent with the statement of P. W. 5 in the Committal Court which statement was held to be substantive evidence since it was brought on record after due confrontation under Section 145 of the Evidence Act. The High Court further observed:

"In fact, even at the trial before the learned Additional Sessions Judge, Chakradhar (P. W. 5) in course of cross-examination ultimately said that he saw only one lathi blow given by the accused Appellant Balakrushna to the deceased. It is not improbable that there was some confusion not unnatural nor unlikely in a situation in which the three assailants were assaulting three victims at night in the paddy field in the manner they were doing — by reason of which Chakra-dhar (P. W. 5) at the Sessions trial mentioned Katuri also in addition to Lathi."

On the other hand the Trial Judge while referring to the contradiction in the Committal Court with the statement made by the Appellant before him observed that the outstanding fact is that the Appellant had both a lathi and a Katuri in his hand which fact was corroborated by P. W. 11 when he says he saw the Appellant running and holding in one hand a lathi and in the other a Katuri and since P. W. 16 the Doctor says the injury on the deceased could be caused by a lathi blow and also by the blunt edge of the Katuri he thought it was immaterial "whether some of the eye witnesses speak of a lathi blow being the cause of the head injury of Bhramar and others speak of a blow given with a Katuri being the cause of the injury. Thus from the above evidence of the occurrence witnesses, P. Ws. 1, 2 and 5 corroborated by the evidence of P. W. 11 in a substantial degree, the irresistible conclusion must be that the accused Balakrishna caused the mortal head injury of the deceased by giving a severe blow with either a lathi or the blunt edge of a katuri and thus, the death of Bhramar was caused instantaneously".

8. The above passage would show that the Sessions Judge was trying to reconcile the contradictions in the two statements of P. W. 5 by holding that the accused had both a Katuri and a lathi in his hands. This is so because P. W. 1 also says that the Appellant had a Katuri and a lathi when he attacked the deceased. It is in our view difficult to comprehend how he could carry a lathi in one hand and a Katuri in the other and still be free to give a Lathi or Katuri blow on the head of the deceased with such force and intensity as would cause the kind of injury which caused the death of the deceased. Be that as it may, the High Court as we have pointed out earlier relied on the statement of P. W. 5 made in the Committal Court in holding that the blow was given by a lathi. We however find that the Sessions Judge brought the deposition of P. W. 5 in the Committal Court on record under Section 288 of the Criminal Procedure Code not at the time when P. W. 5 was being examined but after the evidence for the prosecution was closed and after the statement of all the accused were recorded. The next day i. e., 8-12-66 it would appear the defence counsel tendered the deposition of P. W. 2 in the Committal Court but the Sessions Judge not only admitted that evidence but also the evidence of P. W. 5 in the Committal Court under Section 288, Criminal Procedure Code. Whether this is the proper procedure need not now concern us but even so the High Court failed to note that in the Committal Court the witness had not said that the Appellant was carrying a Katari also, but none-the-less in the Sessions Court he insists that he had said so. Similarly he denied that he stated in the Committal Court that the blow on the head was given by a lathi. In any case if the statement in the Committal Court is to be taken the first blow which was given by the Appellant was with a stick and was on the head and the second blow was on the waist. In the Sessions Court however, he stated that the first blow with a lathi was on the waist and after the deceased fell down it was only then the fatal blow was given on the head. These contradictions ordinarily would by themselves not have much significance but where as in this case the witness for no justifiable reasons was not examined for nearly 10 days and he is found to be telling falsehoods on material aspects of the case it becomes difficult to place any reliance on such testimony particularly when he tries to conform to the evidence of P. W. 1 in the Sessions Court that the first blow was given by a lathi on the waist and the second by a Katari on the head. When this very statement of P. W. 1 has not been relied on by the High Court there is no reason for taking a part of his statement from the Sessions Court and a part from the Committal Court to piece it as a whole for a narration as to how the deceased was killed. There are also other circumstances in this case which though may not support the defence version of how the incident took place none-the-less indicate that there have been confabulations and consultations between P. W. 5 and the other witnesses immediately after the death of the deceased. The fact that the dead body was put on a bamboo platform which was constructed for that purpose in the paddy fields would indicate that the incident may not have taken place as spoken to by the witnesses. The evidence of P. W. 1 shows that on the date of the occurrence he, Mahani, Uttam, Fakir, Nisakar had discussions for two hours in the house of Bharmar. The question naturally arises as to what they were discussing. Were they discussing as suggested by the learned Advocate for the Appellant as to what story must be told about the death of the deceased? This admission merely indicates that the version in first information was not spontaneous. P. W. 2 says that the Appellant dragged the deceased and Laxmidhar Swain caught hold of the neck of the deceased and threw him on the floor and then the Appellant assaulted him with a Katari on the head. This caused bleeding injury and death on the spot. The witness further says in cross-examination that there was a quarrel between the deceased and his brother-in-law (Sala) on the date of occurrence. This quarrel between Sala and Behnoi took place two ghadis before sunset. He also said that the deceased never used to stay in his — the witness's house but on the day of the occurrence he was going to stay in his house. On the evidence of P. W. 1 15 days before the incident, he, the deceased's mother and younger son came to live in the deceased's house at Nachhipura. When the deceased found that his house was broken down, he started to build it, on the day of the incident when there was a verbal wrangle and physical struggle between the deceased on one side and the Appellant and P. W. 5 on the other in respect of a rafter brought by the deceased from the house purchased from Fakir Swain. In fact he admits at this time a wooden rafter fell down but it did not cause any injury to the deceased and P. W. 5. The witness also speaks of enmity between P. W. 5 and the deceased because P. W. 5 was supporting Sundari. There seems to have been a Criminal Case filed by the deceased against Sundari. P. W. 5 and the Appellant sometime before the incident and according to the witness on the day of the incident P. W. 5 and the Appellant were on one side when the physical struggle as spoken to by P. W. 1 took place against the deceased. Relying on this evidence the learned Advocate for the Appellant contends that on the day of the incident there was a quarrel and a physical struggle about the rafter brought from the house purchased by deceased from Fakir Swain, in which P. W. 5 and the Appellant were on one side and the deceased on the other. In this physical struggle it is contended that blows may have been exchanged between P. W. 5 on the one hand and the deceased on the other in which P. W. 5 caused a fatal injury to the deceased, while deceased was responsible for injuries on P. W. 5. Thereafter it is alleged that P. W. 5 with the help of P. W. 1 and others cooked up and concocted the story against the Appellant and others as they were also inimical and would have a motive for killing the deceased. Whether there is justification for this contention which is merely based on the testimony of P. W. 1 that there was quarrel and physical struggle between the deceased on one side and P. W. 5 and the Appellant on the other, there are several features in this case to which we have referred which will certainly create a doubt as to the veracity of P. W. 5's statement. If P. W. 1's testimony about the occurrence cannot be relied on or the same parity of reasoning the evicence of P. W. 5 also is not dependable. The evidence to which we have referred would show that the eye witnesses have not come out with the truth as to how the occurrence took place and where it took place. In the circumstances it would be unsafe to rely on it, in convicting the accused. We accordingly allow the Appeal, set aside the conviction and direct the accused to be released.

Appeal allowed.

Rishbud and Inder Singh v.

The State of Delhi 6

Mr. P. Ram Reddy, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. G. Narayana Rao, Advocate, with him), for Appellant; Mr. K. Jayaram, Advocate, for Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by SIKRI, C. J.: — This appeal is by certificate granted by the Andhra Pradesh High Court against its judgment allowing the appeal of the respondent and quashing the proceedings against him. He had been convicted by the learned Special Judge for SPE cases, Secunderabad, under Sec. 161, Indian Penal Code and Section 5 (2) read with Section 5 (1) (d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947 and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment.

2. The facts of the case and the points raised before us are as follows:

3. The respondent was working as Head Train Examiner and was posted at Waltair in the South Eastern Railway. It was alleged that on 14th July, 1964, the respondent demanded and accepted an amount of Rs. 5/- as gratification, other than legal remuneration, from P. W. 1 who too was a railway employee, as a motive or reward for having attested on 1-7-1964 an Urban Bank Pay Order dated 20-6-1964 for Rs. 265.80np. drawn in favour of P. W. 1 and for having posted him for duty at the Waltair Goods Yards. It appears that P. W. 1 approached the Inspector of the Special Police Establishment and informed him that the respondent was harassing him for a payment of bribe of Rs. 5/-. The Inspector made confidential enquiries and learnt that the respondent was indulging in corrupt practices and that there was truth in the complaint made by P. W. 1. On 13-7-64 he presented the requisition Ex. P-14 before the 1st Class Magistrate, Visakhapatnam, requesting him to authorise the Inspector to investigate the case. After stating the facts briefly in this requisition he said, "As the Superintendent of Police, S. P. E., is engaged in administrative matters and supervising investigations at Hyderabad and the other two Deputy Superintendents of Police are also engaged in the investigation of important cases and other enquiries and as it is not possible to secure their presence in the near future at Waltair to investigate into said complaint of Sri Appanna, I request that I may be permitted under Section 5-A of the Prevention of Corruption Act (Act 2 of 1947) and Section 155 (2), Criminal Procedure Code to investigate the allegations and to lay a trap". On the same day the District Munsif-cum-First Class Magistrate, Visakhapatnam, passed the following order:

"Whereas it is alleged that respondent is demanding and accepting illegal gratification from his staff for showing official favours and that he demanded Rs. 5/- as bribe from Shri Ella Appanna for having attested his cheque.

And whereas, I am satisfied that the Superintendent of Police and the two Deputy Superintendents of Police, Special Police Establishment, Hyderabad, are otherwise engaged and unable to take up investigation of the allegations complained of;

And whereas, I Shri D. Krishnan Raju, am satisfied on a perusal of the petition of the Inspector of Police and on hearing Shri P. Sreerama Murthy, Inspector of Police, that there are reasonable and good grounds to authorise investigation of the allegations, I do hereby authorise Shri P. Sreeramamurthy, Inspector of Police, Special Police Establishment, Hyderabad under Sections 5-A of Act 2 of 1947 and 155 (2), Criminal P. C. to investigate the allegations and to lay a trap".

4. It would be seen from the requisition and the order of the Magistrate that it is not stated that the Inspector of Police had contacted the Superintendent of Police or the two Deputy Superintendents of Police or he was told by them that they were engaged in administrative matters and supervising investigation of important cases and they were unable to take up the investigation of either this case or other cases. In his evidence he admitted that before giving the requisition he did not send any memo or letter to his office for ascertaining whether the D. Ss. P. or S. P. were engaged in any other case. So, the net result seems to be that the Inspector made the requisition at his own initiative without getting into contact with the S. P. or the D. Ss. P. The Magistrate was apparently satisfied that the assertion of the Inspector of Police that the Superintendent of Police and the two Deputy Superintendents of Police were unable to investigate or unable to take up the investigation. It seems to us that the procedure adopted is wholly unwarranted by the provisions of the Prevention of Corruption Act. It may be that the Inspector thought that it was not necessary that the Superintendent of Police or the Deputy Superintendents of Police should themselves write to the Magistrate or apply that the Inspector of Police be authorised to investigate but it seems to us that they must be in the picture before the Inspector of Police applies for permission. In other words they must tell the Inspector of Police that they are too busy to take up the investigation of this case or they must on this ground authorise him to apply to the Magistrate to permit him to investigate the case. This procedure which has been adopted by-passes the provisions of the Act and nullifies the objective of Parliament that the senior Officers should ordinarily investigate such cases. The High Court in our view rightly held that the grant of permission to investigate the case is not merely a mechanical act and the Magistrate had erred in giving the sanction.

5. It appears that the Superintendent of Police felt that the permission, which P. W. 11 had obtained from the Magistrate was somewhat defective and, therefore, it was felt that the Magistrate be requested again to give a fresh sanction. Accordingly, he applied to the Fourth City Magistrate on 24th July, 1964, that as he himself and the Deputy Superintendents of Police were engaged in the investigations and secret inquiries and were unable to take up investigation personally, the Inspector of Police be authorised to conduct further investigations. On 25th July, 1964, the Magistrate gave the necessary authorisation. But the High Court rightly remarked that the main investigation had already been done by that time. The High Court on being satisfied rightly held that the investigation was unauthorised and as such the proceedings were vitiated. Before the High Court, the learned Counsel for the respondent argued on the facts of the case but as the sanction itself was held invalid, the High Court did not give its opinion with regard to the facts of the case.

6. The learned Counsel for the appellant Shri P. Ram Reddy contended that assuming the sanction was bad, this Court has held on a number of occasions that an illegal investigation does not vitiate the trial. In other words, that in order to set aside the conviction it must be shown that there has been miscarriage of justice as a result of bad and irregular investigation. The earliest case on the point is H. N. Rishbud and Inder Singh v. The State of Delhi, (1955) 1 SCR 1150 = (AIR 1955 SC 196). This Court observed:

"If, therefore, cognizance is in fact taken on a police report vitiated by the breach of a mandatory provision relating to investigation, there can be no doubt that the result of the trial which follows it cannot be set aside unless the illegality in the investigation can be shown to have brought about a miscarriage of justice..... We are, therefore, clearly, also, of the opinion that where the cognizance of the case has in fact been taken and the case has proceeded to terminate, the invalidity of the precedent investigation does not vitiate the result, unless miscarriage of justice has been caused thereby."

7. The latest decision to which our attention is invited was an unreported case Dr. M. C. Sulkunte v. State of Mysore, Criminal Appl. No. 25 of 1967 D/- 27-11-1970 = (reported in AIR 1971 SC 508). It is clear from these authorities that the High Court erred in quashing the proceedings against the respondent solely on the ground of illegal investigation.

8. The High Court did not go into the question whether the illegal investigation had resulted in prejudice to the respondent. The learned Counsel for the respondent contended that the very fact that the main investigation was conducted without a valid sanction had resulted in prejudice to the respondent. It seems to us that the High Court should, apart from other questions which it did not deal with, also go into this question of prejudice. We accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the judgment and order of the High Court and remand the case to it for disposal in accordance with law.

Case remanded.

Mr. Harbans Singh, Advocate, amicus curiae (The Petitioner was also present in Court), for Petitioner; Mr. Naunit Lal, Advocate, for Respondent.

SIKRI, C. J.: — In this petition under Article 32 of the Constitution the petitioner complains against his detention. The relevant facts are these. It appears that the petitioner was arrested on January 10, 1968 but it is not quite clear by whom he was arrested. The suggestion of the State Counsel is that he was arrested originally under the Armed Forces (Assam and Manipur) Special Power Act, 1958. Be that as it may, according to the affidavit of Shri P. Sengupta, Deputy Secretary to the Government of Assam, Political (A) Department, he was arrested by the Civil Police on January 24, 1968, and was produced before the competent Magistrate on January 25, 1968, in connection with G. R. Case No. 27/68. It is further stated that the Civil Police registered other cases against the petitioner vide G. R. 235/68 of Aijal Police Station Case No. 16 (8)/68 under Section 32 (5), D. I. R., G. R. 212/66 of Aijal Police Station Case No. 54 (5)/66 under Section 121, Indian Penal Code., etc., and G. R. Case No. 27/68 vide Session Case No. 128/69 under Section 121 (A)/392, Indian Penal Code. It is further stated in the affidavit that subsequent to the production of the petitioner before the Magistrate in connection with G. R. Case No. 27/68, the petitioner was shown as arrested in the other two cases as well. The petitioner was, however, discharged from G. R. 27/68 on October 10, 1970, but it is maintained in the affidavit that the petitioner is in custody in connection with the other two cases in which he has been charge-sheeted. It was denied that the petitioner was never produced before a Magistrate. It is further stated that the last order of remand for the petitioner was passed by the Aijal Court in G. R. Case No. 235/68 on December 16, 1970. It was admitted that there has been delay in the trial of the cases owing to various circumstances but it appears that the High Court has already ordered on December 18, 1970 that the trial of the cases should be completed within four months. It was further stated that this order of the High Court has been communicated to the Prosecuting authorities and every effort is being made to comply with the order of the Hon'ble High Court for early disposal of the cases.

2. The learned counsel for the petitioner says that the petitioner is entitled to be released on three grounds: (1) The original date of arrest being January 10, 1968 and the petitioner not having been produced before a Magistrate within 24 hours, the petitioner is entitled to be released; (2) The petitioner having been arrested in one case on January 24 1968 and he having been discharged from that case, he is entitled to be released; and (3) As the petitioner was not produced for obtaining remand he is entitled to be released.

3. A similar case came before this Court from this very District V. L. Rohlua v. Dy. Commr. Aijal Dist. Writ Petition No. 238 of 1970, D/- 29-9-1970 (SC) (reported in 1971 Cri LJ (N) 8) and the first point was answered by a Bench of five Judges thus:

"If the matter had arisen while the petitioner was in the custody of the Armed Forces a question might well have arisen that he was entitled to be released or at least made over to the police. However, that question does not arise now because he is an under-trial prisoner."

It seems to us that even if the petitioner had been under illegal detention between January 10 to January 24, 1968 — though we do not decide this point — the detention became lawful on January 24, 1968 when he was arrested by the Civil Police and produced before the Magistrate on January 25, 1968. He is now an under-trial prisoner and the fact that he was arrested in only one case does not make any difference. The affidavit clearly states that he was also treated to have been arrested in the other cases pending against him.

4. It appears from the affidavit that the petitioner was not produced before the Magistrate in all cases, but as observed by this Court in the case of V. L. Rohlua (supra),

"the Criminal Procedure Code is not applicable by reason of the Sixth Schedule to the Constitution in this area. This was laid down in State of Nagaland v. Rattan Singh, (1963) 3 SCR 830 = (AIR 1967 SC 212). Only the spirit of the Criminal Procedure Code applies."

It is not necessary that the petitioner should be produced on each occasion before a Magistrate for remand.

5. In the result the petition fails and is dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

Adulteration Act is to eliminate the danger to human life and health from the sale of unwholesome articles of food. The Essential Commodities Act on the other hand has for its object the control of the production, supply and distribution of, and trade and commerce in, essential commodities. In spite of this difference the two provisions may have conterminous fields of operation. The provisions of the Adulteration Act and of the Fruit Order are supplementary and cumulative in their operation and they can stand together. If the Adulteration Act or Rules impose some restrictions on the manufacturer, dealer and seller of vinegar then they have to comply with them irrespective of the fact that the Fruit Order imposes lesser number of restrictions in respect of these matters. The Parliament did not intend by enacting the Essential Commodities Act or the Fruit Order to impliedly repeal the provisions of the Adulteration Act and the Rules in respect of the vinegar. Both the statutes can function with full vigour side by side in their own parallel channels. Even if they happen to some extent to overlap, Section 26 of the General Clauses Act fully protects the guilty parties against double jeopardy or double penalty. Both the Adulteration Act and the Essential Commodities Act have been amended from time to time after their enactment. The subsequent amendments of the Adulteration Act and of the Essential Commodities Act by the Parliament and the amendment of the Adulteration rules would also tend to negative any legislative intent of implied repeal of the Adulteration Act by the Essential Commodities Act or the Fruit Order. Mr. Bishan Narain, Senior Advocate, (M/s. B. P. Maheshwari and N. K. Jain, Advocates, with him), for Appellant, (In all Appeals); Mr. C. K. Daphtary, Senior Advocate (Mr. N. N. Goswami, Advocate and M/s. K. L. Mehta and S. K. Mehta, Advocates of M/s. K. L. Mehta and Co. with him), for Respondent, (In Cr. A. No. 151 of 1966); Mr. K. L. Gossain, Senior Advocate, (Mr. N. N. Mehta and Co., for Intervener.

DUA, J.: — These eight appeals with certificate (Crl. Appeals Nos. 151 to 158 of 1966), raise a common question of law and would, therefore, be disposed of by a common judgment. Indeed, all the appeals in the Punjab High Court were also disposed of by a learned single Judge of that Court sitting on circuit at Delhi by a common judgment and another learned single Judge of the same Court similarly certified the cases to be fit for appeal to this Court by a common order.

2. The only question canvassed at the bar requiring determination by us is whether the respondent is liable to be prosecuted under the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 37 of 1954 (hereafter called the Adulteration Act) for selling adulterated vinegar when the vinegar is being sold under a licence granted under the Fruit Products Order, 1955 (hereafter called the Fruit Order) made by the Central Government under Section 3 of the Essential Commodities Act. The High Court has, relying on an unreported Bench decision of the Punjab High Court in State v. Raj Kumar, (Crl. A. 996 of 1961, D/- 29-10-1962 (Punj)), held that they cannot be prosecuted. It was argued in the High Court that the rules made under the Adulteration Act had come into force after the enforcement of the Fruit Order and vinegar being mentioned as an article of food in those Rules, prosecution under both the provisions of law was permissible. Reliance in support of this argument was also placed on Section 26 of the General Clauses

Act. This argument was not accepted and it was observed that the special provisions of the Fruit Order had overriding effect and, therefore, a manufacturer of Fruit Products could only be prosecuted under the provisions of the Fruit Order. Prayer for reference to a larger Bench for reconsideration of Raj Kumar's case, Crl. A. 996 of 1961, D/- 29-10-1962 (Punj) (supra) did not find favour with the learned single Judge.

3. In this Court the view taken in Raj Kumar's case, Crl. A. 996 of 1961, D/- 29-10-1962 (Punj) (supra) was sought to be supported by the learned counsel for the respondent. The provisions of the Fruit Order and of the Adulteration Act, it was contended, could not harmoniously co-exist on the statute book, as compliance with one would, in certain contingencies, result in violation of the other in some respects. With respect to the particular charges tried in the cases in appeal, however, no attempt was made on behalf of the respondents to show that there was any fatal conflict or inconsistency between the two provisions. The question before us accordingly lies within a very narrow compass. The appellant urged that there is no implied repeal of the Adulteration Act by the Fruit Order in so far as the sale of vinegar is concerned, whereas the case of the respondent is that there is an implied repeal and the respondents are not liable to be prosecuted under the Adulteration Act for violating its provisions. Shri Bishan Narain sought support for his submission from Om Prakash Gupta v. State of U. P., 1957 SCR 423 = (AIR 1957 SC 458) and T. S. Baliah v. T. S. Rengachari, (1969) 3 SCR 65 = (AIR 1969 SC 701). In the former case Section 5 (1) (c) of the Prevention of Corruption Act was held not to repeal Section 409, I. P. C. The decision of the Punjab High Court (Khosla and Falshaw, JJ.) in State v. Gurcharan Singh, AIR 1952 Punj 89, holding to the contrary was overruled. In the latter case Section 52 of the Income-tax Act, 1922 was held not to repeal Section 177, I. P. C.

4. It is unnecessary to refer in detail to the facts of all the eight cases separately as no such reference was made by either side at the bar. Shri Bishan Narain for the appellant, by way of illustration made a passing reference to the facts of Crl. Appeal

No. 155 of 1966. From the record of that appeal we find that samples of (i) sugar cane juice vinegar, (ii) vine (pure) vinegar and (iii) pure jaman vinegar, were taken by a Food Inspector from the shop of the respondent on October 17, 1960 and on the same having been found highly adulterated and unfit for human consumption because of the presence of sulphuric acid which is prohibited, complaints under Sections 7/16 of the Adulteration Act were instituted by the Municipal Prosecutor in December, 1960. After the prosecution evidence was recorded, the respondent Shiv Shankar applied to the trial Magistrate in October, 1963 praying that the prosecution be dropped. In this application it was admitted that the prosecution had arisen out of a raid dated October 17, 1960 at the premises of the accused "when allegedly samples of vinegar were taken which are stated to be adulterated because of the presence of sulphuric acid". It was pleaded that the petitioning accused had secured in 1960 a licence under the Fruit Order and vinegar whether brewed or synthetic being a food product and standard specification for such vinegar being tabulated in Part XIV attached to the Second Schedule of the Fruit Order, prosecution without the previous sanction of the licensing Officer as required by Clause 15 of the said Order was unauthorised. Prosecution under the Adulteration Act was on this ground pleaded to be incompetent. In the application reliance in support of this plea was placed on the unreported Bench decision of the Punjab High Court in Raj Kumar's case, Cri. A. No. 996 of 1961, D/- 29-10-1962 (Punj) (supra) in which according to the accused it had been held that a licensee under the Fruit Order could not be prosecuted for any contravention of that Order or of the Adulteration Act without the previous sanction of the Licensing Authority appointed under the Fruit Order. The trial Magistrate basing himself on an unreported single Bench decision of the Punjab High Court and on S. 26 of the General Clauses Act rejected this application. On revision, the Additional Sessions Judge relying on the decision in Raj Kumar's case, Cri. A. No. 996 of 1961, D/- 29-10-1962 (Punj) (supra) made a reference to the High Court recommending that the proceedings be quashed. J. S. Bedi J., relying on Raj Kumar's case, Cri. A. No. 996 of 1961, D/- 29-10-1962 (Punj) (supra) quashed the proceedings. S. K. Kapur J., who certified the case to be fit for appeal after quoting a passage from Raj Kumar's case, Cri. A. No. 996 of 1961, D/- 29-10-1962 (Punj) (supra) considered the question raised to be important enough for appeal to this Court.

5. The general principles governing implied repeal appear to us to have long since been settled. The difficulty is normally experienced in their application to a given case. From the passage quoted by Kapur J., from the unreported Bench decision in Raj Kumar's case, Cri. A. No. 996 of 1961 D/- 29-10-1962 (Punj.) (supra) upholding the implied repeal of the Adulteration Act by the Fruit Order it seems to us that the Division Bench did not correctly and fully grasp them. We accordingly consider it proper to broadly restate the general rule. It was laid in Paine v. Stater, (1883) 11 QBD 120, that when two Acts are inconsistent or repugnant the later will be read as having impliedly repealed the earlier. As the legislature must be presumed in deference to the rule of law to intend to enact consistent and harmonious body of laws, a subsequent legislation may not be too readily presumed to effectuate a repeal of existing statutory laws in the absence of express or at least clear and unambiguous indication to that effect. This is essential in the interest of certainty and consistency in the laws which the citizens are enjoined and expected to obey. The legislature, which may generally be presumed to know the existing law, is not expected to intend to create confusion by its omission to express its intent to repeal in clear terms. The Courts, therefore, as a rule, lean against implying a repeal unless the two provisions are so plainly repugnant to each other that they cannot stand together and it is not possible on any reasonable hypothesis to give effect to both at the same time. The repeal must, if not express, flow from necessary implication as the only intendment. The provisions must be wholly incompatible with each other so that the two provisions operating together would lead to absurd consequences, which intention could not reasonably be imputed to the legislature. It is only when a consistent body of law cannot be maintained without abrogation of the previous law that the plea of implied repeal should be sustained. To determine if a later statutory provision repeals by implication an earlier one it is accordingly necessary to closely scrutinise and consider the true meaning and effect both of the earlier and the later statute. Until this is done it cannot be satisfactorily ascertained if any fatal inconsistency exists between them. The meaning, scope and effect of the two statutes, as discovered on scrutiny, determines the legislative intent as to whether the earlier law shall cease or shall only be supplemented. If the objects of the two statutory provisions are different and the language of each statute is restricted to its own objects or subject, then they are generally intended to run in parallel lines without meeting and there would be no real conflict though apparently it may appear to be so on the surface. Statutes in pari materia although in apparent conflict, should also so far as reasonably possible, be construed to be in harmony with each other: and it is only when there is an irreconcilable conflict between the new provision and the prior statute relating to the same subject-matter, that the former, being the later expression of the legislature, may be held to prevail, the prior law yielding to the extent of the conflict. The same rule of irreconcilable repugnancy controls implied repeal of a general by a special statute. The subsequent provision treating a phase of the same general subject-matter in a more minute way may be intended to imply repeal pro tanto of the repugnant general provision with which it cannot reasonably co-exist. When there is no inconsistency between the general and the special statute the latter may well be construed as supplementary.

5A. In the light of these broad guidelines we may now examine the two statutes as they stood in 1960 because the cases with which we are concerned relate to that year. The history and the scheme of the two statutory provisions would be helpful in discovering the legislative intent on the question of implied repeal. Turning first to the Adulteration Act, it was enacted by the Parliament to make provision for the prevention of adulteration of food and it came into force on June 1, 1955. Previously corresponding laws on adulteration of foodstuffs were in force in different States, having been enacted by their respective legislatures. All those laws were repealed by Section 25 of the Adulteration Act. It may be pointed out that under the Government of India Act, 1935 "adulteration of food-stuffs and other goods" was a provincial subject whereas under the Constitution it is included in the Concurrent List. Section 2 (i) of this Act which defines the word "adulterated" consists of several sub-clauses. One of these sub-clauses is (1) according to which

"an article of food shall be deemed to be adulterated if the quality or purity of the article falls below the prescribed standard or its constituents are present in quantities which are in excess of the prescribed limits of variability".

Clause (v) of Section 2 defines "food" to mean "any article used as food or drink for human consumption other than drugs and water and includes: (a) any article which ordinarily enters into or is used in the composition or preparation of human food, and (b) any flavouring matter or condiments. According to Clause (ix) an article of food shall be deemed to be "misbranded" if it falls within any one of the sub-clauses (a) to (k). It is not necessary to reproduce all these sub-clauses. "Package" has been defined in Clause (x) to mean "a box, bottle, casket, tin, barrel, case, receptacle, sack, bag, wrapper or other thing in which an article of food is placed or packed". We have referred to the definitions of "misbranded" and "package" because one of the cases before us (Crl. A. 154 of 1966) is a case of alleged misbranding, the remaining seven cases being of alleged adulteration. Section 5 prohibits import of, inter alia, adulterated and misbranded food and all articles of food in contravention of any provision of the Act or of any rules made thereunder. Section 7 prohibits manufacture for sale or store and also sale and distribution of, inter alia, adulterated and misbranded food and of articles of food, in contravention of the Adulteration Act and the Rules made thereunder. Section 8 provides for appointment of Public Analysts and Section 9 for the appointment of Food Inspectors. The powers of Food Inspectors are contained in Section 10. He possesses very wide powers for the purpose of effectively achieving the statutory object of preventing the manufacture, sale and distribution etc., of adulterated articles of food. The procedure for taking samples of food by the Food Inspector for analysis is prescribed in Section 11 and the report of the Public Analyst is made admissible by Section 13. The proviso to sub-section (5) of Section 15 makes the certificate signed by the Director of Central Food Laboratory final and conclusive proof of the facts stated therein. The Central Food Laboratory is established by the Central Government under Section 4 for the purpose of carrying on functions entrusted to it by the Adulteration Act or by the Rules made thereunder. Section 16 provides for penalties for offences under the Adulteration Act and cl. (a) of sub-section (1) makes it an offence for any person, whether by himself or by any person on his behalf to import into India or manufacture for sale or to store, sell or distribute any article of food in contravention of any of the provisions of the Act or of any rules made thereunder. In the prosecution for an offence pertaining to the sale of an adulterated or misbranded article of food Section 19 makes impermissible the defence that the vendor was ignorant of the nature, substance or quality of the food sold by him or that the purchaser having purchased an article for analysis was not prejudiced by the sale. Section 20 prohibits cognizance and trial of offences under the Act except when prosecution is instituted by or with the written consent of the State Government or a local authority or a person authorised in this behalf by such Government or authority. Under the proviso to this section a purchaser referred to in Section 12, is, however, empowered to institute a prosecution if he produces in Court a copy of the report of the Public Analyst along with the complaint. Section 21 overrides Section 32, Cr. P. C. in the matter of sentence to be passed under this Act by the Presidency Magistrates or Magistrates of I Class, trying offences under the Act. Section 23 confers on the Central Government wide powers to make rules under the Act after consulting the Central Committee for Food Standards appointed by the Central Government under Section 3. Section 24 empowers the State Government, (after consultation with the Central Committee for Food Standards and with previous publication) to make rules for giving effect to the provisions of the Act in matters not covered by Section 23. Various States have actually framed rules under this section.

6. We may now briefly refer to the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955 (hereafter called the Adulteration Rules). These rules were made by the Central Government under Section 4 (2) and Section 23 (1) of the Adulteration Act and were published in the Official Gazette as per notification dated September 12, 1955. The rules other than those contained in Part III — Appendix B — Item A.12 Margarine, Part VI and Part VII came into force on the date of their publication in the Official Gazette; the rules contained in Part III, Appendix B, Item A.12 Margarine came into force on June 1, 1956 and the rules contained in Part VI and Part VII came into force on December 1, 1956: vide Rule 1 (3). Under Section 23 (2) (prior to its amendment in 1964) all rules made under sub-section (1) had to be laid as soon as possible before both Houses of Parliament. By Act 49 of 1964 sub-section (2) was amended so as to provide for every rule made under sub-section (1) to be laid before each House of Parliament while in Session for a total period of 30 days in order to afford an opportunity to the two Houses to study and to modify or annul it for future if both Houses so agree. We have referred to this amendment as some of the rules were amended thereafter. The effect of the subsequent amendment of some of the rules will be noticed later. The Adulteration Rules clearly bring out the anxiety of their authors to see that wholesome food is sold to the citizens. The duties and powers of Food Inspectors as contained, inter alia, in Rules 9 and 13, broadly illustrate this anxiety. These rules also indicate that the framers of the Rules were not unaware of the different provisions of the Fruit Order. By way of illustration reference may be made to Rule 50 which prescribes conditions of licence to manufacture, sell, stock, distribute or exhibit certain articles of food. In Clause (1) of sub-rule (1) of this rule the fruit products covered under the Fruit Order and some other articles have been excluded from the operation of this rule. This clause was amended twice, once in November, 1956 and again in April, 1960. Had the Adulteration Act been intended to be impliedly repealed by the Fruit Order (which would also mean implied repeal of the rules) it would have been unnecessary to expressly exclude such fruit-products from the operation of this rule. Rule 5 and Appendix B of these Rules came into force on December 1, 1956 after the promulgation of the Fruit Order. According to R. 5 the standard of quality of the various articles of food specified in Appendix B are as specified therein. In Appendix B item at Sl. No. A. 16 deals with "fruit products". But the articles of fruit products dealt with in A. 16. O. 1 to A. 16.12 clearly show that vinegar is not included in the expression "fruit products". Vinegar is dealt with in A. 20 and synthetic vinegar in A. 20. O. 1. Both these items were added in April, 1960.

7. We may now turn to the Essential Commodities Act, 10 of 1955 and the Fruit Order. The Essential Commodities Act was enacted in 1955 with the object of providing, in the interests of the general public, for the control of the production, supply and distribution of, and trade and commerce in, certain commodities. It came into force on April 1, 1955 repealing the Essential Commodities Ordinance No. 1 of 1955 which had been promulgated with the same object and enforced on January 26, 1955, the date of the expiry of the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Act 26 of 1946. The last named Act had replaced the Essential Supplies (Temporary Powers) Ordinance No. XVIII of 1946 which had come into force on October 1, 1946. That Ordinance was promulgated with the object of continuing, during a limited period, powers to control the production, supply and distribution of, and trade and commerce in, foodstuffs and certain other commodities. To empower the Indian Legislature to enact law on this subject-matter the British Parliament had passed India (Central Government and Legislation) Act, 1946 (9 and 10 Geo VI, C. 39). The Indian Legislature not being in session the Ordinance was promulgated to meet the emergency and this was replaced by Act 26 of 1946. Reference has been made by us to this past history for the purpose of indicating the different objects and purposes intended to be achieved by the two legislative measures. Section 2 of the Essential Commodities Act which is the definition section defines in Cl. (a) "essential commodity" to mean any of the classes of commodities stated in sub-cl. (i) to (xi). Sub-clause (v) refers to "food-stuffs, including edible oilseeds and oils" and cl. (xi) confers power on the Central Government to declare by a notified order any other class of commodity to be an essential commodity for the purposes of the Act, being a commodity with respect to which Parliament has power to make laws by virtue of Entry 33 in List III in the 7th Schedule to the Constitution. Section 3 of the Act confers on the Central Government power to control production, supply, distribution etc., of essential commodities by providing, by an order, for regulating or prohibiting the production, supply and distribution of those commodities and trade and commerce therein. Every order made under this section has to be laid before both Houses of Parliament as soon as may be after it is made. By virtue of Section 6 Orders made under Section 3 have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in any enactment other than the Essential Commodities Act. Section 7 provides for penalties for contravention of orders made under S. 3. Under S. 11 courts are prohibited from taking cognizance of offences punishable under this Act except on a report in writing of the facts constituting such an offence made by a person who is a public servant as defined in S. 21, I.P.C. Section 12 of this Act vests in the Presidency Magistrates and Magistrates of I Class power to pass sentences of fines exceeding Rs. 1,000/- on convicted persons notwithstanding the restriction in this respect imposed on their powers by S. 32, Cr. P. C. As already noticed earlier, an Ordinance called the Essential Commodities Ordinance, 1 of 1955 had been promulgated on the expiry of the Essential Commodities (Temporary Powers) Act and the present Act was passed to replace that Ordinance.

8. It may appropriately be pointed out at this stage that it was not the respondent's case that the Essential Commodities Act had the effect of impliedly repealing the Adulteration Act for the purposes of these cases. The only argument urged was that the Fruit Order had that effect and its overriding effect by virtue of S. 3 of the Act was strongly emphasised. We may now turn to the Fruit Order (S. R. O. 1052 dated 3rd May, 1955 published in the Gazette of India dated 14th May, 1955) which was made by the Central Government in exercise of the powers conferred on it by S. 3 of the Essential Commodities Act. Clause (2) of this Order, which is the definition clause, defines the expression "fruit product" in sub-cl. (d) and "vinegar, whether brewed or synthetic" is included in this expression as per item (ii) of this sub-clause. "Licensing Officer" as defined in sub-cl. (g) means the Agricultural Marketing Adviser to the Government of India and it includes any other officer empowered in this behalf by him with the approval of the Central Government. "Manufacturer" as defined in sub-cl. (h) means a licensee engaged in the business of manufacturing fruit products for sale and includes a person purchasing such fruit products in bulk and repacking them for sale either by himself or through someone else. Clause 4 prohibits all persons from carrying on business of manufacture except and in accordance with the terms of an effective licence granted to him under this Order in Form "B". Clause 5 prescribes procedure for applications for the grant of a licence under cl. 4. Clause 7 enjoins the manufacturers to manufacture fruit products in conformity with the sanitary requirements and the appropriate standard of quality and composition specified in the Second Schedule to the Order and cl. 8 lays down the requirements to be complied with by the manufacturers in regard to the packing, marketing and labelling of containers of fruit products. Clause 10 prohibits sale, exposure for sale, despatch or delivery to any agent or broker for the purpose of sale, any fruit products which do not conform to the standard of quality and composition specified in the Second Schedule or which are not packed, marked and labelled in the manner laid down in the Order; the proviso to this clause contains directions for fruit products imported into India. Clause 12 contains a mandate for every manufacturer to comply with the directions and orders issued to him and failure to do so is to be deemed to be a contravention of the provisions of the Order. According to cl. 15 no prosecution for contravention of any of the provisions of this Order is to be instituted without the previous sanction of the licensing Officer.

9. The object and purpose of the Adulteration Act is to eliminate the danger to human life and health from the sale of unwholesome articles of food. It is covered by Entry 18, List III of the 7th Schedule to the Constitution. The Essential Commodities Act on the other hand has for its object the control of the production, supply and distribution of, and trade and commerce in, essential commodities and is covered by Entry 33 of List III. In spite of this difference in their main objects, control of production and distribution of essential commodities may, to an extent from a broader point of view include control of the quality of the essential articles of food and, thus considered, it may reasonably be urged that to some extent it covers the same field as is covered by the provisions of the Adulteration Act. The two provisions may, therefore, have within these narrow limits conterminous fields of operation. On this premise we have to see if the two provisions can stand together having cumulative effect and in case they cannot, which provision has the overriding or controlling effect. It is needless to point out that they can stand together if the powers are intended to be exercised for different purposes without fatal inconsistency or repugnancy.

10. At the bar Shri Daftary in his usual persuasive manner argued that there is an irreconcilable conflict between the two statutory provisions and the Fruit Order, being not only of a date later than the Adulteration Act but also having, by virtue of S. 3 (6) of the Essential Commodities Act, overriding effect over all other laws, must prevail over the Adulteration Act and Rules. He pointed out that under the Fruit Order the prosecution can be instituted only with the previous sanction of the Licensing Officer whereas under the Adulteration Act even a purchaser may, without any such sanction, institute a prosecution merely by producing along with his complaint a certificate from the Public Analyst. He also drew our attention to S. 20-A of the Adulteration Act according to which, unlike the Fruit Order, the Court trying an offence under that Act is empowered to implead the manufacturer, distributor or dealer of any article of food, if it is satisfied that he is also concerned with that offence, and to proceed against him as though the prosecution had been instituted against him under Section 20. We do not think this section in any way reflects the legislative intention of implied repeal of the Adulteration Act by the Fruit Order. The two statutory provisions can operate within their respective spheres without giving rise to any absurdity or such grave inconvenience as would impel the Court to sustain the plea of implied repeal. Incidentally it may also be pointed out that this section was added by Act 49 of 1964 which came into force on March 1, 1965 long after 1960 when the present cases were started. Shri Daftary developed his argument by adding that if the respondents have manufactured for sale and have sold vinegar in accordance with the terms of the licence granted to them under the Fruit Order then imposition of further restrictions under the Adulteration Act and Rules with a threat of severe penal consequences for violation of those provisions would be in direct conflict with the mandate or directions under the Fruit Order. The counsel contended that at least the freedom to manufacture and sell vinegar as permitted by the Fruit Order is curtailed or further circumscribed by the Adulteration Act and Rules and this must necessarily cut across the provisions of the Fruit Order. He illustrated his point by submitting that under the Fruit Order use of colouring matter is more liberal than under the Adulteration Act and Rules. In view of these conflicting provisions the Adulteration Act and Rules, according to Shri Daftary must be held to have been impliedly repealed by the Fruit Order. We are unable to agree with this submission. The two statutory provisions, for the purpose of effectuating their respective objects, have imposed different restrictions on the respondents when they manufacture and sell vinegar whether brewed or synthetic. We are, however, informed at the bar that in the present case the disputed vinegar is synthetic. In the interest of public health the respondents have to comply with the provisions of Adulteration Act and Rules and in the interests of equitable distribution of essential commodities including the articles of food covered by Essential Commodities Act and the Fruit Order they have to comply with the provisions of the Fruit Order. The provisions of the Adulteration Act and of the Fruit Order to which our attention was drawn seem to be supplementary and cumulative in their operation and no provision of the Fruit Order is shown to be destructive of or fatal to any provision of the Adulteration Act or the Rules made thereunder so as to compel the court to hold that they cannot stand together. If the Adulteration Act or Rules impose some restrictions on the manufacturer, dealer and seller of vinegar then they have to comply with them irrespective of the fact that the Fruit Order imposes lesser number of restrictions in respect of these matters. The former do not render compliance with the latter impossible, nor does compliance with the former necessarily and automatically involve violation of the latter. Indeed, our attention was not drawn to any provision of the Adulteration Act and Rules, compliance with which would result in breach of any mandate, whether affirmative or negative, of the Fruit Order. We are, therefore, unable to find any cogent or convincing reason for holding that the Parliament intended by enacting the Essential Commodities Act or the Fruit Order to impliedly repeal the provisions of the Adulteration Act and the Rules in respect of the vinegar in dispute. Both the statutes can function with full vigour side by side in their own parallel channels. Even if they happen to some extent to overlap, Section 26 of the General Clauses Act fully protects the guilty parties against double jeopardy or double penalty. This section lays down that where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more enactments then the offender shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those enactments but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence. If, therefore, the provisions of the Adulteration Act and those of Fruit Order happen to constitute offences covering the same acts or omissions then it would be open to the prosecuting authorities to punish the offender under either of them subject to the only condition that a guilty person should not be punished twice over.

11. There is also another aspect which has to be kept in view. Both the Adulteration Act and the Essential Commodities Act have been amended from time to time after their enactment. Being governed by Entries in List III of the 7th Schedule even the States have power to amend these enactments and indeed they have been so amended in some States. The subsequent amendments of the Adulteration Act and of the Essential Commodities Act by the Parliament and the amendment of the Adulteration Rules would also tend to negative any legislative intendment of implied repeal of the Adulteration Act by the Essential Commodities Act or the Fruit Order. It may be recalled that Clause (1) of sub-rule (1) of Rule 50 of the Adulteration Rules was amended in 1956 and again in 1960 and the amended clause is indicative of the rule-making authority being conscious of both the statutory provisions being operative in their respective fields at the same time, thereby negating implied repeal. A.20 dealing with "vinegar" was also added in Appendix B of the Adulteration Rules in 1956 and A.20.01 dealing with "synthetic vinegar" was added in April, 1960. A passing reference may also be made to some of the relevant amendments in some rules made subsequent to the enforcement of the amended Section 23 (2). In Rule 55 in items at Sl. Nos. 19 and 20, dealing with pickles and chutnies made from fruit or vegetables and with tomato and other sauces, respectively, the preservatives mentioned in Clause 2 were amended. Similarly in Rule 57 (2) the table containing articles like fruit and vegetable juices including tomato-juice was amended. Both the above amendments were made in December, 1965. It may here be pointed out that pickles, chutnies, tomato products, kutchups, sauces and also other unspecified items relating to fruits or vegetables are included in the definition of "fruit product" under the Fruit Products Order. These amendments, though made after 1960, do seem to further negative the intendment of implied repeal as argued on behalf of the respondent. In view of the foregoing discussion it seems to us that the two statutory provisions can harmoniously operate without causing confusion or resulting in absurd consequences and the scheme of the Adulteration Act and Rules can without difficulty fit into the scheme of the Fruit Order under the Essential Commodities Act. The challenge on the ground of implied repeal must, therefore, be rejected.

12. Incidentally we may note that the view taken by the learned single Judge in this case was later overruled by a Full Bench of the Delhi High Court in Municipal Corporation v. Harnarain (Crl. A. No. 163 of 1967 decided in May, 1969).

13. Shri Daftary, as a last resort, tried to press into service Article 14 in his challenge to the prosecution of the respondent. According to him the prosecuting authorities have an unguided licence to prosecute his clients under one or the other statute and since the penalty under the Adulteration Act is more severe than that under the Fruit Order the principle of equality before the law is violated. As this point was not taken in any of the Courts below we did not permit him to raise it in this Court. It would, however, be open to the respondent, if so advised, to raise this point in accordance with law in the Court below, because the cases have not yet been finally disposed of. The competence of the prosecution having been challenged at an intermediate stage, the cases will have to go back to the trial Court. As these cases have been pending since 1962 the trial Court should dispose them of with due dispatch and without any further avoidable delay. The appeals are accordingly allowed and the cases remitted to the trial Court for further proceedings according to law in the light of the observations made above.

Appeals allowed.

Mr. Jagadish Swarup, Solicitor-General of India, (Mr. B. K. P. Sinha, Advocate with him), for Appellants; Mr. B. C. Ghosh, Senior Advocate (M/s. P. K. Chatterjee and Rathin Das, Advocates with him), for Respondent.

MITTER, J.: — The question in this appeal is, whether the order of suspension passed on the respondent on July 31, 1964 was properly struck down by the Patna High Court.

2. The facts are as follows. The respondent is a member of the Indian Police Service appointed on 25th January, 1957 and at the material time he was holding the substantive rank of Deputy Superintendent of Police in Bihar. In June 1962 he was posted at Ranchi. He was transferred to Patna and appointed as Special Officer, Political, General and Transport Department on July 23, 1964. The order of which the validity is in question ran as follows:—

"Whereas serious allegations of corruption and malpractices have been made against Shri T. N. Ghosh, I. P., Deputy Inspector General of Police, Southern Range, Ranchi;

And whereas the said Shri T. N. Ghosh is also reported to have contravened certain provisions of the All India Services (Conduct) Rules, 1954;

And whereas the enquiries made by the Government of Bihar into these allegations have revealed that there is a prima facie case made out against him;

And whereas disciplinary proceedings in respect of these matters are contemplated against the said Shri T. N. Ghosh;

And whereas the Government of India, after carefully considering the available material, and having regard to the nature of the charges and circumstances of the case, are satisfied that it is necessary and desirable to place the said Shri T. N. Ghosh under suspension;

Now, therefore, the Government of India hereby place the said Shri T. N. Ghosh, under suspension with immediate effect, until further orders, and direct that the said Shri T. N. Ghosh shall, during the period of suspension be paid such subsistence allowance as is admissible under the rules.

By order and in the name of the President of India.

Sd/ K. Sivaraj
Deputy Secretary to the Government of India."

The respondent addressed a memorial to the Secretary to the Government of India, Ministry of Home Affairs on 24th August 1964 complaining against the above order on the ground that it was not sanctioned by the Rules i. e., All India Service (Conduct) Rules, 1954. In particular his grievance was that as there were only allegations against him which had not crystallised into charges an order of suspension could not be made before departmental proceedings were actually started and while they were merely contemplated. He also asked for communication of the nature of the departmental proceedings which had been started against him within 14 days with a request that the order of suspension be withdrawn in default thereof. It appears that there was no response to this. The respondent filed his writ petition on September 14, 1964 praying for the quashing of the order particularly on the above grounds raised in his memorandum.

3. A counter-affidavit to the petition was filed on behalf of the Chief Secretary to the Government of Bihar who was the third respondent in the petition. The averments in the said affidavit were that a report had been made to the Central Government against the petitioner on July 6, 1964 and having regard to the activities of the petitioner it had become necessary to remove him from the field of activities and as such he had been transferred to Patna after being relieved of his post on July 13, 1964. It was said further that even before the receipt of the suspension order the petitioner had been actually questioned by S. P. Verma, the then Inspector-General of Police, Bihar as early as February 8, 1964 apprising the petitioner that his activities had attracted the attention of Government. It was admitted that departmental enquiry and investigation into the conduct of the petitioner were still going on and as such charges had not been framed against him. Finally, it was said that the order was not by way of punishment and had been passed pending departmental enquiry into his conduct.

4. Another counter-affidavit was filed on behalf of the Government of India and the Deputy Secretary to the Government of India, respondents 1 and 2 in the petition wherein substantially the same averments were made as in the counter-affidavit on behalf of respondent No. 3.

5. A large number of points were canvassed before the High Court which examined the provisions of different sets of rules and relying particularly on the difference in wording of Rule 12 of the Central Civil Services Rules which empowered the appointing authority to place an officer under suspension, inter alia, where a disciplinary proceeding against him was contemplated or was pending and Rule 7 of the All India Services Rules (quoted in extenso hereinafter) it came to the conclusion that the order of suspension was not proper. Further, according to one of the Judges of that Court:

"To allow a member of that (the All India) service to be placed under suspension without the formal proceeding being started may cause humiliation to an officer of such high rank without any justification whatsoever". According to the other learned Judge who took substantially the same view the order of suspension only indicated that disciplinary proceedings against the petitioner were in contemplation and this was not provided for in Rule 7.

6. In our view it would not be proper to interpret the provisions of the All India Services (Discipline and Appeal) Rules, 1955 by reference to the provisions of other rules even if they were made by or under the authority of the President of India. The

All India Services (Discipline and Appeal) Rules, 1955 as they stood at the relevant time were a self-contained Code and we have to examine the provisions thereof to find out whether the order passed on the petitioner was justified. These rules were promulgated in exercise of the powers conferred by sub-section (1) of Section 3 of the All India Services Act, 1951 by the Central Government after consultation with the Governments of the States concerned. They were applicable to members of the Indian Administrative Service and those of the Indian Police Service. Clause 3 of the Rules provided for penalties which might for good and sufficient reasons be imposed on a member of the service. Suspension is not a penalty covered by this clause. Clause 4 indicated the authorities who would institute proceedings and impose penalty against members of the Services. Clause 5 which generally dealt with the procedure for imposing penalties provided by the first three sub-clauses as follows:—

"(1) Without prejudice to the provisions of the Public Servants Inquiry Act, 1850, no order shall be passed imposing any of the penalties specified in Rule 3 on a member of the Service unless he has been informed in writing of the grounds on which it is proposed to take action and has been afforded an adequate opportunity of defending himself.

(2) The grounds on which it is proposed to take action shall be reduced to the form of a definite charge or charges, which shall be communicated to the member of the Service charged together with a statement of the allegations on which each charge is based and of any other circumstances which it is proposed to take into consideration in passing orders in the case.

(3) The member of the Service shall be required within such time as may be considered by the Government reasonably adequate in the circumstances of the case, to put in a written statement of his defence and to state whether he desires to be heard in person.

(4) to (10) xx xx xx". It was only after the written statement was received from the member that the Government might, if it considered necessary, appoint a Board of Enquiry or an Enquiry Officer to enquire into the charges framed against him. Other sub-clauses of this rule laid down generally the procedure which was to be adopted in the enquiry. Rule 7 provided as follows:

"Suspension during disciplinary proceedings. —

(1) If having regard to the nature of the charges and the circumstances in any case the Government which initiates any disciplinary proceedings is satisfied that it is necessary or desirable to place under suspension the member of the Service against whom such proceedings are started that Government may—

(a) if the member of the Service is serving under it pass an order placing him under suspension, or

(b) if the member of the Service is serving under another Government, request that Government to place him under suspension, pending the conclusion of the inquiry and the passing of the final order in the case:

Provided that in cases where there is a difference of opinion between two State Governments, the matter shall be referred to the Central Government whose decision thereon shall be final.

(2) A member of the Service who is detained in official custody whether on a criminal charge or otherwise, for a period longer than forty-eight hours, shall be deemed to have been suspended by the Government concerned under this rule.

(3) A member of the Service in respect of or against whom an investigation, inquiry or trial relating to a criminal charge is pending may, at the discretion of the Government under which he is serving, be placed under suspension until the termination of all proceedings relating to that charge, if the charge is connected with his position as a Government servant or is likely to embarrass him in the discharge of his duties or involves moral turpitude".

Under Rule 8 a member of a Service who was placed under suspension was to be entitled to receive payment from the Government suspending him subsistence allowance as specified therein.

7. The crucial question in this case is, whether suspension of a member of the Service can only be ordered after definite charges have been communicated to him in terms of sub-clause (2) of rule 5 or whether the Government is entitled to place an officer under suspension even before that stage has been reached after a preliminary investigation has been made into the conduct of the officer concerned following allegations of corrupt or malpractice levelled against him. To determine this it is necessary to find out the object of placing a Government officer under "suspension" in terms of the said rule.

8. 'Suspension' according to the Oxford Dictionary means

"the action of suspending or condition of being suspended; the action of debarring or state of being debarred, esp. for a time, from a function or privilege; temporary deprivation of one's office or position."

A master can, subject to the contract of service, ask his servant not to render any service without assigning any reason but this would not be by way of punishment and the master would have to pay the servant his full wages or remuneration in such an eventuality. As Halsbury puts it:

"Whether or not the master has power to suspend a servant during the duration of the contract of service depends upon the construction of the particular contract. In the absence of any express or implied term to the contrary, the master cannot punish a servant for alleged misconduct by suspending him from employment and stopping his wages for the period of the suspension".

(See Halsbury's Laws of England, Third Edition, Vol. 25, Article 989, page 518).

Rule 7 of the Service Rules expressly provides for suspension of a member of the Service for the purpose of disciplinary proceedings. When serious allegations of misconduct are imputed against a member of a Service normally it would not be desirable to allow him to continue in the post where he was functioning. If the disciplinary authority takes note of such allegations and is of opinion after some preliminary enquiries that the circumstances of the case justify further investigation to be made before definite charges can be framed, it would not be improper to remove the officer concerned from the sphere of his activity inasmuch as it may be necessary to find out facts from people working under him or look into papers which are in his custody and it would be embarrassing and inopportune both for the officer concerned as well as to those whose duty it was to make the enquiry to do so while the officer was present at the spot. Such a situation can be avoided either by transferring the officer to some other place or by temporarily putting him out of action by making an order of suspension. Government may rightly take the view that an officer against whom serious imputations are made should not be allowed to function anywhere before the matter has been finally set at rest after proper scrutiny and holding of departmental proceedings. Rule 7 is aimed at taking the latter course of conduct. Ordinarily when serious imputations are made against the conduct of an officer the disciplinary authority cannot immediately draw up the charges; it may be that the imputations are false or concocted or gross exaggerations of trivial irregularities. A considerable time may elapse between the receipt of imputations against an officer and a definite conclusion by a superior authority that the circumstances are such that definite charges can be levelled against the officer. Whether it is necessary or desirable to place the officer under suspension even before definite charges have been framed would depend upon the circumstances of the case and the view which is taken by the Government concerned.

9. There would be nothing improper per se if the rules were to provide for suspension even before definite charges of misconduct had been communicated to the officer concerned. The question is whether the language of rule 7 is so correlated to that of R. 5 as to lead us to hold that the word "charges" in sub-cl. (1) of rule 7 must mean a definite charge as mentioned in sub-cl. (2) of R. 5. It may be that even in a case where definite charges have been raised against an officer he may satisfactorily explain the circumstances and the grounds alleged against him in his written statement. It is also possible that after the enquiry is conducted it is found that the charges are all baseless. In principle we can see no difference between the position of an officer against whom definite charges have been framed to which he is required to put in his written statement and a situation where on receipt of allegations of grave misconduct against him the Government is of opinion that it would not be proper to allow the officer concerned to function in the ordinary way.

10. The matter is however not res integra and there is a series of decisions of this Court which throw considerable light on the power of a master including a Government to suspend a servant or an officer under rules of service or even de hors such rules. The law of master and servant including Government servants with regard to suspension of an employee was discussed at some length in Management of Hotel Imperial v. Hotel Workers' Union, (1960) 1 SCR 476 at p. 482 = (AIR 1959 SC 1342 at p. 1345). However rules of service of Government officers did not fall for consideration there. Champaklal Chimanlal Shah v. The Union of India, (1964) 5 SCR 190 = (AIR 1964 SC 1854) was a case where a temporary Government servant's services were terminated. The case shows, as is well known, that even before a formal departmental enquiry is launched a preliminary enquiry is usually held to find out whether a prima facie case is made out against a Government servant. This preliminary enquiry is directed to the collection of facts in regard to the work and conduct of a Government servant in which he may or may not be associated so that the authority concerned may decide whether or not to subject the servant concerned to the enquiry under Art. 311 for inflicting one of the three major punishments mentioned therein and such a preliminary enquiry may even be held ex parte. In R. P. Kapur v. Union of India, (1964) 5 SCR 431 at p. 445 = (AIR 1964 SC 787 at p. 792) the general principles governing a master and servant were discussed in some detail and it was said:

"If there is no express term in the contract relating to suspension and payment during such suspension or if there is no statutory provision in any law or rule, the employee is entitled to his full remuneration for the period of his interim suspension; on the other hand if there is a term in this respect in the contract or there is a provision in the statute or the rules framed thereunder providing for the scale of payment during suspension, the payment would be in accordance therewith On general principles therefore the authority entitled to appoint a public servant would be entitled to suspend him pending a departmental enquiry into his conduct or pending a criminal proceeding, which may eventually result in a departmental enquiry against him."

11. There is however a direct authority of this Court in S. Govinda Menon v. The Union of India, (1967) 2 SCR 566 = (AIR 1967 SC 1274). The appellant before this Court was a member of the Indian Administrative Service. He was the First Member of the Board of Revenue, Kerala State and was holding the post of Commissioner of Hindu Religious and Charitable Endowments. On the basis of certain complaints containing allegations of misconduct against the appellant in the discharge of his duties as such Commissioner the Kerala Government instituted certain preliminary enquiries and thereafter started disciplinary proceedings against him and also placed him under suspension under rule 7 of the All India Services (Discipline and Appeal) Rules. One of the grounds urged by the appellant was that the order of suspension which was dated March 8, 1963 was not in compliance with rule 7 inasmuch as definite charges were framed against him only on 6th June, 1963. On the basis of rule 5 (2) it was argued that the word "charges" which occurred in this rule and in R. 7 should be given the same meaning and no order of suspension could be passed under Rule 7 before the charges in terms of Rule 5 (2) were framed against him. This was turned down by this Court observing (at p. 582 of SCR) = (at p. 1283 of AIR):

"Rule 5 (2) prescribes that the grounds on which it is proposed to take action shall be reduced to the form of a definite charge or charges. The framing of the charge under Rule 5 (2) is necessary to enable the member of the Service to meet the case against him. The language of rule 7 (1) is however different and that rule provides that the Government may place a member of the Service under suspension "having regard to the nature of the charge/charges and the circumstances in any case" if the Government is satisfied that it is necessary to place him under suspension. In view of the difference of language in rule 5 (2) and rule 7 we are of the opinion that the word "charges" in rule 7 (1) should be given a wider meaning as denoting the accusation or imputation against the member of the Service."

12. It is worthy of note that in the order of suspension it was stated as follows:—

"The Government have received several petitions containing serious allegations of official misconduct against Shri S. Govinda Menon..... Preliminary enquiries caused to be conducted into the allegations have shown prima facie that the officer is guilty of corruption. The Kerala High Court has also occasion to comment on the conduct of the officer in their judgment in G. P. 2306 of 1962 delivered on 12th February, 1963.....

The judgment in the above case and the preliminary report of the X-Branch police have disclosed the following grave charges of serious irregularity and official misconduct on the part of the accused officer.....

The detailed inquiry into the charges by the X-Branch is in progress. The evidence in the case has to be collected from a large number of officers who are subordinate to the accused officer in his capacity as First Member of the Board of Revenue. In the interest of the proper conduct of the enquiry it is necessary that the officer should not be allowed to continue in that post. Having regard to the nature of the charges against the officer and the circumstances the proper course would be to place him under suspension. Shri S. Govinda Menon I. A. S. is therefore placed under suspension under Rule 7 of the All India Services (Discipline and Appeal) Rules, 1955 till the disciplinary proceedings initiated against him are completed".

It was urged before us that the order of suspension there was different from the one before us. While there is no doubt that the order against the appellant in the above case was far more detailed both with regard to the nature of the charges and to the necessity of placing him under suspension, in substance there is little difference for the purpose of Rule 7 of the Service Rules. The order in this case dated 31st July, 1964 shows that serious allegations of corruption and malpractices had been made against the respondent and he was also reported to have contravened the provisions of the All India Service Conduct Rules and enquiries made by the Government of Bihar into the allegations had revealed that there was a prima facie case made out against him. Merely because the order mentioned that disciplinary proceedings were contemplated against the respondent, as compared to Rule 7 which contains phrases like "the initiation of disciplinary proceedings" and the "starting of such proceedings" we cannot hold that the situation in the present case had not reached a stage which called for an order of suspension. In substance disciplinary proceedings can be said to be started against an officer when complaints about his integrity or honesty are entertained and followed by a preliminary enquiry into them culminating in the satisfaction of the Government that a prima facie case has been made out against him for the framing of charges. When the order of suspension itself shows that Government was of the view that such a prima facie case for departmental proceedings had been made out the fact that the order also mentions that such proceedings were contemplated makes no difference. Again the fact that in other rules of service an order of suspension may be made when "disciplinary proceedings were contemplated" should not lead us to take the view that a member of an All India Service should be dealt with differently. The reputation of an officer is equally valuable no matter whether he belongs to the All India Service or to one of a humbler cadre. It is the exigency of the conditions of service which requires or calls for an order of suspension and there can be no difference in regard to this matter as between a member of an All India Service and a member of a State Service or a Railway Service.

13. In the result the appeal is allowed but in the circumstances of the case we direct the parties to pay and bear their own costs.

Appeal allowed.

Civil Appeal No. 1791 of 1967, I/- 9-2-1971.

BO/CO/A615/71/DVT/C

Companies Act (1913), S. 235 — A Director enabling another Director to perpetrate fraud resulting in loss to the Company is liable to repay and restore the loss — (1963) 2 Mad LJ 109, Affirmed. (Para 6)

Misfeasance and breach of trust include breach of duty to the Company resulting directly in misapplication or loss of Company's assets. Allegations or proof of fraud are not essential. It is immaterial that the offender is also criminally liable. Breach of such duty makes him liable to repay or restore the Company's loss.

GROVER, J.: — This is an appeal by certificate from a judgment of the Madras High Court.

2. In October, 1950 the Malayalee Bank Ltd., hereinafter called the "Bank" was ordered to be wound up. On that date there were only two Directors i. e., respondent No. 3 and the appellant P. K. Nedungadi. The second respondent P. S. Mannadiar hereinafter called "M" was appointed as the Managing Director on March 4, 1945. He continued to work as such till December 25, 1948. Afterwards he was a Director till the date of his resignation on June 14, 1950. The third respondent T. Eronanunni was Director from November 15, 1943 onwards. The fourth respondent V. K. Thirumalpad was a Director from 1940 till March 13, 1949. The appellant P. K. Nedungadi was a Director from October 8, 1948 till the date of the winding up order. The fifth respondent V. Venugopalan Thampan was a Director from June 22, 1946 till October 8, 1948.

3. In September, 1953 the Official Liquidator filed a petition under Sections 183 (3) and 235 of the Indian Companies Act together with Rule 9 of the Companies Rules and Sec. 45, A, B and F of Act IX of 1950 and Rule 6 of the Banking Companies Rules for an order determining and fixing the liability of the respondents jointly and severally in respect of the acts of misfeasance, misapplication of monies, breach of trust etc., and to declare their liability to contribute Rs. 2,11,998.04 or such other sum as might be determined. In September, 1954 the High Court directed the Official Referee to record the evidence. Two charges were framed out of which so far as the appellant is concerned, the material portion of the following charge may be reproduced:

"In contravention of the resolution of the Board of Directors dated 27-10-1946, No. 1 (P. S. Mannadiar) amongst you took away and Nos. 2 to 5 (T. Eromanunni, V. K. Thirumalpad and V. Venugopal Thampan) permitted No. 1 to take away a sum of Rs. 14,623-4-2 from the Bank under the guise of an overdraft.

That No. 1 amongst you obtained and Nos. 2 to 5 amongst you sanctioned to No. 1 loan, aggregating to Rs. 34,863-6-0 (wherein the aforesaid sum of Rs. 14,623-4-2 was merged) on the supposed security of the Mannadiar Saw and Oil Mills Ltd., Palghat.

That at the time the transaction was put through you knew or could with reasonable diligence have known that the security was wholly illusory and that was only a device to circumvent the provisions of Section 20 of the Indian Banking Companies Act.

That by this and other connected wrongful devices you caused loss to the aforesaid bank of a sum of Rs. 49,608-4-3".

A learned Single Judge took the view that all the Directors left everything in the hands of respondent No. 2 and that was the reason why the transactions which had been brought about had taken place. According to the learned Judge any criminal prosecution in the circumstances disclosed would have failed and therefore he dismissed the application of the Official Liquidator. On appeal by him a Division Bench of the High Court held that the appellant and respondent No. 2 had been guilty of acts of misfeasance etc. and directed that they should jointly and severally pay to the Official Liquidator a sum of Rs. 46,616 together with interest on a sum of Rs. 34,541.31 from 1953 to the date of realisation. It is unnecessary to refer to the liability of the other respondents which was determined. Respondent No. 2 has not filed any appeal and we are concerned with the appeal of Nedungadi.

4. Now what the High Court found from the evidence was as follows: Respondent No. 2 was carrying on business under the name of Mannadiar Saw & Oil Mills. He had three loan accounts with the Bank. The first was a current account and the second an overdraft account and the third an account in the name of the Mills. Large sums of money were drawn by him without security from the various accounts exceeding limits sanctioned to him by the Board of Directors. The affairs of the Mills became very unsatisfactory and its business fell on evil days. M formed a public limited company and sold the Mills and its property at an inflated price to the said company. This company was incorporated by the name of Mannadiar Saw & Oil Mills Ltd. on January 31, 1948, hereinafter referred to as the "Mills." The appellant was one of the Directors of that Company. This company was ultimately wound up in 1950. The Bank had certain deposits to the extent of Rs. 50,000/- with the Palghat Branch of the Indo-Mercantile Bank. In the beginning of 1948 the Indo-Mercantile Bank got into difficulties and it closed its business from February 10, 1948. M had an overdraft account with Indo-Mercantile Bank at its Palghat Branch. The agent of that Branch was the appellant. M purporting to act on behalf of the Bank drew a cheque on the Indo-Mercantile Bank Ltd. on February 8, 1948 for a sum of Rs. 13,000/- and with the help of the appellant that amount was adjusted against his overdraft account. In the accounts of the Indo-Mercantile Bank this sum was debited against Rs. 50,000 standing to the credit of the Bank. M however did not debit himself with the sum of Rs. 13,000/- in any of his accounts with the Bank. The amount was shown only in the suspense account. On October 8, 1948 the appellant, who was formerly the agent of Palghat Branch of Indo-Mercantile Bank, was appointed a Director of the Bank. On taking charge he discovered that M had not brought to account the sum of Rs. 13,000/- which he had taken away from the Bank in the manner stated before. M thought of a scheme by which his obligations to the Indo-Mercantile Bank were to be consolidated with certain other sums and for the total indebtedness a mortgage was to be got executed by the Mills thereby discharging completely his indebtedness to the Bank. A fourth mortgage of the property of that company was consequently executed for a sum of Rs. 34,541-5-0. This amount which was the consideration for the mortgage was in satisfaction of the claim which the Indo-Mercantile Bank had against M and certain other amounts. Now these other amounts were made up in this way. The Indo-Mercantile Bank had a claim against one Ravi Verma who was a Director of the Mills. He was perfectly solvent and that amount could have been realized from him but instead of doing that M was given a credit to the extent of Rs. 12,083/- with a direction to him to realize Ravi Verma's dues to the Bank himself. M was also indebted to Rukmini, the sister-in-law of the appellant. For wiping out this liability a fixed deposit account for Rs. 6,000/- was opened in the Bank in the name of Rukmini. Cash money was not deposited and the consideration for the deposit was an undertaking by M to pay to the Bank and that liability was included in the total liability covered by the mortgage executed by the Mills. Subsequently the fixed deposit amount of Rs. 6,000/- was withdrawn by Rukmini. Thus, the High Court found that the three items of consideration for the mortgage which had been created on a defunct company like the Mills were, (1) the wiping out of the liability of M to the Bank to the extent of Rs. 14,623-4-2 which consisted of a sum of Rs. 13,000/- and interest; (2) wiping out of liability of Ravi Verma a solvent debtor of the Indo-Mercantile Bank to the extent of Rs. 12,083/9/7 and (3) the creation of the fixed deposit for the benefit of the fourth respondent for a sum of Rs. 6,000/-. The appellant obviously got the benefit for bringing about this transaction because of his relationship with Rukmini.

5. The High Court found that the assets of the Mills were worth not even Rs. 10,000/- and to obtain a fourth mortgage of the property of that company could not be an error of judgment on the part of the Directors but it was designed and calculated arrangement made with a view to benefit, at the expense of the Bank, M, the appellant and Ravi Verma. It was not possible to believe that the Directors were not aware of the financial condition of the Mills. The security which was thus taken was merely illusory and when the transaction was approved at the meeting of the Directors held on July 22, 1949 the Directors present were M, the appellant and respondent No. 2 before the High Court. The Division Bench quite rightly did not agree with the learned Single Judge that all these transactions which were tell tale were the result of an error of judgment. On the contrary there was a clever plan and design behind the creation of the mortgage. As regards the appellant this is what was observed:

"The fourth respondent P. K. Nedungadi, was undoubtedly the guiding spirit for the fraud perpetrated by the first respondent. He obtained a benefit on opening a fixed deposit in favour of his sister-in-law, and realising the same while he was in active management, as the Managing Director of the Bank. But scruples were not amongst his virtues is plain from the fact that he who engineered the mortgage transaction described the same within the few months thereof in his report to the Directors. He should be made liable to the entire extent. But for his help, the first respondent could not have avoided his liability or been permitted to realise the unpaid purchase money from the Mannadiar Saw and Oil Mills Ltd., which he had no hopes of realising. He should be made liable to the entire amount decreed against the first respondent".

Under Section 235 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913 which was in force at the material time the Court has been given the power to assess damages against the delinquent Directors, etc. If the money or the property of the Company has been misapplied or there has been misfeasance or breach of trust in relation to the company by a Director, an officer or other persons mentioned in the section the Court, after examining the matter, can compel him to repay or restore the property with interest at such rate as the court may think fit or to contribute such sums to the assets of the Company by way of compensation in respect of the misapplication, retainer, misfeasance or breach of trust, as the Court thinks fit. It has been expressly declared that the section shall apply notwithstanding that the offence is one for which the offender may be criminally responsible. In Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edition, Volume 6, it has been stated at page 623 that misfeasance and breach of trust include a breach by a Promoter, Director etc. of a duty to the Company the direct consequence of which has been a misapplication or loss of its assets for which he could be made responsible in an action. Allegations or proof of fraud are not essential and it is immaterial that the offence is one for which the offender may be criminally liable.

6. In the present case the High Court has found and that finding has not been shown to be wrong or erroneous in any manner that it was the appellant who enabled M to perpetrate the fraud which apparently resulted in loss to the Company. The appellant himself also derived a certain benefit from the fraudulent acts of M. He would thus be clearly liable to repay or restore to the Bank the amount in respect of which there was misapplication, misfeasance and breach of trust resulting in loss to the Company. The appellant cannot escape liability for the entire amount for which an order has been made against him by the High Court.

7. In the result this appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

SIKRI, C. J.: — These appeals are on certificates granted by the High Court of Kerala. The only question in these appeals is whether the workmen doing work in the premises of the respondent are workers within the meaning of Section 2 (1) of the Factories Act, 1948. Section 2 (1) of the Factories Act, 1948 reads as follows:

" 'Worker' means a person employed, directly or through any agency, whether for wages or not, in any manufacturing process, or in cleaning any part of the machinery or premises used for a manufacturing process, or in any other kind of work incidental to, or connected with, the manufacturing process, or the subject of the manufacturing process;"

2. The respondent was convicted under Section 92 of the Factories Act for using a building as a factory without obtaining the previous permission in writing of the Chief Inspector of Factories, for failing to apply for registration and grant of licence for the factory and for failing to maintain a muster roll of the workers employed in the factory in one case, and for failing to give attendance cards to every person employed in the factory in the other case. The respondent was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 20/- in each case. He was also directed under Section 102 of the Factories Act to rectify the defects within a specified period.

3. The respondent filed a Revision Petition in the High Court. The High Court held that the work that was being carried out in the premises of the respondent amounted to manufacturing process. This question has not been debated before us. The High Court further held that the workmen working in the premises of the respondent were not 'workers' within the meaning of S. 2 (1) of the Factories Act. It is this part of the decision that has been challenged in appeal by the State of Kerala.

4. The nature of the work done was described in a letter produced by the prosecution. This letter is not printed on the record but the High Court summarises the document as follows:

"This document shows that as and when catches of prawns are made, a consignment of prawns is brought to the premises in a lorry at any time of the day or the night, that the women and girls of the locality, who form a "casual, heterogeneous, miscellaneous and irregular group", come at their convenience and do the peeling, washing etc., at piece-rates; and that there are no specified hours of work, nor is there any control by the Petitioner over the irregularity and attendance or of the nature, manner or quantum of their work. The same workers after finishing the work in the premises of the petitioner, go to other similar premises in the locality where other lorry loads of prawns are taken. In other words, if more prawns are caught at a particular time, they are brought and distributed among several premises like the Petitioner's and the local women and girls collect at the several premises and do the work at piece-rates. The same workers do not go to the same premises on different occasions, and the owners of the several premises do not have any control over the manner or quantum of work these women and girls do. The rates of remuneration naturally depend upon the quantity of prawns available, the number of women and girls that come to do the work, the hour of the day or the night when the catches arrive, etc. Sometimes, for days no work is done in the premises."

5. The High Court after referring to the decisions of this Court in Dharangadhara Chemical Works Ltd. v. State of Saurashtra, AIR 1957 SC 264, a decision under the Industrial Disputes Act, Chintaman Rao v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 1958 SCR 1340 = (AIR 1958 SC 388), and State of Kerala v. V. M. Patel, (1960) KLJ 1524 (SC), decisions under the Factories Act, held:

"It will be apparent that the women and girls who assemble and do the work when a catch of prawns is brought to the premises of the petitioner are not 'workers' coming within the definition of the Factories Act. The Petitioner does not insist as to who should do the job or how it should be done; he only wants the work to be done for the agreed remuneration without spoiling the prawns i. e. within a short time. (A quantity of prawns is taken for peeling, cleaning, washing etc., by a particular individual for a fixed remuneration, and that individual, with the assistance of others whom she employs, finishes the job as quickly as possible)."

6. The learned Counsel for the appellant contended that it was erroneous on the part of the High Court to have applied the decision of this Court in AIR 1957 SC 264, a case under the Industrial Disputes Act, to the definition of 'worker' in the Factories Act. He fairly pointed out that another Division Bench applied the same test in a dispute arising under the Factories Act. (see Birdhi-chand Sharma v. First Civil Judge Nagpur, (1961) 3 SCR 161 = (AIR 1961

SC 644). But, nevertheless, he urged that we should refer the case to a larger Bench. We see nothing wrong in the decision of this Court in 1958 SCR 1340 = (AIR 1958 SC 388). On the contrary, we are of the opinion that the case has been rightly decided. The scheme of the Factories Act clearly shows that the test adopted by this Court is the correct one. It would be impossible to apply many provisions of the Factories Act to the 'workers' of the type we are concerned with here if we were to hold that they were 'workers' within the definition of the Factories Act. We are really surprised that the High Court certified this case to be a fit case for appeal to this Court. After this Court had laid down a test to be applied for determining who were 'workers' within the meaning of the Factories Act, the High Court should have treated the question of principle as no longer open. The High Court had certified the case to be fit for appeal as it felt that the question involved is of general importance in the State. If the question of principle has been settled by this Court, the application of the principle to the facts of a particular case does not make the question a fit one for the Supreme Court within Article 134 (1) (c) of the Constitution. In the result the appeals fail and are dismissed.

Appeals dismissed.

Criminal Appeal No. 98 of 1968, D/- 11-2-1971.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 253 (2)—When on allegations made against accused prima facie case is made out against them they should not be discharged under S. 253 (2). AIR 1967 Punj. 244, Reversed.

A filed a complaint against B, C and D under Ss. 447/379 and 428/34 Penal Code. He alleged that A was the owner as Dholidar and occupancy tenant of certain land, that there was previous civil litigation between the parties, that the accused having lost in the litigation with a view to wreak vengeance on him and to create evidence in their favour, in furtherance of the common intention in his absence illegally trespassed on the land and destroyed an orchard on it and illegally and dishonestly removed some trees on it:

Held that if the allegations were true the accused had committed the offences charged against them. Thus a prima facie case had been made out against the accused and they should not have been discharged under S. 253 (2). AIR 1967 Punj. 244, Reversed.

SIKRI, C. J.:—This appeal by special leave is directed against the judgment of the Circuit Bench of the Punjab High Court at Delhi (Narula J.) reversing the order dated December 6, 1965 of the learned Magistrate and the judgment dated March 1, 1966 of the Additional Sessions Judge, and directing that all the respondents be discharged under sub-section (2) of Section 253 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in respect of the offences alleged by the appellant before us. In order to appreciate the points it is necessary to state the facts. The Appellant is the Muktar-e-Am (General Attorney) of Mahant Santokh Dass. He filed a complaint under Sections 447/379 and 428/34, I. P. C. The allegations in brief were that Mahant Santokh Dass was the owner as Dholidar and occupancy tenant of the entire land comprising in Khasra No. 129, Civil Station, Delhi, measuring 27 Bighas and 14 Biswas. There is a Gurdwara known as Gurdwara Majnu-ka-tilla which was built in another portion of Khasra No. 129 covering an area of 4 Bighas and 7 Biswas and was managed by the accused Sardar Gurdial Singh, Manager, Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee, Sardar Gulab Singh, President Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee and Sardar Santokh Singh, Secretary, Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee.

There were certain Sewadars which the appellant cited as accused without naming them. The appellant recited the previous litigation between the parties and alleged that the committee having lost every where in Court ultimately took to the law of jungle and to wreak their vengeance and to create evidence in their favour accused Nos. 1, 3 and 4 along with accused No. 2, in furtherance of the common intention, in the absence of the owner and the appellant on the morning of March 29, 1964 by illegally trespassing on the said orchard employed coolies and some servants of the Gurdwara and totally destroyed it and closed watering well and levelled the whole thing to the ground and they illegally and dishonestly removed the trees from the orchard and took them into possession.

2. It was further alleged that the accused have no interest or title in the land which they trespassed illegally and destroyed the whole Orchard. The complainant gave a lengthy statement before the Court of the S. D. M., Delhi. He alleged that the land was in possession of his ancestors and continued to be in his possession. He relied on copies of the Khasra Girdawari relating to the land in dispute and Fard Zamabandi. He gave a statement in support of the complaint. He produced some witnesses including P. W. 5 Pheru Mal Jain, Patwari, who deposed that the land measuring 27 Bighas and 8 Biswas was under the possession of Mahant Santokh Dass and the land measuring 4 Bighas and 7 Biswas was under the possession of Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee. We need not refer to the rest of the evidence.

3. The A. D. M. after having gone through the enquiry report and the evidence on record came to the conclusion that there was a prima facie case under Sections 427/447/379/34, I. P. C. against the accused Gur Dayal Singh, Santokh Singh and Tara Chand only. He sent the case to the Court of Shri C. N. Narula, Magistrate 1st Class, for disposal according to law.

4. On December 6, 1965 an application was put in under Section 253 (2), Criminal Procedure Code, for discharging the accused persons. The main ground taken was that the decree passed in favour of Mahant Santokh Dass by Shri R. L. Lamba, Sub-Judge, had been set aside in appeal by Shri

P. N. Thukral, Additional District Judge, who had remanded the case to the trial Court. This judgment of Shri Lamba was one of the documents relied upon by the complainant to show his title. It was further stated in this application that the dispute was prima facie of civil nature and the complaint had been filed to harass the accused. The Court on December 6, 1965 wrote a short order which reads as follows:—

"Heard the parties. This Court is not to sit in judgment over the findings of learned Civil Judge or Addl. S. Judge but is only concerned with possession and criminal trespass over such possession of land in dispute. The matter of title is to be decided upon by competent Civil Courts. I see no reasons to discharge the accused at this stage or to stay the proceedings also verbally requested by counsel for the accused. Application is rejected. Case to proceed with prosecution evidence today".

5. The accused filed a revision petition before the Additional Sessions Judge, Delhi but that was dismissed on the ground that there was no ground for the discharge of the accused. As far as the title was concerned the learned Addl. Sessions Judge observed:

"The Criminal Court has, as a matter of fact, to record its own findings on the points disputed before it and the discretion of the learned Magistrate in not staying the proceedings in the complaint to await the decision in the civil suit cannot be interfered with".

6. The accused then filed a revision before the High Court. The learned Judge allowed the petition on the ground that the real dispute was regarding the title to the land on one part of which the Gurdwara was situated and on the other part the alleged criminal trespass was committed by the accused. Although the Judge said that the question of title was not directly relevant, he seems to have decided the case on the question of title for he referred to the previous history of the litigation between the parties and observed:

"The suit filed by Mahant Santokh Dass for a declaration to the effect that he was in possession of the land in dispute, of which possession was being claimed by the Gurdwara Prabandhak Committee, has been dismissed. In the face of the decree of the civil Court in the civil suit of Mahant Santokh Dass, it is clear that the complainant had no right to eject the petitioners or to exclude them from the land in question".

7. Then the learned Judge observed:

"According to the complainant's own case, made out in the complaint, he was not in actual possession of the property at the time of the commission of the alleged offence".

8. We have looked into the complaint and there is no evidence in support of this observation of the learned Judge.

9. The learned Judge further observed:

"I have also scanned through the evidence so far recorded at the trial of this case. Even if the allegations made therein are deemed to be true, they do not appear to disclose the commission of any of the offences with which the petitioners are sought to be charged. The charges against the petitioner were therefore, clearly groundless and the learned Magistrate, in my opinion, unjustifiably declined to exercise his jurisdiction under Section 253 (2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure in refusing to discharge the accused".

10. We are unable to appreciate this conclusion of the learned Judge. If the allegations are true there is no doubt that the accused have committed the offence charged against them. Of course, it is another matter if the allegations are ultimately proved not to be true.

11. We have deliberately not referred to the previous litigation between the parties for any observation which we may make may affect either the civil suit or the fate of this case. It seems to us that the High Court while saying that it was not concerned with the title had somehow felt that the title rested with the accused-respondents.

12. The learned Counsel for the respondent No. 1 S. C. Malik tried to persuade us to go into the question of title and he said that the question of possession was dependent on title. He referred to Ex. P11, an extract from Khasra Girdawari, and wanted us to infer from it that Khasra Girdawari had been prepared on the basis of title and not on the basis of actual possession. On behalf of respondent No. 2 Bakshi Gurcharan Singh argued that the revenue records were false and the litigation showed that the title was with the accused. Mr. Harbans Singh appearing for Respondent No. 3 added that the complaint was not filed immediately.

13. We need not discuss these points in detail because it might possibly prejudice respondents' case but it seems to us that the High Court erred in discharging the accused under Section 253 (2), Criminal Procedure Code. As held by the learned Sessions Judge a prima facie case has been made out and the accused must stand trial.

14. In the result the judgment and order of the High Court is set aside and we direct that the trial should proceed as expeditiously as possible.

Appeal allowed.

J. C. SHAH, K. S. HEGDE AND A. N. GROVER, JJ.

Delhi Transport Undertaking, Appellant v. Balbir Saran Goel, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 2266 of 1968, D/- 23-2-1970.

Civil Services — D. R. T. A. (Conditions of Appointment and Service Regulations) (1952), Regs. 9 (b), 15 — Termination of service in terms of Reg. 9 (b) — Procedure in Reg. 15 not required to be followed — Motive for termination immaterial.

If the employer chooses to terminate the services in accordance with Reg. 9 (b) after giving one month's notice or pay in lieu thereof it cannot amount to termination of service for misconduct within the meaning of Clause (a). It is only when some punishment is inflicted of the nature specified in Regulation 15 for misconduct that the procedure laid down therein for an inquiry etc., becomes applicable.

(Para 7)

It may be that the motive for termination of his services was the breach of Standing Order 17 i. e., of filing a writ petition in the High Court against his demotion without exhausting departmental remedies but the question of motive is immaterial.

*(Letters Patent Appeal No. 68-D of 1965, D/- 4-8-1967 — Delhi.)

JN/JN/B145/70/DHZ/G

(Para 9)

Where the order is unequivocally made in terms of Regulation 9 (b) no question that punishment had been inflicted for misconduct the order being a mere camouflage can arise. Even if the employers thought that the employee was a cantankerous person and it was not desirable to retain him in service it was open to them to terminate his services in terms of Regulation 9 (b) and it was not necessary to dismiss him by way of punishment for misconduct.

v. District Board, Agra 7

Mr. Niren De, Attorney-General for India, (M/s. D. D. Choudhury and G. K. Sharma, Advocates, with him), for Appellant; Mr. H. R. Gokhale, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. S. K. Gambhir, Advocate, with him), for Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

GROVER, J.: — This is an appeal by special leave in which the sole question for determination is whether the services of the respondent who was an employee of the appellant could be terminated under Regulation 9 (b) without complying with the procedure prescribed by Regulation 15 of the D. R. T. A. (Conditions of Appointment and Service Regulations), 1952, as amended, which were framed under Section 53, sub-sections (1) and (2) (c) of the Delhi Road Transport Authority Act, 1950.

2. The respondent was originally appointed as a booking agent under the Gwalior Northern Transport Company. He was promoted to the rank of Travelling Ticket Examiner in 1947. In 1948 the Government of India, Ministry of Transport, took over the aforesaid company. On March 7, 1950 the Delhi Road Transport Authority Act was passed. The services of the respondent were transferred to the said Authority. In March, 1952 the respondent was demoted from the rank of Travelling Ticket Examiner to that of a Conductor. He filed a writ petition in the Circuit Bench of the Punjab High Court at Delhi in April, 1953. The writ petition was dismissed and thereafter his services were terminated on November 11, 1953. The order of termination which was passed by the Manager of the Delhi Road Transport Authority was in the following terms:

"Your services will not be required by this organisation with effect from November 12, 1953. You will be paid one month's salary in lieu of notice".

3. There were certain proceedings before the Conciliation Officer and in answer to a query made by that officer the General Manager wrote a letter on August 14, 1953 in which it was stated, inter alia, that the respondent had approached the High Court when he had been demoted at the previous stage without exhausting the normal official channel of redress and without putting in his representation before the Appellate Authority as provided in the Service Rules. His services were therefore terminated under Regulation 9 (b) after paying one month's salary in lieu of notice. It may be mentioned that the Service Rule of which the breach was alleged to have been committed by the respondent was Standing Order No. 17 which enjoined that no employee should have recourse to a Court of law without first resorting to the normal official channels of redress.

4. The suit out of which the present appeal has arisen was filed by the respondent containing all the above facts in which it was alleged that the order dated November 11, 1953 was one of dismissal and had been passed as a measure of punishment, the procedure prescribed by Regulation 15 not having been followed. In para 29 of the plaint the sole allegation relating to mala fides was made in these terms:

".....It was mala fide on the part of the General Manager, D. R. T. A. to terminate the services of the plaintiff without assigning any reason".

A declaration was sought that the order of dismissal was illegal, mala fide etc., and that the plaintiff continued to remain in the employment of the appellant without any interruption of rights. A claim for certain amount was also made on account of salary etc. The only two issues framed on the merits were:

(1) "Whether the order dated 11th November, 1953 terminating the services of the plaintiff is illegal and ultra vires as alleged?"

(2) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to the recovery of any amount by way of consequential relief? If so, at what rate and for what period?"

The trial court held that the order terminating the services of the respondent was not covered by Regulation 9 (b) but was an order of dismissal from service under Regulation 15 (2) Clause (7) and therefore the order of termination was nothing short of dismissal. It was held that the dismissal of the respondent was illegal and that he was entitled to the pay and allowance in the sum of Rs. 4,500.

5. An appeal was taken to the District Court which confirmed the decree of trial court. A learned Single Judge of the High Court who disposed of the second appeal preferred by the present appellant affirmed the decree of the courts below but on different grounds. It was held by him that Regulation 9 (b) did not confer any power on the Authority to terminate the employment of its employees. A Division Bench which heard the appeal under the Letters Patent affirmed the decisions of the courts below but on different grounds. It was held that the real reason for dispensing with the services of the respondent was one given by the General Manager in his letter to the Conciliation Officer. It was the alleged breach of the Service Rules. A breach of the Standing Order amounted to misconduct as provided by Regulation 15 (1). One of the penalties prescribed by Regulation 15 (2) was dismissal. That though the order of termination of services of the respondent did not, on its face, contain the reason for the non-requirement of his services the real reason was the misconduct of the respondent in that he had committed a breach of the Standing Order. The procedure laid down in Regulation 15 (2) (c) of enquiry etc., not having been followed the impugned order was void and illegal. In fact that order had been made by way of punishment.

6. Regulation 9, to the extent it is material, is as follows:

"9. Termination of Service. — (a) Except as otherwise specified in the appointment orders, the services of an employee of the Authority may be terminated without any notice or pay in lieu of notice—

(i) during the period of probation and without assigning any reasons therefor.

(ii) for misconduct.

(iii) on the completion of specific period of appointment,

(iv) in the case of employees engaged on contract for a specific period, on the expiration of such period in accordance with the terms of appointment.

(b) Where the termination is made due to reduction of establishment or in circumstances other than those mentioned at (a) above, one month's notice or pay in lieu thereof will be given to all categories of employees.

(c)

Regulation 15 says that a breach of the Standing Order issued from time to time by the Delhi Road Transport Authority will amount to misconduct. The penalties which can be imposed for misconduct are enumerated out of which dismissal is one. It is provided that no order of dismissal, removal or other punishment except censure shall be passed unless the procedure laid down in clause (c) is followed. That clause outlines the steps which must be taken in the matter of affording an opportunity to the delinquent employee and of an inquiry which is to be conducted in the matter.

7. Now Regulation 9 clearly provides for termination of services in two modes; the first is where the services may be terminated without any notice or pay in lieu of notice. This can be done among other reasons for misconduct. The second mode is of terminating the services owing to reduction of establishment or in circumstances other than those mentioned in clause (a) which relate to termination without notice. When termination is made under clause (b) one month's notice or pay in lieu thereof is to be given to the employee. Thus it is clear that if the employer chooses to terminate the services in accordance with clause (b) after giving one month's notice or pay in lieu thereof it cannot amount to termination of service for misconduct within the meaning of clause (a). It is only when some punishment is inflicted of the nature specified in Regulation 15 for misconduct that the procedure laid down therein for an inquiry etc., becomes applicable. The contention which ap-appears to have prevailed with the High Court and which has been pressed before us is that although the order was made in perfectly harmless and innocuous terms and purported to be within Regulation 9 (b) it was a mere camouflage for inflicting punishment for breach of Standing Order 17 inasmuch as the respondent had approached the High Court under Art. 226 of the Constitution without exhausting the departmental remedies. The High Court relied on the observation in S. R. Tewari v. District Board Agra, (1964) 3 SCR 55 = (AIR 1964 SC 1680) that the form of the order under which the employment of a servant was determined was not conclusive of the true nature of the order. The form might be merely to camouflage an order of dismissal for misconduct and it was always open to the court before which the order was challenged to go behind the form and ascertain the true character of the order. In that case it was held that the employment was terminated by giving a notice in accordance with the rules and it was not a case of dismissal.

8. The learned Attorney-General for the appellant has sought to distinguish cases which fall under Art. 311 and those which are governed by statutory provisions or rules containing provisions analogous to Art. 311. According to his submission the concept of punishment is not relevant when the employer chooses to terminate the employment of an employee in accordance with the conditions of service. All that has to be seen is whether the order made by him is in conformity with the statutory powers. He has further submitted that where the master chooses to follow the mode of terminating the services prescribed by Regulation 9 (b) no stigma attaches to such termination and no question of the employee having been punished can arise nor can it be examined in such a case whether the order made was a mere camouflage or cloak for dismissing an employee by way of punishment for misconduct. It has further been emphasised that what has to be seen is the situation obtaining on the date the order was made and no notice should or ought to be taken of any subsequent facts emerging out of correspondence or pleadings in a Court of law in reply to the allegations in the plaint of mala fide and the like.

9. It does not appear necessary to refer to numerous decisions which have been given by this Court in cases arising under Article 311 of the Constitution on the points debated before us by counsel for both sides. In State of Punjab v. Shri Sukhraj Bahadur, (1968) 3 SCR 234 at p. 244 = (AIR 1968 SC 1089 at p. 1094) most of these cases have been discussed. By a conspectus of these cases, it was stated, the following propositions clearly emerge:

"1. The services of a temporary servant or a probationer can be terminated under the rules of his employment and such termination without anything more would not attract the operation of Article 311 of the Constitution.

2. The circumstances preceding or attendant on the order of termination of service have to be examined in each case, the motive behind it being immaterial.

3. If the order visits the public servant with any evil consequences or casts an aspersion against his character or integrity, it must be considered to be one by way of punishment, no matter whether he was a mere probationer or a temporary servant.

4. An order of termination of service in unexceptionable form preceded by an inquiry launched by the superior authorities only to ascertain whether the public servant should be retained in service, does not attract the operation of Article 311 of the Constitution.

5. If there be a full-scale departmental enquiry envisaged by Article 311, i. e., an Enquiry Officer is appointed, a charge-sheet submitted, explanation called for and considered, any order of termination of service made thereafter will attract the operation of the said article".

In that case the departmental enquiry did not proceed beyond the stage of submission of charge-sheet followed by the respondent's explanation thereto. The enquiry was not proceeded with, there were no sittings of any enquiry Officer, no evidence was recorded and no conclusions arrived at on the enquiry. It was, therefore, held that the services had been terminated simpliciter under the rules of employment and Article 311 was not attracted. In the present case even if it is assumed that the law is the same as would be applicable to a case governed by Article 311 it is difficult to say on the principles laid down in the above case that the services of the respondent were not merely terminated in accordance with Regulation 9 (b) which governed the conditions of his employment. It may be that the motive for termination of his services was the breach of Standing Order 17, i. e., of filing a writ petition in the High Court against the demotion without exhausting departmental remedies but the question of motive is immaterial. No charge-sheet was preferred under Regulation 15 nor was enquiry held in accordance therewith before the order under Regulation 9 (b) was made. It may be that if the respondent had successfully pleaded and proved mala fides on the part of the authority terminating his services the impugned order could be legitimately challenged but no foundation was laid in that behalf in the plaint nor was the question of mala fides investigated by the Courts below.

10. As regards the punishment having been inflicted for misconduct the order being a mere camouflage we are unable to endorse the view that any such question could arise in the present case. Regulation 9 (b) clearly empowered the authorities to terminate the services after giving one month's notice or pay in lieu of notice. The order was unequivocally made in terms of that Regulation. Even if the employers of the respondent thought that he was a cantankerous person and it was not desirable to retain him in service it was open to them to terminate his services in terms of Regulation 9 (b) and it was not necessary to dismiss him by way of punishment for misconduct.

11. The appeal is consequently allowed and the decree granted by the Courts below is set aside. In view of this Court's order dated November 1, 1968, the appellant will pay the costs of the respondent.

Appeal allowed.

Criminal Appeal No. 79 of 1969,

(A) Criminal P. C. (1898), Section 423 (1) (a) — Powers of Appellate Court in disposing appeal — Appeal against acquittal — Order of acquittal preceded by order of sentence by Trial Court — Sentence within competence of trial Court alone can be passed by High Court — Cr. App. No. 818 of 1967, D/- 21-11-1968 (Bom), Partly Reversed; AIR 1955 Mad 608, Overruled.

Where the appeal is from an order of acquittal the matter is at large. There is no sentence which is binding on a person who was once an accused. He comes before the Court with the presumption of innocence. If the Court finds that the acquittal was not justified and that he was guilty of the offence with which he was charged, it is for the appeal Court to order punishment to fit the crime. If the appeal is from an order of acquittal with no prior order of sentence, the punishment must be commensurate with the gravity of the offence. But if the order of acquittal is preceded by an order of conviction the Court hearing the appeal from acquittal should not impose a sentence greater than what the Court of first instance could have imposed inasmuch as if the trial Court had given him the maximum sentence which it was competent to give and no appeal was preferred by the accused, the State could not have approached the High Court under any provision of the Code for enhancement of the sentence. The interposition of the order of an intermediate Court of appeal and acquittal of the accused by it should not put the accused in a predicament worse than that before the trial Court. Cr. (1) (a) — Appeal against acquittal — Acquittal preceded by order of sentence of Court of first instance — Show cause notice imposing penalty, within competence of trial Court, not necessary.

Where in an appeal from an order of acquittal preceded by an order of sentence the accused is given notice of appeal and actually takes part in the hearing before the High Court, it would be superfluous to give him notice to show cause why a sentence within the competence of the trial Magistrate should not be passed. The accused knows or ought to know that the High Court was bound to form its own conclusions on the material before it and award a sentence which the merits of the case demanded within the limit of the trial Court's jurisdiction. The absence of a show cause notice does not violate any known principle of natural justice.

M/s R. V. Pillai and Subodh Markandeya, Advocates, for Appellants; Mr. H. R. Khanna, Advocate, and Mr. B. D. Sharma, Advocate, for Mr. S. P. Nayar, Advocate, for Respondent.

MITTER, J.: — The six appellants in this appeal were charge-sheeted for having committed offences punishable under Sections 147, 447 and 325 read with Section 149 of the Indian Penal Code in the Court of the Judicial Magistrate, First Class, Deglur, District Nanded. Considering the evidence on record the Magistrate held that the accused were members of an unlawful assembly on September 27, 1965 at the village school Chotwadi with the common object of causing injuries to the complainant. He also found that the accused had committed house trespass into the compound of the school and actually caused grievous hurt to the complainant, a school teacher, in pursuance of the common object of their unlawful assembly. He convicted the accused for offences under Sections 147, 447 and 325 read with Section 149, I. P. C. and sentenced each of them to suffer rigorous imprisonment for 15 days and to pay a fine of Rs. 50 and in default of payment of fine to suffer further rigorous imprisonment for 15 days on the first count under Section 447 read with Section 149, I. P. C. and sentenced each of them to suffer rigorous imprisonment for six months and to a fine of Rs. 200 or in default of payment of fine to suffer further rigorous imprisonment for one month on the second count under Section 325 read with Section 149, I. P. C. He did not pass any fresh sentence on the third count under Section 147, I. P. C. He directed that the substantive sentences of imprisonment passed against accused on both counts should run concurrently. He also directed that in case the amount of fine was recovered, Rs. 200 should be paid to the complainant Murlidhar as compensation for the injury sustained by him under Section 545 (1) (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The accused went up in appeal which was heard by the Additional Sessions Judge at Nanded. The Sessions Judge allowed the appeal and set aside the orders of conviction and directed the accused to be set at liberty. The order for payment of fine also was set aside. The State went up in appeal against the order of acquittal to the High Court. The appeal was allowed by the High Court and the order of acquittal was set aside. The High Court convicted all the six accused under Sections 147 and 447 and 325 read with Section 149, I. P. C. and taking the view that the assault on the village teacher was wanton and unprovoked proceeded to deal with the culprits more firmly than the trying Magistrate. It passed sentence on the second accused holding him to be responsible for the blow which caused the fracture of the left ulna of the complainant, to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 300 and two months' further rigorous imprisonment in default under Section 325 read with Section 149 of the Penal Code. It also held that the remaining accused had played a comparatively minor part and injuries inflicted by them were simple. The sentence passed on each of them was six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100 and one month's further imprisonment in default under Section 325 read with Section 149, I. P. C. A further sentence of three months' imprisonment was passed on all the accused for the offence under Section 447 read with Section 149. No separate sentence was passed under Section 147. This Court granted special leave to appeal to the accused "limited to the question of legality of sentence passed by the High Court".

2. Counsel on behalf of the appellants put forward his argument in a twofold manner. His first contention was that it was not open to the High Court exercising appellate jurisdiction under Section 423 (1) (a) of the Code of Criminal Procedure to enhance the sentence passed by the trial Magistrate. The second branch of his argument was that even if the High Court was competent to do so, the appellants should have been asked to show cause why the sentence imposed on them by the Magistrate should not be enhanced and in the absence of such an opportunity, no enhancement of sentence was competent. As the trial was by a Magistrate of the First Class the maximum sentence which could have been imposed on the accused was under Section 32 of the Code limited to a term of imprisonment not exceeding two years and a fine not exceeding Rs. 2,000. Under the Indian Penal Code the limit of punishment for an offence under Section 447 is imprisonment for a term which may extend to three months or with fine which may extend to Rs. 500 or with both, but an offence under Section 325 can be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to seven years besides a fine.

3. Under Section 417 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code an appeal against acquittal lies only to a High Court. Under Section 418 an appeal lies on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law except in cases where the trial is by a jury. Sections 419 and 420 deal with the procedure for lodging an appeal and Section 421 gives the appellate Court the power to dismiss the appeal summarily on receiving the petition of appeal if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering with the impugned order. Under Section 422 it is obligatory on the appellate Court if it does not dismiss the appeal summarily to cause notice to be given to the appellant or to his pleader of the time and place at which the appeal will be heard and a like notice to be given to the accused.

4. The powers of the appellate Court in disposing of the appeal are contained in Section 423 of the Code. The Court after giving the notice of appeal under S. 422 has to send for the record of the case and after perusing such record and hearing the appellant or his Pleader if he appears and the Public Prosecutor if he appears and in case of appeal under Section 417 the accused if he appears, it may dismiss the appeal in case it is satisfied that there is no sufficient ground for interfering. Where the appeal is from an order of acquittal it may under Section 423 (1) (a) reverse such order and direct that further enquiry be made or that the accused be re-tried or committed for trial as the case may be and find him guilty and pass a sentence on him according to law. No limits are here set to the sentence which may be passed by the appellate Court except that it must be "according to law". This power may be contrasted with the power under Cl. (b) of Section 423 (1) dealing with appeals from a conviction. For such appeals the Legislature specified the powers of the appellate Court with a good deal of precision. Under sub-clause (b) a Court can—

"(1) reverse the finding and sentence and acquit or discharge the accused or order him to be tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such appellate Court or committed for trial, or

(2) alter the finding, maintaining the sentence, or with or without altering the finding reduce the sentence, or

(3) with or without such reduction and with or without altering the finding, alter the nature of the sentence but subject to the provisions of Section 106, sub-section (3), not so as to enhance the sentence".

It would appear from the above that wide though the powers of the appellate Court be in dealing with an appeal from a conviction, it has no jurisdiction to enhance the sentence even if it alters the finding, or without altering the finding takes the view that greater punishment than what was meted is called for.

5. Sub-clause (1) (b) however is not the last word for Clause (1-A) introduced in the section in the year 1965 expressly provides that a High Court exercising jurisdiction under Clause (1) (b) may enhance the sentence notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith contained in the said clause provided the accused has had an opportunity of showing cause against such enhancement.

6. Section 423, Clause (1) (b) is based on the principle that where it is the convicted person who complains against the punishment given to him, he should not be put in peril of a greater punishment if the State takes no exception to the order impugned by the convicted person. The insertion of Clause (1-A) makes it clear that although the powers of Courts subordinate to the High Court are limited under Clause (1) (b) the High Court may in a proper case enhance the sentence after giving an opportunity to the accused to show cause against the proposal.

7. Apart from the powers under Chapter XXXI of the Code (containing Sections 404 to 431) which principally deals with appeals the High Court has powers inter alia of revision under Chapter XXXII of the Code. Under Section 435 not only the High Court but even Courts subordinate to it may call for and examine the record of any proceeding before any inferior criminal Court for the purpose of satisfying itself as "to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded or passed and as to the regularity of any proceeding of such inferior Court". Section 439 deals exclusively with the High Court's powers of revision. Under this section the High Court is empowered in the case of any proceeding the record of which has been called for by itself or which has been reported for orders or which otherwise comes to its knowledge, to exercise the powers conferred on a Court of appeal by Sections 423, 426, 427 and 428 or on a Court by Section 338 (power to direct tender of pardon) and may enhance the sentence but sub-section (2) of the section lays down that such an order is not to be made to the prejudice of the accused unless he has an opportunity of being heard either personally or by a pleader in his own defence. Further when an accused is called upon to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced he has a right to challenge his conviction under sub-section (6).

8. Referring to the above provisions of the Code counsel for the appellants argued that in all cases where it was considered necessary the Legislature was careful to provide that the accused should never be subjected to a greater punishment by a superior Court unless he was asked to show cause against the proposed enhancement. As there was no such provision in Section 423 (1) (a) the Legislature must be taken to have contemplated that in any case of an appeal against acquittal the accused should not be subjected to a punishment greater than what had been meted out to him by the punishing Court. It was also argued that the words in Sec. 423 (1) (a) empowered the appellate Court (the High Court in this case) to pass sentence on the accused according to law which is in contrast to the words used in Section 31 (1) of the Code under which a High Court may pass "any sentence authorised by law". It was argued that Section 423 (1) (a) thus cuts down the power which the

9. In our view the difference in the wording of Section 31 (1) and Section 423 (1) (a) is a matter of no moment. The expression "authorised by law" means sanctioned by law while "according to law" means in conformity with law. The question remains as to what would be a sentence according to law when a High Court sets aside an order of acquittal when the same is preceded by a sentence of an inferior Court. Is the High Court empowered to award any sentence which the law allows under the relevant section of the Indian Penal Code, or is its jurisdiction limited to such a sentence as was within the competence of the Court punishing the offenders or again, is it to restore the sentence originally passed?

10. Let us look at the question apart from the authorities. An appeal is a creature of a statute and the powers and jurisdiction of the appellate Court must be circumscribed by the words of the statute. At the same time a Court of appeal is a "Court of error" and its normal function is to correct the decision appealed from and its jurisdiction should be co-extensive with that of the trial Court. It cannot and ought not to do something which the trial Court was not competent to do. There does not seem to be any fetter to its power to do what the trial Court could do. In this case the trial Magistrate was competent to pass a sentence of imprisonment up to two years and the High Court's jurisdiction hearing an appeal would therefore be limited to a sentence up to that period and no more.

11. A special provision for asking the accused to show cause when the appeal is from an order of conviction or when the High Court exercises its revisional jurisdiction, is not in derogation of the above rule. As already indicated, when the accused prefers an appeal and the State is satisfied with the punishment meted out it is only logical to hold that the appellant should not stand in peril of something to his further detriment unless he is put on notice that the power of enhancement may be exercised. The same applies to the High Court's power of revision under Section 439. The Legislature felt that when the High Court is exercising powers in this regard, it should be given all the powers of a Court of appeal including the power to enhance the sentence. Sub-section (2) of Section 439 is only meant to give an opportunity to the accused so that he be not condemned unheard and sub-section (6) is only an amplification of that principle and gives him a right to challenge his conviction if he is put in peril of enhancement of sentence.

12. Where however the appeal is from an order of acquittal the matter is at large. There is no sentence which is binding on a person who was once an accused. He comes before the Court with the presumption of innocence. If the Court finds that the acquittal was not justified and that he was guilty of the offence with which he was charged, it is for the appeal Court to order punishment to fit the crime. If the appeal is from an order of acquittal with no prior order of sentence, the punishment must be commensurate with the gravity of the offence. But if the order of acquittal is preceded by an order of conviction the Court hearing the appeal from acquittal should not impose a sentence greater than what the Court of first instance could have imposed inasmuch as if the trial Court had given him the maximum sentence which it was competent to give and no appeal was preferred by the accused, the State could not have approached the High Court under any provision of the Code for enhancement of the sentence. The interposition of the order of an intermediate Court of appeal and acquittal of the accused by it should not put the accused in a predicament worse than that before the trial Court.

13. We may now proceed to examine the earlier authorities. In re Ramaswami Chetty, (1902) 2 Weir 487, the action of the appellate Magistrate enhancing a fine of Rs. 50 to Rs. 65 was held to be illegal by the Madras High Court. In Muthiah v. Emperor, (1906) ILR 29 Mad 190 = 3 Cri LJ 281 it was said that an appellate Court has not an unlimited power but was only empowered to do which the lower Court could and should have done. In Sita Ram v. Emperor, (1911) 11 Ind Cas 788 = 12 Cri LJ 444 (Nag) which went up to the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court by way of revision, the appellants had been convicted under S. 324, I. P. C. and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for a term of four months each by a Magistrate of the Second Class. On appeal the District Magistrate maintained the convictions but altered the sentences on each of the accused to one of fine only; and in default rigorous imprisonment was ordered for four months. Before the Judicial Commissioner it was contended that the sentence of fine imposed on the applicants was illegal so far as it exceeded the maximum fine which could have been inflicted by the Magistrate by whom they were tried. The Court held that when the District Magistrate decided that the case was one punishable with fine only he should have inflicted a fine which was within the jurisdiction of the trying Magistrate. The learned Judge relied on the decisions in Mahmudi Sheik v. Aji Sheik, (1894) ILR 21 Cal 622; (1906) ILR 29 Mad 190 = 3 Cri LJ 281 (supra), Parameswara Pillay v. Emperor, (1907) ILR 30 Mad 48 = 5 Cri LJ 88 and observed that alike in civil and in criminal cases the power of the appellate Court was measured by the power of the Court from whose judgment or order the appeal before it had been made.

14. The decisions in Maung E. Maung v. The King, AIR 1940 Rangoon 118; Emperor v. Md. Yakub Ali, (1923) ILR 45 All 594 = (AIR 1924 All 130), Lakshminarayana v. Apparao, AIR 1959 AP 530 and Emperor v. Abbas Ali, AIR 1935 Nag 139 are on the same lines. A different note was however struck in Public Prosecutor v. Annamalai, AIR 1955 Mad 608. This was a case of an appeal preferred by the State against the acquittal of two accused by a Magistrate. The High Court finding the accused guilty took the view that "passing sentence according to law" meant passing any sentence that could be given for the offence. According to the learned single Judge the powers of an appellate Court in hearing an appeal against acquittal were not in anyway restricted or limited to the powers of the trial Court. He said:

"Though there is no such limitation or restriction, still there is one circumstance which altogether cannot be ignored and which must indeed be considered before imposing the sentence and that is, what is it that the accused would have got if he was convicted by the Magistrate. He would not have got more than six months, the maximum the Second Class Magistrate who tried him can give.

The fact that he has been acquitted should not place him in a more disadvantageous position than if he were convicted. The sentence should not therefore be more severe than what he should have got in a case of conviction".

Accordingly the accused were sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment. In an earlier decision of the same High Court in re Tirumal Raju, AIR 1947 Mad 368 another learned single Judge though disposed to accept the contention that the appellate Magistrate had no jurisdiction to enhance the fine beyond the powers of trial Magistrate, maintained the order sought to be revised by exercising power under Section 439 (3) of the Code. Running through the web of the above decisions the principle almost universally accepted is that in exercise of its appellate powers the High Court should not award a sentence which is beyond the jurisdiction of the trial Court and in our opinion this is the principle which should be adopted.

15. Our attention was however drawn to certain observations in Jagat Bahadur Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (1966) 2 SCR 822 = (AIR 1966 SC 945), where a good many of the above authorities were taken note of by this Court. Referring inter alia to the cases of Mehi Singh v. Mangal Khandu, (1912) ILR 39 Cal 157 (FB), Emperor v. Muhammad Yakub Ali, (1923) ILR 45 All 594 = (AIR 1924 All 130) (supra), Maung E. Maung v. The King, AIR 1940 Rangoon 118 (supra) and In re, Tirumal Raju, AIR 1947 Mad 368 (supra) it was said that these cases laid down the correct law. The Court also added:

".....both on principle and authority it is clear that the power of the appellate Court to pass a sentence must be measured by the power of the Court from whose judgment an appeal has been brought before it".

16. The question is, can this observation be pressed into service by the appellants on the ground that as the Sessions Judge hearing the appeal from the order of the Magistrate could not have enhanced the sentence, it was not open to the High Court to do so when hearing an appeal from the order of acquittal by the Sessions Judge. In other words, could the High Court have done what the Sessions Judge was not empowered to do? In our opinion, the answer must be in the affirmative. When the order of the Magistrate was set aside by the Sessions Judge the matter became one at large and the High Court hearing an appeal therefrom was empowered under Section 423 (1) (a) to pass a sentence according to law. It could therefore pass any sentence which the Magistrate trying the case was empowered to pass and the High Court in this case did not exceed that limit. A strange result would follow if we were to accept the contention. If the accused had been acquitted by the Magistrate and the State had filed an appeal against the order of acquittal, the High Court would no doubt have power to impose any sentence, which the Magistrate would have been entitled to impose. But if the accused is acquitted on appeal by the Sessions Judge, the power of the High Court would be limited. Surely the Code does not contemplate this difference in the appeals under Section 417, Criminal P. C.

17. Further the Sessions Judge would have been entitled to recommend enhancement of sentence to the High Court if he had maintained the conviction. And the High Court could suo motu have issued notice for enhancement. If we were to accept the contention, finality is attached to the sentence given by the Magistrate. We do not think this is the scheme of the Code. On the other hand the scheme of the Code seems to be to confer final authority on the High Court. The first contention therefore fails and we hold that in disposing of an appeal from an order of acquittal the High Court is competent to pass a sentence which the trial Court was empowered to pass.

18. The second branch of the argument is without any merit. Where the accused is given notice of appeal and actually takes part in the hearing before the High Court, it would be superfluous to give him notice to show cause why a sentence within the competence of the trial Magistrate should not be passed. The accused knows or ought to know that the High Court was bound to form its own conclusions on the material before it and award a sentence which the merits of the case demanded within the limit of the trial Court's jurisdiction. The absence of a show cause notice does not violate any known principle of natural justice.

19. On the facts of the case, we are of the view that the sentence imposed by the High Court should be reduced to that originally imposed by the trial Magistrate. The appeal is allowed in part to this extent.

Appeal partly allowed.

The State of Gujarat, Appellant
v. Dr. Faghunath Balkrishna Chandrachud, Respondent.

Civil Appeal No. 579 of 1965, D/-
19-11-1968.

(A) Constitution of India, Art. 363
— Huzur order of Maharaja of Baroda granting pension and premature retirement compensation to civil servant of State after accession but before merger — By virtue of Clause 2 of Article VIII of Merger Agreement, Successor Government is bound by the order — Forfeiture of compensation paid — Compensation cannot be recovered under Section 143, Baroda Land Revenue Code — Words 'pension' in Clause (a) of Article VIII must have wide interpretation so as to include lump sum payable as compensation upon retirement.

Held, Executive Council Rules made by the Maharaja of Baroda on September 16, 1948 (before the State's merger, on March 21, 1949 but after the accession to Dominion of India on August 15, 1947) vested in the Executive Council the entire executive authority in regard to the administration of the Baroda State in all matters without any reservation. The prerogative and inherent powers of the Maharaja were not delegated to the Executive Council. The Maharaja was still the sovereign-ruler. The Huzur order giving compensation to the respondent on account of his premature retirement, was passed by the Maharaja on February 8, 1948 in the exercise of his prerogative and inherent powers. The order was executed and the monies were paid under it to the respondent. The Executive

DN/EN/G170/68/RGD/M

Council had no authority to revoke the Huzur order and to forfeit the monies. The order of the Executive Council dated April 22, 1949 forfeiting the monies so paid was ultra vires its powers and was illegal and not binding upon the respondent.

(Paras 5, 6)

The direction in the order for the recovery of monies under Section 148 of the Baroda Land Revenue Code was illegal. That section did not allow recovery of moneys payable under an order of the Executive Council. The recovery from the respondent under the invalid order of the Executive Council could not be justified as an act of State. The result of the illegal recovery was that to the extent of amount sanctioned as compensation the liability of the Baroda Government under the Huzur Order remained outstanding.

(Para 6)

In cases where the Government of India has acquired the territory of a sovereign Indian State either by conquest, treaty, cession or otherwise the privileges and rights obtained from the predecessor State cannot be enforced by action against the Government of India, unless it has chosen to recognise the right, privilege, debt or liability by legislation, agreement, or otherwise. The rule extends to the acts of the predecessor State after its accession to the Dominion of India on August 15, 1947 and before its complete merger in the Dominion. Case law Ref.

(Para 7)

The onus of proving that the successor governments recognized the rights and liabilities under the Huzur order dated February 8, 1948 is upon the respondent. The recognition may be either express or may be implied from circumstances and evidence appearing from the mode of dealing with those rights of the new sovereign. AIR 1924 P. C. 216 and AIR 1964 S. C. 1043, Ref.

(Para 8)

The Huzur Order dated February 8, 1948 was not law. A grant made by the Ruler of Indian State is not law. The Huzur order dated February 8, 1948 did not lay down a rule of conduct for the official members of the Executive Council generally. It fixed the retirement benefits of the respondent. The order was an executive act and had none of the characteristics of law. Case law Ref.

(Para 9)

Clause 2 of Art. VIII of the Merger Agreement dated March 21, 1949, which applied to the respondent who was a member of the public services of the Baroda State and who retired before the merger guaranteed continuance of the pension and leave salary sanctioned to him by the Maharaja. Ordinarily the word "pension" means a periodical allowance of money granted by the Government in consideration or recognition of meritorious services.

(Para 10)

But the word "pension" (pensionem, payment) in its widest etymological sense can be construed as including all payments of every kind and description to a retiring government servant.

(Para 10)

Considering that the object of Article VIII was to guarantee payment of retirement benefits to retired public servants of the merged State, the word "pensions" should not be given a narrow interpretation. The word "pensions" in clause 2 of Article VIII included the lump sum payable to the respondent as compensation under the Huzur order dated February 8, 1948 as modified by the Huzur order dated July 22, 1948. In substance, the Huzur order directed that the respondent would get his full salary as his pension from the date of his premature retirement up to the completion of his superannuation age and allowed him to draw immediately the entire allowance for the period in one lump sum. The allowance so payable to the respondent, in recognition of his past services was "pension" within the meaning of cl. 2 of Article VIII of the Merger Agreement.

(Para 11)

Article VIII of the Merger Agreement thus furnished strong evidence of recognition by the Government of India of the liability to pay retirement compensation under the Huzur Order dated February 8, 1948. In the circumstances it must be held that the successor governments recognized and took over the liability under the Huzur Order dated February 8, 1948. If so the liability now devolved on the State of Gujarat.

(Para 12)

(B) Baroda Land Revenue Code, Section 148 — Section does not allow recovery of monies paid under orders of Executive Council of State — Order passed by Maharaja in exercise of his prerogative and inherent powers — Monies paid under the order cannot be recovered under S. 148.

(Para 6)

(C) Pensions Act (1871), S. 1 — Word 'pension' implies periodical payments to pensioner — In wider sense, in which it is used in cl. 2 of Art. VIII of the Baroda State Merger Agreement dated March 21, 1949, it means lump sum paid as retirement benefit to civil servant upon his retirement.

Advocates, with him), for Appellant; Mr. S. T. Desai, Sr. Advocate (Dr. Y. S. Chitale and D. N. Misra, Advocates, and M/s. J. B. Dadachanji and Co., Advocates, with him), for Respondent.

The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

BACHAWAT, J.: — In January, 1948 in view of the imminent constitutional changes in the Baroda State, it was considered likely that the services of the Diwan Sri Sudhalkar, the appellant and Sri Gaekwad, three official members of the Executive Council of the State would be prematurely terminated. The respondent was then drawing a salary of Rs. 2000 per month and was to retire on February 14, 1952 on reaching the superannuation age of 56 years. On January 28, 1948, His Highness the Maharaja of Baroda enhanced the respondents salary to Rs. 2500/- per month. By separate orders the salaries of other official members also were enhanced. By a Huzur order dated February 8, 1948 the Maharaja fixed the pension and other retirement benefits of the respondent and Sri Gaekwad.

2. The order was in these terms:—

"His Highness the Maharaja Sahab has been pleased to order that in the event of premature retirement of the Government Members, Messrs. D. V. Gaekwad and Chandrachud, they will get forthwith as compensation an amount equivalent to the total amount they would have received had they continued in service upto the date of retirement and a full pension of Rs. 500/- per month from the date of the premature retirement.

2. Mr. D. V. Gaekwad's salary is raised to Rs. 2000/- from the date of his confirmation as Naib Dewan".

On the same date the Maharaja by a separate order fixed the pension and retirement benefits of Sri Sudhalkar. On May 18, 1948, the Maharaja directed the compulsory retirement of the respondent with effect from June 1, 1948. Soon thereafter the respondent drew from the State Treasury Rs. 95196/4/- on account of compensation allowance. On June 1, 1948 he retired from service. On the same date Dr. Jivraj Mehta became the Diwan and President of the Executive Council in place of Sri Sudhalkar. On the representation of Dr. Jivraj Mehta the Maharaja passed another Huzur order on July 22, 1948 modifying his previous orders and directing that the respondent and the other officials would draw pension only as and when they would reach the age of retirement and that the respondent would in addition draw the salary to which he might be eligible under the account Rules. In October, 1948 there was correspondence touching the Huzur Orders between the Maharaja and Dr. Jivraj Mehta. On April 22, 1949 the Executive Council of the State of Baroda headed by Dr. Jivraj Mehta purported to review and set aside the Huzur Orders with respect to payment of compensation to the retiring officials and directed that (1) the respondent would get 4 months' privilege leave salary and as from April 1, 1949 the pension of Rs. 500/- per month sanctioned by the Maharaja, (2) the amount received by the respondent as compensation be forfeited to the State and returned by him to the Treasury; (3) Rs. 77,416/- consequently due from him after taking into account his salary and pension up to March 31, 1949 be recovered from him under Section 148 of the Baroda Land Revenue Code. Pursuant to this order the respondent's properties were attached on April 26, 1949. The respondent was compelled to refund to the State Treasury Rs. 55,000/- on April 27, 1949 and Rs. 10,000/- on April 29, 1949. On March 14, 1952 the Collector of Baroda sent a notice to the respondent demanding payment of the balance of Rs. 12,416/-. The respondent continued to draw pension at the rate of Rs. 500/- per month from April 1, 1949. On April 17, 1952, he gave notice of his intention to file the present suit under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On June 23, 1952 he instituted the suit against the State of Bombay asking for a declaration that the Huzur order dated February 8, 1948 as modified by the Huzur order dated July 22, 1948 was valid and binding on the defendant, a declaration that the order of the Executive Council dated April 22, 1949 was invalid, an injunction restraining the defendant from recovering Rupees 12416/- and a decree for Rs. 65,000/-, and interest thereon totalling Rupees 77,300/-, future interest and costs. On August 31, 1955, the Trial Court decreed the suit. On appeal, the High Court held that the respondent was entitled to recover Rs. 65000/- only without interest and was liable to refund Rs. 17,250/- drawn on account of pension from April 1, 1949 upto February 14, 1952. Consequently, the High Court reduced the money decree to Rs. 47,750/- gave proportionate costs and confirmed the rest of the decree. The present appeal has been filed by the State of Gujarat after obtaining a certificate from the High Court.

3. It is necessary at this stage to refer to the constitutional and political changes culminating in the merger of Baroda State in the Province of Bombay. The Maharaja of Baroda enjoyed internal sovereignty in the State under the suzerainty of the British Crown. In 1940 the Maharaja enacted the Government of Baroda Act, 1940 (Act No. VI of 1940). Section 3 provided that Baroda would continue to be governed by the Maharaja and that all rights, authority and jurisdiction appertaining to its Government was exercisable by him except as provided in the Act or "as may be otherwise directed by his Highness". Section 4 preserved all the Maharaja's powers, legislative, executive and judicial, in relation to the State and its Government and his right and prerogative to make laws, and issue proclamations, orders and ordinances by virtue of his inherent authority. Section 5 vested the executive authority of the State in an Executive Council consisting of the Dewan and other members chosen by the Maharaja and holding office during his pleasure subject to the other provisions of the Act and the directions given by the Maharaja. Section 18 (d) provided that no Bill affecting any order passed by the Maharaja in exercise of his prerogative could be moved in the Dhara Sabha without the previous sanction of the Maharaja. Section 32 (f) provided that pensions and gratuities sanctioned by the Maharaja would be expenditure charged on the revenues of the State. On August 15, 1947 the Indian Independence Act 1947 was passed and the paramountcy of the British Crown lapsed. On the same date the State of Baroda acceded to the Dominion of India. Under the Instrument of Accession the Maharaja of Baroda ceded to the Dominion Legislature the power to legislate for the State of Baroda with respect to defence, external affairs and communications. The advent of independence in India gave momentum to the popular movement for transfer of power from the Maharaja to the people and for formation of a responsible government in the State. On January 9, 1948 the Maharaja issued a proclamation directing the formation of a body elected on the basis of adult franchise to frame a Constitution for the State subject to certain reservations and announcing his intention to appoint popular representatives to the Executive Council. By another proclamation dated August 25, 1948 the Maharaja announced that (1) the Constitution framing assembly would have full and unrestricted authority to frame a Constitution for the State in respect of all matters and subjects; (2) the entire executive authority of the State would immediately vest in the Executive Council, the Government of Baroda Act would stand amended accordingly and the words "or as may be otherwise directed by His Highness" occurring in Section 3 and the whole of Section 4 of the Act would be deemed to be omitted. On September 16, 1948 the Maharaja promulgated the Baroda State Executive Rules. Rule 6 provided that "the Executive Council shall have the entire executive authority in regard to the administration of the State in all matters without any reservation". On March 21, 1949 the Maharaja executed the Baroda Merger Agreement whereby he ceded to the Dominion Government full authority, jurisdiction and powers for and in relation to the governance of the State and agreed to transfer the administration of the State to the Dominion Government on May 1, 1949. On May 1, 1949 the administration of the State was made over to the Dominion Government. As from that date all sovereign powers of the Maharaja of Baroda ceased and the Dominion Government acquired full and exclusive extra provincial jurisdiction for and in relation to the governance of the State of Baroda. By a notification No. 101-P, dated May 1, 1949 the Central Government in exercise of its powers under Section 3 (2) of the Extra-provincial Jurisdiction Act, 1947 delegated to the Provincial Government of Bombay its aforesaid extra provincial jurisdiction including the powers conferred by Section 4 of that Act to make orders for the exercise of the jurisdiction. By notification

No. 4530/46F of the same date the Government of Bombay in exercise of the powers conferred by Section 4 of the Extra-Provincial Jurisdiction Act, 1947 repealed the provisions of the Government of Baroda Act excepting Sections 1, 2 and 36 to 45 with immediate effect. On the same date the Government of Bombay promulgated the Administration of the Baroda State Order. Paragraph 3 of the order vested the executive authority of the State in a special commissioner subject to the supervision and control of the Bombay Government. Paragraph 4 (i) (b) provided for the continuance of (a) of any law, or (b) of any notification, order, scheme, rule, form or bye-law issued, made or prescribed under any law as were in force immediately before May 1, 1949 in the Baroda State. On July 23, 1949 the Government of Bombay promulgated the Bombay State (Application of Laws) Order, 1949. Paragraph 3 of the Order provided for the extension and continuance of certain laws to the Baroda States. Paragraph 5 repealed Sections 1, 2 and 36 to 45 of the Government of Baroda Act and certain other enactments. Paragraph 5 (iii) (a) provided that the repeal would not affect any right, title, obligation or liability already acquired, accrued or incurred, or any remedy or proceeding in respect thereof. On July 27, 1949 the Governor-General in exercise of his powers under Sec. 290A of the Government of India Act, 1935 promulgated the States' Merger (Governor's Provinces) Order, 1949. Paragraph 3 of the Order provided that Baroda would be merged in the province of Bombay and administered in all respects as if it formed part of that Province. Paragraph 4 provided for the continuance of laws then in force in the merged State. Paragraph 7 (1) provided that all liabilities in respect of such loans, guarantees and other financial obligations of the Dominion Government as arose out of the governance of a merged State, would as from August 1, 1949 be liabilities of the absorbing Province, unless the loan, guarantee or other financial obligation was relatable to central purposes. Paragraph 9 provided that any proceedings which if the order had not been passed might lawfully have been brought in the merged State against the Dominion might in the case of any liability arising before August 1, 1949 be brought (a) against the Dominion if the proceedings could have been brought against the Dominion had the liability arisen after that date and (b) otherwise against the absorbing Province.

4. The questions arising for determination in this appeal are as follows:—

(1) Was the order of the Executive Council dated April 22, 1949 ultra vires its powers and invalid and not binding on the respondent; (2) Was the Government of Baroda liable to pay the sum of Rs. 65,000/- to the respondent; and (3) if so, has the liability devolved upon the State of Gujarat.

5. The Executive Council Rules made by the Maharaja of Baroda on September 16, 1948 vested, in the Executive Council the entire executive authority in regard to the administration of the Baroda State in all matters without any reservation. The Executive Council had very wide powers, but, in our opinion, they had no authority to override and rescind the Huzur orders passed by the Maharaja himself. The prerogative and inherent powers of the Maharaja were not delegated to the Executive Council. The Maharaja was still the sovereign-ruler. The members of the Executive Council were responsible to him and held office during his pleasure. No appeal lay from his order to the Executive Council. On the contrary under R. 46 of the Privy Council Rules promulgated on December 18, 1947 an appeal lay to the Maharaja from an order passed by the Executive Council. In view of Section 18 (d) of the Baroda Constitution Act, 1940 even a legislative bill affecting an order passed by the Maharaja in the exercise of his prerogative rights could not be moved in the Dhara Sabha without his previous sanction. Under Section 32 (f) pensions and gratuities sanctioned by the Maharaja were charged on the revenues of the State. The Huzur order was passed by the Maharaja on February 8, 1948 in the exercise of his prerogative and inherent powers. The order was executed and the monies were paid under it to the respondent. The Executive Council had no authority to revoke the Huzur order and to forfeit the monies. We hold that the order of the Executive Council dated April 22, 1949 was ultra vires its powers and was illegal and not binding upon the respondent.

6. It is now conceded that the direction in the order dated April 22, 1949 for the recovery of the monies under Section 148 of the Baroda Land Revenue Code was illegal. That section did not allow recovery of moneys payable under an order of the Executive Council. The attachment levied on the respondent's properties was unlawful. The recovery of Rs. 65,000/- from the respondent under the invalid order of the Executive Council cannot be justified as an act of State. The Courts below rightly found that the respondent was compelled to pay Rs. 65,000/- under coercion. The result of the illegal recovery was that to the extent of Rs. 65,000/- the liability of the Baroda Government under the Huzur Order dated February 8, 1948 remained outstanding.

7. The main question arising in the appeal is whether the liability of the Baroda Government under the Huzur order dated February 8, 1948 devolved upon the successor Governments after the merger of the Baroda State on May 1, 1949. The view which currently prevails in this Court is that in cases where the Government of India has acquired the territory of a sovereign Indian State either by conquest, treaty, cession or otherwise the privileges and rights obtained from the predecessor State cannot be enforced by action against the Government of India, see M/s. Dalmia Dadri Cement Co. v. Commr. of Income-tax, 1959 SCR 729 = (AIR 1958 SC 816) (cession of Jind), Pema Chibar v. Union of India, (1966) 1 SCR 357 = (AIR 1966 SC 442) (conquest of Duman), nor can it be sued in the municipal Courts for the debts and contractual liabilities of the predecessor, see Jagannath Agarwala v. State of Orissa, (1962) 1 SCR 205 = (AIR 1961 SC 1361). (Cession of Mayurbhanj), Firm Bansidhar Premshukhdeo v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1967 SC 40 (Bharatpur), unless it has chosen, to recognise the right, privilege, debt or liability by legislation, agreement, or otherwise. The rule extends to the acts of the predecessor State after its accession to the Dominion of India on August 15, 1947 and before its complete merger in the Dominion. In State of Gujarat v. Fiddali, (1964) 6 SCR 461 = (AIR 1964 SC 1043) the Ruler of Sant State issued a resolution or Tharao granting certain forest rights on March 12, 1948 after the accession of the State to the Dominion. On June 10, 1948 he transferred the administration of the State to the Dominion under a merger agreement dated March 19, 1948. The Court held that the Tharao was not binding upon the successor Government. It was said that the Rulers of the Indian States parted with their sovereignty in successive stages, firstly on accession, and finally on merger. As a result of accession, the Dominion of India acquired power to legislate for the territories of the acceding State in respect of defence, external affairs, and communications. Under Section 5 of the Indian Independence Act the Dominion was as from August 15, 1947 a Union comprising the acceding State. But the acceding State continued to retain its separate existence and individual sovereignty until its complete merger in the Dominion.

8. The question then is whether the successor Governments recognized the rights and liabilities under the Huzur order dated February 8, 1948. The onus of proving the recognition is upon the respondent see Vajesingji Joravarsingji v. Secy. of State for India, 51 Ind App 357 at p. 361 = (AIR 1924 PC 216 at p. 218). The recognition "may be either express or may be implied from circumstances and evidence appearing from the mode of dealing with those rights of the new sovereign", see (1964) 6 SCR 461 = (AIR 1964 SC 1043) (supra) at p. 510 (of SCR) = (at p. 1062 of AIR).

9. On behalf of the respondent it was argued that the Huzur Order dated February 8, 1948, was a law and as such was recognised and continued in force by the Government of India. We are unable to accept this contention. A grant made by the Ruler of an Indian State is not a law, see State of Gujarat v. Fiddali, (supra) (461 of SCR) = (1043 of AIR) (grant of forest rights), R. N. Pratap Singh Deo v. State of Orissa, (1964) 7 SCR 112 = (AIR 1964 SC 1793) (grant of khorposh allowance), Union of India v. Gwalior Rayon Silk Manufacturing (Weaving) Co., (1964) 7 SCR 892 = (AIR 1964 SC 1903) (grant of exemption from taxation), State of Madhya Pradesh v. Lal Bhargavendra Singh, (1966) 2 SCR 56 = (AIR 1966 SC 704) (grant of maintenance allowance), nor is an agreement executed by the Ruler a law, see Maharaja Shri Umaid Mills Ltd. v. Union of India, (1963) Supp 2 SCR 515 = (AIR 1963 SC 953). Accordingly, it was held in State of Madhya Pradesh v. Ram Pal, (1966) 2 SCR 53 = (AIR 1966 SC 820) that an order granting retirement pension in relaxation of the State Pension and Gratuity Rules was not a law. The Huzur order dated February 8, 1948 did not lay down a rule of conduct for the official members of the Executive Council generally. It fixed the retirement benefits of the respondent and of Gaekwad and enhanced Gaekwad's salary. A separate order fixed the retirement benefits of Sudhalkar, the other official member. The order concerning the respondent was an executive act and had none of the characteristics of law. Unlike other laws it was not published in the Adnya Patrika or the official gazette of Baroda State. We hold that the order was not a law.

10. The next question is whether the Baroda merger agreement dated March 21, 1949 recognised the rights and liabilities under the Huzur Order dated February 8, 1948. Now the Articles of the merger agreement may furnish valuable evidence of the affirmation of rights conferred by the predecessor State, see 1959 SCR 729 = (AIR 1958 SC 816) (supra) at p. 748 (of SCR) = (at p. 826 of AIR). In the State of M. P. v. Shyam Lal a recognition of those rights was inferred from article in merger agreements providing for the continuance of the laws of the merging State and for the taking over its assets and liabilities by the new State. In the present case Article VIII of the merger agreement dated March 21, 1951 provided:—

(1) The Government of India hereby guarantees either the continuance in service of the permanent members of the Public Services of Baroda on conditions which will not be less advantageous than those on which they were serving before the date on which the administration of Baroda is made over to the Government of India or the payment of reasonable compensation.

(2) The Government of India further guarantees the continuance of pensions and leave salaries sanctioned by His Highness the Maharaja to the members of its public services of the State who have retired or proceeded on leave preparatory to retirement, before the date on which the administration of Baroda is made over to the Government of India.

Clause (2) of Article VIII applies to the respondent. He was a member of the public services of the Baroda State and he retired before the date of the merger. It guarantees the continuance of the pension and leave salary sanctioned to him by the Maharaja. Now what does the word "pension" in Cl. (2) of Art. VIII mean? Ordinarily the word "pension" means a periodical allowance of money granted by the Government in consideration or recognition of meritorious services. The word "pension" in the Pensions Act, 1871, Section 60 (1) (g) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 and Section 6 (g) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 implies periodical payments of money by Government to the pensioner, see Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Karnani Industrial Bank Ltd., (1931) 58 Ind App 215 at pp. 219-20 = (AIR 1931 PC 160 at p. 161). Pension, gratuity and provident fund are three distinct types of retirement benefits. But the word "pension" (pensionem payment) in its widest etymological sense can be construed as including all payments of every kind and description to a retiring Government servant, see Secy. of State v. Khemchand Jeychand, (1880) ILR 4 Bom 432 at p. 436. The term "pension" is frequently, particularly in recent years, used in the broad sense of retirement allowance or adjusted compensation for services rendered, see Corpus Juris Secundum, Vol. 67 Page 331, Vol. 70, page 425. It has received the wider connotation in the definition sections of many modern statutes. To give a few illustration, the word "pension" includes "any payment of a lump sum in respect of a person's employment", see Fatal Accidents Act, 1959 (7 and 8 Elis, 2 c, 65), Section 2 (2), "a superannuation allowance", see Midwives Act, 1936 (26 Geo. 5 and 1 Edw. 8 c. 40), Section 2 (6) a "gratuity" and a return of contributions to a pension fund with or without interest thereon or any other addition thereto, see Transport Act, 1947, (10 and 11 Geo. 6 c. 49), Section 125 (1), Gas Act, 1948 (11 and 12 Geo. 6 c. 67), Section 74 (1).

11. Now Clause (1) of Article VIII of the merger agreement guarantees payment of reasonable compensation to officials whose services are dispensed with by the new Government. Clause 2 guarantees the continuance of pensions and leave salaries sanctioned by the Maharaja to officers who had retired before the date of the merger. Considering that the object of Article VIII is to guarantee payment of retirement benefits to retired public servants of the merged State, we are not inclined to give the word "pensions" a narrow interpretation. In our opinion, the word "pensions" in Clause 2 of Article VIII includes the lump sum payable to the respondent as compensation under the Huzur order dated February 8, 1948 as modified by the Huzur order dated July 22, 1948. In substance, the Huzur order directed that the respondent would get his full salary as his pension from the date of his premature retirement up to the completion of his superannuation age and allowed him to draw immediately the entire allowance for the period in one lump sum. The allowance so payable to the respondent, a retiring Government servant, in recognition of his past services is "pension" within the meaning of Clause 2 of Article VIII of the merger agreement.

12. Article VIII of the merger agreement thus furnishes strong evidence of recognition by the Government of India of the liability to pay retirement compensation under the Huzur order dated February 8, 1948. We have also noticed that the successor Governments continued the old laws of the Baroda State until they were repealed or altered. The successor Governments resisted the respondent's claim on the ground that the order of forfeiture passed by the Executive Council on April 22, 1949 was lawful. There was no question of their disclaiming liability under the Huzur order of February 8, 1948 in case it was found that the order of the Executive Council dated April 22, 1949 was invalid. In the circumstances, we hold that the successor Governments recognized and took over the liability under the Huzur order dated February 8, 1948. If so, it is not disputed that the liability has now devolved on the State of Gujarat. It follows that the Courts below rightly decreed the suit.

13. This conclusion is sufficient to dispose of the appeal and we express no opinion whether the liability was also recognized by paragraph 4 (1) (b) of the Administration of Baroda

State Order, paragraph 5 (iii) (a) of the Baroda State (Application of Laws) Order, 1949 or paragraph 7 (1) of the States' Merger (Governors Provinces) Order, 1949.

14. In the result, the appeal is dismissed. There will be no order as to costs in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Appeals Nos. 235 and 236 of 1967, D/- 23-4-1970.

Income-tax Act (1922), Section 27 — Scope — Multiple defaults — Assessee must show cause for each default — (1966) 2 Mys LJ 180, Reversed.

The clear import of Section 23 (4) is that on committing any one of the defaults mentioned therein the Income-tax Officer is bound to make the assessment to the best of his judgment. Although the word "or" which is disjunctive is used in Section 27 it has to be read in a reasonable and harmonious way and in conjunction with Section 23 (4). In case of multiple defaults, for each one of which an ex parte best judgment assessment has to be made under Section 23 (4), the assessee cannot ask for cancellation of the assessment by merely showing cause for one of such defaults. The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by GROVER, J.: — These appeals by certificate arise out of a common judgment of the Mysore High Court in references made with regard to the assessments relating to the assessment years 1953-54 and 1954-55.

2. For the assessment year 1953-54 the assessee was served with a notice under Section 22 (2) of the Income-tax Act, 1922, hereinafter called the "Act", on March 5, 1954. A similar notice was served in respect of the assessment year 1954-55 on June 5, 1954. The assessee failed to file any return in compliance with the notices. Thereupon he was served with notices under Section 22 (4) for both the assessment years and was required to produce accounts on specified dates. None appeared on any one of those dates but applications were submitted praying for adjournment on certain grounds. The Income-tax Officer was not satisfied with the reasons given for seeking adjournments and he proceeded to make the assessment under Section 23 (4) of the Act. The assessee moved the Income-tax Officer under Section 27 to reopen the assessments on the grounds given in the applications filed in that behalf. The Income-tax Officer appeared to be satisfied that there was sufficient cause for non-compliance with the notices issued under Section 22 (4) of the Act but he was of the view that the assessee had been a habitual defaulter inasmuch as he had not submitted the return under Section 22 (2) even for several preceding years for which the assessments had to be completed under Section 23 (4) of the Act. He declined to reopen the assessment under Section 27. Appeals to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner were filed. According to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner sufficient cause for non-compliance with one of the statutory notices, i. e., the notice under Section 22 (4) could not constitute sufficient cause for non-compliance with any other statutory notice [in this case the notice under Section 22 (2)]. The appellate tribunal dismissed the appeals filed by the assessee upholding the view of the departmental authorities.

3. On the tribunal having declined to refer the questions of law which were sought to be referred the High Court directed the Tribunal to state a case and refer the following questions of law:

"Whether the Income-tax Officer having recorded a finding that there was sufficient cause for non-compliance with the notice issued under Section 22 (4), was not bound to cancel the assessment made under Section 23 (4) and to proceed to make a fresh assessment even though there was no sufficient cause for non-compliance with the notice under Section 22 (2)?" The High Court answered the question in favour of the assessee. Section 27 of the Act is in the following terms:

S. 27. "Cancellation of assessment when cause is shown. — Where an assessee within one month from the service of a notice of demand issued as hereinafter provided, satisfies the Income-tax Officer that he was prevented by sufficient cause from making the return required by Section 22, or that he did not receive the notice issued under sub-section (4) of Section 22, or sub-section (2) of Sec. 23, or that he had not a reasonable opportunity to comply, or was prevented by sufficient cause from complying with the terms of the last mentioned notices, the Income-tax Officer shall cancel the assessment and proceed to make a fresh assessment in accordance with the provisions of Section 23".

Section 22 provides for return of income. Sub-section (1) relates to a general notice to be given each year by the Income-tax Officer by publication in the Press or in the prescribed manner. Sub-section (2) relates to an individual notice. According to sub-section (4) the Income-tax Officer may serve on any person who has made a return under sub-section (1) or upon whom a notice has been served under sub-section (2) a notice requiring him on a date to be specified to produce or cause to be produced such account or documents as the Income-tax Officer may require or to furnish in writing and verified in the prescribed manner in such form and on such points or matters as may be required for the purpose of the section including, with the previous approval of the Commissioner, a statement of assets and liabilities not included in the accounts. Under Section 23 if the Income-tax Officer is satisfied without requiring the presence of the assessee or the production by him of any evidence that a return made under Section 22 is correct and complete he has to assess the total income of the assessee on the basis of the return filed by him [sub-section (1)]. If he is not so satisfied he must serve a notice requiring the person who has made the return to attend at his office or to produce or cause to be produced any evidence on which such person may rely in support of his return [sub-section (2)]. Under sub-section (3) the Income-tax Officer after hearing such evidence as may be produced by the person making the return in response to the notice issued under sub-section (2) or such other evidence as the Income-tax Officer may require to be produced on specified points has to assess the total income of the assessee. It is provided by sub-section (4):

"If any person fails to make the return required by any notice given under sub-section (2) of Section 22 and has not made a return or a revised return under sub-section (3) of the same section or fails to comply with all the terms of a notice issued under sub-section (4) of the same section or, having made a return, fails to comply with all the terms of a notice issued under sub-section (2) of this section, the Income-tax Officer shall make the assessment to the best of his judgment and determine the sum payable by the assessee on the basis of such assessment....."

4. The High Court considered that the provisions of Section 27 were not cumulative but disjunctive and so the assessee could claim cancellation of the assessment on one of the grounds on which such cancellation could be sought under the section. According to the High Court it followed that even if there was no sufficient cause for non-compliance with a notice issued under Section 22 (2) so long as there was sufficient reason for non-compliance with the notice issued under Section 22 (4) the assessee could ask for the cancellation of the assessment. In our judgment the view of the High Court cannot be sustained. The clear import of Section 23 (4) is that on committing any one of the defaults mentioned therein the Income Tax Officer is bound to make the assessment to the best of his judgment. In other words if a person fails to make the return required by a notice under Section 22 (2) and he has further not made a return or a revised return under sub-section (3) of the same section the Income-tax Officer must make an assessment under Section 23 (4). Similarly, if that person fails to comply with all the terms of the notice issued under Section 22 (4) or if he fails to comply with all the terms of the notice issued under Section 23 (2) the Income-tax Officer must proceed to make an assessment to the best of his judgment. Section 27 empowers the Income-tax Officer to cancel the assessment when sufficient cause is shown but such cause has to be shown for each default. For the sake of illustration, if an assessee makes a default under Section 22 (2) by not filing a return pursuant to a notice received under that section and he also does not comply with the notice under Section 22 (4) he must show sufficient cause for non-compliance with both the provisions and he cannot get the assessment cancelled merely by showing good cause for one of the two defaults. Although the word "or" which is disjunctive is used in Section 27 it has to be read in a reasonable and harmonious way and in conjunction with Section 23 (4). It is inconceivable that the legislature could have even intended that in case of multiple defaults for each one of which an ex parte best judgment assessment has to be made the assessee can ask for cancellation of the assessment by merely showing cause for one of such defaults. In our opinion the Bombay High Court in Chiranjilal Tibrewala v. Commr. of Income-tax, Bombay City II, (1966) 59 ITR 42 (Bom) was right in holding that in the circumstances similar to the present case the assessee cannot ask for cancellation under S. 27 of an assessment made under Section 23 (4). In this view of the matter the judgment of the High Court has to be set aside, and the question has to be answered against the assessee and in favour of the appellant.

5. The appeals are accordingly allowed with costs. One hearing fee.

Appeals allowed.

Civil Appeal No. 1738 of 1969, D/- 18-12-1970.

(A) Representation of the People Act (1951), Section 99 (1) — Corrupt practice petition — Non-party must be given opportunity to show cause why he should not be named.

A person cannot be named guilty of corrupt practice unless he has been given notice to show cause why he should not be named and has opportunity of cross-examining witness already examined against him, and further for calling his defence evidence for being heard. (Para 6)

(B) Constitution of India, Art. 136 — Supreme Court in appeal will not normally re-appraise evidence for acquittal of corrupt practice.

The reluctance is born of the quasi criminal nature of proceedings Supreme Court therefore does not normally proceed to reappraise the evidence, unless the High Court has misconceived the evidence or the conclusion is basically faulty or perverse, or where the procedure adopted entails miscarriage of justice or there are similar reasons. (Paras 7, 19)

(C) Press and Registration of Books Act (1867), Section 7 — Force of presumption under Section 7 in a charge under Section 123 (4) of the Representation of the People Act would differ with circumstances.

(Para 11)

(D) Press and Registration of Books Act (1867), Section 19-D (b) — The annual report published by the Press Registrar containing the name of a person as editor of a newspaper being only for the information of the Government and not made under any statutory provision cannot displace the effect of the return published under Section 19-D (b) containing not the name of such person but some other person. The following Judgment of the Court was delivered by

SHAH, C. J.: — In compliance with our Order D/- 13-3-1970* the High Court issued a notice to Shukla. Shukla submitted his reply contending, inter alia, that he did not publish or cause to be published the offending statements in the newspaper Mahakoshal as alleged by Sharma. In paragraph 1
(ii) he submitted that:

"He learnt about their publication only after and during the pendency of the election petition for declaration of the election of Shri D. P. Mishra as void. The person in sole charge of the newspaper was Shri Vishnudatta Mishra 'Tarangi' whose name has been printed as the Editor. The declaration under Rule 8, Form VI prescribed under the Press and Registration of Books Act (No. XXV of 1867) for the year 1963 shows that the said Shri Vishnudatta Mishra 'Tarangi' and not the opposite party (Shukla) was the editor at the material time. x x x x
At the time of his appointment the said Shri Vishnudatta Mishra 'Tarangi' had insisted that there would be no interference by the opposite party (Shukla) in the conduct of the newspaper".

*Reported in AIR 1970 SC 1477.

2. Several witnesses were examined before the High Court in support of the case that Shukla was instrumental in publishing and distributing the offending statements
Annexures I, II and III in the daily newspaper Mahakoshal of which Shukla was the editor, printer and publisher. Some witnesses who had been previously examined were recalled for examination. Shukla and Tarangi were also examined at the hearing.

3. At the hearing of the appeal and in the proceedings for naming Shukla, Sharma the petitioner who instituted the election petition took no interest. But two persons who were permitted to intervene in the proceeding took upon themselves the defence of the appeal and also to prosecute the proceeding after it stood remanded to the High Court.

4. The interveners submitted that Shukla had published the offending matter contained in Annexures I, II and III. They said that — (1) D. P.
Mishra prepared the offending matter, read it over to Shukla and handed it over to him for publication and the same was published in the Mahakoshal and was widely distributed; (2) the copies of the newspaper containing the offending matter were personally distributed by Shukla; and (3) Shukla was the printer, publisher and editor of the newspaper and was the owner of the Printing Press in which the copies of the newspaper were printed, that he was attending to the publication of the newspaper and copies of the newspaper were supplied to him and that Tarangi had nothing whatever to do with the publication of the newspaper "Mahakoshal" at the relevant time.

5. The High Court on a review of the evidence was of the opinion that the case under the first and the second heads in support of the plea of the intervenors was not proved. The High Court also held that even though the name of Shukla was printed in the newspaper 'Mahakoshal' as the Chief Editor and that fact was printed in the report of the Press Registrar published for the information of the Government showing that Shukla was, between the years 1962 and 1965, the publisher, printer and editor of Mahakoshal, Shukla had in June 1962 appointed Tarangi as editor of Mahakoshal, that Tarangi was in exclusive charge of the publication; that Shukla was not at the relevant time when the offending matter was published attending to the publication of Mahakoshal; that Shukla had no knowledge of the publication of the offending matter till it was brought to his notice in the course of the election petition; that Shukla was not proved to be the agent of Mishra and that even if it be held that he was the agent of Mishra, it was not proved that Mishra had given his consent to the publication of the offending matter in the Mahakoshal.

6. Section 123 (4) of the Representation of the People Act, 1951 provides:

"The publication by a candidate or his agent or by any other person, of any statement of fact which is false, and which he either believes to be false or does not believe to be true, in relation to the personal character or conduct of any candidate, or in relation to the candidature, or withdrawal, or retirement from contest, of any candidate, being a statement reasonably calculated to prejudice the prospects of that candidate's election"; is a corrupt practice. Section 99 (1) requires the Tribunal in making an order under Section 98 to record the names of all persons, if any, who are proved at the trial to have been guilty of any corrupt practice and the nature of that practice. But a person not a party to the petition cannot be named in the order, unless he has been given notice to appear before the Tribunal and to show cause why he should not be so named, and if he appears in pursuance of the notice, he has been given an opportunity of cross-examining any witness who has already been examined by the Tribunal and has given evidence against him, of calling evidence in his defence and of being heard.

7. A proceeding for naming a person who is found responsible for publication of offending matter is in the nature of a quasi-criminal proceeding. In an appeal against the order of the High Court holding on appreciation of evidence that a person charged before the High Court is not proved to be guilty of a corrupt practice, this Court does not normally proceed to reappraise the evidence, unless the High Court has misconceived the evidence or the conclusion is perverse or so basically faulty that interference by this Court is attracted or the procedure adopted by the Court has resulted in miscarriage of justice or for similar reasons. See Amar Nath v. Lachman Singh, C. A. No. 1717 of 1968, D/- 23-12-1968 (SC); Jagdev Singh v. Pratap Singh AIR 1965 SC 183; Dr. M. Chenna Reddy v. V. Ramchandra Rao, C. A. No. 1149 of 1968 D/- 17-12-1968 (SC); and Meghraj Pato-dia v. R. K. Birla, C. A. No. 1094 of 1969 D/- 10-9-1970 (SC).

8. Mr. Chagla on behalf of the interveners contended that the conclusion of the High Court was perverse because the High Court had ignored important circumstances and evidence bearing on the question in dispute, and had reached a conclusion wholly inconsistent with normal probabilities. In dealing with this contention we may first eliminate matters in respect of which there is no serious controversy. Annexures I, II & III which constitute the offending matter were published in the newspaper Mahakoshal during the course of the election campaign of D. P. Mishra. The newspaper Mahakoshal was published from Raipur, and Shukla was registered as the printer, publisher and editor in the record of the Press Registrar. The issues dated April 12, April 26 and May 4, 1963, were printed in the Mahakoshal Printing Press and were published and distributed. The matter published in those issues was in relation to the personal character and conduct of Sharma and in relation to his candidature. It was also a statement reasonably calculated to prejudice the prospects of Sharma's election.

9. Shukla admitted that the offending matter was published but claimed that it was printed in the Mahakoshal without his knowledge. He claimed that he had left the entire management of the newspaper with Tarangi and that he did not come to learn about the publication till the election petition was filed.

10. The High Court accepted the plea set up by Shukla that he did not know about the publication of the offending matter at or about the time when it was published. In support of the contention that Shukla was liable to be named, Mr. Chagla relied upon Section 7 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, upon certain proceedings in contempt taken before the High Court of Madhya Pradesh in which Shukla had admitted his responsibility in regard to the publication made sometime in June, 1963 and also upon the service of a notice upon Shukla by Sharma who filed the election petition requiring Shukla to disclose certain facts regarding the publication, upon the evidence that Shukla was closely associated with Mishra in carrying on the election campaign, and that the daily Mahakoshal carried on propaganda exclusively on behalf of Mishra and not of any other candidate. Counsel submitted that Shukla's denial could not be accepted as there was clear evidence that copies of the daily Mahakoshal were supplied at his residence at all relevant times and it is unlikely that he did not read them.

11. Section 7 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, insofar as it is relevant, provides:

"In any legal proceeding whatever, x x the production of x x, in the case of the editor, a copy of the newspaper containing his name printed on it as that of the editor shall be held (unless the contrary be proved) to be sufficient evidence as against the person whose name shall be x x printed on such newspaper, x x that the said person was x x x the editor of every portion of that issue of the newspaper of which a copy is produced".

Section 7 raises a presumption that a person whose name is printed in a copy of the newspaper is the editor of every portion of that issue. The presumption may be rebutted by evidence. In the copies of Mahakoshal dated April 12, April 26, and May 4, 1963, it was printed that Shukla was the Chief Editor. Shukla was also described as the printer and publisher of the newspaper. The presumption under Section 7 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, undoubtedly arises, but in a charge under Section 123 (4) of the Representation of the People Act the presumption under Section 7 of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, would come with greater or less force, according to the circumstances to the aid of a person claiming that the editor was responsible for the publication and that the publication was to the knowledge of editor.

12. Tarangi in his evidence has stated that he was working between June, 1962 to January, 1964 as editor of Mahakoshal and that he was in sole charge of the newspaper including its management, and that he was solely responsible for editing, printing and publishing the newspaper, and that he had made a special condition when accepting his appointment as editor that he would be in sole charge of managing and editing the newspaper. He said that Shukla never visited the office of Mahakoshal during the period of his management; that he—Tarangi—wrote Annexures I, II and III and got them printed and published, that he had written them by himself on information which he received, and not at the instance of any other person, that he had not obtained the consent of Shukla before writing or publishing the offending matter, and that when he heard the matter contained in those articles he thought that it had news value and he printed and published it. He also stated that Shukla was not informed of the offending matter.

13. Tarangi had printed on March 1, 1963, a statement in the daily issue of Mahakoshal that he was the editor. That is clear from Annexure A. It was urged by Mr. Chagla that Shukla, to conceal his activities in the course of the election which it was expected would take place in the near future made a mere appearance of printing the name of Tarangi as editor, while in fact he remained the editor and in charge of management of the Mahakoshal. But it is clear from the issues of the Mahakoshal daily dated July 11, July 16, July 30, July 31, September 24, October 12 and October, 18, 1962, that on the title page Tarangi was shown as the editor of the newspaper. The story that Tarangi was placed in charge of the newspaper Mahakoshal between June 1962 and January 1964 is amply supported by copies of the Mahakoshal produced in the Court. It is not in dispute that in the publication of the newspaper Mahakoshal which contained the offending Annexures I, II and III it was published that Tarangi was the editor.

14. Shukla stated in his evidence that he had left Tarangi in sole management of the newspaper, that during the months of April and May 1963 he visited his house at Raipur only once, and that he had no occasion to read the previous issues of the Mahakoshal. Shukla said that he was moving about from place to place during that period. The High Court has accepted that testimony and we see no reason to disagree with the same. Annexure A on which reliance is placed was made pursuant to Section 19-D (b) of the Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867. There was no attempt to prove that the return submitted before the Press Registrar differed from the return published under Section 19-D (b). Section 19-K (c) makes it an offence for the publisher of any newspaper to publish in pursuance of Clause (b) of Section 19-D any particulars relating to the newspaper which he has reason to believe to be false. Mr. Chagla contended that Shukla should have taken steps to produce before the High Court the original return or at any rate a copy of the return filed before the Press Registrar. We do not think that in the circumstances of the case any such obligation lay upon Shukla. If it was the case of the interveners that the statement in Annexure A was not consistent with the return made to the Press Registrar they could have summoned the Press Registrar or a member of his Office with the original return. But that was not done. It is true that in the annual report published by the Press Registrar for the use of the Central Government for the years 1963, 1964 & 1965 Shukla alone is shown as the editor of Mahakoshal and the name of Tarangi is not at all mentioned. But the annual report of the Press Registrar which contains hundreds of entries is secondary evidence of the contents of the return. There is no reason why, when the interveners have made no attempt to have the original return produced, we should accept the annual report as probative of the fact that Tarangi's name was not mentioned in the return submitted to the Press Registrar. The annual report is only for the information of the Government and a mere summary in the annual report, to which the Legislature has not attached any importance and which is not made under any statutory provision, cannot be regarded as displacing the effect of a statutory provision made under Section 19-D (b) of the Press and Registration of Books Act 1867.

15. Granting that there was close association between Mishra and Shukla and even granting that Mahakoshal was exclusively carrying on propaganda on behalf of Mishra, unless there is evidence to prove that Shukla had either authorised the publication of the offending matter, or had undertaken to be responsible for all the publications made in the Mahakoshal, no inference that the offending publications were made to the knowledge and with the consent of Shukla may be raised.

16. Strong reliance was placed by Mr. Chagla upon two circumstances: (i) that in certain proceedings taken in the High Court for committing the editor of Mahakoshal for contempt of court for publishing in June 1962 certain scurrilous matter concerning a Civil Judge. Shukla admitted his responsibility for the publication and tendered apology; and (ii) that Shukla did not send any reply to the notice served by Sharma, and published no repudiation.

17. The circumstances in which the proceeding for commitment for contempt of court was started may first be set out. On June 16, 1963, a news-item defamatory of one R. P. Awasthy, Civil Judge, was published in Mahakoshal. The District & Sessions Judge, Bilaspur, submitted the papers relating to the publication, to the High Court of Madhya Pradesh with a report that one Dr. Saraf Baloda a correspondent of the newspaper was responsible for the publication, and recommended that proceedings be started for committing for contempt Saraf and the editor, printer and publisher of the newspaper. A notice was issued to the editor, printer and publisher of Mahakoshal. Shukla appeared before the High Court and admitted that he was the Chief Editor of the paper, but he stated that the day to day work was done by the Sub-Editors, that he used to lay down the principle and policy of the paper and also gave general directions, that the news item received from correspondents from various places was scrutinised by the Sub-editors and the sub-editors on June 16, 1963 did not understand the implications of the offending news-item, and published it, and that when it came to his (Shukla's) notice he immediately published a contradiction and expressed his regret. He said that being the Chief Editor he accepted his responsibility. He submitted that since amends had been made soon after the facts came to his notice, his apology to the "concerned officer and assuring him that no item will be published from the correspondent" be accepted. In view of this apology no action was taken against him by the High Court. The statement filed by Shukla is not inconsistent with the case set up by him in this proceeding. Responsibility for publication was accepted by him but he had clearly stated that the publications of news-items from the correspondents were attended to by the Sub-editors, and that he generally laid down the policy of the newspaper and gave general directions. He admitted his responsibility because he was the Chief Editor, and not because he personally had with knowledge published the article which constituted contempt of Court.

18. On October 24, 1963, Sharma addressed a letter to Shukla as printer, publisher and editor of Mahakoshal inviting his attention to the three Annexures I, II and III dated April 12, April 26 and May 4, 1963 and calling upon Shukla to "disclose the full identity of the writer within three days of his receiving the letter". He intimated that in case Shukla failed to comply with the request, he would assume that Shukla was the author of the publications, and would take suitable legal action. No reply was sent to this letter. Nor did Shukla publish any repudiation that it was without his knowledge that the matter was published. Shukla has in his evidence stated that after receiving the letter he consulted his lawyer, and he was "advised that reply was not necessary" and it "was not proper to send a reply". He stated that he remembered that his counsel advised him that since he was "involved in the petition" he should not act on the letter. These matters were elicited in cross-examination by counsel for the interveners. Mr. Chagla submitted that the testimony of Shukla in this behalf may not be accepted, because the lawyer had not been examined as a witness and even his name was not disclosed. But the matter was not probed further by the cross-examiner nor was any question asked which would suggest that any doubt was sought to be thrown on the testimony of Shukla that he acted on the advice given by his lawyer. It is true that no repudiation of Annexures I, II and III was published in the Mahakoshal, even after the letter was received from Sharma. But it must be remembered that in June, 1963 an election petition was filed for setting aside the election of Mishra and in paragraph 5 it was asserted that Annexures I, II and III were published in the newspaper Mahakoshal of which Shukla was the printer, publisher and editor. It was further asserted that Shukla was the agent of Mishra. If the story of Shukla that till October, 1962 he was not aware of the offending publications and he came to know of the publications for the first time be accepted, failure to repudiate the publications after the election petition was filed will not, in our judgment, lead to an inference against Shukla that he was responsible for the publications.

19. We have carefully considered the evidence and the circumstances, and we do not think that a case is made out justifying us in taking a view different from the view of the High Court. The proceeding before us is quasi-criminal in character, and this Court will not normally disagree with the view of the High Court, where the High Court has reached, on appreciation of evidence, the conclusion that the corrupt practice charged against a person is not proved. This Court has jurisdiction in appropriate cases to disagree with the conclusion reached by the High Court, but the power to interfere is sparingly exercised. It is not exercised merely because this Court may take on the evidence a different view. An appellate Court is reluctant to disregard the conclusion on matters of appreciation of evidence by the Court which had occasion to watch the demeanour of the witnesses examined before it, and to substitute its own view thereon. Where the proceeding tried by the Court of First Instance is of a quasi-criminal nature, the reluctance of the appellate Court is greater. The question is not one of power or authority of the appellate Court, but of the respect and consideration due to the Court of First Instance, and of the limit inherent in the exercise of the appellate functions.

20. The order passed by the High Court is confirmed. Having regard to the circumstances of the case, there will be no order as to costs of the proceeding against Shukla. The appeal filed by Mishra will be dismissed. Since the original applicant Sharma did not appear in this Court, there will be no order as to costs in the appeal.

Order of High Court confirmed.

Civil Appeal No. 2252 of 1966, D/- 28-10-1969.

(A) Central Excises and Salt Act (1944), Section 36 — Revisional jurisdiction of Central Government — Personal hearing — When should be given.

Though the rules do not require that a personal hearing should be given to a revision petitioner under Section 36 if in appropriate cases where complex and difficult questions requiring familiarity with technical problems are raised, personal hearing is given, it would conduce to better administration and more satisfactory disposal of the grievances of citizens.

(Para 7)

(B) Central Excises and Salt Act (1944), Section 36 — Revision by Central Government — Exercise of judicial power by administrative or executive authority — Order should be speaking order — Order merely stating that Government sees no reason to interfere with order of appellate authority is laconic and should be set aside — AIR 1966 SC 671, Held, overruled by AIR 1967 SC 1606 — (Constitution of India, Articles 136, 32 and 226).

The Central Government is by Section 36 invested with the judicial power of the State. Orders involving important disputes are brought before the Government. The orders made by the Central Government being subject to appeal to the Supreme Court under Article 136 of the Constitution, it would be impossible for that Court, exercising jurisdiction under Article 136, to decide the dispute without a speaking order of the authority, setting out the nature of the dispute, the arguments in support thereof raised by the aggrieved party and reasonably disclosing that the matter received due consideration by the authority competent to decide the dispute.

(Para 7)

Where the order of the Central Government rejecting a revision under Section 36 merely stated that the Government having carefully considered the points made by the applicant, saw no reason to interfere with the order, the order being laconic is vitiated and should be set aside. AIR 1966 SC 671, Held, overruled by AIR 1967 SC 1606, AIR 1969 NSC 115 and AIR 1969 SC 1297 and C. A. No. 657 of 1967, D/- 17-8-1967 (SC), Rel. on.

(Paras 7 and 12)

When judicial power is exercised by an authority normally performing executive or administrative functions, the Supreme Court insists upon disclosure of reasons in support of the order on two grounds; one, that the party aggrieved in a proceeding before the High Court or the Supreme Court has the opportunity to demonstrate that the reasons which persuaded the authority to reject his case were erroneous; the other, that the obligation to record reasons operates as a deterrent against possible arbitrary action by the executive authority invested with the judicial power.

Mr. S. Mohan Kumaramangalam, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. Soli J. Sorabji, Mrs. A. K. Varma, Advocates, and M/s. Ravinder Narain, J. B. Dadachanji and O. C. Mathur, Advocates of M/s. J. B. Dadachanji and Company, with him), for Appellant; Dr. V. A. Seyid Muhammad, Sr. Advocate, (Mr. S. P. Nayar, Advocate, with him), for Respondents; Mr. B. R. Agarwala, Advocate of M/s. Gagrath and Company, for Intervener No. 1; Mr. Soli J. Sorabji, Advocate, and M/s. Ravinder Narain and J. B. Dadachanji, Advocates of M/s. J. B. Dadachanji and Company, for Intervener No. 2.

SHAH, J.: — The appellant Company is engaged in the production of cellulose film. The Central Excise Inspector reported that the appellant Company was producing in its factory nitro-cellulose lacquer [falling under tariff Item No. 22 (iii) (i), No. 14 (iii) (i) of the First Schedule to the Central Excises and Salt Act, 1944, read with the Finance Act, 1955], without obtaining a central excise licence as required by the rules and was also removing nitro-cellulose lacquer for "internal use" without payment of duty. The appellant Company denied that the chemical compound utilised by it to render plain film moisture-proof was "nitro-cellulose lacquer" within the meaning of the Central Excises and Salt Act, 1944.

2. The Deputy Superintendent of Central Excise, determined that the appellant Company was liable to pay, for the period between March 1, 1955 and September 19, 1962, Rs. 4,88,797.34 as excise duty on the consumption of nitro-cellulose lacquer produced by the Company. The Deputy Superintendent issued a demand notice, but the appellant Company failed to pay the duty.

3. The Assistant Collector of Customs required the appellant Company to show cause why penalty should not be imposed on it for failing to obtain a licence for production of nitro-cellulose lacquer. The appellant Company contended that what was produced by it was not nitro-cellulose lacquer. The Assistant Collector rejected the contention and confirmed the order of assessment and imposed a penalty of Rs. 25/-.

4. In appeal to the Collector, the appellant Company raised a large number of contentions—including the following:

(1) that nitro-cellulose lacquer which is clear as well as pigmented falls within the purview of Item 14 of the First Schedule to the Central Excises and Salt Act, 1944, and that clear and white, or murky and pigmented lacquer is not subject to duty;

(2) that a certificate of test issued by the Silk Mills Research Association, Bombay, showed that the nitro-cellulose lacquer content of a sample of surface-coating compound produced by the appellant company was only 4.7 per cent. and it could not be considered nitro-cellulose lacquer within the meaning of the Act; and

(3) that the failure to levy duty on the product from 1955 to 1962 was proof of the fact that the Excise Department was itself of the view that the product was not excisable.

5. The Collector of Customs consulted the Chemical Examiner and was of the view that the opinion expressed by the Silk Mills Research Association, Bombay, was not correct. In considering the question about the reason for not levying duty for nearly seven years, the Collector thought it necessary to give a fresh hearing to the appellant Company. Additional arguments were advanced at the second hearing. After considering the arguments advanced by the appellant Company the Collector wrote a detailed judgment setting out the "points" on which he held against the claim of the appellant Company, and expressed the view that the appellant Company was not right in contending that only that chemical which is "clear and pigmented" falls within the purview of Item 14 of the First Schedule.

6. Against the order dismissing the appeal, the appellant Company moved a petition invoking the revisional jurisdiction of the Central Government under Section 36 of the Central Excises and Salt Act, 1944. The petition was entertained, but no personal hearing was given to the appellant Company. By order dated July 16, 1966, communicated by the Joint Secretary to the Government of India, Ministry of Finance, the petition was rejected. The order read:

"The Government of India have carefully considered the points made by the applicant(s), but see no justification for interfering with the order in appeal. The revision application is accordingly rejected".

Against the order passed by the Central Government this appeal is preferred with special leave.

7. The question raised before the Collector of Customs was of a complicated nature and for its proper appreciation required familiarity with the chemical composition and physical properties of nitro-cellulose lacquers and of the substance produced by the appellant Company. The Collector in deciding the appeal wrote an order running into 18 typed pages. There were before the Collector conflicting opinions of the Chemical Examiner and the Silk Mills Research Association, Bombay. The Collector gave two personal hearings to the appellant Company. No personal hearing was given by the Government of India to the appellant Company even though the matter raised complex questions. It is true that the rules do not require that personal hearing shall be given, but, if in appropriate cases where complex and difficult questions requiring familiarity with technical problems are raised, personal hearing is given, it would conduce to better administration and more satisfactory disposal of the grievances of citizens. The order does not disclose the name or designation of the authority of the Government of India who considered "the points made by the applicants", and it is impossible to say whether the officer was familiar with the subject-matter so that he could decide the dispute without elucidation and merely on a perusal of the papers. The form in which the order was communicated is apparently a printed form. There is a bare assertion by the Joint Secretary to the Government of India in his communication that the Government of India had "carefully considered the points made by the applicants", there is no evidence as to who considered the "points" and what was considered. The Central Government is by Section 36 invested with the judicial power of the State. Orders involving important disputes are brought before the Government. The orders made by the Central Government are subject to appeal to this Court under Article 136 of the Constitution. It would be impossible for this Court, exercising jurisdiction under Article 136, to decide the dispute without a speaking order of the authority, setting out the nature of the dispute, the arguments in support thereof raised by the aggrieved party and reasonably disclosing that the matter received due consideration by the authority competent to decide the dispute. Exercise of the right to appeal to this Court would be futile, if the authority chooses not to disclose the reasons in support of the decision reached by it. A party who approaches the Government in exercise of a statutory right, for adjudication of a dispute is entitled to know at least the official designation of the person who has considered the matter, what was considered by him, and the reasons for recording a decision against him. To enable the High Court or this Court to exercise its constitutional powers, not only the decision, but an adequate disclosure of materials justifying an inference that there has been a judicial consideration of the dispute by an authority competent in that behalf in the light of the claim made by the aggrieved party, is necessary. If the Officer acting on behalf of the Government chooses to give no reasons, the right of appeal will be devoid of any substance.

8. Dr. Seyid Muhammad appearing for the Union of India contended that where the Central Government dismisses the petition, it is not obliged to give any reasons, for, it must be assumed that the Government had accepted every reason given by the Collector, and by dismissing the petition the officer acting on behalf of the Government must be deemed to have incorporated the reasons given by the Collector in the judgment. Counsel relies in support of this contention on the decision of this Court in Madhya Pradesh Industries Limited v. Union of India, (1966) 1 SCR 466 = (AIR 1966 SC 671). In that case, Bachawat, J. on behalf of himself and Mudholkar, J., refused to accept the contention that the order passed by the Government of India rejecting a revision application under the Mineral Concession Rules was liable to be quashed, because it did not give any reasons. Bachawat, J., observed at page 477 (of SCR) = (at page 677 of AIR):

"There is a vital difference between the order of reversal by the appellate authority in that case for no reason whatsoever and the order of affirmance by the revising authority in the present case. Having stated that there was no valid ground for interference, the revising authority was not bound to give fuller reasons. It is impossible to say that the impugned order was arbitrary, or that there was no proper trial of the revision application."

On the other hand, Subba Rao, J., observed at page 472 (of SCR) = (at p. 674 of AIR):

"The least a tribunal can do is to disclose its mind. The compulsion of disclosure guarantees consideration. The condition to give reasons introduces clarity and excludes or at any rate minimizes arbitrariness; it gives satisfaction to the party against whom the order is made; and it also enables an appellate or supervisory Court to keep the tribunals within bounds. A reasoned order is a desirable condition of judicial disposal.

The conception of exercise of revisional jurisdiction and the manner of disposal provided in Rule 55 of the Rules are indicative of the scope and nature of the Government's jurisdiction. If tribunals can make orders without giving reasons, the said power in the hands of unscrupulous or dishonest officers may turn out to be a weapon for abuse of power. But if reasons for an order are given, it will be an effective restraint on such abuse, as the order, if it discloses extraneous or irrelevant considerations, will be subject to judicial scrutiny and correction. A speaking order will at its best be a reasonable and at its worst be at least a plausible one. The public should not be deprived of this only safeguard.

* * * The habit of mind of an executive officer so formed cannot be expected to change from function to function or from act to act. So it is essential that some restrictions shall be imposed on tribunals in the matter of passing orders affecting the rights of parties; and the least they should do is to give reasons for their orders.

* * * Ordinarily, the appellate or revisional tribunal shall give its own reasons succinctly; but in a case of affirmation where the original tribunal gives adequate reasons, the appellate tribunal may dismiss the appeal or the revision, as the case may be, agreeing with those reasons. What is essential is that reasons shall be given by an appellate or revisional tribunal expressly or by reference to those given by the original tribunal. The nature and the elaboration of the reasons necessarily depend upon the facts of each case".
